As for R.—It is not necessary to write a letter of congratuation on receiving the autonomerate cants of a westing, unless, indeed, the brite should be an infimulation of any and of course, they you would do it. The letter should be addressed to the bride, certainly not to the bride, present. If you have written to then it is not necessary to again express your good whose when you meet them. It is not necessary to say anything about her bride; a bride when you have just been before the anything about her bride; a bride when you have just been before due one. (2) When a gently cann thanks you for going one with time, simply say that you have enjoyed yourself so much that you leef us if the thanks should come from you.

As I vermuseren Branden—Any one whose skin is moved with blackbrude, plungles and red spots nodes first of all to be treated by her destor, and ofter libs she can apply some of the simple external remedies. The giving the farm a Bussian balls, by building it firstlin in division in cold water, is a special treatment which I advise as marin. For other three baths he face in water that has the chall well takes off of it, which means water that her the descript well takes off of it, which means water that her the description water that he the chall well takes off of it, which means water that he the chall well takes off of it, which means water that he the chall well takes off of it, which means water that he then the description of the face and all the little particles of which the air is fall, it really needs many more than any other part of the body, and yet is excess in get left.

screen in get leist.

Enew — The wide of a clergyman or a physician is neither a clergyman nor physician, androuse; until has neither a clergyman nor physician, androuse; until has nearly the test his distance in the clerk flatter flatter. Both is Mrs. James Brown. If the extensive see of business titles came in you might used "Mrs. Bedstrints' disease." To decliquide the merit of Mrs. Bedstrints' disease. To decliquide the merit on their waste many without used their modern sames on their wishing each, where firmary they used their instance, as, for instance; Mrs. John Wilkinson, who mas a Most brown, will after her instance is death davious ter visating each, where her instance is death davious ter visating each; "Mrs. Brown Wilkinson;" then every holy will know sharily who it is, and she has not made her Caristian mane the property of the public.

MADAME GRISWOLD'S Patent Skirt-Supporting Corsets AND SKIRT SUPPORTERS,

MADAME GRISWOLD, 923 Brondway, New York; 7 Temple Place, Boston,

Mass. : or to General Agents, M. M. Wygant & Co., Fredonia, N. Y.; J. B. Putnam, 126 State street, Chicago, 111.

my indicate that your plated Spoons and Feels is worth those points, 00.0025 & EDWARDS have oversome the difficulty

STERLING SILVER INLAID SPOONS and FORKS.

ting Silver is Intuid at points of rest, then the whose speem plates entire.

No Wearing Through Passible.

As Durable as Solid Silver.

About One-Half the Cost.

If yet counts obtain them of your jeweler each for calmings. Take to substitute.

THE HOLMES & EDWARDS BILVER CO. Beldgeport, form,

DEXTER SHOE CO., 143 Federal Street, Boston, Mass. DRESSMAKING SIMPLIFIED.

Any Lady Can now Learn to Out Perfect-Pitting Dresses. Patroind No one using a Chart or Equator out interest of the McCharell Remarks of the McCharell Remarks in Street or Street or d is conte for copy of our element French Pashson explaining how so our latest style garment.

MRS. SARAH J. SCHACK'S DRESS REFORM Abdominal -- Hose Supporter Computed figures reduced got made chapely in from three is all months. By wearing this supporter waters need to longer notice from waters of their ies. For circulast and infla-nation ingless two-cent stamp. Agents wanted Address EARL MANUFACTURING CO., 201 Fifth Avenue, Chleage, 40.

A DELICIOUS PERFUME. DELICATE BUT WONDER-PULLY IMPERISHABLE. Ask your druggist for it, or send us as cepts in stampe for 36 oz. sample.

C. B. WOODWORTH & SONS Rochester, N. Y.

MR. COATES cheerfully invites questions touching any topic upon which his young readers desire help or information. Address all letters to FOSTER COATES, care of THE LADIES' may desire help or information. Home Journaa, Philadelphia, Pa.

HE long summer days are almost here; days of rest and recuperation for some of us; days of trayed in the old world and the new for the few favored ones; days of activity and whole-some pleasure in the field of manly, vigorous, out-door sports; days when the air is laden with perfumes distilled by nature, so rich and fragrant that man, with all his skill, has never been able to accurately reproduce them; never been able to accurately reproduce them; days for long walks in the country, when the fields are green, the sam is bright, when the streams swarra with fish, and the birds carol sweetly and in perfect accord, in nature's superb orchestra; days for long walks on the sandy, sebbly beaches while the occan waves roll in, and far out to sea, like "painted ships upon a painted occan," the big and little craft move along, slowly, silently, disappearing at last like the last scene of a panorama. Happy summer days! Happy boys who may be able to enjoy them?

WHEN AMID GREEN FIELDS JUST a word or two with the boy who is going to spend the summer in the country. A great many of the hoy readers of the Journal have an opportunity to study nature's various moods all the year round. It is the city Journal have an opportunity to study nature's various moods all the year round. It is the city boy who is going to the country who will find a new world opened up to him there. There is so much that can be gained in good health by a proper system of living. Now, if I were a boy again, and had an opportunity to spend a few weeks or months in the country, I should have a much more profitable and enjoyable time, as well, than I did in my younger days. Experience is the greatest teacher in the world. No man is so wise that he knows all that is to be known. If welld not learn a little every day, this would soon become a very stapid world. In the first place, my brother, when you are packing your little trunk for a visit to the country, put a dozen or so good, instructive books in it, that you may at times find agreeable companions in the long summer days. When the fish are lazy and refuse to nibble at your bait, you can lie down for half an bour or so in some great mind into other lands. When the sun is something hot you may find a cool place in some hedge along the road, where an instructive book will be invaluable to you. Or when the respers are resting in the fields, or the twitight falls in the eventide, you will not be lonesome, or grow weary, if some favorite author is with you to enlighten you and give you aid not encouragement in some of the great problems whose mystery you must some author is with you to entighten you and give you aid nist encouragement in some of the great problems whose mystery you must some day solve. But the reading of books in the country in vacation time is only incidental after all. I would not advise nor encourage boys to spend their hobblays in study. Rather, instead, would I advise a complete change from city life. Go to bed early. Get up in the morning about sunrise, when the air is halony, the masks are not dusty, and the fields are the roads are not dusty, and the fields are still wet with deer. After such a breakfast as can not be offered in any of the cities, eaten with an appetite that only boys who live in the country know much about, there is the work of the day to be laid out. It may be sowing, or reaging, or gardening, picking fruit, fishing, a long ride behind a good horse, the driving of the cown to posture, watching the sheep upon the hillsbie—whatever it is, go the sheep upon the hills'sle—whatever it is, go at it with a determination to perform your part of the labor to the best of your ability. It is all pleasant, agreeable work. A summer in the country will strengthen your muscles, tan your cheeks, and lay the foundation for good health in the winter. I cannot begin to enumerate all the pleasant things a boy rony do in the country; riding and driving, roables through the woods, pienicking under hig trees, mathering wild flowers—all this and more will gathering wild flowers—all this and more will suggest itself.

A THOUGHTFUL SUMMER ACT

A GOOD many boy renders of the Journal will not be able to spend the summer in the country. It is the misfortune of some to have to work always. The cities are dusty and lost in summer, and far from agreeable. The boys who go to the country should not forgot their companions at home while they are enjoying the supreme pleasures of rural life. It is so easy for a thoughtful boy to send life. It is so easy for a thoughtful boy to send a basket of fruit, a bandful of wild flowers and a pleasant letter to some little fellow who has been left behind. It will make both the giver and receiver jorful. It will awaken new monories in the life of the city boy, and make him feel a touch of the kinship of man. It is such an easy thing to write a pleasant letter. I would ask all the boy readers of the Jouana, who on to the country this summer, or who who go to the country this summer, or who travel in strange lands, to write very often to those at home. It will make the world seem those at home. It will make the world seem better and brighter, for, after all, there is nothing more welcome than the receiving of a frank, hearty, generous letter from friends who have gone from us for a little time.

THE CITY BOY IN SUMMER

The CITY BOY IN SUMMER

Those the city boy who will have no chance to spend the summer in the country, there are many things to do that will give him recreation and change. There are the parks, where the air is always fresher than in the residential districts, and where numerous games may be played in the afternoons or evenings. There are cool spotaunder big trees where tired bodies and brains may be rested. Walking tours may be made into the suburbs. There are streams where the fish bits well, There are streams where the fish bite well, plensant roads for long bicycle rides, glimpses pleasant roads for long hicycle rides, glimpses of old farmiouses where the very air is restful, and shady groves where pleasant picnicking parties may be arranged. If my young readers are desirous of enjoying good health, let them go to bed early and arise with the lark in the morning. A half hour or so of light exercise before breakfast, a bath, and fresh clothing will put them in condition for the day's work.
If they est plenty of wholesome food and alundance of fruit, and sleep in well-ventilated rooms, there is no reason why their physical condition should not be very much improved.

THE BOY WHO GOES ABROAD

THE BOY WHO GOES ABROAD

COME of my readers will spend the summer in foreign lands. The trip to Europe is made those days with great comfort and in short time. It is, perhaps, the pleasantest way to pass the summer, and, after all, the cost is not so very great. A party of boys under proper guidance may spend a menth or two in Europe for a very small outlay. I have made the trip several times and know of what I am writing. A difficult problem presents itself in the beginning to the would-be tourist. Few understand where to go, and at what time. My own advice would be to leave America early in the summer, and go direct to Queenstown. The ocean in June is almost certain to be as calm as a millipood. The visitor to Ireland may obtain a very fair understanding of that country and see about all that is worth seeing in from one to two weeks. From Belfast take steamer to Greenock, and train to Glasgow. Two weeks will be ample for traveling and seeing the sights of bonnie Scotland. There are a great many pretty places there, but there are no long journeys to travel. From Glasgow down to London is a pleasant day's journey, and here, in the greatestely in the world, one may spend as much. travel. From Glasgow down to London is a pleasant day's journey, and here, in the greatest eity in the world, one may spend as much time as he pleases, a week, or a year, without knowing much about the great English metropolis after all. London is the most worderful city in the world, and after one has obtained a quick glumpee of it, days may be spent in making pleasant excursions in the surrounding subarbs. I think that all Americans should see and understand something of Great Britain before journeying to France. Great Britain before journeying to France, Germany, Switzerland, and other places. Still, a couple of weeks on the continent may be passed with great profit, and superficial ideas of the propies and their customs obtained. But it will only be superficial.

ADVANTAGES OF A EUROPEAN TOUR

THE visitor to Europe is interested according to the knowledge and understanding that he brings with him. For instance, there are many people who spend a day in the Louvre and feel that they have seen all that is worth seeing of the great pictures there. But there are men and women of vast minds who have stood before a great picture for many hours each day for a week and vet feel that they have only and herore agreet parties for many sourcement day for a week, and yet feet that they have only a slight knowledge of its beauties. It is so with a trip to Europe. One may spend a week in London, or Paris, or Berlin, and say that they have seen it all, and there is nothing more there for them to learn. There are others, like Dr. Newman Hall, who has lived for fifty years Dr. Newman Hall, who has level for filly years in London, and who told me last summer that while he had been a student of London life for half a century, his knowledge was very limited. I do not, of course, expert any of my boy readers, who go abroad for the first or second time, to see and understand all that there is to be seen, and to solve the great problems that peoplex our kin beyond the sea. problems that perpiex our kin beyond the sea.

But a couple of months in Europe will open up new worlds to American boys. There is so much to be seen there that they never dreamed of, and I would advise any who can to make the trip. They will return home better Americans than when they went away.

And do you know, boys, this question of patriodism is one that you should think very seriously about. America has become a very seriously about. America has become a very great nation. By the time the most of my renders become non settled in life, there will be a new national problem to solve. It is, whether Americans shall rule America, or whether we shall be ruled by foreigners. The big cities of shall be ruled by foreigners. The big cities of the Union have become thickly populated with foreigners. Their ways are offentimes not our ways. They have brought from not our ways. They have brought from Europe ideas that do not harmonize with the grand ideas of the men who framed our glotious Constitution. So it becomes vitally necessary for American boys to remain thor-oughly American. They should follow the patriotic examples of their fathers, remain true to the Stars and Stripes, and endeavor to inculcate American patrictism into the minds of those who have come among us.

SOME DANGERS TO BE AVOIDED

SOME DANGERS TO BE AVOIDED

THE average boy is very apt to risk his life and health in many ways in summer. When unrestrained, he takes a great many quore chances than he would otherwise do. The chief danger to life and health of boys who spend the summer in the country is from over-exertion in sports, and by indulging in too much swimming. The exhibitantion of country life makes them feel that they can do more than their strength admits of. This is equally true of city boys who get a day or two off from their work. The best way to do is to take exercise moderately. If a boy is not used to long walks, he should begin his summer outing with an easy log along some pleasant road for only a mile or two. By increasing the distance gradually each day, it will not be long before he can do ten or fifteen miles, or twenty for that matter, without discomfort, and in reality making a positive gain to his health. This rule applies equally well to horseback and bicycle riding, rowing, and other work boys may be unaccustomed to.

ABOUT BATHING AND SWIMMING

ABOUT BATHING AND SWIMMING

ONE of the chief and healthful amuse-ments of a summer onting is hathing, but there is no part of the visit where the danger is so great as in going in swimming too often, and at times when the water is too cold. Not a summer passes that thousands of boys are not permanently injured-by going in swimming at times when they should not do so. The waves on the senshore, the running streams, and the fresh water lakes are very enticing on hot days. In a moderate way swimming is one of the best expersions known for streamthening paraneses. nsoderate way swimming is one of the best exercises known for strengthening purposes. There is nothing more refrashing than a dip in the cool waves, or a plunge in a placid lake. Once a day is quite enough to go in swimming, and the time for governing this should be set by some person who knows the constitution of the boy, and the hour, also, when it is safe for him to go into the water without danger from strong currents. My own impression is that an early morning bath is more beneficial than one taken at any other time during the day, and ten minutes in the water is quite long enough for all healthful purposes. I would particularly advise all my readers who do not know how to swim not to go into the water at all, unless there be some one near who can all, unless there be some one near who can give them ald in case of fright, or a sudden cramp. More lives are lost in the water in summer by thoughtlessness and too much overconfidence than are sacrificed in any other way. Even if you are a good swimmer, it is a safe rule to keep near the shore at all times. The dangers of boating have been pointed out a great many times, and I might easily write a page of the Journat to tell what to do and what not to do. I can best sum up all that is necessary to know in one sentence, and that is, do not go out in a boat, no matter how pleasant the sea, or smooth the lake, unless you have with you a sailing master who knows all the currents and understands how to manage a bost under all circumstances.

There are numerous other dangers to be avoided. The city boy who finds himself free in the country, without cares of any kind, may do himself permanent injury by remaining out too long in the scorching sun. Jumping and tumbing, and walking, rowing or riding too much may injure the massless or overstrain some part of the body, and thus occasion irreparable form.

LEARN TO HELP YOURSELVES

the hundreds of letters that have come In the hundreds of letters that have come to use since I began conducting this page of the Jouanat, a large percentage of them have sought information that might just as easily have been obtained by the writers at home, or from public libraries. I have tried, again and again, to impress upon my renders the necessity of learning how to help themselves. To properly acquire information a boy should devote some of his own time to studying the problem that pernexees him. He studying the problem that perplexes bim. He is natch more upt to remember if he has looked carefully into some book of reference, and be-come thoroughly acquainted with the facts of the matter that he desires more knowledge of, than if he asked me, off-hand in a short note, than if he asked me, off-hand in a short note, to supply him with a few lines about the subject he is ignorant of. I want all my readers to learn to help themselves. I am always very glad to give such information as can not be obtained at home or in public libraries without difficulty. But at least ninety per cent of all questions propounded to me could be quite as well answered, and no doubt most cheerfully, too, by the fathers and mothers of my readers. A great many oncer letters come cheerfully, too, by the fathers and modisers of my readers. A great many queer letters come to me. Boys who have some unimportant troubles at home appeal to me to settle their differences with their chiers. This, of course, I cannot do, nor can I undertake to advise how to invest money, or suggest the proper employment for boys when my information about them is necessarily limited. Fathers and mothers should make confidents of their and mothers should make confidents of their oys, and on the other hand, boys as well as girls, should have no secrets from their parents. Let me leave this one thought with you to think over during the next month; go to your fathers and mothers first, boys, for advice, and he guided by them in what you shall do. The boy who is afraid to speak frankly to his father and mother is in a very had way,

To the hundreds of mothers and fathers who have written thanking me for the helpfulness of this department to their sons, I thank most beartily. It is a great pleasure to know that one can do even a little to help others in this bustling, workaday world, where everyone is struggling to advance his own interests withat regard to the success or failure of their fellow beings.

SOUND, PRACTICAL ADVICE TO YOUNG PEOPLE

A BUSINESS education is necessary to business success. Every person should study book-keeping, business forms, permanship, letter writing, business law, or shorthand; at home, by mail. Successfully taught by Buyast & Stratton's Cullant, 456 W. Main St., Buthalo, X. Y. Write for Prospectus,

COOKING MADE EASY!

THE WONDERFUL

"New Process" Vapor Stove

Safe, economical, clean, quick, efficient; no soot, no smoke, no ashest LIGHTS LIKE GAS; kitchen always comfortable. Ask the stove dealers for it, or write for

THE STANDARD LIGHTING CO. 200 to 220 Perkins Avenue, Cleveland, Ohio

DO NOT BE DESERVED

with Pariss. Enamets and Paints which stain the hands, lajure the iron, and hurn off. The Stagng Sant Sove Polish is Brillians, Oderbess, Furnible and the restorator pays for no tin or given parkage with every purchase.

HAS AN ANNUAL SALE OF 3,000 TONS.

ague free on application to the nearest Columbia Agent, or sent by mail for two 2-cent stamps.

GALES CYCLES

Models A and B STRUCTLY

HIGH GRADE $100.00

SCHOVERLING, DALY & GALES CATALOGUE PREE

302 Broadway,

BICYCLES

ON EASY-PAYMENT PLAN All leading standard makes. Old wheels taken in change, Catalogue, list of neconsistand wheels, and our terms of payment, maked free. Controls and regmanizations applied to old wheels at moderate cost, me bundled lists redemissions the, tients' and Ladies' reducing 800, reduced to 800. Address.

PECK & SNYDER, 126 Nassau St., N. Y.

Eclipse Lawn Mower Sharpener

Simple, lasts forever, fits any machine; any one can use it: by mail, is rests. Et LIPSE TOOL CO. N2 Bearborn Street, Chicago, III.

CINCINNATI CONSERVATORY OF MUSIC.

Miss Caulta Burn, Directoress. Established 1987. Lattice from a distance may beard in the Conservatory, where they are notice the personal supervision of the Directores. Padients may enter at law their. For exam-lague, address Miss CL, ALA BANTI, Unrelmant, 6th-ingue, address Miss CL, ALA BANTI, Unrelmant, 6th-

SHORTHAND The OSGOODRY SCHOOL OF STENOGRAPHY, Buchester, N. Y. Intraction by mail only, Terms, $10,00, including freeways books. Instruction theorems and complete, Synopsis for 2cent statup.

A House Near Central Park, New York city, will be with refined faculty, willing to beard two stells new occupying it. Permanent. Address K., P.C. Ber 170, New York

EN AS ADVERTISEMENT WRITERS

By VIRGINIA PRAZEE

MONG the different ocwomen as a means of livelihood, nine out of every ten are overcrowd-ed or not at all suited to the woman of literary bent. But to the sug-gestion of "Become a writer of advertise-ments," the bread-seek-ments, the bread-seek-nat to reply "Why, I never should have git of that." Of course not; very few r women have thought of it, and that sy it is a good time to think of it now.

IlS is a comparatively new occupation, one offering great inducements, especially to woman of literary aspirations. It is be-ing the custom in all retail dry goods blishments to employ a person whose sole iness is to write the advertisements used iness is to write the advertisements used by day, also to get up all pumphiets, cir-urs, posters, entalogues, in fact, to see to all advertising matter used by the house. In few cases known to the writer where men have filled this important place they we been eminently successful. It is work reliarly fitted to women, for if there is one ing in this world that womankind agree in ing it certainly is dry goods, and it is conducture to talk about them. And writ-e dry goods advertisements is simply talking oned nature to talk about them. And writer dry goods advertisements is simply talking out dry goods. Of course, the writer mast row what to say, how to say it, and above I when enough bas been said; must be able say much in a few words and make those ords "telling;" must exert her power of incountry to put herannouncements in attractive sens that will catch the eyes of the readers a they glance over the paper. The chief diject of the advertisement is to place the estimess written of before the reader in the test possible light. All this comes with a very ittle experience, a little study of the matter, some familiarity with the routine will soon put one entirely at case.

PERHAPS the best way to get a clear idea of DERHAPS the best way to get a clear idea of the routine of this work will be to relate the experience of a woman employed by a large retail house. She reaches her coxy office, which is in the most quiet corner of the fourth floor of the establishment, about nine o'clock every morning. Her first duty is to make a round of the departments to gather up items for her advertisements for the day, see what is new, what is especially important to be placed before the public, or is informed of some "job" purchase or of a fresh arrival of goods that she must see, and let others see in print. Or she suits her amount comments to the weather, and if it is a cold day she will get up a "sale"

Or she suits her announcements to the weather, and if it is a cold day she will get up a "sale" of cloaks, or of other winter goods; for of course she must consider what people want as well as what her firm wants to sell.

After laying in this fund of information she next proceeds to the most important part of all—the telling it to the public. This is her alvertisement. She writes several for the afternoon papers, and sends them to the different offices, whence proofs are returned her at afternoon papers, and sends them to the differ-ent offices, whence proofs are returned her at 2 o'clock. While awalting her proofs size sometimes arranges the advertisements for the next morning's papers, so that after looking over her proofs her day's work is done. That is, the regular stated day's work. When at work on imagazine advertisements, catalogues or circulars, of course her time is more fully occupied. But she finds it a pleasant and not at all laborious employment, as well as a re-manerative one. numerative one.

She arranges her time and methods of work to sait herself, it being understood that she will do all the work required, but she does it her own way, and prefers this to any other occupation open to women, and she has tried several other lines of literary work.

NOTHER bright woman writes three ad-A vertisements of one hundred lines each for a slice house, a jewelry firm and a dry goods business every week, and is paid five couts a line for her work, or fifteen dollars from each firm, making her weekly earnings forty-five dollars.

Still another woman, who has the happy faculty of writing "catching" jingles, makes a specialty of getting up rhymes on various lines of business and offering them for sale. She has not with enough success to feel justified in deciding on "jingling" advertisements as her future source of bread and butter. As to the remuneration, five to ten cents a line is the usual price paid where the work is done "by the piece," or if a regular salary is given, fifteen hundred to two thousand dollars is considered good pay for the first year or two.

If the would-be advertisement writer has enough knowledge of art to make sketches of cloaks, hats, and other dry-goods articles with which to illustrate her advertisements that will prove a great point in her favor, and this suggests something else—why does not the suggests something esse.—way does not the woman artist try making illustrations for dry goods literature? Many usen artists are now devoting themselves to this work, and it stands to reason that a woman could bring out the defails of articles of woman's dress at least as well as a man. Taking it all in all, this is a profession brim full of possibilities for the woman who is capable of doing it.

A GOOD MANUSCRIPT RECORD

BY JEAN HALIFAX

OSCOPF all the books that were ever written, to an author this is the most interesting of all. And it must also be of some service to the editor as well; for by referring to the record book the author can tell just when that manuscript, for which he is inquiring, was sent to the editor's office, and any needed particulars in regard to it.

was sent to the editor's office, and any needed particulars in regard to it.

The book I describe is one which I have used for some time, and has been a most useful one. It is not very bandsome, being merely mere exercise "book, such as every schoolboy is familiar with; but it is of such size that it may be readily stowed away in a large pigeon-hole, or a desk drawer. If the desk allows, however, of a book to stand upright, or be laid flat in one of the drawers, I would recommend one with stiff covers. recommend one with stiff covers.

100	Detectoryrs .	See	We	164	0	Notes
-	IL to a little	Common	45	124	Sept.
			111	ш	1 1
	1 1		441	ш	1 1
	1 1		i	111	1 1
	1 1		3 1	ш	11
ı	1 1		1	HH	1 1
	1 3		111	ш	1
L	1		2 H	111	1 1
	1 1		: II	111	1 1

Open the book so as to use both sides; on the first page rule four columns, the first half an inch wide, the second an inch in width, and the other two of equal size, as wide as your pages will allow. At the top of the first column write "No." At the second write "Date;" write "No." At the second write "Date; that is, when your manuscript was written, or at least begun. The third column should be headed." Manuscripts," and there your beam children should be pathered, and their names duly recorded. Over the fourth column, "Sent," being the name of the paper or magazine to which you have submitted your manuscript. If you are a young writer, and your manuscripts try more than one office before they find a home, on the last page or two of your manuscript record write a list of the magazines and papers you will be likely to write for, and their abbreviations. "Cen." and "St. N." do not take up as much space as "Century" and the "St. Nicholas;" while "L. H. J." in a moment tells you that being interpreted it means "The Ladies' Home Journal."

This finishes your first page. I find it most convenient to leave two or three spaces, ac-cording to the width of the lines already made in the blank book between the entering of in the blank book between the entering of each manuscript.

Now, on the right-hand page rule a half-inch column headed "W;" there place the num-ber of words which the manuscript contains. The next two columns can be very narrow indeed, but you will find them quite monsen-tous; for they are the columns of fate! The first column is for the fortunate article which is necessed at once as the little "a" "shows." is accepted at once, as the little "a" shows; the second is for its poor sister, who has been returned to you, as the (rejected) "r" indiretirned to you, as the (rejected) "F" inclustes.

Then rule three half-inch columns, over the first of which should be placed "Date paid," the date of payment; over the second "Amount," this column for the amounts paid; over the third "Pub," for the date published. Now rule a column an inch wide over which place "Char." (character) telling whether the MS, is fact or fiction. The remaining space may be headed "Notes."

The history of a book is recorded in the same way, with the exception that the royalty from year to year is set down in the "Notes" column.

The description is long; but the making of the book takes but a very few minutes. You then have the satisfaction of knowing just where it was sent, how long it is, when it was published, or when paid for, the amount of the payment, etc. And it is all there, on the the payment, etc. And it is all there, on the two pages, to be read at a glance and is before you in a satisfactory manner.

you in a satisfactory manner.

It also acts as a spur to industry. For the second column tells you whether or not your work is less for this month than for the one preceding, and quietly reminds you that you are not working as regularly as you were. The sixth column is one of cheer, for it shows that the "rejected" more and more frequent. Though in this competition it is comforting to Though in this connection it is comforting to remember that there are very few authors who have not been at some time rejected suitors.

Perhaps other writers have much the same plan. My book was the result of an older writer's helpful suggestions and my own experience, and has become an invaluable ad-junct to my literary work.

The cover of this manuscript record may be prettily decorated with the word "manu-script" in fancy letters, and underpenth it in small gilt letters any apt quotation, as for

"Ob wad some power the giftle gle us."
To see oursel's as liberts see us."

*LITERARY . QUERIES

Under this heading the EDITOR will en-deavor to answer any possible question con-cerning authorship and literary matters.

Figs 8—See this column in the April number.

fixe-Violet Fane is the author of "Constance's Fate." E. G. Q.—P. du Hoisgobay wrote a story untitled "The from Mank."

M. E. 8.—"The Botanical Gasette" is published at Bloomington, Indiana.

ELLES S.-Richard B. Kimball, the author, is still living in New York Chy.

C. J. R.—Virghrius Dahney is the author of "Dan Mill." The price of the book is $1.50.

H. H.—The "Young Mea's Journal" is published by the Flemming II. Revel Company, of New York.

U. S.—Chariotte Elizabeth was the non-de plums of Mrs. Tonus. She wrote "Judat's Lion," and many other backs. M. M. C.—The "Phonographic World" is published in The World Building, New York, and "Frank Harpf-son's Shorthand Magazine" at 22 Broadway, New York.

Protey—George Plemming is the real name of Julia C. Fletcher. (2) "Elemet" is published in book form at one deltar. See "One of the Fot an At. Friends," in this culcular.

J. K.—It would be impossible to procure such a paper as the Washington "Republican" of lett, without long delay and advertibing. The chances are the price would be exceedingly high if found.

GENVACUE—Address the J. B. Lippinest! Company of Philadelphia. They are the publishers of Captain King's works, and will give you the order in which the books of that writer appeared.

f. J. C.—Fracces Martin Crawford was been in Italy in 1945, was educated at St. Paul's school, Concord, N. H. nyd at schools in England. (2) "The Watch of Prague" is preciouseed Praig.

H. G.—There are many writers of books for girls besides Miss alreed, solutily, Susan Cookings, Mrs. Whit-ney, Suphie May, Mrs. Eveley, Nora Perry, Charlotte Youge, Mrs. Molesworth and others.

11. P. M.—The "Yensie Wallan" books, of which Mrs. A. G. Clarke is the author, are published by the be Lothrep Company, of Boston. They will probably give you the information about the broke you desire.

May - Your assection is quite right. Farmy Kemble with distinction as a poot, as well as an actress. A volume of her powers was published in Philadelphia, in 1844, and subsequently a new edition was brought out in Beston in 1880.

W. E. H.—There have been many reviews of Madam Bhautsky's "lisis Unveiled," and many divergent views expressed by the critics. The price is $5.20 for the two volumes. You give no address. See "One of the Joun-Nat Friends," in this column.

P. W. B.—The American News Company of New York are the most extensive dealers in all kinds of periodicals. Scal for one of their complete entalogues, which will give you a list of all the principal papers in the United States, and their prices.

M. A. D.—A long story such as you have written would make quite a book. You would have a better clause of bringing it before the public by bening it in book from, than being time, most probably, is endeavoring to secure its publication in any amazone.

E. D.—The lady who rejected under the little of Mother Gause was a native of Bleston, and an authorise of nonsery rhymos, which she used to sing to her grandson. The first cillion was suitiled "Songs for the Nursery, or Mother Gouse's Melodies," and was issued in 170s.

J. II,—"David Copperfield" is one of the best novels that Charles Blekens wrote. He entered more heartly into its composition than any of Ms. previous works, owing, an doubt, in the fact that underwish the fittion lay something of the author's 10%. As he expressed it, "I secon to be sending some past of myself into the shad-owy world."

E. O. W.—The Authors' Clab, the membership of which is absolutely restricted to those engaged in nothor-ship of published books, proper to literature, or persons holding recognized positions in distinctly literary work, is simuled at 18 West 20h Street, New York. They are now making arrangements to build a larger and more claberate club house.

Rewric—The one possessing an education has the advantage as an anthor. (2) A lively imagination is very decleable. (3) Ungrammation between and poor construction tends toward the rejection of a manuscript. (4) "Information for Authors," by Eleman Kirk, is a good book. It can be supplied by the Jouanat's Book Department for one dollar.

C. V. A.—As you have had some experience as a re-porter it will help you very much. I know of no method for securing a position as such on any paper without ap-plication. It is a good plan to write up a number of events happening to your locality, and send them to various papers, but do not let pay be the object. Wall notify your work attracts sufficient absulton.

ETELEA—It is impossible for me to advise you how to proceed in your library work. No two writers have the same method. Some sketch out their pite from beginning to end, while others never give it a thought, but write on according to the inspiration of the numeral. Both have their advantages and deadrantages. You must find out for yourself which suits you beet.

ONE OF THE JOURNAL PRINTES—You send me a list of over fifteen questions to miswer. It would be in list of over fifteen questions to miswer. It would be injusted to do as in this column. You sake for information about brokes, their prices, and if we can procure them, but you fail to give your mans or address. Had you done so the Book Department would have answered you in detail. Please send all such queries, with what information you can, giving author, and especially correct title.

I. K.—Dr. Oliver Werdell Holmes' papers, "The Autograp of the Breakfiel Table," were first published in the "Atlantic Monthly," although twenty-five years before that he used the same title in connection with two articles printed in "The New England Magazine," if According to bis own statement, often made in the writer of this paragraph, In: Holmes' own favorite, writer of this paragraph, it. Hospies our avoids among all the possus, is. "The Chambered Naucibs, which by many is considered his best piece of work.

TEXT BOOKS FOR YOUNG WRITERS—In respecte to many inquiries, there is given before a compose list of good text-books for young writers, which asswers a number offertiers, and must be future serve as an answer to all inquiries of that mature:

"Writing for the Press."

" How to Write Charly,"			4	Abbett.	,60
"Ladder of Journalism,"	-			Copeintd.
" Art of Authorship," -				Hadmhott.	1.25
"Trade of Authorship."	100	10	200	Dixer.	1.00
"Information for Authors			600	N Irik.	1.00
" Periodicals that Pay Out		meter	TW.	Kirk.	1.00
" Mistakes in Writing fire				Eligetow,	.50
"Handbook of Punctually				Ethortow.	350
" Handbook of Poncuorie			-	Wittents.	1,25
" Silps of Tongue and Per	31	1.6	4	Lone.	,80
"Pensand Types,"				Director,	1.90
" Words, their Use and Al-	BEN'S			Matheux,	2,00
"Thesaurus of English W.	ore	B . and Phrases."		4		Biogett,	2,40
"Dictionary of Synencym		-		Soule.	2.00
" Rugilsh Lessons for Fine		The	inte 5	£ Athort so	d
teeking Puseum for 1998	creo	444	this.	Howbett.	1.50
* Finglish Language." .	100	33	2.75	Metklejohn.	1.40
"Language & the Study o	71.0	Dette	sure."	Whitney,	2.50
- Higher English Granun		asp.a		Bain.	.30
"Flements of Rhetoric,"	Mr.				1.25
		-		Greating.
"Principles of Rhetoric,"				HEATING.	10
"Rhyming Dickmary,"			4	Wallow,	1.50
* Rhymester.		- 	-	Hood,	1.60
" Hallades and Rondeaus,				White-	1.00

Handbook of Poetics." . . . (summere, Life Science of English Vorse," . . Lanter, 250 THE LABORS' HOME JOURNAL will send any of these books to any U. S. P. O. address, postage free, on receipt of price.

NOW READY-THE JUNE PART OF THE YOUNG LADIES' JOURNAL

THE INTERNATIONAL NEWS COMPANY, NEW YORK.

4 NEW NOVELS 15 Cents All complete in the JUNE NUMBER of the FAMILY LIBRARY MONTHLY. Of all Newsdeaders and THE INTERNATIONAL NEWS COMPANY, NEW YORK.

85 and 85 Duane Street, one door East of Broadway. Subscription Received for any Periodical, Facetga or Demostle

MRS. WHITNEY'S STORY

Which appeared in the JOURNAL, is published in a tasteful book, $1.50.

HOUGHTON, MIFFLIN & CO., Boston

5000 LADY AGENTS WANTED FOR DARKNESS # DAYLIGHT

or LIGHTS AND SHADOWS OF NEW YORK LIFE A WOMAN'S thrilling story of Geopet, Temperature, and Rescured to the Bankson in the given under world of New York, By Po. HALEN CAMPRILL Interobation.

By Rev. Lyman Abbott, D. D.
A superfield back of Chebrino lave and faith. Stat thousand.
250 remarkable Mantraines from faith tight photographs of read fig. 07-1990 more agents Wanted,—Res and House. 2506 a motab. 07-Kaperboure and registal not necessary, for We frack all and Give Credit. Stemans so Bladranes for we give Earts Terms, and Pay Projekts. United Free. Write for circulars to A. D. HORTHINGTON & CO., Harriford, Science.

The Latest Book

Of representative selections from the works of Prof. Henry Drummond, is called "My Point of View." it is bound in white vel-Jum, heavily stamped sides and back in silver with silver tops. Each volume is wrapped in cloth and packed in a box. The Latine Home Journal mail it on recelpt of sixty cents, or two yearly subscribers.

GERMANIA A magazine for the study of the Germania and the Germania and the Germania and the first recommended by college professors and the press as "the best effort yet nigele to assist the student of Germania and to Sisters than in the pursuit." Its Roupe-sister (Gunnia firminiaes every year a complete nod pure resting course in German Grammiatz. It a year, sample copies free. P. O. Box 161, Manchester, N. E.

The Finest Edition

Of Hawthorne's famous "Searlet Letter," is sent out by THE LADISS HOME JOURNAL, postpaid, as a premium for two yearly subscribers; or, for forty cents, postpaid. It is the Cameo edition, bound in half veltum and stamped in gold.

THE WORLD'S FAIR

THE WORLD'S FAIR

The Hinstrated World's Fair, the flost, most attractive and prefasely Hinstrated Publication in the World, with the most rapidly increasing elevables on it has well as the control of the More and the More and the second of the second of the publication of the second of t

Jewell N. Helligan, Gen'l Mgr., Box "T," Chicago

Historia

AU Star. Nongasine of vota raios of blacterio decid. Written no young people can enforcement dress. Instructed in contracting. St per Trar.

Sample VEIX. Address HISTORIA AGENTS WANTED. Chamber of Commerce, Chienge

ALMA College & YOUNG WOMEN Gradualing Congues in five departments of study.

Health; Henne; Thoroughness; Fair Bates. 69-page illustid entitiogue. Principal AUSTIN, A. R., St. Thomas, 601.

IF you want to build a house, send 25 cents to J. S. Ogilvie, 54 Rose St., New York, and get HOW TO BUILD A HOUSE, containing 25 plans.

FOR BOOK CANVASSERS
The "NATIONAL CANVASSER,"
An illustrased journal for Book Agents. 3 months' trial PREE, Soul your address on postal card to NATIONAL CANVASSER, (II) 28 8, 80 82, Phila., Pa.

ENTERTAINMENTS Charles For Parlor, Hall and Lawn. Catalogue Free. Entertainment Bureau, Box 989, Chicago, Hi.

SEND if cents, stamps, for a samples. Matter of special interest, Kate Fields' "Washington," Washington, D.C. Brightest Weekly published.

ELOCUTION DELSARTE Semmer Nelhood
Opens July Sets. Eth year. For terms, writerand
M. H. Schwick, Principal, 24 Van Horen Street, Chicago
Sg. Sortack Revitations, & numbers, & cents each.

MISS MAUDE HAYWOOD will be glad through this Department to answer any questions of an Art nature which her readers may send to her. She cannot, however, undertake to reply by mail; please, therefore, do not ask her to do so. Address all letters to Miss Matthe Haywood. care of THE LADIES' HOME JOURNAL, Philadelphia, Pa.

PAINTING IN WATER COLOR

SIXTH PAPER

LANDSCAPE SKETCHING

EGINNERS in the art of landscupe painting may take up the study of it with reasonable confidence of success, even in the earliest at-even in the earliest attempts, provided that there is a previous knowledge of the elementary principles of drawing, an acquaintance with a few simple laws of perspective, and also some slight experience in the mixing of the colors and laying on of the thirts. The quality of the success, however, depends entirely on whether the student is really endowed with artistic capabilities of feeling and perception, for all who handle a brush with some residiness are not of necessity true artists, nor every sketch made a work of true artists, nor every sketch made a work of art, in the sense of containing the painter's in-dividual expression of a definite idea, or troth seen in nature, realized and worked out with more or less fullness of detail. It is very im-portant that even the slightest study should be made thoughtfully, and have some clear aim and meaning, if it be no more than the of-fort to represent the effect of a branch silbus-etted against the sky. Vacue perfunctors etted against the sky. Vagne, perfunctory dabbling with colors and brushes is a waste of time and frittering of energies. It is first necessary to see, before one can copy or repre-sent, and clearness of perception should and does result in strength and truthfulness of ex-

In making studies from nature, as in every deed of mankind, thought, more or less conscious, is the parent of action, and the good old rule to look more at the landscape than at one's drawing of it, to let the eyes and the beain do twice as much work as the fingers, is a safe one to follow. In choice of subject considerable discrimination is necessary. Stotches made in morning or late afternoon light are more effective than those attempted. light are more effective than those attempted under the direct downward mys of the noonday sun. Scenes on cloudy or gray days have a characteristic effect of their own. An excellent practice is to make several drawings of the same scene under varying conditions of the same scene under varying conditions of light and atmosphere; it proves a more practi-cal lesson than could be given by any amount of writing on the subject. It will be found that a wholly different scale of colors will have to be used for each separate study, and this ought to be valuable aid toward the realization of the important fact that no one object in a landscape has, so to speak, any fixed or arbi-trary coloring, but is wholly dependent on its useftion, or surrounding circinstances. position, or surrounding circumstances.

To represent nature successfully, it is abso-lutely necessary to set aside all precon-ceived at conventional notions of form or color, and to make the honest effort to set down what is actually seen. The subject being chosen, with a definite aim and meaning in the mind, the general position of the objects and direction of the lines may be rapidly and lightly sketched with pencil. The pointing should ascally be begun by washing in the sky, and many artists lay in all the first broad washes as quickly as possible, working gradually forward from the horizon, in order by covering up the paper as soon as possible (the high lights, of course, being left clear where nevessary) to be able to get some blea of the effect as rapidly as

A GOOD plan for a beginner in making blocked in first before putting on the local tints. Hurry, even where time is limited, is to be avoided. Better do less and do it well, than to fail completely through unwise haste. Be enreful never to work over a fint before it is perfectly dry, or the transparency will in-evitably be lost.

OF course, it is not possible for an inex-perienced worker to attain all the requiperienced worker to attain all the requisite qualities at first in each study, but the chief aim to be kept in view is the effort to get a proper breadth of light and shade, with sufficient contrast and variety of color. Breadth is attained by the conission or blurring of unnecessary and fussy detail in the high lights and deepest shadows. Contrast and truth of color are dependent on the proper juxtaposition of complementary colors, it being seen for example, that the shadows of objects seen, for example, that the shadows of objects in brilliant sunlight are purplish in tone, while their lights are yellowish. Variety is not to be gained until the student has learned to see, as well as to know theoretically, the wonderful amount and the depth and bril-liancy of the tints that exist even where the whole effect is comparatively gray or dull. These bright tones should be laid in holdly beneath the local coloring.

HINTS FOR SKETCHING ANIMALS

HE average student does not

HE average student does not realize sufficiently the value of cultivating the babit of constant sketching. The word habit is used advisedly, for if the custom of not only currying a small sketch-book and pencil, but of using it on every possible occasion be once formed, it is wonderful how raphily facility will be poined; and facilite will be a gradually increasing proportion of drawings which will prove invaluable for future use and reference.

and reference.

As to the subjects, coming to something more definite than the general and excellent maxim to draw "everything" as opportunity may serve, it is a good plan to take up some one branch of work and make the sketches for the most part bear upon it. Lovers of bird or animal pointing will find an inexhaustible source of pleasure and benefit in making in-numerable studies of either various or special kinds of two and four-legged creatures, in every conceivable attitude and under varying circumstances, always aiming very particularly ter naturalness, whether of repose or action. However slight the sketches may be, each one should be the result of real study and close observation, until gradually the structure, habits and peculiarities of the animal in ques-tion will be learned thoroughly and by heart. Notice contells how its limbs a part to what Notice carofully how its limbs are put together, what latitude of motion they have, and the attitudes into which they most resdily fall.
Think out and commit to memory the general proportions and size of body, head and limbs, and make careful and detailed studies of each and make careful and detailed studies of each separate part, so that afterward, in mind sketching, they may be intelligently suggested where it may not be necessary or possible to work them out very fully in detail. In this branch of art difficulties are greatly multiplied by the natural restlessness of the models who, unless asleep, can rarely be induced to keep one position for any length of time. The only plan, therefore, is to cultivate the power of drawing from memory, in which the knowledge gained by studying the animal in the way suggested will prove of great assistance. It will be found that the faculties of observa-tion and memory can be greatly developed by tion and memory can be greatly developed by constant and persevering practice, and it is to this end specially advisable to concentrate one's thisend specially advisable to concentrate one's efforts and attention, taking up and continuing the study of one class of animal until a thorough grasp of it is gained, and only very gradually and slowly increasing the range of subjects. For thorough and carnest students, whose aim is the most intimate knowledge possible of their models, with a view to their correct representation, it will be found extremely helpful to study some treatise on the mantomy of the subject, preferably one written specially for artists. Knowledge of this kind gives a certain power, but even absolute correctness of detail does not constitute all the requirements for good animal work. Most quirements for good animal work. Most necessary is it for the artist to be entirely in touch and sympathy with the subject, that the drawings may be, above all, instinct with life and action.

During the cold and inclement months, During the cold and inclement months, when open-air sketching is not particularly inviting, domestic animals, such as the dog or cat, models which may be found at hand in most households, can be studied with advantage. There is some difficulty when these creatures have long or thick for to get the drawing cient and vigorous. They need even more careful and intelligent rendering than smooth-baired animals. The best plan is to smooth-haired animals. The best plan is to pay particular attention, after blocking in the general proportions, to attaining an accurate representation of the joints, head, features, and all parts, either partially or all together, un-covered by the for. Avoid the tendency to endeavor, with a number of "clever" strokes, to represent merely a mass of bair, aiming rather to suggest the form of the creature that is beneatly

In studying such animals as the cow or sheep, it is best to go out into the field where they are at pasture, and make acquaintance sheep, it is nest to go our more they are at pasture, and toske acquaintance with them in their own demain, and to this end a number of informal drawings will probably in the beginning prove more helpful than a long and labored study or painting. Artists well advanced in their profession employ very profitably a powerful field glass in sketching slay or manaperachable models. It is investigable in making drawings of birds, for is invaluable in making drawings of birds, for Instance, in action and in flight, in the freedom of their woodland homes, although, be it understond, that to follow such a study as this with hope of success is not work suitable for a novice. Dwellers in any of our large cities which can boost possession of a meangerie, can take advantage of this opportunity of making sketches of wild animals. But this also should only be undertaken by those who have previously gained facility by the study of more easily accessible models.

HELP IN IYOUR OWN WORK

Under this heading I will be glad to answer, every month, questions relating to Art and MAUDE HAYWOOD.

H. S. R. AND OTHERS-Names of firms cannot be given in the column.

KATIR-There is a free school of art for women in New York tilty at the theoper Institute.

A. L.-Copselt a good work on photography. The process is too long for the full directions to be given here in a few words.

M. C. A pinks gold frame would be suitable for the oil painting of likes: described, or a white and gold frame might be used, if preferred.

Mar.ris.-You had better write for the desired information to the magazine in which you saw the art described to which your letter refers.

E. A.—It will be best to consult a good picture cleaner is to the cracks in your oil painting. I cannot give per-onal recommendations in this column.

A Young Reason.—To obtain the rich golden base of an amber-colored bowl, use raw umber, and raw alcana with French Naples yellow for the high lights.

liose-Careful directions were given in the January Journal, as to the manner of stretching paper for water color painting.

Inderturn—Brombie prints are perfectly permanent, and are therefore not at all their to fade. The paper is suitable for treatment with either crayons or water colors.

C. T. H. - The dark color of the medium used with the faster paints does not injure their brightness. You may use pole cepal varnish, however, in making the med-local flyout profer.

To Inquintess—The address of the New York Society of December Art is 28 East Twenty-first street, New York; and of the Hallmore Society, 215 North Charles Street, Bultimore, Md.

A. B. C. B. – For the aladow color of a stork, or any other white object, (in other use white, saw umber and cobalt with a touch of black; also white, yellow others, cotall and a little black for the more delicate half lones. P. W. T.—I know of no method likely to prove satisfactory of studying said paper or carpet designing a home, unless under the personal tuition of a good practical designer. The best plan is to take a course at a first-rate training school.

A New Superment—Powder bronze colors, together with the mediation used to apply them, may be purchased of any dealer in artists' materials. (2) How to paint flowers has been treated of in the Journal of May, 1801, and of February, 1802.

A. L. D.—The Women's Art School referred to be-age to the Cooper Institute. (2) The term good or sit "technique," as applied to a picture, refers to the namer of fits execution as far as the handling of the aterials employed is concerned.

AMATEC 8—The rough neademy board is very good for the purpose of making either inndecays or flower studies, duries the work be very fine, when the smooth would be preferred. Very satisfactory results may be obtained on the academy board, but on the whole can-vas is perhaps more pleasant to work upon.

J. R. H. – Directions for applying the raised paste were given in the article on "Royal Wordester Decora-tion," published in the Jonuscan for last September, (2). In linding with Lacrotx colors, gried these on the paiette, with spirits of turpentine and a very little dux in proportion about one-sixths, then add the requisite quantity of Cooley's linting oil.

Ivy Manet.i.x—Paint the clover leaves and blossoms with very shaple coloring on the sachet. For the shadows of the flowers mix cosait, yellow other and white; for the perpilsh pink high fight one tree mader mid white, and for the white blooms and a very little lemonyellow to the utiver white caspingst. The leaves may properly of black and lemon yellow, also of cobalt, yellow other and white.

Dandoutrouan.—There is a finely illustrated work on the history of per-and-ink drawing, with interesting de-scriptive text, by Frentell; and there is a chapter of in-struction and limits on the subject in Hametonian, "Graphic Aria" (2) A handbook on landscrape paint-ing in water colors is included in the Winerr and Neu-ton series; a short freatise by Freiley on the "System of Water Color Painting," will also be found very useful.

1. A. C.—The expense of the materials for French tapestry painting in the Grénie method is not great in comparison with the value of the work when well excepted. Five dollars will more than provide for the secressry colors and brushes forming the utilit. The cost to be consisted chiefly is the curves, which is order that the dyes may be fixed by steam must be all word, and is worth seven dollars and a half a yard, fifty-six lactics wide.

Manuauxr-Children with a natural taste for art "scribble" with pencil and paper from their carlied infancy. Try to get your daughter to attempt the representation of simple flowers, foliage and other education of simple flowers, foliage and other education to be found in the rooms of her own binne. The series of handscoke pottlehiced by Winsor and Newton are reliable and methal for a beginner. Some of the articles on this page in back upuniteer of the Josephan might be useful to you.

ascful to you.

8. D.—To live at a great distance is a disadvantage, but not an insurmountable one in all cases, in obtaining li-linstration work. (2) Certainly; magazines will accept drawings without manuscript, if they happen to be available. (3) The photo-engraving companies frequently require pen-drawings made from the photographs or sketches supplied by their caseomers, in order that they may be expredisced by the process in question. They would not be likely to give the work to anyons fricing in a distant state. (4) From every point of view it is better for an illustration to be within any access of cellures and publishing houses, but it does not believe that because an artist lives in a city she will necessarily obtain the desired suppleyment.

T. B. The list of colors given for R. P. H. will assurer year purpose. If you wish to begin in this. A flaw meet year purpose. If you wish to begin in this. A flaw meetium-sheet long-hair brushes, a pulsetic kulle and a wassion paterts will be required; for a meetium said lineard oil, pale copal varpose and spirits of turpentine in meaning for a beginner who is to be self-taught. Directions as to the ostill were given in the perimenary article on this subject, published in the January Jouanna.

R. P. H.—The following is a list of the fewest colors necessary for landwage pointing in oils, although this paidtle is by no means to be regarded as arbitrary, as nil artists fave their inflictual preferences; Indigo, Antweep for Prossian) blue, cotall, emerald green, raw under, boson stenus, raw shows, yallow other, yellow radionly of chrome, ounge cadmium for chrome, feared yellow, rase inadder, scarlet vermillion and ivery black. Others, of course, may be added with ad-vacinge, but these are sufficient.

BREADWINNER—The various women's exchanges take hasel-painted cliffus to self on commission. Firms who deal in fancy and building goods are usually open to head in fancy and building goods are usually open to head in pretty said dainty work, but it know of romes to fasposing of erren small pieces without some outlay and rick. With a view of obtaining employment, take a few specimens to reliable dealers, and if they are safficiently well done, you may perhaps be given orders for some work, but as a rule the actist takes all the risk, the goods being on safe or return.

risk, the goods being on sale or return.

I. B.—If the neadensy bound was properly priped, the painting ought not to sink in as you describe. You may variable by with copal or mastir variable. (2) To take the wrist-ken out of the paper on which the water color sketch is made, it will be necessary to stretch it by welling the paper and pasting the object to a bound in the ordinary was in which paper is prepared for reliabling upon. After bring allowed to dry, the paper should be perfectly smooth. It is perhaps a little different to do this without injuring the coloring and possibly you might have to touch the picture up again in places. (3) feet your painting in oils, (4) feet your painting the coloring made possibly you moster, yellow octors, so halt, scarlet vermillion, cose modder, and silver withe.

USICALLY, it is of immense importance what piano you buy.

Its life will be many years; years that will make or mar your musical life. Then don't make a choice that you will regret all these years. In the Ivers and Pond you not only get a first-class piano; you get all you pay for.

We send on approval, at our risk and expense, or direct you to a dealer who can supply you. Write for Catalogue.

Ivers & Pond

Piano Company, Boston

Beautify your homes. For all decurative purposes use the celebrated

Star Enamel.

Chairs, tables, backers, frames, flower-point, vases, ear, painted with this enamed have a purcelain springer, and are as glossy and vascitable as majorita, their throughout Europe by the mobility priceasity. The Star Enamed is gut up in the case as above in cut, and is said for 35 castle per cas, any culture. can, any color. Card showing 21 different colors sent free by mail on application.

This can is M size of can.

JAPANESE GOLD PAINT

ready mixed, guaranteed to be the most betiliant and durable took! Paint, decorates anything and errorything, per britle, Sic., yet up in a polisized wiseless less. Ask year struck-reper for it, and if he does not keep it, enclose Sic. and we will express, changes prepaid, one two withte Emmen, or any other color, and one box of Japanese Gold Paint, or, it you profer, two time of Star Emmen or two boxes of Japanese Gold Paint.

These goods are test nonfable, and, overlay to high charges, we ramped prepay expresses on less than two peckages.

GERSTENDORFER BROS.

S BROTHERS CHICAGO PIANOS GRAND RAPIDS PRINCIPAL OFFICE AND FACTORY, MUSKEGON, MICHIGAN.

CONSERVATORY OF UTICA, N. Y.

Music in all its departments, languages, electrical Corresponding professors only. Christian home, Celebrated European professors only. Christian home, Beginners or advanced students thoroughly trained as music teachers and artists. Positions cought for graduates. Advantages, without temptations of tig cities. From fire weakly chasses in sight-resolving, harmony, theory, instead, expenses in the professor professor professors, professors, From fire weakly chasses, the sight-resolving harmony, theory, interest, recipies, landers, trusts, influent fire to $100. In feet, 166 students; now, 40. Prospecting graits.

LOUIS LOUISARD, Director.

SUMMER SCHOOL

Metropolitan College of Music OPENS JULY 1st, 1892.

Boarding accommodations. All advantages of the winter school relatived. Dudley Buck, Pres.; A. B. Parsons, Ver-Pres.; C. B. Hawbey, Mus. Dir. For particulars, adver-H. W. GREENE, 1980; & Trent., 19 & 21 E. 14th St. N. Y.

MUSIC SALE To reduce our stock of music we will send by pieces full sheet mesic size, including song, marcins, smilters, quadrilles (with calls), etc., by Mendelesohn, Recthoven, Monart, etc., all for only 20 cts.

COME ADES, and 50 songs, words and mask, 6 cts. Makingtain, guarenteed or money refeated.

Q. L. HATHAWAY, 39 Wash, St., Beston, Mass.

THE SYMPHONION MUSIC BOX

Bas changeable steel glates which makes E more desirable. Send for catelegue now. FRED H. BANDEN, 149 Congress Street. Boston, Mass.

A Folding $21.00 and Table Bed $21.00 Washstand For Summer Cottages, Schools, Hotels, Private Houses

GRAND RAPHS CAMP FURNITURE AND BOAT CO. Circulars Proc. Grand Rapids, Mich.

"STAMMERERS"

to John Wanamarke, Fortmaster-General, on, B. C. Send for Aspage perophies to E. S. JOHNSTON'S INSTITUTE, 1633 Spring Garden St., Philodelphia.

STAMMERING

Send for "Speech Defects, Their Causes and Cor-rection," Refer to W. R. Cark, B. D., Lynn, Mass, E. J. E. THORPE, Newton Centre, Mass.

THE HUMAN HAIR,

Why it Falls Off, Torns they and the Remeety, By Prof. HARLEY PARKER, F. R. A. S. A. T. Logor & Ot., 1911 Arch St., Philada., Pa.

DAISY KNIFE-CLEANER

Neal, clean, efficient, derable. Complete by mult 25 cts. LVNCH & FLETCHER, 25% Third Ave., New York,

ORIO ELECTRIC CO., Circuland, whale Agreels. Catalogue from THE TOURIST - $1.00 a year. Utics N. Y.

E THE DOCTOR A FRIEND

STRUGGLE with a sick STRUGGLE with a sick child is a most pitiful sight. One's who le beart goes out to the poor, forlore, little sufferer, who is making such vigorous efforts to escape from the necessity of submission, and yet we dare not disobey the doctor's orders and dy unapplied. If we succeed, of the conflict has probably harm as the medicine can dorink from the ordeal, weakly rink from the ordeal, weakly forst happens, what a bitter the thought: "If I had only t have been different," has always had its own ikely to be willing to give it ing and miserable. Bribes of little use then. The used to discipline, is only a weakness and wenriness physician said to me not physician said to me not had known cases where been sacrificed because iight to obey. No doubt xperience could confirm it this a fact to make se. "Am I preparing my well as health? If not, it now, before it is too > is old enough to under-it the doctor is its best up as a means of pun-al foolish persons do. that, Willie, or the we you masty mediive you masty medi-fingers near the sew-doctor will come and are obliged to send naturally will have ociations with his giad to see him, or agestions. Where end, the children and will welcome tranger has to be y after a time if up dread visions mind.

> > the throat that and in inducing cometimes im-cution to the sh, without so r little patient n tells sadly > > > mouth and an be done s a reward his throat." that he is his life.

> > > > a in trifling isagreeable treated in they are sprinkled r oil can sence of trough a use pre-urs old. iething

> > > > > ed the acility when > > > > > > nd to di.

A WELCOME GUEST

BY IDA WORDEN WHEELER

WHEN baby comes! The earth will smile, And with her spring-time arts, beguile The sleepy blossoms from their rest, And truant song-birds to their nest, To greet my guest.

When baby comes! Now fades from mind All thought of self. The world grows kind. Old wounds are healed, old wrongs forgot, Sorrow and pain remembered not; Life holds no blot.

When buby comes! Methinks I see The winsome face that is to be. And old-time doubts, and haunting fears, Are lost in dreams of happier years. Smiles follow tears

When haby comes! God make me good, And rich in grace of motherhood. Make white this woman's soul of mine, And meet for this great gift of Thine, In that glad time.

THE FEEDING OF INFANTS

By D. M. Cool, M. D.

URING forty years of notive practice, a large share of which has been spent of which has been spend in special attention to diseases of children and their hygienic care, I feel there is a great want of knowledge, especially among the masses, re-garding this important knowledge, especially among the masses, regarding this important subject. There are many mothers who cannot nurse their infants, and I am sorry to say some who can, but will not; and again there are many, especially among our American mothers, who are not able to furnish the twelve or fifteen hundred pounds of milk a well-developed, healthy child requires the first year of its life. Under these circumstances the problem of correct artificial feeding of an infant becomes of importance. The food of a baby until the coming of its double teeth should be free from starch. If the child requires feeding, the question presenting itself to the mother is, what shall I feed baby? The nearer this food approaches to the mother's milk, the better it will suit the child. In other words, the closer we imitate mature, the more certain we will be of success. The only available food is the cow's milk, but this contains practically three times as much cheese as nother's milk. The baby does not require this cheese and cannot digest it. It was made for a calf that can run and play when it is a few days old, and is designed by nature to follow its mother in order to get its food, and consequently, in order to supply the necessities of the calf, must contain a large percentage of caseine, or cheese, which is termed nitrogenous, or muscle-making material. On the side of the child it cannot walk, neither was it designed by nature to do so. If it goes from one place to another it has to be carried, consequently does not require muscular development, and its food is rich in carbonacous material. The proportion of cheese to the butter in cow's milk is as one hundred and live; in mother's it is as one hundred to one hundred and live; in mother's it is as one hundred to one hundred and live; in mother's it is as one hundred to one hundred and live; in mother's his calf must have muscular development, and its food in this manner: Take the milk of a healthy cow, strain it in as many dishes as you expect to feed buby times from this supply, and Let the milk stand in a cool place (ico-box in summer with nothing in it but the box in summer with nothing in it but the milk, and in the winter a nice, clean place should be selected), and for a new-born infant (if it has to be fel) dip the spoon into the milk, and the cream that will stick to the spoon will be sufficient for one feeding. Add to this water that has been boiled and is still warm, sufficient to give it a bluish color, and add a little sugar of milk. One or two teaspoonfuls is sufficient for one feeding. As the baby grows older dip a little deeper and add less water. For a child three months old you can take the unser one-eighth of the milk and take the upper one-eighth of the milk and cream, and add to this enough water to make it a little bluish. This will require ten or fif-teen parts of water to one of milk and cream. Good milk of a bealthy mother contains eighty-nine and nine-tenths per cent. of water. You see, this is not diluting it more than mother's milk. But be sure that the water that you are using is absolutely without im-

After diluting in this way you will find upon examination that the butter is to the cheese as one hundred is to one hundred and seventy, the same as in mother's milk. This will agree with the buby, as it imitates mother's milk. This is so simple: When the milk is set at rest the cream being the lightest comes to the top, and the cheese settles to the bottom. For thirty-five years in clinics and in hospitals, as well as in private practice, I have been gov-erned by the above rules, and am thoroughly convinced they are correct, and that a halv who is deprived of the nourishment which nature intended for it will thrive upon milk prepared in this way. Of course, great care must be taken that the child is fed at regular

I am afraid that some of the mothers who come to the Mothers' Corner for advice and assistance are disappointed at not receiving it assistance are disappointed at not receiving it.
sooner. A question cannot be answered in this column in less than three months after it is received. Letters requiring immediate attention should contain a stamp and the address of the sender to insure a personal reply.

STORIES FOR CHILDREN

OUR best story time is in the evening, after the house is straight for the right, the lamps lit, the first blasting, the tendshie set, when each ear is listening for the sound of father's foctsteps. The stery is always something that I have even myself; an incident from some back, or perhaps the whole story; some real occurrence culled from the pageses or from the life of some noted person, which will their the brains with sympathy or teach a lesson of love and helpfulness; or, again, something finny, but I make it a point always to be instructive.

Alack W. Hill.

ONE MOTHER'S EXPERIENCE

ONE MOTHER'S EXPERIENCE

My little boy, not quite seven years of age, but as larger as one of nine, is a vigorous, healthy child, having in his life only been confined to bed one-half a day on account of sickness. Thinking some of the simple rules adopted for his physical culture may be suggestive prompts me be give them to other young mothers. From early infancy my child has been accisioneed to regular bours for nourishment, exercise and rest. Clear days, however cold, the murse took him out in his carriage, and when brought in he was bright and rosy! but I have always been careful not to permit time to foreathe a damp almosphery. When very young, at his morning hath, he was nubted with alcohol and salt to strengthen and keep him from taking cold. New I use after his topid bath every other morning a little white wise. Any can de coloque dihited with saide while value. Any can de coloque dihited with saide by good as a preventive of chilliness, as well as producing a fresh savet odor. He purinks heartily of wholesoms food, as he is not in the habit of eating between meals. He never touches condy, does not know its laste, though such tempting sweets are frequently be stomach and beeth give me no trouble, and he is not other amone to the physics. He does not altered any kind of avening enter-alments, but goes to bed at half-past seven of clock in winter and eight o'check in summer. When between two and three years of age he assessed rather a nervous child, yet we trained him so that he has never had any more fear of the dark than the light. He has often been the only occupant on a floor where no gas was borring. He prefers a coal dark clean the light, the has often been the only occupant on a floor where no gas was borring. He prefers a coal dark can be found to his above the only occupant on a floor where no gas was borring in a few mounts and the coal season. I wrap my buy's feet in a light woolen where to watch approached to he dails askep in a few mounts. I think is somewhat attributation to his well-develope

GAMES FOR CHILDREN

GAMES FOR CHILDREN

If the mothers know of any book containing games, work, or any simple announcements for children from two to six years of age, and they will publish its name, they will confer a great flavor on many mothers who have not had kindergarten training, and have not much invention in that direction. The house is full of toys, but their attractiveness lasts but a few days, then comes the question ? "What can I do, manmon?" nod tears and quarrels for want of sunething to keep the active trains complayed in a useful direction. Let us have a great many suggestions on this subject for mothers who have to keep house, saw, mend, receive company and can't give all their time to amoning the little ones.

C.S. A.

WEARING FLANNEL UNDERCLOTHES

WEARING FLANNEL UNDERCLOTHES

WILL some of the Journal, mothers sell me what kind of undercisches the buly ought to have to keep the body at an even temperature at all times. It wooden undercisches are ween during the day, should a finnel gown be worp at night!? If one cannot afford wooden night-gowns, should they were critim undershirts and drawers during the day? Of rearse all persions should wear an undershirt at night like that worn during the day. But is it well to wear wooden drawers during the day, and at night to change for a rotton gown? Also why should not a buly wear flamed diapers, so as to keep the lower part of the body as warm as the upper part? Should growing buys wear light wooden undershirts and drawers in summer?

IUNOKANT YOUNG MOTHERS.

Flannel should always be worn next the skin, light-weight in summer and heavier in winter. A jacket of Shaker, or outing flannel, should be worn over the night dress, or a thinner flannel undershirt than that used during the day. Woolen night-dresses are not necessary except for persons who suffer from rheumatism, because the blankets help to been the body waven.

to keep the body warm.

Flannel dispers would be apt when wet to irritate the tender skin. The needed warmth is supplied by the flannel shirt. Growing boys should wear light woolen underwear in

BARY'S EVENING SLEEP

BABY'S EVENING SLEEP

WHEN my first boy came I felt that he was too precises to entired to anyone's care but my own during his bubylessel, which seems to me the most critical time of a child's life; if at that time be is left to others, seeds may be planted for almost envey treathle. Yet it is hard for the mether to give up all her time. But hard for the mether to give up all her time. Much as the loves her little one, she miss get wearied and impathent. I had led a busy, arrive life indoors, yet full of pleasurable excitentesses, church work and social imperium to that we seed the change. Fortimeter was a number of the time to the property of the motors of the important to have such a one for the first so young mothers don't make as many mistakes and love to learn too much through their sown experience. She told not link before the four weeks were up ale would train that hady in show from its to ben, so that my evenings would be feet. It have lift many times have I thanked her feet. It have lift meany times have I thanked her feet. It have but there beys since, and still my evenings are my own to receive compute, go out, see, read or do anything I like with. At its or check to the moment I undress, rab thousashity, drew armsty for the night, then nurse the haby to sleep, if he moses before tentors blue over; sometimes as he gets adder give him a detail of the mother, affecting his cryce is saider give him a detail of the mother, affecting his retrieved in the country sour haby alone, but have some one within or shot in case of anything unusual occurring. I have always been fortunate be having an interested girl in the khelm of the world in the mister and change if whe had a have been one within or shot in case of anything unusual occurring. I have always been fortunate be having an interested girl in the khelm of the would liken in haby whenever my hashand and I happened to be out.

A mother requires rest and change if she is to do her duty properly to her child. Her health of mind and body will be reflected in

A NURSE'S NOTES ABOUT BABIES

By Mass M. H. Berene

I want mothers everywhere to see the plotures of three babies that I took charge of after their mothers had given up all hopes of rearing them.

They had tried nearly everything in the way of foods before I took the cases.

Ruth was a year and a half old when I took charge of her, and was not so large as a well-child at seven months. Her flesh was soft, flab-by, and wet with perspiration all the time. She hardly stopped crying, did not sleep nights, and was so wenk that she could scarrely sit up. No one thought she could live. I put her on lactated food, and in a few weeks her flesh was running all around, as well as any child. When I first took Alice, she was in a terrible condition—cried night and day, head all Roth was a year and ble condition—cried night and day, head all scales, no natural movement of the bowels. The trouble was improper food and too much med-leine. Lactated food and good care made her what the picture shows.

The third child, Flor-ence, was even worse off than Ruth when I first saw her. She wanted to saw her. She wanted to cat all the time, but threw off her food as soon as swallowed. Lac-tated food had the same manifed effect in her can magical effect in her case, and that the child the day time.

ALICE.

The author of the above is Miss M. H. Beebe, Springfield, Mass., a nurse of long experience. The facts she describes, prove that Lactated Fisal makes the sick baby well, and keeps the well baby a picture of health. This food is not a medicine—simply nature's substitute for mother's milk that has saved many a little one's life. All reputable druggists sell it, or it will be mailed on receipt of price, 25 cents, 50 cents or $1.00. Book of prize babies and beautiful hirthday card free to any mother sending her baby's name. sending her baby's name.

Wells, Richardson & Co., Burlington, Vt.

For Summer Wear FERRIS' GOOD SENSE Corset Waists VENTILATING CLOTH, also in FINE Single Ply CLOTH, SINGLE PLY for Children, Misses & Ladies. GOOD SENSE Waists

Tage Insterned Bottoms. Circl-Edge Button Holes.
Clamp Buckle at His securely holds Hose Suparter. Single permits full expansion of lungs.
Gives Sufayactos. He sure your waist is stamped "GOOD SENSE."

FERRIS BROS., Maintenance and Falcation,
For Sale by all Lembras Estations
MARSHALL FIELD & CO., Chicago, Ill.
Wholesale Western Agents

"MIZPAH" VALVE NIPPLĖS WILL NOT COLLAPSE,

are superior to all others.

Make norsing easy, and provent much colle, because they admit air into the bottle as the milk is drawn out, and provents a vacuum being formed. Sam-ple free by mail upon request, with valuable information for cleaning and keeping nipples sweet and healthy. colic, because they admit air muo me-buttle as the malk is drawn out, and provents a vacation being formed. Sample free by mail upon request, with valuable information for circussing and keeping nipples saved and healthy.

BABY WARDROBE PATTERNS Complete suifft, 55 insuranced patterns for infinite' clothes. Also 25 of short clothes. Either set with fell directions for making, amount and kind of material, by mail, scaled, 56 cents. Patterns pheadutely reliable. BINTS TO EXPRIANT MOTHERS, a k by a trained nurse, five with early set of patterns. s. J. BRIDE, P. O. Box 2013, New York,

B WARD A ROBE Deprivation of overly gard A ment resigned. New Youth, 1987 pale, 1982, short clothes, 25 pal., 1982, short clothes, 25 pal., 1982, short clothes, 25 pal., 1982, is kind and, mat "I resident, valuable hydresic information by perfected in times, and partifulic of babies, from 1886, free, with such, New England Pattern Ca., 1984 it, Pantiery, Va. BABY'S HEALTH WARDBOBE. Complete outil in-tant science, 25 pat., 20 cts. Short chiefles, 26 pat., 30 cts. Full directions, kind, material required, Putterns improved 1952. Res. F. B. PHILLIPS, Kesse, S. H.

EDITED BY MARY F.KNAPP

Ist row—cast off 15 stitches, knit 3, slip 1, knit 1, pass the slip stitch over it, knit 20; turn and knit back plain.

34 row—knit 4, slip 1, knit 1 and pass the slipped stitch over it, knit 25; turn and knit back plain.

back plain.
Repeat the last 2 rows until you have only

24 stitches on the needle, the same number as on the other shoulder. Knit 25 rows upon these 21 stitches.

needle. Ye the needle.

these 24 stitches,

41st row—knit 4, increase 1, knit 25; turn and knit back plain.

Ropeat these two rows, increasing every other row, until you have 32 stitches on the needle, then east on 14 stitches for the neck and knit the 32 stitches from off the spare and the state of the spare o

Knit 8 plain rows, casting off 12 stitches that formed the sleeve at the beginning of the 9th row-east off the 12 stitches that formed

10th row-kuit 1, puri 1, to the end of the 25th row-knit 2, purl 2, to the end of the row. 25th row—puri 2, knit 2, to the end of the row. 27th row-knit 2, purl 2, to the end of the Repeat these 8 rows until you have 15 of these rows of plain knitting.

Knit 4 plain rows.

5th row—slip 1, knit 1, increase 1, knit plain to within 2 stitches of the end, increase 1,

Knit 8 plain rows and east off all the

TO FINISH THE SLEEVES Hold the sleeve with the inside toward you,

Hold the sleeve with the inside toward you, and knit a stitch into each row of knitting at the edge. Knit 2 plain rows. Work the next row throughout 1 plain, 1 part. Repeat them for about 13 rows and cast off. This rib makes the sleeve a good size and makes it set comfortably to the arm. Sew up the sides and under the sleeves of the vest very neatly, taking cars to make the patterns correctly. To finish the neck work a row of d c in each stitch of the knitting. In the next row 1 t, 2 cb, 1 t, 2 cb, 1t into d c st, miss 3 d c st and repeat.

HANDKERCHIEF CASE IN CROCHET

BY MARY J. SAFFORD

single zephyr wood was used, but assue persons would prefer Sax-ony.

Begin with a chain twelve inches long, and work a strip twelve inches long and five inches wide, in the tricot stitch so often em-ployed for afghan stripes. Next, cruchet in dualde craches titch, one raw entrels around double crochet stitch one row entirely around the strip, putting one chain stitch between every two stitches, and putting the double crochet stitch into every other tricot stitch.

the one single stitch between the next two alternately, until the whole is finished. This forms a pretty open-work border with a scalloped edge.

For the lining take a strip of pink satin, wide and long enough to cover the piece of crochet up to the first row of shells, turn in the raw edges, and blind-stitch neatly to position. Turn one end back, so that the satin lining folds over to the depth of an inch and a half catch it firmly in place, and fasten on each side bows of rose-colored ribbon an inch and a quarter wide; one yard will probably be sufficient.

this style. Pale blue, with lining and bows of olive, plak with white, gold color and white, are excellent combinations.

These cases are extremely pretty when lined with a contrasting color; and as it is often difficult to match slik and wool, many choose

Next, make a row of three ne chain

alternately.

leaving two looblecrocket between each shell of three.

Finish with a row of eight

treble croches. one single crocket, put-ting the eight treble stitches between two of the shalls

VERY dainty handkerchief case can be made by any one who knows the first simple stitches of crochet. For the one I saw pink single zephyr wood was used, but the other sleeve, purl 1, knit one, alternately, to the end of the row (62 stitches on needle).

Knit 3 plain rows. Repeat the last 4 rows 5 times.

Repeat these 2 rows 7 times.

Knit 1 plain row,

Repeat 5th row.

stitches.

Kuit 5 plain rows. Repeat 5th row.

Rolt 5 plain rows.

21st row—parl 2, knit 2, alternately.

22d row—knit 2, purl 2 alternately.

23d row—parl 2, knit 2, alternately.

Knit 1 plain row.

23th row—knit 2 and 2 to the god

You ought now to have 55 stitches on

LADIES' KNITTED VESTS

By JANE S. CLARKE

GREAT many women cannot bear woolen materials next to their skin, and we have much pleasure in giving directions for making a most comfortable knitted vest, which will not irritate the most sensitive skin, and has the great advantage of being very cheap as well as very durable. The wood I believe to be the last for the rurnous is best for the purpose is the unshrinkable vest wood, and a quarter of a pound is more than sufficient to make a vest. For a full-sized vest, it is desirable, however, to have a little more word than you actually require, because it is always useful for usending, and if you are obliged to knit a fresh piece to repair a torn or worn-out part, wool of the same color may not be easy to find.

The size of the required needles depends very much on the person who uses them. If she knits tightly, then I should recommend hone needles No. 7, but if she knits loosely, then needles No. 9 or 10 will be coarse enough.

Cast on 76 stitches. Knit 8 plain rows.

9th row—slip 1, knit 2 together, knit plain to the last 3 stitches, then knit 2 together, knit 1. Knit 5 plain rows,

15th now-Slip 1, knit 2 together, knit plain the last 3 stitches, then knit 2 together,

Knit 3 plain rows.

Repeat these last 4 rows until you have 62 stitches on the needle 35th row-knit 2, part 2, to the end of the 36th row-purl 2, knit 2, to the end of the 37th row-knit 2, parl 2, to the end of the Knit I row plain. 39th row—purl 2, knit 2, to the end of the row. 40th row-knit 2, part 2, to the end of the 41st row-purl 2, knit 2, to the end of the Knit I row plain. Repeat these 8 rows until you have 15 of these rows of plain knitting, then: Knit 4 plain rows.

Rift 4 paint rows, 125th row—knit 1, parl 1, to the end. 125th row—knit 1, parl 1, to the end. Repeat these last 2 rows 7 times, and at the end of the last row cast on 12 stitches for the 141st row-knit plain, and cast on 12 stitches at the end for the other sleeve. There will now be 86 stitches on the needle.

Knit 8 plain rows. For the shoulder: 1st row—knit 26 stitches. then knit 2 together, knit 4, leave the other stitches unknitted, turn and knit back plain to the end of the row.

3d row-knit 25, knit 2 together, knit 4; turn and knit back plain.
5th row-knit 24, knit 2 together, knit 4;

turn and knit back plain.
7th row-knit 23, knit 2 together, knit 4;

turn and knit buck plain. 9th row-knit 22, knit 2 together, knit 4;

turn and knit back plain. 11th row—knit 21, knit 2 together, knit 4; turn and knit back plain. 13th row—knit 20, knit 2 together, knit 4;

turn and knit linck plain.

[5th row—knit 10, knit 2 together, knit 4;
turn and knit linck plain.

Knit 28 rows upon these 24 stitches. 45th row-knit 20 stitches, increase 1 by taking up the wool directly under the next stitch and knitting it, then knit 4; turn and Rejeat these 2 rows until you have 23 stitches on the needle, then slip them on to a spare needle, and proceed to work the other shoulder.

Break off the wool and begin to work where needle, for the shoulder.

you divided for the shoulder.

WHISK-BROOM HOLDER

CROCHET with silk 2 down one inch rings. Sew together in rows, six in the first time rows, four in the next, and two in the Cover a strip of pasteboard for support in the back, and sew time brass chain all around, and suspend by the same, instead of ribbon, by way of variety. The chain can be procured at any bardware store at small cost, Brass bells attached to the lower rings and cor-ners complete this picity little recentacle, which is both ornamental and useful.

Frames for cabinet photographs are also made of cro-cheted rings; one row across the top and each side, and two-rowsacross the bostom. Run a ribbon through the rings, and fin-ish with a bow or resette.

FANCY PEN WIPER

FOR this pen-wiper crochet nine one-inch rings, and sew together in diamond shape. In each ring embroider a spider web, For the leaves cut cloth the same shape, and buttonhole stitch all around with silk; join with ribbon.

CROCHETED WHEEL LACE

BY EMMA MCFARLAND

THAIN 9; join in a ring. 1st row-Ch 3, √ 30 d c in ring.
2d row—1 s c in each of 35 d c in first row.

3d row-1 s c in each of 35 s c in second row. 4th row-ch 3, 3 d c in first 3 s c of last row, ch 1, 3 d c in next 3 stitches, ch 1; repeat un-til there are 9 groups of 3 d c, ch 3, 1 s c in each of the next 8 stitches, 2 s c under the 3

each of the next 8 stitcies, 2 s c under the 3 ch of last row.

5th row.—ch 3, 1 shell (2 d c, 1 ch, 2 d c) under first space of 1 ch, ch 2, 1 shell in next space, ch 2; repeat until there are 8 shells, ch 3, 2 s c under 3 ch of last row, 10 s c in next 10 stitches, 2 s c under last 3 ch.

6th row.—ch 3, 1 shell (3 d c, 1 ch, 3 d c) in first shell of last row, ch 2, shell in next shell, ch 2; repeat in each of 8 shells, ch 3, 2 s c under 3 ch, 14 s c in next 14 stitches, 2 s c under 3 ch, 14 s c in next 14 stitches, 2 s c under 3 ch.

under last 3 ch.
7th row—ch 3,9 d c in first shell, ch 2, 1 s c under first 2 ch of 5th row, ch 2, 9 d c in next shell, ch 2, 1 s c under 2d, 2 ch of 5th row, ch 2, repeat in each shell, ch 3, 2 s c under 3 ch. 18 s c in next 18 stitches, 2 s c under 3 ch.

18 s c in next 18 stitches, 2 s c under 3 ch.

8th row—ch 3, 1 s c in center stitch of 1st scallop, ch 8, 1 s c in center of next scallop, ch 8, repeat to last scallop, ch 3, 2 s c under 3 ch, 22 s c, 2 s c under 3 ch.

9th row—ch 3, 14 d c under each ch of 8, ch
3, 2 s c under 3 ch, 25 s c, 2 s c under 3 ch, 10th row—ch 3, skip 1st stitch, 3 d c in next
3 stitches, ch 1, 7 d c in next 7 stitches, ch 1, 7 d c in next 7 stitches, ch 1; repeat until there are 13 groups of 7 d c, ch 1, 3 d c in last 3 stitches, ch 3, 2 s c under 3 ch, 30 s c, 2 s c under 3 ch.

under 3 cb. 11th row—ch 3, 1 shell (2 d e, 1 ch, 2 d e) in first space of 1 ch, ch 2, shell in next space, ch 2, repeat until there are 14 shells, ch 3, 2 s c under 3 ch, 34 s c, 2 s c under 3 ch, 12th row—ch 3, 1 shell (3 d c, 1 ch, 3 d c) in first shell, ch 2 shell in next shell, ch 2; repeat in each shell, ch 3, 2 s c under 3 ch, 38 sc, 2 s c under 3 ch.

13th row-ch 3, 9 d c in first shell, ch 2,

1 s c under 2 ch of 11th row, ch 2, 9 d e in next shell repeat in each shell, ch 3, 2 s e under 3 ch. 42 s c. 2 s c under 3 ch.

This linish es one wheel join the 2d wheel to first at the center of 1st, 2d and 3d scallogs. It is now ready for the head-

With the wrong side of the lace held toward you fasten the thread under the 3 ch at beginning of the straight edge of first wheel, 1st row—3 d c under 3 ch * 1 d c in each s e across scallop, 3 d c under next 3 ch, 2 d c in first 2 stitches of last scallop on edge of wheel, 2 d c in last two stitches of first scallop on next wheel, 3 d c under first 3 ch, repeat from the length of lace, 2d row-Turn and make 1 shell (2 d c, 1 ch, 2 d c) in each 7th d c across the lace with 2 ch between.

3d row-turn, make 1 shell (3 d c, 2 ch, 2 d

c) in each shell, with 2 ch between.

4th row-turn, 9 d c in shell ch 2, 1 s c under 2 ch of 2d row, 9 d c in next shell; repeat in each shell.

5th row-1 s c in center stitch of scallop, ch s c in center of next scallop; repeat.Join the wheels before making the heading.

LEZUE MAY - Directions for indice conclused under-st were given in the January, 1888, issue of the Joe a

O. A. M. B.—The knitted quilt given in the February issue of the Jottan at is she's pattern; the sides of quilt are to be filled in with knitted half shells.

M. S. G., Brooklyn—Some time stace we printed directions, and illustrated the table mat you ask for. You can use a fine number of macromé cord in place of the terman cord.

M. F. S.—You will first directions for crocheted slik pures in Book No. I. "Hefshite Paliterns." A glass plate, with a wire handle wound with ribbot, and a low on each end of the handle, makes a pretty card re-

SASE.—To make a match scratcher take a piece of motel, or suth ribbon, about five judices wide and eight inches long; frings the bottom edge two nucles. Knot it if you like. In the center of the ribbon fearen a piece of sandpaper three or four hiches square, putting it on diamond shape by gluelog it at the corners, or a cross-silich with silk same color as the ribbon. Suspend by a small rib red.

ANNUE—To make a printy and comfortable evening thing for similar use Germanitown wood and bone kind-flag needles. Cast up edging-thee stitledes kind meabursleed and twenty-dive paris—twice across is a part.

**Band did six stitledes and drep the sevenish trapeat from star across uptil no exipties are left on the number linvel the disapped stitledes down to the first rest. Cruchel scallege across each end, then the in first part is caused give the exact member of skeins needed, either five or seven.

HERE'S A MAIL ORDER SPECIAL

These Selts are of RLUE MEDAL FLANNEL on ex-cellent fibric. Every dotall of the making is most carefully looked after, and we are curtain that the outils represents the best value that is or own be given by any establishment in this country. The autt alone, as every parent knows, com much more lu the average elothing store than our Special Price for the entire. The sizes are 3 to 12

Oue Complete Suit
One extra pair Pants
One Polo Cap
One extra Cord and Whistle

ALL FOR $1.49

NOTE.—Our establishment is the largest in New ork. Mail-order system one of the most perfect in PASITION CATALOGUE.

containing fith descriptions, illustrations, and prices of hundreds of articles that can be bought by mail sent FREE to any address.

BLOOMINGDALE BROS.

3d Ave. cor. 59th St.

FREE! to every lady

PLATE PASSE MAN

Write at 2000, he pin in a Yearst and our mutalogue many dellors. NAMLER HINGS, 540-344 Sixth S-o

DON'T YOU THINK

Your Ball would look presty in a carriage like that? We have prestrier ones, also cheaper ones, all shows in our catalogue, which we will such frees if you write for it. PRESCRIP PAID by

WALTER HILL CO. 220 Wabash Ave., Chicago

Normandie

RESS CUTTING

BY THE TAILOR METHOD. WAIST, SLEEVE AND SKIRT CUITER. Simplest and most practical ever made. All listly can become a practical lives Cultar in half an hour. Age Half price to introduce it. Send for challer in M. KUHN, Inventor, BLOOMINGTON, ILL.

SILK SATIN and PLUSH REMNANTS for Crazy Patch. A large pig. postty process assured culors, Sat.; I plegs. Sic. A large pig., all colors, Emmodery Sile. Sic. Sheet of Crazy Silecton and Sile. Cal. of Fancy Work with every order. LADIES ART VI. Rea 1884, St. Laois, Mo.

CROCHET WORK Letest and Complete Instruction Kinds of Creckeding. Cotton, Linen, Silk and Wood. Sent. residential. & cotton. nds of Creeketing. Cotton, Linen, Silk and Wood. nt. postpaid, 26 cents. L. WHITE & CO., 29 STATE STREET, Chicago, Ht.

SEW LESS The lavisible Monder. Mends any article of wearing apparel without a packeds. About waited, Send for Carlingue. MRS. A. GAIL, Station W. Brooklyn, N. T. Box 128

MISS HOOPER invites, and will cheerfully an-

DRESS AIDS FOR MOTHERS

DRESSING SMALL BOYS

SCACCION HE kilt skirts of cheviot and Wattenn plait of one box plait running from the neck to the foot at the center front. On the lower edge is a border of embroidery, ex-cept at the Wattenu plait; under this plait the waist fastens with pearl buttons, and coat or hip pieces are attached at the waist line. The sleeves have updarfied cuffs of embroidery, and the deep cape collar is triusmed to correspond.

GOWNS FOR YOUNG GIRLS

GOWNS FOR YOUNG GIRLS

A MOST useful gown for a young girl is a blazer suit of serge having a bell skirt, bedice and suspender straps all finished with stitched edges, the skirt opening on the sides with pearl or gill buttons. The blazer has a rolled collar, short revers and high sleeves and stitched edges. The abirt waist may be of fine striped flaunel, wash or China silk, and is gathered at the center of the collar, back and front, held by a draw-string, and finished with turn-over collar and caffs, ruffled, and a jabot ruffle down the front. Round waists, gathered or bell skirts, and square jacket fronts are worn with a blouse front of surab or China silk. Challie dresses have a girdle or belt of ribbon and a yoke of point de Genes lace. Girls of fourteen should wear the skirt to their ankles. Black hose and ties for nice, with "common sense" or round-tood shoes for everyday wear. The bodices worn with suspender straps must be botied. Striped Bedford cont cottons are fashioned into a blazer suit and worn with a shirt waist of figured cambric or plain white. At twelve years of are a and worn with a shirt waist of figured cambric or plain white. At twelve years of age a gathered skirt should measure three yards. A pretty such for dressy wear is of soft silk, the full whith, with the ends fustened at the side seams just under the arm-holes, brought to the front, crossed and carried to the back to

FROCKS FOR THE LITTLE WOMEN DAINTY party frocks of China silk, Henri-

D AINTY party frocks of China silk, Henrista, cripon, etc., in white or delicate shades have a gathered skirt, round or slightly-pointed waist, and sleeves in two puffs to the chow, with a frill of êcra point de Genes lace corresponding with the bertha frill of the same. The gaimpe is of mult, or the finest of India linen. The heavy Madras and cotton cheviots are selected for sailor suits trimmed with white cotton braid. Yokes, girdles and cutfs of colored piqué are worn on white piqué frocks, with white braid trimming the blue portions. Sailor suits have the skirts boxplaited or galliered. Point de tienes lace is plaited or gathered. Point de Genes lace is used as a bettha or brotelles frill, flat yoke and Vandyke collar. Belts of insertion are worn on gingham frocks. Lawn, mult, and latiste frocks are simply trimmed with a frill of the goods around the low neck, and worn with a white gammas. Except explanations in with a white gainine. Bassian embroidery in colors on stripes of batiste, Hamburg embroi-dery, point de Genes lace, velvet, and satin ribbons are all used for trimming girls' dresses.

form a knot and two long ends.

piqué are buttomed to skirt waists of figured cumbric,

EXPENSIVE SUMMER GOWNS

HARMING toilettes of crèpos, challie, white cotton goods and China silks are easily made at home for afternoon and evening wear during the summer, when the full dress incident to the grand winter receptions is not required. Everything this season must be trimmed with lace, ribbon, and jet, to give it the desired stylish air, and with plenty of such accessorementaler of the dress may be quite.

Black ties or slippers are in good style of these costume

NEW DESIGNS FOR GOWNS

NEW DESIGNS FOR GOWNS
HITE challie having pink flowers and ght green leaves has a bell skirt with on the lower edge and a dip in the sated with bows of light green motris at intervals of every half gard. The redice has a yoke and deep cuffs of Genes have, with a collar of the ribbon rointed girdle of the same, which is the widest part—the point in front—rows of the ribbon, then tapers to one sich ties at the back in long ends and Cream crepon makes a girlish coatame bell skirt leaving a border of cream, teen, yellow and blue moire ribbon, hanges with every turn, being of the of-pearl shades. This border is more up to a short figure that seems to lose with a ruffle. The bodice has elbow and a V-shaped neck, and is without A ruffle. The bodice has elbow and a V-shaped neck, and is without A ruffle of een point de Genes lace eneck and wrists, with bows of ribbon its fuliness. A Wattean belt and bow the toilette, which is also very pretty oning girl's graduation dress. White silk covered with yellow chrysautheis fushioned into a scantily guthered ving two ruffles on the edge, one three and the other five deep, and both sewed e same cord for a heading. Down the are five large rossities, called "chrysaum" bows, as they are of many loops ited ends, initiating the petals of the These areof No. 2 satin ribbon, yellow. The round bodice has a half low ith a ruffle of white chiffon headed row of small rosettes set closely to-The electes reach nearly to the elbow.

The sleeves reach nearly to the elbow, ve a ruffle of chiffon below the row of at the lower edge. A wide, soft belt w crèpe is tied on the left side, with et ends and loops in Directoire fashion.

GOWNS OF WHITE FABRICS

GOWNS OF WHITE FABRICS

A linon, mainscok, linen lawn and nity are all prettily made with a full iffle, full sleeves and deep, close cuffs, Russian bloase, round or a full "baby". The trimmings are ribbons and point as lace, which may be lad in white or nd is applied as a bettha ruffle, flat offs, or wrist ruffles, flounces, girdles, it is put on every fubric and in every manner. A Russian blouse is Initia a round waist by wearing a "double cirt, which consists of a bell made in rts, the upper one reaching nearly to and the lower one to the floor, with her trimmed to correspond with the fls, yoke, and opening down the left. its, yoke, and opening down the left. Iroamy organities and batistes are like-med with this lace, ribbon belts, and r silken girdles. If the possessor of pretty skirts, silken, woolen, or cotton, lace jacket and blouse to wear with using the black French lace, or the cotat de Genes.

E SKIRTS AND PRINCESS DRESSES

RAPED front seen on several of the inported gowns shows a bell slape, drapery the full length coming to a a the lower edge, with the sides turned i to form large revers. Another dress an apron rather pointed in the center rrow at the top. The Wattean bell is like the bell skirt worn for some time, e center back has a triple box plait on side, which is only four inches wide at tupering wider toward the bottom like sein plait. This Watteau fullness at ck is now seen upon jackets, enpes. es now seen upon jarkers, enges, g-sangues, blonses, tea-gowns, wrappers, s growns, and also on low and high , with the fullness looking as though an resulth had been elongated from the and caught up to the back between the crs with a bow of ribbon or passemennament. Puffs, ruffles and flat borders bionable for a skirt. Trimming the is not yet passé, and outlining with cutterie, etc., is still a favored garniture.

*DRESSMAKERS CORNER

Under this heading I will cheerfully answer each month any reasonable question on Home Dressmaking sent me by my readers. EMMA M. HOOPER

Mas. Besser M.-A personal letter to you has been

Max. E. R. F.—Have a bell wirt and trim with jes and moiré ribbon as described to "Alone."

KITTER R.—Press, the plaits out of your goods and make a "bell" skirt with a gathered bias rulle, high sleeves and a pointed, cont-tail basque. Vest of black scrash, bragather or brounds, with jet or silk gloop on all of the edges.

SASANNAH—Have a bell skirt, with a ruffle bended with hours of velvet or moiré. No 9 pages; colored rib-bon. Hasque may have a point, back and firmt, joke-ned deep cuffs of earls point de Genes law, with ribbon in lower edge fled in the back.

D. M. K.—An "extra tall woman" should wear a ruffle on the edge of her "bell "skirt. (‡) The "bell" is used with and without a "ellp." (‡) The fairing not skirt are not always stitched ingether, except at the best, but are of the same shape.

Mits. SALLIE B.—Houd amover to Mrs. Books M. Correspondents are requested to write their address plainty, as several letters have been returned where the address was so thereal that I could, but gives at it, and such guesses are not always correct.

A. L. C.—Binck plant capes are not stylish. (2) Steel colored Recristin is a pecity color, and frims nicely with jet girm, now so similarable. (3) Have a control these and pointed front to your baselon. (4) Hilbon accessories are more stylish for house gowins.

piqué are buttomed to skirt waisis of figured cambrie, lawn, or nainsook, and over the outer jacket the round or suitor collar attached to the waist rests. Short truspers and kilt skirts worm with loose bloose waists are buttoned to an underwaist of silesia. The outside jackets have a wide, short back and round or square fronts, with only side and shoulder scams. Boys of one year have coats of white or tan. Bedford cord, Henrietta, or the soft lightweight French closkings, which are made with a round waist, full sleeves, gathered skirt and a Carrick collar of three layers, graduated in size, of the cloth, or one of point de Genes lace. With these they will wear a Tam O Shanter of white straw or Leghorn, or silk with rosettes of ribbon for the triuming. White and gingham dresses for boys of one to two years or older, if the mother wishes, have a gathered or box-plaited skirt reaching the shoe-tops, and a round waist buttoning in the back with only side and shoulder seams. A belt, or merely a corded edge, finishes the waist, which is shirred at the neck and belt, left plain, and a square or long plastron set in of embruidery, or bretelles of edging gathered from the center of the waist line in front to the shoulders. Plaids, stripes and plain ging-homs and chambreys are worn, also the striped cotton Bedford cord, dimity, piqué and minsook, with embroidery and insertion for a trimening. The sleeves are full, top and bottom, or have an upturned cust over a full cont shape. Torm-over collars are worn of the dress fabric, or embroidery. The Russian dress is mode of two widths of twenty-seven inch goods gathered on a cord to a round waist, which opens down the left side and is trimmed with a round waist and kilt skirt and a Wattenn plait of one box plait running from the lower edge is a border of embroidery, ex-Parkacused's Work—Chiffon ruffling is a very thin sliky material embroidered on one odge and in within from three and a half to be only lockes, twenty-five to eighty-five ords a yant. (2) As you have given your phiress I will answer your other questions personally.

G.—Yellow is supposed to prove becoming to any one, except a very red bloods. (2) Tuo, brown, dark red or green, told rose, may blue, tream and purple. (3) Brownish tan serge, whipcord, crypton, chevist, camel's hair, etc., with gubien-brown bengaline corselet.

PLOSSEE—Bring the Walleau bow from the under part of the arms and the in the bark as usual, if you do not wish it to cross in front. 12: Tries the gingless with an erro year and deep culfs of point de Geises lace. Have a cuffle on the skirt and wear a ribbon or facey leather belt.

Most Low-The inject wraps are reefer jackets in black and tan English cloths, (2) Shorter capes in these layers are the newethen in the cape line, (3) The Weltenshow is still Beartsicing, and probably will all summing up house decrease. (4) The two chief colors are tan and gray, then any blue and brown.

Lit.Lian—I aim sorry to keep you writing but this column to full to overflowing long before all are answered. You can wear the lace and velves with fealure if you are no longer in these motorning, viz. crips or plain severe black. (1) Black fairey straw, with faither those, lace and violets or lavender orchids.

Mus. Latta J.—Beat answer to "Alene," and use fright jet is place of the did. A forty luch plain green aftire you should pay $1.00 for, getting seven yards. A striped net at the same price would be more dressy. The border could be confitted for a rulle headed with bows of ribbots here and likere if you profer.

C. S. Wear gray, light tan, many and gray-ich blue, dark green, herwin, dark garnet, events and liwis, (2). The feel is skirt with a flat border, a modernistly his electer and basque reinted in front, with a pointed select, marrow contains back will make you look taller. Use lengthedes, that and narrow triumings. You are very young to have such a responsible position. (3) Afform bath.

A LEGAC-Marke the grenadine error dell-black surak, shaping the latter as a bell skirt with a marrow bias ruffle. Out the statistic is the same manner and trim with a berrier of thack fadile ribons. No. 14, without as edge. (2) The bedfore should have a point, back and frost, with a vert of surah field in the top and rutthead with surrow dull yet girny, which also trims the wrists and collar. Fold ribbon along the lower edge of basque, typing it at the back point in long ends and loops, using No. 12 for this.

By Falls.—Your lace skirt should be of the full, not the plate, order. (2) Hence the color by brashing it well and then sponge with an old black kid glove dipped into diluted alcohol; fron ou the versus side with a cloth between the lace and fron. (5) The shorten may be galaered at the shoulders and also into deep cuffs, or may be simply the full-topped cost pattern. (4) Your existion relating to gloightait dresses was anothered in the March and April Sense. Trim with a ribbon belt and deep point de themes her yoke and deep cuffs.

March M. Hours a Medica to her with a ribbon for a

and form point deducates here your and werp total.

HATTER M.—Have a black or lan rective jurked for a parting wrap. CP. Have your customere dyed a grayish blue and trim with macrow jet gimp on the edges of the basque. If a clear dark tide is more becoming to you have that shade, CP. Wear a black hat. (4) Make with a "bell" elselet soot a nerrow raffle on the edge, or bead the bern with gimp. Another becoming skirl for a short ligure is to trim each governed seam with a row of gimp jet or sifts, and to disperse with the raffle. The bodies should have a printed front and a similar or deep contact have a Hat beloves. tall back. High sleeves.

tail back. High sleeves.

E. R.—For street wenr China silk in black or navy blue grunnels will be worn; also crépons and thin summer weight cheviots. (2) Change the style of dress at schincen months to two years, discarding white voices and full help maints for the high maxisel plaited walks and jacket fronts in chambery, graphan and cotton Sodford cord trimmed with embrodery. At thirty months, if the boy is well grawn, he can wear a sailor blouse and gattered akirt of fannel for the summer, also a jacket and skirt of excelling or Henrietts with a biogse of China silk or nationsesk.

blouse of China slik or indicates.

Manne B. D. - First, cut out your skirt lining, face sham and fluish it, even to arranging the outside material, and then hang it up and out of the way. Cut out the bedien and severe, bases and fit both; there saw up the seames of the bedien, except the aboutder and underson seems; overseast or hind them all, perses those that are stitched, put in the houses and the belt, work the latitudiness saw on the beltens, bessee on the cellular and have another fitting. If everything is now want finish up the seams; if alternations are necessary make them at those seems; if alternations are necessary make them as those seems; put on the facing, sew the cellur and put in the alseeves, trying on the bedien core more to see if they are covered. The last the of sewing is put upon the steems protectors or affectly.

upon the storie protectors or shields.

Miss A. G.—The princess shape is chiefly intended for vicities and house wear, though some handsome street suits are made in this manner with the front of the bodice draped and the grown fusioned diagonalty, (2) Your China silk may have a "bell" skirt, gatherest ruffle and pointed bosines, with a plustress of China silk near her older of the fairner in the silk. The black moint, satin or velvest cities on the edge of the bodice, finishing in each and loops at the back. Jet gimp on the rollar and wrists, and to trim the front of the bodice from the side seams to the point, thus imitaling a corrected. Stend the rufflest here and there with bown of the ritheon, (3) Trim the challe with black have plastron, edging on the sizeves and a time steed gimp on the edges; "bell" akirt, round bodice, high sizeves and a rithen belt. a ribbon belt.

a stition beth.

Prince New American and toques of lace, but and flowers. (2) Heliskiri with a timy ruffle or two-overlapping if you are tail. Bedies with a coresist from and long control of beds and blaft steeves; tries all edges with survey hard long tent to the beds and blaft steeves; tries all edges with survey hard long tent in the late of the late of the without the desire. (3) The full skirt is correct for the without last resource (1) The full skirt is correct for the without the survey of the survey of the late of the l

SILKS

and SILK Goods

CATALOGUE FREE

The finest and most complete catalogue of Silks and Silk Goods in the world, is that published by the large exclusive Silk House of Chas. A. Stevens & Bros., Chicago. It now takes an enormous edition of many hundred thousand copies to supply the demand each season. This Spring's edition is now ready, and every lady interested in Dress Silks, Silk Waists, Silk Skirts, Silk Laces, Silk Parasols, Silk Veilings, Silk Ribbons, Silk Gauze Fans, Silk Handkerchiefs, Silk Hosiery, etc., etc., should send a postal card request at once and receive one, free. Address,

CHAS. A. STEVENS & BROS.

III STATE ST., Chicago, Ill.

FINE BOOK-FOLD GINGHAM

Sea Island Zephyr. Imperial Zephyr. JOHNSON MFG. CO. No. 83 Worth Street, New York.

PRINTED BATISTE,

36 Inches Wide.

KING PHILIP MILLS.

Send two-cent stamp for samples of

Cambric, Lawns,

Nainsook and Batiste, MADE BY THE

KING PHILIP MILLS,

85 Worth Street, New York, N. Y.

BARBOUR'S LINEN THREAD

ADAPTED TO ALL KINDS OF

HAND AND MACHINE WORK

LACE AND EMBROIDERY, now of so much interest to the Ladies, especially considered.

SOLD BY ALL RESPECTABLE DEALERS IN THE COUNTRY.

ASK FOR BARBOUR'S.

HAVE YOU A TORN DRESS?

UNIVERSAL MENDING TISSUE

Which mends stills, Salin, Piroth, Velvet, all Cotton and Weolen Goods, Kid Gloves, Gossamers, Carriage Tops, Burbers, Olf Cieth, Carpets, etc., without sewing and much nature. Also beens all Diress Goods better than can be done by hand or mechane. Price, per package, postpaid, 25 cepts. Try H. State, County and Lecul Agents wanted, 125 per cent, profit. Address J. F. UPSON & CO. Manufacturers and Wholessie Agents, Unionville, Conn.

Sample pair of either style mailed on receipt of 25c. I. B. KLEINERT RUBBER COMPANY, 26 to 32 E. Houston Street, New York.

A complete garment, were under the cor-et or flarmals, protecting the classified from perspiration (theorem that does a balds.) CONTROL DE STATE DE COMPTE DE COMPTE

Stamping Patterns
Any one who wasts Stamping Patterns can have there sent to select from on agreement to pay for what they keep and return the rest, Address HENRY MITCHELL, North Sending, Mars.

DY

We will send you a fringed linen Tidy of "An Owl Maid," Pless to work R.
Ingalls' book of stitches and Elysare Catalogue of Stamping Guttle, etc., ait for six 2s, stamps (12a.) Address
1. F. Iwahifa, Lynn, Mass. Fox J.

CLADIES without business experience of Mine. McCalle 8 Coulsetts AND Walsts. Sendfor agents torant. St. Louis Corset Co., St. Louis, Mo.

INFANTS GERTRUDE PATTERNS. Best ideas in Dress Heform. Outfine made in cheaper by this method than any other. Materials for complete cutift of 20 pages, $2. Send 2 tests for samples and estatement. H. J. Sprassum & Co., Cheapen.

DBILADELPHIA BHOPPING. Send for circular, Miss M. Thousen, Lock Box 88, Philadelphia, Pa.

GOING-AWAY GOWNS FOR BRIDES

By Isabel A. Mallon

HE wise little maiden who is going to marry the dearest man in the world, naturally desires to look her prettiest on her wedding-day. She thinks of white satin and thinks of white sain and illusion veils, of orange blos-soms and fascinating gloves, of high-beeled slippers and dainty faus; and then she stops and thinks again. All this is beautiful; all this fuser, can only be were finery can only be worn once in one's life, but after all it does take such a lot of money, and can never be used for any other occasion. So, remembering the for any other occasion. So, remembering the length of her purse, remembering that even if she had the white gown re-draped with roses, and the veil folded away after the wed-ding, there would never come in her life the time when she would really have the proper opportunity to wear it, so she concludes to have what used to be called a traveling dress, but which is now known as a going-away source.

A FEW GENERAL SUGGESTIONS

THE style of this gown depends entirely on the distance which she travels; if her go-ing away is simply from her mother's home to her own, or to some great hotel in the same

A GOWN OF ROSE AND WHITE (Illus. No. 1)

city, then an elaborate visiting toilette may be city, then an elaborate visiting toilette may be worn. If, however, a journey is to be taken on the train, a simpler costume is chosen, and as soon as possible it is changed for one that shows signs of former wear. Do not permit yourselves—and I should like after this to put about four exclamation points—do not permit yourself to look dowdy when traveling. Silk of the light-weight bengaline, Irish peplin, soft wools, and cloths suited to the season, are liked for going-away gowns, and the bonnet and gloves must, of course, not only be in harmony with them, but absolutely and entirely fresh. The shoes are pretriest when of patent leather, low, and laced up the front, but when one starts immediately on a journey of some length, it is wise to have the ordinary high buttoned boot. A going-away gown made for a brown-haired lassic is somewhat elaborate, but is intended to be worn afterward at various garden parties and fêtes to be given in honor of the bride.

A GOWN OF ROSE AND WHITE

A GOWN OF ROSE AND WHITE

THE material used for this costume (Illussilk, the extremely fashionable broad stripe forming the design. The skirt finish is a somewhat scant gathered ruffle of plain rose silk, the skirt itself being fitted closely to the figure, and having the very slightest train imaginable in the back. The bodice is a close-fitting one of plain pink bengaline, it is pointed in front and at the back, arches over pointed in front and at the back, arches over the hips, and fastens at the side so that an invisible effect is produced. Across the front are draped folds of the striped silk, so that the Zonave jacket effect is gained. The sleeves are full and high over the shoulders, of plain pink silk, and come down to points over the wrists. The high collar is of silk, and, at the back, falling from the neck, are long white ribbon ends that reach quite to the edge of the skirt. The bonnet is a small one formed entirely of tiny rosebods, tied under the chin with rather broad moiré ribbon. Easy-fitting, white kid gloves are worn. Of course, such a dress as this could not be cited as a general going-away gown, but it is in extennely good taste for a bride to wear when she does not leave the city, which is a sensible practice followed by many brides this summer. Such a costume for a widow marrying for the second time could be developed in gray and white, time could be developed in gray and white, while the bonnet could be of steel, or pule-blue

THE SIMPLEST OF WEDDING GOWNS

THE SIMPLEST OF WEDDING GOWNS

THE simplest of wedding gowns, and one which is often affected by young girls when they are going right on the steamer to dance o'er the billowy waves and go "strange countries for to see" is made of dark-blue senge, with a plain round skirt simply finished with a deep hem properly stitched and pressed by the tailor himself. With this is worn a blouse waist of blue silk, sufficiently full in the back and front to be comfortable, and belted in at the waist with a blue, varnished belt. The sleeves are only moderately high, shaped into the arm, and have their stitching as their finish. The collar is a turned-over one of blue silk, with ribbon ties holding it in. With this is worn a small, blue straw bonnet that fits the bead after the simple, old-fashioned With this is worn a small, blue straw bonnet that fits the bead after the simple, old-fushioned cottage shape, is decorated in front with a bunch of pink arbutus, and has narrow, blue ribbon strings and a prim bow under the chin. The gloves are of gray undressed kid, and the ulster, which is part of this outfit, is a blue and white cheviot made with a deep cape.

ANOTHER PRETTY WEDDING DRESS

THE English idea of a real going-away toi-L lette, that is, a gown in which one can be married and which is not too elaborate to travel in, is shown in Illustration No. 2. The material used is of light mode suiting, which material used is of light mode suiting, which has for a finish about the lower edge of the skirt three narrow frills of mode ribbon a shade darker. The bodice is drawn up in soft, full folds, among which is the invisible fastening, and then it has an outer draping of the same fabric, which, turning over, forms deep capes on the shoulders and revers at each side, that are outlined with a narrow band of feather trimming, the entire style tending to make the shoulders look nauch broader and the waist smaller. A soft, broad ribbon of the shade of that which trims the skirt comes from the under arm seams on each side, and being softly knotted falls far down in front. The sleeves are close-fitting ones with a finish of feather trimming at the wrists. The high collar is made of node ribbon in stock fishion. The hat is one of the pretty, flat shapes of light The hat is one of the pretty, flat shapes of light straw trimmed with loops of mode ribbon and clusters of lilies of the valley. The gloves are of a dark shade of mode matching the feather trimming. Understand that this feather trim-ming is not a wide one, but merely a piping.

THE GIRL WHO WANTS TO KNOW

THE GIRL WHO WANTS TO KNOW

BUT," says somebody, "what would you do yourself if you were going to be married and felt that you couldn't have satin and tolle, had to choose a gown in which to travel, wanted it to be pretty, and, best of all, to be refined?" Then I answer, "My dear girl, I should take the one that is shown in Illustration No. 3. It is simple, but it is smart and will be useful. The wearer will never be distinguished as a bride by ner gown, and in selecting it she will obtain a costume from which much wear could be obtained." The cloth is a good Scotch tweed showing a small check pattern. The skirt is made very close-fitting and entirely escapes the ground. Well-bred women, my dear, are not posing as street scavengers nowadaya. A soft silk skirt of a light cream shade is worn cream shade is worn beld in place at the waist line by a belt of light brown leather which is pointed and laced just down the front.

The collar is a high, folded one of the silk. The little coat is of the same material as the skirt, has recorn talls of has square tails of medium length in the back, and is cut off short like a man's evening coat across the front, a rolling shawl collar notched to have revers is faced with a corded silk of light brown shade. The sleeves are full, but not raised on the shoulders, are shaped in to form a rather loose cont sleeve and have as a finish inted cuffs The hat is a brown straw sailor with a low, rather broad crown worn well forward on the head. The gloves are the very heavy piqué walking gloves, with over-lapping seams and closed with four large buttons. The hair is braided and looped with a darkbrown ribbon.

If a plain material is preferred, it might be chosen, but people who have ex-perience say that the small checks wear better than any plain fabric. If the sailor hat does not suit you, get one of the square walking bats, or a soft Alpine one, and dressed in this way you can go on no end of pleasure excursions with your husband, you can become interested in thousands of things that you never dreamed of before, you can photo-graph, and collect beetles, and climb moun-tains, and you will never once have that awful horror coming over you of hurting your gown. Even honeymoons have been destroyed by that, and certainly if ever woman enjoys herelf, it ought to be when she is living through that one moon when to her blessed and be-lieving heart there is but one man in the world and she bears his name.

PLAIN AND YET SMART (Illus. No. 3)

THE LAST FEW WORDS

SOMEBODY smiles and somebody laughs because I talk about the right of a girl to enjoy berself during her honeymoon. I don't mean that it shall stop right there. I mean that I want her to keep on enjoying herself; I mean that I want her to keep on believing in that man just as long as evershe can. If God has been good enough to her to give her the love of an honest and true man, then must she not only keep on loving and believ-ing in him during the honey moon days, but forever days, but forever, and that still day after, about which we read. If, unfor-tunately, she has chosen a man who is not all she thought him to be, then she must love just as much try to believe, and see if her carnest efforts won't bring about just what she wishes. It is just this way I am a bit old-fash-ioned, and I believe that when God's minister says to two people, "Until death do you part." that do you part," that that's just what he means, just those words, and that each of you two have got to stand by each other, trying to make the best of it. And so I want to say that in choosing the gown that you are going to wear as you make your first step into the land of love. that you will find with it a spiritual gown, woven of gentleness, embroi-dered with forgiveness, and thickly laden with a trimming of loving kindness. Wearit" until death do you part."

)F everybody knew that they could not get anything better than the best, all the glove-wearing world would put on the "Kayser Patent Finger Tipped" Silk Glove to-morrow. The tips wear longer than the rest of the glove. We know it so well that we give a "guarantee ticket" with each pair sold, good for another pair should the tips wear out first.

If you cannot get this glove from your dealer, notify the manufacturer, JULIUS KAYSER, New York, and he will see that you get them.

JUNE WEDDINGS

Have you a friend who is going to be married, and are you in a quandary as to what will make a suitable wedding gift? Send us your name and address, and we will mail you, free of charge, our

Spring and Summer Catalogue

It's full of suggestions about new, novel and appropriate gift things.

Our Mail Order Department

has every facility for filling orders promptly, carefully and satisfactorily.

We please you in every instance, or refund your money.

WOODWARD & LOTHROP WASHINGTON, D. C.

WAJACKSON
BROADWAY, 9TH A 10TH STREETS, NEW YORK.

We pay Mail and Express charges within 100 miles N.Y. Chy, Purchases of 8,00 or over seat FREE to any part of the U. S. BAMPLES free. State price and material wanted. Fashion Book mailer free. Mention The Ladies' Home Journal

GREAT BARGAINS IN DRY GOODS

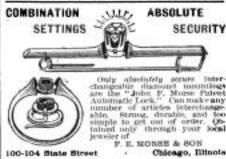

BAT BARGAINS IN DRY GOODS

Benriettas, Cacharores, Besiford Cords, Fancy Jacquard Weaves, Brilliantines, Serges, Bullstes, Tamise, Camel's Hair, Groundines, etc., in prices ranging from - 38e, to 77e.

Camel's-Hair, Fancy Besiforis, Cheviota, Chevron Weaves, Brilliantines, AllWood Chaillies in black and white, White and Black and Imperial Serges, etc., of prices ranging from - 28e, to 78e, SILKS

and White Purpose and Indias, Black and

Black and White Punges and Indias, Black and White Surahs, Black Falile, Armans, Grosdrains, Pean de Soles, Plain Black Indias and Chicas, all prices ranging from 39c, to $1.00
BLACK AND GRAY WASH GOODS
In every description, from 10c, to 25c.

A woman's idea put into shape to nid her sex. A simple invention for winding and unwinding a cleather-line. Keeps the line free from knots and inagles, awes temper, time and line. Every housekeeper should have one. For sule by Greens, Hardware and Notice Bealers. Ask for it. Will send one pesipaid for bein. M. S. DUGGAN & CO., 281-85 N. Green St., Chicago

Wherever the BOCKER WASKER is used the Wash-beard Becomes a Relie of Barbarism. It is warranted to do the washing of an or-dinary family is one beer as clean as can be washed by bund. Ask your dealer for it, or write for full description and prices. Agents Wanted. ROCKER WASHER CO.

Fort Wayne, Ind.

Use "COMMON SENSE" TRUNK

PALICA BROS., Racine, Wis.

A PRETTY GOING-AWAY DRESS (Illus. No. 2)

E SMALL BELONGINGS OF DRESS

By Isabel A. Mallon

ox will be glad to answer any question about woman's wear which may be sent inal readers. She asks, however, that she be permitted to answer through this the Journal; though, if stamps are inclosed, she will reply by mail. Address 5. Mallon, care of The Ladies' Home Journal, Philadelphia, Pa.

* T is by no means true that the most elaborate bonnet is either the most becoming, the most expensive, or the most fashionable. A well-informed milliner said: "Anybody can trim a bon-informed milliner said:

"Anybody cun trim a bonnet where a fan of lace, a knot of ribbon, or great mass of flowers may be used to hide imperfections, but it takes an artist to trim an absolutely simple chapeau." This means that the placing of a bow properly, the poising of a bunch of most suitable place, and where soming, is an art. Try it your-he untrimmed hat or bonnet your flowers, your ribbon or lecoration may be, and see just se it will take you to discover : it will appear as if the ribbon pessons absolutely grew. This reasons why French milliners setted to the use of pins in trimmation is properly placed—if it is r a second, the charm may be can be found again. So wisely illiner catches it ere it has time is it in position, as if it were a with a plain or force with is it in position, as if it were a r with a plain or fancy pin.

A reversare liked on cont bodices, nen who can stand the trying f black cloth and white satin n of the dead white hue, and ad cut's match them.

at is to be given much wear a de triuming is communded. It ten or twelve sharp bows and one side of the crown, with a ant that quives and sparkles ing wind. In design, this may crescent, a full moon or that shape which is known as the shorate capes of black silk or the are trimmed with jet and ed that they belong to matrous roung women, who choose, in-ing cloth jacket. The life of sack will certainly be a short ly imitated, it already has that h is so objectionable applied ommon."

met should exactly match a trequired; and really it would to find one exactly the same etumes of the senson. However, the black stow hat, which is est vegue, accords with any ne Fashion also insists that a cinnamon brown. A very met is of cinnamon brown mater its brima band of tiny out as if they were afraid of on top is a bow of brown the ties are narrow ones of unpticity. implicity.

of green, from light Nile to bade, is fancied in Paris; but ch woman, who knows that dow skin does not show well rily enough combines black to black jet with the bright way that it is absolutely as c as the color she claims ex-orgn, which is that very try-odd wedding presents given a most beautiful pair of garters; white silk, and the buckles lussions in clear whiteenamel, ntly line to be removed from rorn as shoulder clasps, if one ode or white "spats" worn r over low shoes are no longer orm, and in their place the es. Spats, by the by, to look ke the proverbial glove, and kle, or do not adapt themthe ankles, they are to be namy trousseaux shown this lingerie has been invariably be Exverite trimming being a the material bemetitched in a lor, by the by, suggests the be used. Pale green sets are green ribbons and scented hay; the pink ones are fra-abots of lisse or chiffon are if one is tall and slender are certainly cannot be advised tre abort, waisted and stont.

claboration in parasols is apolles, upon which nothing be in good taste. The para-til size and oftenest of plain it is tritumed with lace or he distinctly understood that forstress wear, but is intended g, or at the watering places.

COTTON cord develops very well in bell skirts and long Russian blouses; as the lines are so simple in this design, it is easy to see that the gown may be worn all summer without its being necessary for it to visit the classical.

A VERY dainty bat, that looks as if it might have been made for a fairy to dance in, has a brim of black lace caught here and there, with a single lily broken from its spray, while the crown is formed entirely of lilies of the valley, that stand up against a background of green moiré bows. A black lace butterfly, poised as if for flight, stands just in front on the brim, and adds to the "airy, fairy" look.

THE short Eton jacket of smooth black cloth and having revers fored with black silk, is worn with a white shirt and broad black sash. The skirt in harmony with this should be a perfectly plain tailor-made one, escaping the ground.

A LOOSE suck of black cloth shows revers and deep cutts of white satin, while just where the revers end a broad white satin bow is tied. A trying jacket to wear, this is by no means as completions as the description would seem to make it. would seem to make it.

W OMEN with time and ingenuity can trim their cloth gowns in the manner most fashionable; that is, they can braid them, patting on the narrow or wide braid by hand. It is for this work that the tailor charges so much, because as the braid is hemmed down on each side, so that it may not curl, many a stitch is required before the work is completely done.

A FANCY has arisen for a parting in the hair. Few women can stand one just in the center of the head, for that requires a in the center of the head, for that requires a good forehead, a perfectly outlined pair of eye-brows and a straight nose. However, the hair can be parted on the top of the head a little to one side, or indeed, if it is becoming, very much to one side, and the parting not allowed to come through the short fringe which is just over the forehead, and which produces a softening effect. Few woman can afford to do without the bang, which is, when properly out and becomingly arranged, decidedly the most universally becoming mode that has ever been known.

THE very general liking for black and white has induced the failor-made girl to wear a skirt and cutaway coat of black cloth with a white shirt, black tie and black belt. of course, her gloves are white, stitched with black, and she carries the most severe of black sum arabrellas, strapped so that it looks as slender as possible, and having dead white handle and a dead white knob as its finish.

CIREAT quantities of jet are used upon the very fashionable black gowns. Jet, by-the-by, is counted as universally becoming, a something which it is not, for many faces require that its hard glitter be softened either by lace, ribbon or velvet, and so in using it one must discover first whether it is absolutely suited to one's style or not. Of course, it is always bandsome, but much magnificence is oftener out of place than too great simplicity.

CHATELAINES continue to have silver imitations of the various things on the earth beneath and in the water under the earth, but none is complete without a coin upon which something is engraved or cut. As it is against the law to deface a coin in any way, lovely woman is now willing to spend ber money having a ruby set in one, or having a motto engraved on one because it is so delightful to feel she is an offender against the laws.

THE bride's bouguet instead of having its stems covered with sifk shows them defily and carefully hidden from view by white kid. This is sewed on in the finest manner, which precludes the possibility of its alipping, and so there is no danger of the glove being specied. One says "the bride's bunquet, but this is the mode of arranging all the really handsome bouquets.

MONG the daintiest of handkerchiefs is a A square one of pearl lavender crèpe de chine, which has embroidered, just about the tiny scallop that is its finish, a violet that is many shades darker, and to which are two tiny green leaves, the color of those that form the framing for that sweetest of all flowers, the

BELTS of all kinds, from the plain black ribbon and canvas to the most elaborate development in gold or silver, in leather or kid, will be worn during the summer. They are not very wide, as the linen bloose with which they will be worn is this season tucked in, and a very wide belt would tend to make waist of the wearer look larger than it

ARGE hats for wear in the country and intended to shade the face are, when dark, of fine English straw that will bend without breaking. When this is not chosen Legharn is given the preference, and the broad brim bent about the low crown may be cought here and there with roses, or loops of ribbon as to hast libed. as is best liked,

Printed Cotton Goods

SEND FOR SAMPLES

French 371/2 C. Printed Brocade, IDEALEAN, 18 c. TIJI CLOTH, 121/2 c. CREPONS, 371/2 c. Bedford 371/2 C. Cord Ginghams, Highland Zephyrs, 18c.

Liberal Business Methods

Thorough Organization, Promptness and Accuracy have all combined to build up our

MAIL ORDER DEPARTMENT

to its present enormous proportions.

This department by giving at all times the very best attention to out-of-town shoopers, has popularized the buying of goods by mail, and now reaches its patrons in every state and territory of the Union with the very best assortment of Dry Goods that the markets of the world afford. No distinction is made in quality or price between goods bought at the counters and those purchased through the mails.

Orders will be promptly filled, and forwarded to destination at the enrilest possible moment.

Samples of whatever is desired will be sent to any address upon application.

Strawbridge & Clothier Market, Eighth and Filbert Streets PHILADELPHIA

FASHION AND SILKS

THE genius and intelligence of Silk manufacturers are now receiving the unqualified endorsement of "Fashion." Silk fabrics are, to a greater or less degree, necessary in all the modern Costumes.

The different weaves are very numerous and very seasonable. Taffeta Glace, Taffeta Chameleon and Changeable Surahs, for Petticoats and the Foundation of Lace and Gauze Dresses, are shown in a variety of combinations and qualities, both in Plain and Pekin effects.

In China and Japan Silks, the styles and colorings are very novel and beau-The Changeable Grounds with White Figures, and Dark Grounds with Changeable Figures, are very handsome and much sought for.

We will cheerfully send samples and quote prices on request.

James McCreery & Co.

Broadway and IIth St., New York

Special attention is called to this celebrated brand of Bienched Muslin, which for fineness and derability is unsurpassed. This cloth is manufactured with great care, particularly for

LADIES UNDERWEAR and GENTLEMEN'S SHIRTS, in 36, 41 and 45 inch widths, and is guaranteed not to Crack or Turn Yellow. Inquire for this brand, and take No Substitute.

In purchasing garments, ask for Pride of the West.

For sale by all leading retail Dry-thools dealers in the United States.

INFATS CHIESTEN YOUNG ADIES A Very Satisfactory Garment. WHY? The cause it Supports Stockham and Underchiftee from the bliothiums, and has no stiff seeds, fee with percent of the bank of the bank in Oil. DON'T let manufacturere using chesp machinery and changer malaritat into a firm oil. 'ping' m you, To extend you we are the other. I the manufacturers in the world, Our machinery is of the blest and med are preved patiern, cooling double that used by other pin makers. Morehers we maintain of proper landmans, in we are the only manufacturers that each mass, in we are the only manufacturers that each mass, in we are the only manufacturers that each may in oil. This provide preserves the best, more lasts morth due small difference in price;

Pointed

We take Paints? You, he asses you better "points" incident to the new of Mad plus.

Take yourself the little paints in insist on having only the PURITAN Plus, an every dealer about heep them. Sample Card with free,—SEND FOR IT, PLEASE.

American Pin Company

Waterbury, Conn.

FARGO'S $2.50 LADIES' BOOT

Pocket Mirror sens

C. H. FARGO & CO.

LATEST FAB IN SEASON. Baw Size Prictions very durable: Plant Gloves: Face-wipers, etc. Head for samples, American Site Mg. Co., $13 Nation St., Phili-

LANGDON & BATCHELLER'S Genuine Thomson's

Glove - Fitting

A Perfect-Fitting Corset

"I would rather fit a dress over a GLOVE-FITTING Corset than any other dressmaker-in-chief of one of our largest dry goods establishments. So would all good dressmakers. They are very often blamed for a poor fit, when the trouble is that the customer does not wear the proper corsets to insure a good one GLOVE-FITTING Corsets not only produce this result, but comfort and grace as well. These goods are justly renowned all over the world, and can be seen and purchased at all the leading dry goods establishments.

> Money refunded if not satisfactory. WE WARRANT

"GLOVE-FITTING CORSETS"

LANGDON, BATCHELLER & CO., Manufacturers, New York and Chicago.

CORSET AGENTS Wanted to sell the Mostel order. Kauselson Conseit Wantes, Defroit, Mich. Ladies, Send Stamp for Primer.

I tio alterpring of all kinds. Ninn years' appeared of inference. Management Manney, we represent the LILY DHESS WILLIS AND THE BEST HADE

SUMMER DRESSES FOR SMALL PEOPLE

By Isabel A. Mallon

HEN the little tots begin to look as if they wanted a fresh gowning, when it seems as if not to have them in the pinks, pale blues, whites and violets, like the spring flowers, were wrong, then comes were wrong, then comes the busy mother's time.

I have said so many times, and yet I feel that I must repeat it, that the simpler a child is dressed the more fushionable is its get-up. Women of great wealth and of corresponding intelligence gown their little ones either in cotton, or some soft wood, but silks and laces are left for those mothers whose bank accounts are smaller, and whose taste is most decidedly bad.

THE MATERIALS IN VOGUE

THE wash dresses, and the cotton gowns for the little people, must be made so they can visit the laundry; gowns of zephyr gingham are given the preference. Those best liked are the "cram," which shows dull blue, faint pink, durable gray and golden brown; next to these the ginghams, showing a white background with the narrow stripes, is liked, and, by the by, these must be made up with the stripes straight instead of bias, as it was last year. Lawn or nainsook is faucied if the small woman is of a size to go to a buby party, but are seldom in use for everyday wear. Cotsmall woman is of a size to go to a buby party, but are seidom in use for everyday wear. Cotton cord is liked, but not for the very little people, it being put on the older girls, that is, those ranging from seven to fouriern years of age. It makes very durable dresses and, although it will certainly have to go to the laundry, it will return in that most desirable of all conditions, that is, it will look as good as new. In making up the piqué, great simplicity is observed, although where a girl is large enough to be a little careful as to her frock, it frequently has a scarlet sailor collar, scarlet cuffs and a deep pointed girdle of scarlet mounted on stiffening, and laced not only in front, but at each side.

WHAT STYLES ARE MOST FANCIED

What Styles are Most fancied

Wise mothers, while they choose simple styles, still insist that the little frocks shall be made after the last fashion; the last, by the by, being two. The one which is known as the French model, and which displays a very long waist and a skirt that is merely a frill, reaching just to the knees and permitting an absolutely free movement of the legs in running or frolicking. The other style, which is called sometimes the Greenaway, sometimes the Empire, is gathered on to the guimpe, allowed to fall full from it, and either drawn in across the breast and around under the arms, or else confined just there by a broad sash. This skirt entirely conceals the little legs, and too often results in a small girl tripping over her frock, tumbling indiscrimitripping over her frock, tumbling indiscrimi-nately, and not having quite as nice a time as she might wish. Personally, I prefer the French dress, because if a long stocking is worn the little body is well covered and suffi-ciently warm.

worn the little body is well covered and suffi-ciently warm.

On larger girls there is a fancy for very deep, full cape-like epaulettes either of the coarse lace or of the Russian embroidery, which is effective and by no means expensive. Every one of us knows how a girl from ten to four-teen seems to spring up like a weed in the night and look supernaturally tall and wonderfully narrow. These epaulettes add to her width and are decorative beside, while they re-tain their simplicity as a trimming. Very often regular little fichus made of mulle or nainsook, and having a narrow here, handnainsook, and having a narrow hem, hand-sewed, for their finish, are chosen for the older girls in place of the epanletres, but the latter are to be commended as newer, though as both have the sweetly prim air so much liked for little women either may be chosen.

THE YOUNG WOMAN WE ALL ADORE

S gowned in a frock of pink gingham. It is Is gowned in a frock of pink gingham. It is smocked at the throat to quite a distance down on the bodice portion; it is then allowed to lare and is drawn in a little below the waist line by a sash of the same material formed simply of long widths bemused on each side and tied in a big butterfly bow in the back. The sleeves are full, smocked at the wrists and then flare out in a ruffle that comes well over the hands. The edge of the skirt has a plain hem, hand-sewed, and above it three marrow tucks, caught by needle and thread in the same manner. The hat worm is a large one of brown straw. mer. The lint worn is a large one of brown straw with a huge brown ribbon bow placed flat on its brim. The stockings are long, and sus-pended from the waist, while the shoes have a medium low heel and are laced up the front and tied with ribbon strings.

and sied with ribbon strings.

This is a frock that your little daughter and mine could be happy in, would look pretty in, and what more can you want for her than this combination? To be happy and to look pretty? But that all that is necessary when one is young? Somebody says: "To be good" is required; but really, I do not believe any child is thoroughly happy who is not thoroughly good. It is a good dectrine to teach the little people, and the big ones, too, for that matter, that real happiness does not for that matter, that real happiness does not come unless it is brought by real goodness. A sermon from frocks! But then they can be found in everything; and when one looks for them in every-day life they do not always turn out such bad sermons. There will be no violent grief if the little gown is soiled, and yet there can be a gentle suggestion that some core must be taken of it. Tell your girl, as I tell mine, every time there is a horrid smut on her gown there is some poor unfortunate little flower has a smut come on it, and so the flor-er suffers for the misdemeanor of the little

OUR COMING MEN

DON'T you want to take him into your arms and hug him till he struggles to get free? It is just possible that later on he may not exhibit this desire to get away from the clasp of lovely women, but now he would rather play tennis or ball or race around with the clasp of lovely women, but now he would rather play tennis or ball or race around with the boys or do most anything than suggest that he is a bit "pirly." I have known him to sit down and weep for an hour because he had a petticeat on. But we have changed all that now. The boy looks better for it, and he doesn't suffer as much.

Immediately after he has left off regular frocks, which is usually in the neighborhood of three years, he is put in knee broecless and kilts, and if his mother is wise enough to tell him about the great big Seotchmen who dress just that way, he can be encouraged into wearing his kilts in a satisfactory manner. The most desirable materials for a small gentleman are the piqués and the corded cottons, and I think it would be wise to choose the first when the little master starts out for church looking as spotless as a lilly, and select the corded stuffs for every-day wear. These may be gotten in blue and white, black and red, blue and black, scarlet and dark blue, brown and blue and black and white. They do not soil easily, and if properly done up, that is, without too much starch, they will wear for two days, if a boy is careful, and for a day and a half if he does not consider anything in the world but his own pleasure. The little breeches reach just to the knee, the stockings coming up under them so that the legs are entirely covered. The skirt is invariably a plain kilt, and must come just over the knees, while either a jacket and shirt may be worn with it, or else a loose blouse or even a tightly belted one can take its place. The immaculate linen shirt and and shift may be worn with it, or else a loose blouse or even a tightly belted one can take its place. The immaculate linen shift and smart little cutaway jacket are usually reserved for special occusions, and the blouse in its

For special occasions, and the blouse in its various forms for general wear.

For the boy who has left off skirts of all kinds, and feels that he knows a great deal more than his father, the sailor suit continues in vogue. The regulation blue serge is used for it, and following an English fashion it is pretty enough brightened either by scarlet collar and cuffs, or the regulation white ones. A gallant little sailor lad, who is dressed in know breeches of dark blue serge, which, by the by. lar and cuffs, or the regulation white ones. A gallant little sailor lad, who is dressed in knee breeches of dark blue serge, which, by the by, the sailor does not wear, and a loose blouse of the same material interests us. The deep collar is of scarlet cloth, the ends of it hardly showing in front, although 'it extends far down in the back; where the sailor's bare neck would show, a plastron of red is set in. The knotted tie is of dark blue silk. The sleeves are comfortably full and are plaited in at the wrists to cuffs of scarlet. The stockings are very dark blue, and the shoes are good sturdy ones with flat beels that will permit my gentleman to take many a walk abroad. The bat which he holds in his hand as he makes his good morning to you is a Tam of blue serge like his clothes, and has on its band in bright red letters the name of the ship upon which he is supposed to sail, but which is really dragged along ignominiously by a string. However, if he finds happiness in this amusement, be very thankful, my friend, for illusions go from us only too quickly.

TO COVER THE HEADS

TO COVER THE HEADS

THE large light-weight straw buts are liked THE large light-weight stanw hats are liked for girls who are over six years. Their decoration is usually an enormous bow of ribbon, flatly placed on the brim close to the crown. The colors liked are dark brown, dark blue, very dark red, while very occasionally a white one is seen. On the black a scarlet bow would be placed, on the scarlet a black one, on the blue a scarlet one, and on the brown either a scarlet or blue one, as is funcied. Occasionally one of these large hats is covered with a wrenth of flowers, but while it looks pretty and picturesque, it seems a little bit.

with a wrenth of flowers, but while it looks pretty and picturesque, it seems a little bit out of place, as anything artificial always does on a child.

For the smaller women large shirred bats of glagham are chosen. These may be in any color desired, and I was going to say in any shape, but the truth is that the wise mother makes the hat with the soft Tam crown, shirrs the brim on cords and then, when it is firmly stiffened, bends it to suit the face of the little maiden. These hats are light, shade the eyes. maiden. These hats are light, shade the eyes, and as they are not expensive it is possible for little missic to have three or four of them. A pretty hat is of pale blue zephyr gingham pretty hat is of pale blue zephyr gingham with the Tam crown and a gathered brim, bent as an artist mother decided it should be.

THE FLOWING LOCKS

A S far as possible during the summer months let the locks of your little one float about her head freely, and do not under any circumstances cut her hair, unless it is that you wish to shape it for once, and after that to let it alone. The favorite mode of arrangement is to have it about the front of the face in a fluffy bang, and to let the back face in a fluffy bang, and to let the back-have just the ends turn. This can easily be arranged by putting them over a bit of paper, or a kid roller, and after training them that, way they will turn of themselves.

As for a boy, I like his carls, but I must confess that I sympathize with him in his de-sire to get rid of them. He does so long to be a man. If the lovely carls give your boy one pang, send him to the barber and have them cat off. The turn of the I have believe in sides. off. The truth of it is I do so believe in giving children all the happy, sunny days possible, that I due't want to think that the arrangement of the hair, the putting on of a hateful garment, or the wearing of something that seems to brittle these small folks abould be ermitted by mothers with laving hearts, and I think you and I each claim to be that, and we do not want to pose as hypocrites, do we?

BOYS' GINGHAM KILTS

SOMEBODY has asked how the little knee breeches are to be worn with gingham kilts. This is the way: In selecting the ma-terial, a design is chosen in which a dark color kits. This is the way: In selecting the material, a design is chosen in which a dark color is found, although the general effect may be bright, and then, although the kilt and blouse are made of the cotton material, the knee breeches are made of light-weight cloth, serge or flamed, and match this dark color. In almost every design, either a dark blue, dark brown, very dark green, or very dark gray, may be found, and the breeches will then be of that shade; but where no color whatever that would be desirable in cloth is discovered, then the little breeches may be made of black, which harmonizes with everything.

The design that has been worn for several summers continues to be favored for the gingham costumes, that is, the kilt and blouse of dingham, and the deep, square collar, either of the gingham, or, of course, lace or embroidery. Very full sleeves are not fancied for small gentlemen, but they are comfortably loose, and arranged to give a manily breadth to the young shoulders. Still, as a precocious young man remarked: "We boys don't wear sleeves up to our ears like you girls." When piqué is used, the knee breeches are of the same material, and so they are when the very heavy cotton cord is the material selected.

Occasionally one finds a boy who really likes being "dressed up;" who has a keen Occasionally one finds a boy who really likes being "dressed up;" who has a keen appreciation of how he looks in his clothes, and who is willing to bestow a certain amount and who is willing to bestow a certain amount of care upon them. He can scarcely be quoted as a favorite among the boys, but he is very apt to be the delight of his mother's heart. As he starts out for a walk, or to go to church, he wears knee breeches of dark-blue light-weight cloth, a kilt, and a little cutaway jacket of the cloth that, flaring away, shows the finest of shirts, with a lace-edged ruffle down the front. The collar is of lawn to harmonize with this, and square cuffs turned back on the coat sleeves are also in good taste. The hat is a high silk one, a miniature of the one worn by the young man's father. Tan-colored gloves are the finishing touch given to this elegant get-up. Now, I admire the boy who can enjoy this magnificence, and I appreciate his mother's pleasure in him, but somehow he does not got as close to my heart as does the wicked little one in plain clothers.

THE VERY SMALL BOY

THE VERY SMALL BOY

THE very small boy is dressed almost like his little sister, though his white slips are a tiny bit shorter, and by the time be is three years old he is permitted to be happy in a frock of brown holland or natural colored linen. He usually wears a square collar in preference to a round one, and there is never a superior of dilden or beautiful his These preference to a round one, and there is never a suggestion of ribbon or lace upon him. These may belong to him when he is just "a bit of a baby," but when they begin to call him "our boy," the fond mother knows that it is time for him to doff the little frills. In the very warm weather his bure legs show above short stockings, that is, if he is strong and healthy, and his mother prefers the English style of dress for children, though quite as many are seen with the long ones, which the doctor pronounces healthier. As an evidence of his coming greatness he wears no jewelry, not even a chain and locket being permitted about his white neck. Bless his dear heart, he wants no decorations, for, funnily enough, he is apt to be ten times more affectionate than his little sister, and to give his mother a much more sincere adoration. sincere adoration.

WHAT OUR CHILDREN CAN DO

THERE seems to exist an idea that chil-There is seen to exist an idea that children are not competent to take care of their clothes; that if they tear them and muss them and treat them in a rude way it is because they cannot help it. Now this is absolute nonsense. Without making the small people absolute prigs, there is no reason in the world why they should not appreciate the value of their clothes, the amount of money and care required to get them, and the fact that it is a duty they owe their mother to try and make required to get them, and the fact that it is a duty they owe their mother to try and make them last as long as possible. If you are willing that your child should go untaught; that it should be rough, noisy and untidy, do not, when this child gets to be six or seven years old, blame it, and even punish it for faults which you have taken no trouble to correct.

Nobody knows just how soon a child begins to understand, but I really think it is much younger than any of us imagine; and just as soon as it does understand it begins to know the difference between right and wrong. Then comes your opportunity; just at first you can only teach it that it must do this or that because it is right. After while, when the little brain is working, you can give a reason for this. There are few small boys who cannot understand that if their fathers work for the understand that if their fathers work for the money to buy their clothes, if their mothers make or attend to the making of them, that it is not right and just for them not to take as good care of them as possible. There is your sermon for your small boy. The little woman can be shamed out of untidiness, the fact that she does not look nice appenling to her selfrespect doing much to keep her in order. Not for one minute nor one second do I want you to make life unhappy for a child because of its clothes, but you can teach it self-respect, and you can teach it that the respect due to and you can teach it that the respectance of you, lit-is best shown by behaving itself. Like you, lit-tle children are near and drur to me; I con-fess to having loved some very bad ones, but usually the badness could be traced, not to the desire of the child, but to the ignorance of the mother. You cannot let a little flower grow crooked for six years, and then expect to straighten it out in one day, and you cannot straighten it out by striking it. You'll never straighten it out in one say, and you cannot straighten it out by striking it. You'll never get it back to its graceful shape by that sort of sussion, and it is just possible that you may break it entirely. Think it all over, won't you? And if you feel an inclination to say hard words, or give a blow to the small man or woman, who is, after all, your very own, stop and think whether the negligence of the mother has not caused the sin of the child.

EXCELLENT VALUES THESE:

Hemstitched Linen Tray Cover, 35c. 17 x 27 inches,

Striped Seersucker Skirt, ruffle at bottom, finished with bias fold, 50c.

Infant's Cap, Surah Silk or Mull, embroidered, lace ruche and pom-pon, 50c.

WOODWARD & LOTHROP Washington, D. C.

WM. SIMPSON & SONS'

Printed Fabrics.

The Most Durable. The Only Comfortable.

the big toe, having room enough, stays inside.
Sold by Deaters or by Mail.
Men'at 4 pairs of medium cotton; 2 pairs fine cotton; 2 pairs soft Lisle, merins or worsted, $1.00
Women'at Black cotton or Baibriggan, 5 De.
Mention size shoe, and whether man's or woman's.
Blacktonfod Bookiet on application. WAUKENHOSE COMPANY, 76 Chauncy Street, Boston, Mass.

A Department devoted to a sociable interchange of ideas among JOURNAL readers. Address all letters to MRS. LYMAN ABBOTT, care of THE LADIES' HOME JOURNAL, 433-435 Arch Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

POME of you object to be told of pleasant things, because you are not at present seeing them or joining in them. Why? How much would a man struggle who was at the bottom of a well in the dark and the damp if the peo-ple at the top did not usure him of sunlight and fresh air and beau-y and joy? Imagine one imprisoned in a y and joy? Imagine one imprisoned in a uine, and the friends outside getting as close o him as possible with their mouning and heir crying and saying: "Things are no letter out here; all is gloom and sorrow; it is a retched and poor and bad and miserable." Would it help the sufferer inside? I think not. "Sing," was the cry of a man whose imbs were crushed under the weight of the lebris which had fallen upon him. "Sing, t keeps my courage up." So, my dear friends, although you are shut in a dangeon of unappiness, and turn your faces to the gloom, not smother yourself in the poisonous damp, re shall still give you what cheer we can, and hall hope that our tones may give you some aspiration to use what strength you have, to alse yourselves and your loved ones from the iscomfort and the misery which now seem to iscomfort and the misery which now seem to urround you. We shall not heed you when ou beg us to stop talking of things that are eautiful. We shall tell you of our joys; we hall tell you of the sun that is shining; the inds that are singing; of the flowers that are dooming; of the love that there is in the scarts of men and women, and we shall hope hat you will learn to find some comfort in ooking at the sunlight, though you, for the time may, for some reason, stand in the K NOW1NG that your experience makes you a careful adviser, I write to you on a subject which is very near to my beart. Do you think it wise to send a pirt to public school? I is she not apt to come in contact with and form acquahusances which will prove impleasint to her when she arrives at womanbood?

I have repeatedly beard the assertion from self-made near that the acquaintances of their school days were shen disagreeable to them in after life, and if this berue in the case of a boy, would it not be more so in the nace of a girl?

M. W.

All the unpleasant associations of life are not confined to acquaintances made in the public schools. And I do not think that early public schools. And I do not think that early associations are necessarily so permanent as to nurse amnoyance after mature years are reached. Parents should give their children he best opportunities their circumstances offerd. In some regions those opportunities sould be found in the public schools, but where it is possible to do better, the wise father will to so. The question of intimacy of friendship is one which parents do not sufficiently consider, and even where the school throws children into companionship, the parents may, with but and vigilance, turn the child's interests and affections away from harmful interests and affections away from harmful associations. Parents are too much inclined to throw their own responsibility off upon teachers. They often rely upon the Sunday school teacher for all the religious instrucschool teacher for all the religious instruc-tion the child has, and the day school teacher is blamed for the carelessness and the ill combuct which is really the result of home mismanagement. The school, in which a child spends but a small portion of his time, can neither make nor mar him so completely as is sometimes supposed. The home is the place where children receive the most potent influences. If that is right, the imperfections of the school, and the rudeness of companions there, cannot be harmful beyond the power of there, cannot be harmful beyond the power of the home to repair. A girl certainly needs more shielding than a boy. But she may carry her shield with her.

NOTICING a letter in the JOURNAL from a young girl placed at the head of a house by the death of her methor, I am impelled to say that if the four men of that family haven't ability or manhood enough to take once of their state and provide her with some help in her work they should be allowed to go hongry, and thour home uncared for. The probability is that they will kill their stater and daughter, or cles bequeath to be a unvertical existence because of an over-worked girthood.

C.

You are rather hard. It may be that the men of the family are so occupied all day that there is really little they can do in the home, and perhaps they are preparing for remunerative work, but are not advanced farenough to pay for help. Of course, thoughtfulness will suggest the way in which the little way in which way in w the they can do should be done to the best ad-santage, and their leisure hours will be spent in smoothing the way of the housekeeper, But it is too true that the house often demands more of the housekeeper than her strength allows her to give, partly from our compli-cated ways of living, partly from habits that have come down from generations, and partly because women themselves have not learned their own powers and their own limitations. Certain, things have been considered woman's work which do not of necessity belong to her.

And on the other hand, some things in the past have been supposed to be exclusively nien's work which woman is quite as enpable of doing. This latter fact is and more apparent each day. This latter fact is becoming more

A RE mothers deteriorating? Is the fashionable woman of to-day with her club, her classes in French, German and English liberature, etc., as good a mother as the old-fashionast one who went to church on Sundays, and speen her week days carring for her bables, seeing for them? etc. The average mother of to-day hards her bables and her work-hasket to her murse and her seamstress. Is it well for her to 40 so?

L. B.

No! Mothers are not deteriorating. The world generally is growing better. But any mother who turns her baby and her workbasket over to a bireling is not a true mother. If the club and the classes stand in the way of a woman's duty to her home, they are bad. Anything that a mother can do to enrich her Anything that a mother can do to earich her own life and to earich the life of her family, it is not only right for her to do, but it is her duty to do. If I am able to call to my aid in the case of my baby the best physician, the most skillful nurse and wisest teacher, am I not bound to do it? If I cannot have the help of their training. I must do the best I can myself. No woman has yet exhausted all wisdom, and if a mother is so fortunate as to be able to give her children the most scientific physical training by means of paid assistants, and can broaden her own inquiries into the fields of foreign literature, and inspire her children to go with her into the paths of learning, can study the great social and religious questions of the day, and give her children the benefit of her quest for truth, can make herself familiar with the needs of humanity in order to help them, and so be the leader of her children in sympathetic charity, then, also in order to help them, and so be the teader of her children in sympathetic charity, then, al-though she employs a nurse, she is a true mother. If a woman wastes her life in trivial things, when she might concern herself with large things, she destroys not only her life but her child's, even though she have no nurse and no semustress. Let me say it plainly: If a mother can best brood and train and inspire her children without a nurse or a seamstress, let her do it in that way: if she can do it letlet her do it in that way; if she can do it bet-ter with their aid let her do it thus. I am glad to believe that, while a shameful neglect of the obligations of motherhood is widespread, there is coming, through the better edneation of women and an increasing purity of Christian faith, a nobler idea of the home and of parental duty.

THIS magnetive is such a comfort to me that I thought I would ask you for a little solvier on a subject which is distressing me very much. I have two dear little girls, but I am serry to say they are often very rangity, and are sometimes very rade, and rules ones, especially to a parent, is something I consider very objectionable. I have not pushing a consider very objectionable. I have not pushing a consider very objectionable. I have not pushing a consider very objectionable. I have not pushing the say that method of punhimment would be best. They are becoming more nongity, however, and I concluded to seek the advice of the mothers in the Jourana. I have been thinking perhaps an application of the red would be judicious.

Asknows Morners.

I should not think the rod would be the I should not think the red would be the best means of treating this case. I should counsel gentle but firm treatment of your children, quiet insistence upon certain customs of politeness and the daily teaching, by example as well as by precept, that courteous conduct is their duty. Children are very ready to accept an ideal. If you can lend them to love and admire some gentle-mannered woman, they will be sure to imitate her. Their mother must, of course, be their principal guide, but sometimes one outside the home Their mother must, of course, be their principal guide, but sometimes one outside the home is more influential for a time. Their plays will influence their conduct. If you can lead them to choose to play "visit;" if you join with them in their dainty tea parties and pleusant visitations, and are very polite and courteous, you will find it will influence them. I remember when I was a child that a school-mate and I took imaginary names and were "Lady Gertrude" and "Lady Ethel." We carried on an elaborate correspondence, and lived much of our time in palaces, and journeeved with a retinue of attendants. We imagined that all such people spoke with perfect propriety, and conducted themselves with great elegance of manner; and we tried, in a very grotesque fashion, I doubt not, to speak and act with the superiority which we fancied belonged to our station. I have often wished I had lived in that imaginary atmosphere a I had lived in that imaginary atmosphere a great deal more. But do not be in too great haste; even the correction of a fault requires patience and time.

W11.L you may a few words on a subject which is of peculiar interest to me? Is an elopement excussible under any elepantestances whatever? At first glance this may seem an idle question; but if you will look to it perhaps it may not seem so.

I should hesitate to say that an elopement is never excusable; but it is very rare in-deed that the exils resulting from not marrydeed that the evils resulting from not marry-ing would approach in consequence those resulting from a marriage entered into under circumstances which made an elopement seem necessary. I believe in early marriages, but I also believe that every influence should be placed about that sacred institution to keep it placed about that sacred institution to keep in pure and holy; that none should enter into it "lightly or unadvisedly." And it would be usually safer to postpone a marriage until ob-jections could be overcome, rather than to run the risks attending an elopement. It is a great temptation to a bad man if a woman is willing to enter into a secret marriage, and an elopement partakes of that secrety. I certainly do not consider this an idle question, but one which calls for much thought.

MAX I speak of some work M. G. L. might do?
When I was a fittle girl, a benefited young married woman invited her Sunday-echool class and several other girls about the same age to form a sockey. We met at her house once a week, and sewed, kidt, crecheted, etc., etc. Sometimes we sent boxes of things we had ulade to a school for pose children in the south or obsewhere; sometimes we had fairs, and sent the proceeds to help support some school or some pupil. She spent one afternoon with us, and I presume another preparing for us. We all loved ber, and if any of us now engage in charitable work I am sure that it was she who latight us to care about it.

S. E. M.

This sort of thing has been done many times, and one can scarcely believe what mar-vels may be accomplished by a woman who uses her leisure wisely and sympathetically. The entire kindergarten work in San Fran-cisco, a work large enough to have a national reputation is, I am told, the result of one quiet woman's work in her Bible class,

IN my earlier days I dreamed of leaving foot-prints on the sands of time, meaning by that to achieve some great library success, and make my name famous. I rued and sindfed hard, graduating from college with high bonces. Then commenced my work in carnest. Powerty competited me to teach, and I brought my whole heart to bear in that loved work. After two years of seaching I met a noble man who gave his heart to me and took mine. Thirteen years of loving, sweet fellowship, every year happier and better than the last, brightened and cheethst, passed swiftly away. In that time my brain and cheethst, passed swiftly away. In that time my brain and cheethst, passed swiftly away. In that time my brain and pen had not been entirely like, though most of my time was naturally taken up in home-making and home-keeping, with the highest and most beautiful drives of withood and motherbood.

And now—how can I tell it—my loved one, the father of my children, has joined the great majority, and I am left at thirty-one with a betweed and actions heart, and with double doubts to perform for our dear little ones. How shall I bear my ""Thy Maker is thy husdand," said a dear old saint in leased to me, in the first said days of my grief. And now I am trying bravely to make such day a round by which to ascend the hadre of life into beaven—a place more dear than ever before, because of my beloved, who is there prabing tied, and engaged in surnest work of some kind, I doubt not. And when I say I am trying bravely, in have chosen my works with care, for I have many, many duties, and terry senall means. I must rise early, erres though I may have been much disturbed through the night by my dear little techning baby. I prepare the children for brankfast, and the breakfast for the children, then three of them go to school, after which the baby must get his both, and be put to bed, and then such a race with household duries until dinner time, at noon for the children's to bear up again, and rest my thed body by using my brain, or the children, t

We do indeed wish you success. I believe you will have strength for your burden. You are well equipped with faith and training for doing your work. The years will soon bring you to the time when your children will "rise early" to make your days easier, and you will forget your sleepless nights and your toiling days in your glad pride in them.

I HAVE just been reading one woman's advice about letting the little ones help you, and would like to give my experience. I am the mother of two dear little ones, one three years and a haif old, the other six months old. My little doughter can being me things? want for the haby, one arrange his basket in perfect order when I am done with it after his bath, and put it mays for the next day. When I am dressing him she is delighted to stand beside me and hand each article, and knows just how and when each particular piece comes. When I have swept she can dust and arrange books, chales, dresser, and in fact, almost everything. I sit heiding my baby and watch and correct ler when necessary, and I know she saves me many a step each day. I hope some other mothers will peofit by his bit of experience as I often do from words read in our good for that as I often hear it called. I will sometime, if you find this worth publication, tell you how I macage to be always the best woman in the world to my husband.

This would be indeed worth knowing; to hold the ideal place in the heart of husband and children is a woman's greatest happiness.

IN making my bed I have found that it requires a strength to tack the heavy blankers in at the sides of the behavad. Recomity I fried bronging them to the edge of the mattrees and folding the bankers back under themselves smoothly. Then it was an easy matter to tack the counterpane in. My nicely-made bed was a success.

E. M.

A very good suggestion. Strength saved is strength gained.

I WOULD like to suggest to M. G. I. to join the W. C. T. U. If there is one within five miles of her home; if not to form a Union. She will find plenty to do in the many departments of work in which they engage. I can hardly understand how any housekeeper can have hille hours if they like to read or write. As I have a family of six, and have many correspondents, the days are not long enough to necomplish all I wish to do. Finey work, and even patch work and rug making would help "to pass away the time." HEXILITYA.

A LTHOUGH we do not keep house but board I am.

A not like M. G. L. I find pleuty to keep me basy. I think if she looks round her a little she will find seme me whom she could help a little she will find seme me whom she could help a little and so pass away the time. In our small place I wish sometimes I had four hinds instead of two, for I could find pleuty to do. I feet very surry that any wife can say she only had one happy rear of married life. My advice to her is try her best to have another, and I think her husband will help her, and they will succeed. I agree with her who is workshe for for husband as well as berself. and they will succeed. I agree with her who is worning for her husband as well as herself.

A. You'se Were.

These verses which I copied from a recent number of "The Silver Cross," express in a fresh way the sentiment of the good Quaker lady whose words have been quoted so often. I commend them to the especial attention of the sisters burdened with too much time:

> "I pass this way but once, Let me not fail To answer e'en a faint, A half-caught hail.

To reach out hand to hand Stretched forth for aid: To share my source of strength With one afraid.

To smile when smiles appeal, To weep with grief, I pass but once, and pause But moment brief."

A. J. St. Abbott.

WHEN THE WINTER SEASON HAS PROGRESSED THUS FAR, POULTRY AND FRESH MEATS LOSE A LETTLE OF THEIR SPECIAL ATTRACTION, AND THE ENTERPRISING BOUNEKEEPER IS LOOKING OUT FOR SOME PLEASING VARIETY.

FOR A WINTER DINNER, SAY ONCE A WEEK, A DE-LICIOUS "FERRIS" HAM BOASTED WILL PROVIDE A BOST TEMPTION "PIECE DE RESISTANCE."

INSIST THAT YOUR GROCER SHALL FURNISH YOU A PLUMP, ROUND JOINT, PRESS FROM OUR CAPACIOUS SMORPHOCKES, WEIGHING 13 POUNDS OR MORE, HAVE IT A LITTLE PAT ALSO, IF YOU WOULD FIND IT TEN-DER AND JUDGE, WITH OUR COMPLIMENTS.

TO THE COOK:

let us suggest how it should be handled: With a very sharp knife shave off cleanly the hardened surface from the face and butt of the ham. Put it ever the fire in cold unter and let it come to a moderate boil and keep it steadily at this point. A ham weighing 15 pounds will need this point. A nam weighing is possible in the boll 5 hours. Many cooks serve ham underdone Remove the skin, which will readily peet off when bolled as directed. Have ready some dried bread or crackers of which roll fine and sift a tescup full. Break in two eggs and stir well with one teaspoonful of sugar. Use a little water if the eggs do not sufficiently moisten it. Spread this evenly over the fat and dress with pepper and spices. Put the ham in a pan with a wire bottom, or, if that be not at hand, block up the ham so that the fiesh shall not rest on the pan. Have the oven hot and send the ham to the table as soon as it is browned. In carving, cut in very thin slices.

PARK & TILFORD, And all Leading Grocers have our brand.

The "PASTEUR" THE ONLY

GERM PROOF FILTER

Ohlo,

Paris, France, March 1, 1886. This Pilter was invented in my inhoratory where its great usefulness is put to test every day. Knowing its full scientific and hygicale value, I wish it to bear my unme.

LADIES' AND CHILDREN'S BOOTS AND SHOES

Aucarded Aighest honors of Philadelphia 1878 | Melhourne -Berlin 1877 | Frankfort Paris 1878 | Amsterdam

GOOD NEWS

BREAT AMERICAN

TO LADIES

Greatest offer. Now's your time to get orders for our celebrated Tens. Coffees and Bakings Powder, and secure a beautiful Godd Band or Moss Rose China Tes Set. Dinner Set, Gold Band or Western Direthonary. For particulars, address THE GREAT AMERICAN TEACO, P. (6. Bea 26).

Il and Il Vesey Street, New York

MISS PARLOA will at all times be glad, so far as she can, to answer in this Department all general domestic questions sent by her readers. Address all letters to Miss Maria Parloa, care of The Labres' Home Journal, Philadelphia, Pa.

Cooking receipts are not given in this Department, hence do not ask that they be printed and do not send manuscripts of that nature to MISS PARLOA.

OW that the sesson for preserving fruit in some form has begun, dozens of letters come to me usking how this thing shall be done, or why that thing did or did that thing did or did bot happen. It would be impossible to reply to them all individually at the length the subject requires, but I will try to help my correspondents, and incidentally all other house-keepers, by giving some fundamental principles which will insure success, if carefully observed. observed.

SHRINKAGE OF FRUIT IN JARS

WRITES one subscriber: "I have good receipts, but after the fruit is in the jars my trouble begins. I find it impossible to fill the jars full; do my very best, and there is still a space; jars that were full when I sealed them will, when cold, back an inch or more of being full. Should the jars be scaled while the contents are bot, and if so, should the whole be re-heated to fill them; or, should I use cold syrup? I have tried both ways, but with indifferent success."

As all substances expand when heated, and with indifferent success."

As all substances expand when heated, and contract when chilled, then in cauning the larger the fruit or vegetable the greater will be the vacant space when the jar is chilled. For example, in a pain of pears or peaches, the space between cover and fruit may be an inch, whereas, in the case of smaller fruits or stewed tomatoes, the space will scarcely be a small fraction of an inch. Since no air can enter the jar, the vacuum will protect the fruit.

THE PRINCIPLES OF CANNING FOOD

THE PRINCIPLES OF CANNING FOOD

THE destruction of germs, and the exclusion of air, are the principles upon which the canning of food is based. If these things be properly done, no preservative, need be added, except to give a flavor. Some substances require long exposure to a high temperature before all the germs are destroyed, while others need only to be heated to the boiling point, and then be boiled for a minute or two. Nearly all small fruits are easily preserved by thoroughly heating, and then canning. The larger kinds require a longer time for the heat to penetrate every part. Some for the heat to penetrate every part. Some vegetables, such as peas, beans, corn, etc., require a long exposure to a high temperature. Meats are still more difficult to keep, and it is the practice to add a chemical to the water in which the cans stand that the temperature may be relead to a degree even higher than may be raised to a degree even higher than that of boiling water.

The essential things in canning fruit are to have the jars and covers lot, and the fruit boiling hot. The jars, also, should stand per-fectly level; fill them with fruit and juice, passing a silver knife between the can and the fusions a silver kinde between the can any the fruit that all the spaces may be filled with the juice. Now pour in syrap until it runs over the top of the jar; seal at once. When the jars are cold, set them in a cool, dry, dark place. Fruit is always better flavored when sugar is put with it; the amount is a matter of

HOW TO AVOID SUPERFLUOUS LIQUID

NOTHER correspondent asks how to can fruit so as to avoid having so much periluous liquid; she says it seems wrong to throw the liquid away, yet she does not know what to do with it.

Put small fruits, and the amount of sugar you wish to use, in the preserving kettle, and on the fire. Heat slowly, until they begin to boil, and then boil gently for ten minutes; can at once. You will not have more juice than is necessary to cover the fruit properly. than is necessary to cover the fruit properly.

For large fruit, such as peaches, pears, plums, etc., make a syrup with water and the amount of sugar you wish to use. Allow one quart of water for ten pounds of pears; for ten of peaches allow one pint of water. The proportions given for the peaches will answer for any jukey fruit, and that for the pears for such fruit as quinces. I do not get enough fruit ince for no own use found the enough fruit juice for my own use from the preserves, and so prepare an extra quantity from the less handsome fruit. I use it for flavoring toe-creams, sherbets, Bavarian creams, pudding sauces, and also for summer drinks

TO PRESERVE FRUIT SYRUPS

TO preserve fruit scrups prepare the fruit as for jellies. Strain the juice and put on to boil. To each pint of juice aid half a pound of sugar; boil for fifteen minutes, stirring well, bottle and seal while boiling hot.

WHY FRUIT RISES TO THE TOPS OF JARS

O'NE writer asks why her fruit rises to the top of the jars. The more sugar your fruit absorbs the heavier it will be; so that if you cook it in a rich syrup, and then pack it rather closely in the jurs, leaving space for only a small amount of syrup, the fruit will not float. If, however, it be cooked with but little sugar, and covered generously with syrup, it will surely float. Place the cans on their sides when you have space enough, for then the fruit cannot rise. then the fruit cannot rise.

SOMETHING ABOUT FRUIT JELLIES

MANY women have asked why their jettles ANY women have asked why their jellies do not jell; what they shall do to make them congeal; why they become monkly, erc. Pectin is the basis of vegetable jellies; it gives to the juices of fruit the property of gelatinging. When the fruit is over-ripe, or when the juice is cooked too long, it seems to lose its gelatinizing property. We often see saves to the juice is cooked too long, it seems to lose its gelatinizing property. We often see this when we attempt to make jelly with overripe fruit; the substance will become thick and gammy with long cooking, but will not congeal. The fruit for jellies should be just ripe, or a little under-ripe, freshly picked, and of good quality. The small juicy berries, such as currants, blackberries, raspberries, etc., enn be cooked in a stone pot, which should be placed in a kettle of boiling water; then the contents should be stirred and mashed well, until the fruit is heated through, say for about an hour; or, the fruit can be beated slowly in the preserving kettle and mashed well. In either case, strain the juice first through a plece of cheese-cloth, and next through a flamed bug; place in the preserving kettle, and on the fire. Boll and skim; add a pound of sugar for every pound of juice, first beating the sugar in the over. Stir until the sugar diesolves, and fill the glasses.

When such fruit as apples, peurs, penches, quinces, etc., are used, wash them, and then cut them into small pieces, barely covering with water, and cook gently, until the fruit looks soft and clear; it will take an hour at lenst for this process. Strain the juice, and let it boil about twenty minutes; add the hot sugar, and boil five minutes longer. Place the uncovered glasses in a sunny window for a day or two; then cover with rounds of paper, over which the a covering of cotton butting; keep in a cool, dry place.

We have had so much rain and damp weather the pust few years that housekeepers who never before had any transle with mould now have this new annoyance; it is dampness which causes it. Some one asks how to keep grape juice from fermenting. Boil and skim thoroughly; and while it is boiling but senl it, Keep in a cool, dark place.

STYLES IN INTERIOR DECORATION

STYLES IN INTERIOR DECORATION

IN answer to inquiries from many correspondents in second to not A suswer to inquiries from many corres-pondents in regard to what are the new-est siyles in wall paper, wood-work, window draperies, etc.: The days of dark wood-work and paint and dark papers and curpets appear to lawe gone by. Everything is light now, and a large part of the bousehold furnishings and decorations are in the style of Louis XV. and accorations are in the style of Louis XV.
Light woods or paint are used in nearly all the rooms except the dining-room and library.
For parlors, the paint is white and gold, cream, and cream and gold. The carpets, paper draperies and furnishings should match in tone, which must be soft and light.

LACE AND OTHER WINDOW DRAPERIES

W ITH the white and gold of the walls of the room, lace, and some soft silk or plush fabrics are the most suitable. Very often only heavy lace curtains are used. They order only heavy nee currains are deal. They are usually hung straight. When bronders or other silks are used, they also are hung straight, but do not conceal much of the lase currain. Sometimes the silk material is thrown in festoons over the pole; this gives a rich thaish, and a lighter room. It is imposrich thish, and a lighter room. It is impossible to drape a window in any of these styles without considerable expense.

In no one item of furnishing does the house-

In no one item of furnishing does the house-keeper need to exercise more care than in the matter of window draperies. If she lives where they soil quickly, and require frequent cleaning, there is nothing so satisfactory, or so cheapin the end, as some form of lace or mus-lin. Very fine lace will not stand frequent westling. Suchs appelling to before and washing. Swiss mostine are being used a great deal for sitting rooms and bed-rooms; they are embroidered, and have handsome borders. The fertilis more desirable than the white for a sitting-room; by the yard this costs from lifty cents to a dollar; in pattern curtains the cost is from three to twelve dolCURTAINS OF LACE AND SILK

OTTINGHAM lace curtains, of hand-NorthNGHAM lace curtains, of handsome design, cost from three dollars and a half to four and a half a pair; if, for a sitting-room, the earn would be more suitable than the white. These curtains are not really fashionable, but nothing that I have seen in cheap curtains is to be compared with them for beauty and dumbility. The styles I quote have a foundation of bobinet, on which beautiful noterus are waven. The chemics kinds tifut patterns are woven. The cheaper kinds are still coarse and common looking. Irish point lace is much used. Curtains of medipoint lace is much used. Curtains of medi-nm quality cost from eight to twenty-five dol-lars a pair, and the finer grades run up to fifty dollars or more. Swiss lace comes at about the same price. The work on these curtains is not so heavy as the Irish point. Such Irish point curtains as have just been mentioned are all made in Switzerland. Duchesse lace is also much used; the cheapest curtains of this sort cost about five dollars a pair, and the prices run up to fifty dollars.

Madras cuttains are not used as much as sort cost about five dollars a pair, and the prices run up to lifty dollars.

Madeas curtains are not used as much as formerly, which is a great pity, for there is mothing in the market, in the line of curtains of low price, that will take their place. A pair of them will outwear several pairs of Unia silk; in the soft cream tints they can be used anywhere, blending with almost any kind of farmishings; they soften, but do not exclude, the light. The woman who wants a chenp, and curtain for her sitting-toom would be foolish to discard this lovely material just because fashion so dictates; it can be washed and ironed, using, however, only thin water starch, as this material must never be stiff. These curtains cost from three to ten dollars a pair. Among silks, and silk and cotton, the China silks are the cheapest material. They make dainty draperies when the windows are not too large; they are particularly suitable for sash curtains; the prices range from sixty cents to a dollar a yard. For long draperies, get stuff thirty-one inches wide. If for sash curtains for narrow windows, use the twenty-seven inch width. Some beautiful goods come in silk and cotton, and are called silk and cost from two dollars and a half to four dollars per from two dollars and a half to four dollars per ton damask. They are of all shades, and cost from two dollars and a half to four dollars per from two dollars and a half to four dollars per yard; they are sometimes made up without libings, and used with or without lare dra-peries. In the way of goods of higher price, there is a bewildering assertment of beautiful fabrics; and, indeed, there is no lack of va-riety among the draperies of moderate cost. One should be careful in selecting window draperies to get colors and goods that will harmonize with the rest of the room. Better have a chem protectial under these conditions have a chenp material under these conditions than an elegant and costly one that is out of keeping with the other furnishings.

THE NEWEST KIND OF WALL PAPER

N wall paper there is the greatest range in I prices and designs nowadays; for nod erate beases prices vary from twenty cents to six dollars a roll. The prevailing styles are white and gold for pariors, and light grounds, white and gold for partors, and light grounds, with flowers, for other rooms, except, of course, dining-room, library and balls. A cream or white ground, with conventional figures in gold, or with festoons of flowers, is used the most. These kinds, in the French papers, come from three and a half to sixteen dollars per roll. Excellent imitations of the French goods cost fifty cents, seventy-live cents and a dollar. These are in the festoon styles, soft and delicate: and without a close examination one. cate; and without a close examination one would hardly know the difference between the real and the imitation. Some beautiful papers, suitable for sitting-rooms, bed-rooms, etc., are one dollar and a half a roll, but the imitations are only twenty cents. Among these indiations are two example, papers. One one dollar and a half a roll, but the imitations are only twenty cents. Among these initations are two exquishe papers. One with yellow carnations seattered over a cream ground; the other, defeate pink festoons on a cream ground. These are only a few of the many delicate cheap papers to be seen. A handsome French tapestry paper for diningrooms costs five dollars per roll, but some beautiful designs come as cheap as a dollar and a half. Cartridge papers are still very much used, and it seems to me that they are by far the most satisfactory kinds for people of modérate means. They can be had in any shade you wish, and make an excellent background for pictures, which is not the case with figured papers. The plain cartridge paper costs thirty-five cents, and the figured a dollar and seventy-five cents a roll. With the new styles of paper a frieze, or border, is no longer used, but with the curridge paper something of this kind is considered as necessary. Dealers often have borders to match; or, some handsome figured paper can be used. It must be remembered that while the new papers are light and bright, it is a soft kind of brightness. First-class dealers will usually send samples of paper to customers.

PROTECTING POLISHED SURFACES

PROTECTING POLISHED SURFACES

M EANS to prevent her mahogany table from being marred by a piece of statuary is what one writer is seeking. Get a piece of silk, plush, or damask, and cut it in the same shape as the piece of statuary, but a tritle smaller; this will protect the table, yet will not show.

For lamps, and other heavy articles, I buy remnants of damask, or tapestry, which I either double or line with silk; they are tasteful hooking, but do not take away from the effect of a handsome larap. The small Turkish doilies, without fringe, are suitable to use under vases of flowers. They protect the polished woods, and while rich, are subdued.

polished woods, and while rich, are subdued.

How to remove from her polished managany table white spots which were made by the placing of hot dishes on the mats, is what one reader wants to know. I have been successful in removing such marks, except when they were deep and old, and I think that many rubbings will obliterate even the worst spots. Pour a little kerosene oil on the place, and then, with a piece of flannel, rub with the grain of the wood, adding a little oil, from time to time, until the stain disappears. It requires hard rubbing, but it will prove a success if you persevere,

BIGHLAND EVAPORATED CREAM

AN INFANT'S FOOD.

Is unrevertened and free from all preservatives. Retains its delicious and wholes Indefinite time in all elimates and at all sensous

Bold by Grocers and Druggists Everywhere

Write for our Infant Food circular and Highland Evaporated Cream booklet cuttled "A Figure Darkey Disease."

HELVETIA MILK CONDENSING CO. Highland, fit. Sole Purveyors

GOLD MEDAL, PARIS, 1878.

W. BAKER & CO.'S Breakfast Cocoa

from which the excess of oil has been removed, absolutely pure and it is soluble.

No Chemicals are used in its preparation. It has were then three the errength of Cocon mixed with Etarch, Arrowrood or Sugar, and is therefore far more eco homical, costing less than our centa cap. Itis delicious, nour-ishing, strengthening, nasalx

DISCRETED, and admirably adapted for invalids as well as for persons in health.

Sold by Grocers everywhere. W. BAKER & CO., Dorchester, Mass.

AIRY DREATH IAVORING XTRACT

The only new Flavoring known for fifty years.

Something new and delicious for the household to take the pixer of Vanilla. This extract is perfectly pure fruit extract, which we guarantee to be double the strength of the best vanilla, and much more delicious, thereby making it the most economical as well as the most delirate extract that can be used.

FAIRY BREATH SOUFFLE

heat the whites of six eggs mutit they begin to bubble. Add very slowly, beating constantly, three tablespoonfuls of powdered sugar and three tablespoonfuls of grated almonds, and one tenspoonful of Fairy Breath Extract. Bent the yolks very light, adding three tablespoonfuls of powdered sugar, three of sweet talk and three of four. When these are smoothly blended add quickly the whites and bake in a quick oven for ten minutes and serve as a dessert.

THE JEROME EXTRACT MANUFACTURING CO. 166 Duane St., New York City

In the Kitchen

as an aid to good cooking, Armour's Extract of Beef finds its largest field. It is a great thing for invalids but you should not limit its use to the sick room. Our little Cook Book explains many ways of using Armour's Extract. We mail it free.

Armour & Company Chicago

THE DAVIS POCKET CORK SCREW

Fo more bother about uncorking bottles! A child ran open any bottle with this cork strew. It is adjustable, and its all sizes. The sharp point cuts the wire, and the most stubborn cork is easily forced out by simply lifting the basdle. Combines porket knife, wire cutter and lever corker-twi; a seriest pocket birger that a perfect packet piece that everylasdy needs. For sale everywhere Manufactured by DAVIS CORK SCREW CO. Detroit, Mich.

DEAUMONT'S Strongest, best; result of years of published all invisions lagredience. For FREE from the stamps will mail a 10 even paper bax sample, with prize offer. Address BEACMONT & On., Detroit, Mich.

PERFECTION CAKETINS, lower bottoms. Unkers line. Steady work for good CAKE agents. Set by mult, 20 cts. Biolanders No. Co., Back, N. Y. TINS

This Department is under the editorship of EBEN E. REXFORD, who will take pleasure in answering any question regarding flowers and floriculture which may be sent to him by the JOURNAL readers. MR. REXFORD asks that, as far as possible, correspondents will allow him to answer their questions through his JOURNAL Department. Where specially desired, however, he will answer them by mail if stamp is inclosed. Address all letters direct to EBEN E. REXFORD, Shiocton, Wisconsin.

ABOUT WATERING PLANTS

AM often asked by persons who have house plants to examine some of their large specimens that seem "under the weather," and prescribe for them. They have given fresh for them. They have given fresh soil in the majority of cases, thinking the trouble due to insufficient nourishment, but this does not seem to bring about a healthy condition. In nearly every case an examination of the soil reveals the fact that the plant is suffering from lack of water. Turn them out of their pots or tubs, and the bottom of the mass of earth will be found to be as dry as dust. The owner of the plant will be greatly surprised at this state of things. "Why, I gave them almost a pailful of water yesterday," a lady said to me not long ago. "It does not seem possible that it could have dried out so rapidly. It had not "dried out." The top of the soil was wet enough. The trouble was the moisture had not penetrated to the bottom. Sufficient water had not been given. Large tubs contain a considerable quantity of soil, and it takes a correspondingly large Large tubs contain a considerable quantity of soil, and it takes a correspondingly large amount of water to wet it all through. What seems a large amount is applied daily, or every other day, to the surface, and because that appears moist, the owner takes it for granted that the soil is in the same condition all through. This is where the mistake is made. The roots of the plant become diseased and die in the dry soil at the bottom, and the plant soon takes on a sickly look.

die in the dry soil at the bottom, and the plant soon takes on a sickly look.

All this can be prevented if one "goes to work right." In the first place, see that perfect drainage is provided. Bore at least a dozen holes in the bottom of each tub, and then fill in with drainage material to the depth of three or four inches. Then put in your soil, but do not fill the tub to within at least two inches of its rim. If you fill it, as many do, there will be no chance for the retention of water until the soil drinks it up. But if you have the soil two inches below the rim, you can put on water enough to rim, you can put on water enough to thoroughly saturate the soil, without the danger of any running off. It is a good plan to apply so much that some will escape at the bottom. If the drainage is as it ought to be, there is no danger of over watering. Every summer we see oleanders and other large plants which take start after start, but each start is followed by a failure. The owner judges by the surface appearance of the soil that water enough is given, so attributes the trouble to the wrong cause. Lack of water is at the bottom of the difficulty in nine cases out of ten. It is almost impossible to initiate a leave. ten. It is almost impossible to injure a large plant by over watering in summer, even if the drainage is not good. This is especially true if the plant stands out of doors, or on the veranda.

These suggestions, it will be understood, apply to plants in active growth. Plants at rest will require less water, but they should not be allowed to get dry at the roots.

FUCHSIAS AS BRACKET PLANTS

HE tendency of many varieties of fuchsias to grow in a drooping form has often been commented on. Because of it, it is often diffi-on. Because of it, it is often difficult to train the plants in satisfactory shape. They do not take kindly, nor gracefully, to tying up to styles or trellises. I have grown several kinds in pots on brackets, and trained the plants out over the pots, where their branches can soon be made to take a downward growth that is very graceful, especially when they are laden with flowers. One does not get the full beauty of a factowhen they are laden with flowers. One does not get the full beauty of a fach-sia unless it is seen at a level with the eye, or a little above it. Grown as described, the conditions are favorable to a satisfactory the conditions are favorable to a satisfactory display of the plant. Many persons who have seen my plants trained in this way think I must have new varieties. All that is necessary to be done is to secure plenty of branches near the pot. This can be done by pinching off the tops of young plants of such varieties as are naturally of slender growth. If the branches do not seem inclined to take a downward tendency tip little worlder, to be them. ward tembercy, tie little weights to them. These will draw them down over the sides of the pot. By keeping up this treatment you will soon coax the plant to take on the desired form. Old plants can be made to do this by cutting the stalks off close to the ground. Soon new shoots will be sent up from the roots at the base of the stalk.

roots at the base of the stalk.

But in order to make a success of it, you must be sure to give pretty good-sized pots, proper soil, and plenty of water. Pots on bruckets will dry out rapidly, therefore water will have to be applied liberally and frequently. It will be necessary to use ordinary pots, as no hanging baskets or pots are large enough to grow a fuchsia well.

SOME SEASONABLE HINTS

E the sprinkler freely in the garden, unless there are frequent showers. It may not be necessary to do this to keep the soil moist, but it doubtless will be necessary if you want your plants to look their best, and they will not do that unless you keep them clean.

Cleanliness is as great a necessity for health with flowers as it is with human beings. Flowers should never be allowed to getcovered

OUT off all fading flowers, and pick up all ripe and fallen leaves. Such litter will spoil the effect of the finest lawn. Neatness must reign in the garden if you want to make it attractive. Look at that bed of double geranisms. Note the untidy effect produced by leaving clusters of fading blossoms on the plants. Take your scissors and cut them off, leaving clusters of fidding blossoms on the plants. Take your scissors and cut them off, throwing not one down near the beds. Now stand off and look at it. What a change! All fresh green leaves and bright blossoms. It is like the effect gained by sweeping out and tidying up a dusty, disorderly room, isn't it? It didn't require much labor, but it shows what can be accomplished by applying a sys-tem of neatness to the garden. Pine, rare plants in a slovenly-kept garden are never as pleasing as the commonest plants are in a neat garden. Remember that. garden. Remember that.

OW the lawn often enough to keep the .VI sward looking smooth and velvely. If you let the grass grow for a week or two, it gives one the impression of a man who ought to go to the barber.

A TTEND to things promptly. If your dahlias are in a condition to require tying to stakes, tie them up at once. If you keep putting it off, the first thing you know some of them will be broken down and the plant spoiled. Give your sweet peas brush as soon as they begin to make tendrils if you want them to do well. If neglected at the time when care of this kind is needed, it is often difficult to do much with them. They seem to resent your treatment. seem to resent your treatment.

KEEP the ground mellow. Perhaps you have the idea that many others have—that a light, open condition of the soil leads to its drying out sooner. Not so. An open, mellow soil acts like a sponge. It absorbs whatever moisture there is in the atmosphere, while the lead of the soil of t while a hard, crusted soil-surface prevents the absorption of moisture. The farmer under-stands this and keeps the cultivator going in his corn-field in hot, midsummer weather.

CORRESPONDENT gives the following A description of her method of caring for this very popular plant in summer; I have always allowed my plants to dry off in their pots, but this sounds reasonable and practical, pots, but this sounds reasonable and practical, and I would advise giving it a trial. Plant your callas out in the garden and cultivate the same as potatoes, being sure to put them in a sunny place and keep them free from weeds. In the fall, about September 15th, take them up and put them in a good, rich soil containing one-fifth sand. Care should be taken to not have too large a pot. Let it be large enough to conveniently hold the roots, but no larger. Many persons put their calla in a large pail or jar and wonder why it will not bloom. It must get pot-bound and remain so if you expect many flowers from it. Plenty of sand in the soil assists drainage. The plant requires a great deal of water, but it must pass through the earth instead of being retained in it. If it were to remain in the pot the soil would become sour, the plant ing retained in it. If it were to remain in the pot the soil would become sour, the plant would stop growing, and probably die; anyway, it would become so diseased as to be worthless. After potting, put in shade and water sparingly for eight or ten days.

Along the first of November begin watering with warm water. Let it be lukewayer to be with warm water. Let it be lukewarm to be-gin with. Increase the warmth gradually, each day, until it is bot, but not scalding. Pour the hot water upon the soil, never on the stalks of the plant. Don't be sparing of water at any time, except for the few first days after potting. In this way you can bring most plants into bloom about the holidays. A southern exposure in the window is best, as the plant delights in warm sunshine, it being a native of Africa, and most frequently along the river Nile. Toward spring its leaves will begin to turn yellow. As soon as the weather is warm enough plant out in the open ground.

In potting, do not let the soil come to the top of the pot by at least an inch. Sprinkle or wash the tenves frequently all over, to keep off red spider. A calla treated as advised, last winter had seven blossoms at one time, and twenty during the season.

SOME DESIRABLE PLANTS

F late the amaryllises have been attracting attention, probably because some of our most because some of our most enterprising dealers have illustrated them very attractively in their catalogues, and considerable has been written about them. I am glad it is so, for we have few finer plants for greenhouse and sitting the some culture. An amaryllis in full bloom is room culture. An amaryllis in full bloom is always sure to get the attention of the most careless, as its great trumpet-shaped flowers have the ficulty of commanding admiration. Below I give a brief description of a few varieties especially adapted to culture by the amateur florist, as well as some few instructions as to the proper care to bestow to attain desirable results:

Aulica—A strong-growing kind. Flower stalk often three feet high. Usually two flowers are borne at a time. They are very large, and shaped like some of the wide-sprending lilies. Color white, shaded to pink, with a green stripe through each petal.

Equestre—A small variety. Very floriferous. Color orange scarlet, with white throat.

Refulgens—Foliage short, but broad and strong. Flowers a dark, rich crimson. Very line.

Vittata—One of the best of the light-colored

Vitata—One of the lest of the light-colored varieties. White with a bright cherry-red stripe running through each penal.

Empress of India—Flower of enormous size. Color deep scarlet, banded with orange shading into white. A grand sort, Aulica Platypetala—Very large flowers. Of spreading form. Glowing crimson.

Johnsonii—One of the best-known varieties. A good bloomer. Color, crimson, striped with white.

The above are all winter or spring flowering The above are all winter or spring flowering varieties, with proper culture, and their treatment should be uniform. Best should be given during the summer. In fall put them in a shady, moderately cool corner. Give but little water. Watch them closely, for often they put up a flower stalk without waiting for favorable conditions. When signs of growth are seen increase supply of water, and give more light and warmth.

A CHARMING DECORATIVE PLANT

ONE of the most beautiful plants I have O ever grown is asparagus plumosus nana. The only resemblance it bears to the ordinary asparagus is in the fineness of its foliage. It sends up shoots to the height of a foot and a sends up shoots to the height of a toot and a half. These divide in branches, something after the style of some of the adiantums. These branches are arranged flatly, and arch over the pot in a most graceful, airy fashion. No fern can compare with them in delicacy, Indeed, the plant is so light and airily delicate in effect that it suggests a green mist rather than a mass of foliage. It is excellent for cut-ting, as it lasts for days. A well-grown speci-men is one of the most charming of plants for the decoration of the table. It is of the easiest cultivation. Give it a good, rich, sandy soil, good drainage, plenty of water at the roots, and a frequent showering.

THE NEGLECTED VERONICUS

PHESE plants are comparatively unknown, THESE plants are comparatively unknown, though by no means new. I do not know why so few grow them. Perhaps because they are not aware of their merits as winter bloomers. They bloom freely and persistently from January to May, and are of the eosiest culture. Give them exactly such soil as you give your geraniams, a moderately warm room, and a not very sunny window, and you will be delighted with them if you are food of blue and purple-blue flowers. The individual flowers are small, but as they are borne in spikes containing scores of them, the effect is very pleasing. Few plants succeed better in the window. They are excellent for use in small bouquets, where one cares more for the quality than quantity of the flowers for the quality than quantity of the flowers used. Pinch out the tops when the plant is young, to induce branching,

A FREE-BLOOMING ORNAMENT

A FREE-BLOOMING ORNAMENT

THE Streplosolen has given the best of satisfaction in the house. It is of shrubby habit, but of slender growth, consequently the branches droop considerably when in bloom. It bears its flowers in loose, terminal heads or clusters. They are tubular, about an inch in length, and of a dark orange often shaded with red. Because of its peculiar color—a rare one among winter-blooming plants—it is particularly valuable for the house and green-house. Young plants send out a large number of branches, and soon form a bushy mass. Unless some support is given them they "straggle" a good deal. The effect is much more satisfactory, however, if the main stalks are tied to stakes and the side the main stalks are tied to stakes and the side branches left free to arrange themselves than it is fastened to a trellis. It is a very free bloomer. I have never seen any kind of insect It often attains a height of four or five

THE FRAGRANT PITTOSPORUM

THIS plant is comparatively rare at the north, where it must be grown indoors. At the south it is hardy, and forms a good-sized shrub. It has thick, shining, dark-green sized shrub. It has thick, shining, dark-green foliage. When grown as a pot plant it assumes the form of a tree, with a habit of growth quite similar to that of the obtander. Its flowers are small, produced in small clusters. In color they are a yellowish white. They are not at all beautiful, but they are so delightfully fragrant that a cluster of them will fill a room with perfume. Their odor is something like that of the cape jasmine, something like that of the arbutus. If the leaves are washed frequently to keep off the scales, a plant is very ornamental in or out of bleom. plant is very ornamental in or out of bloom, tive it a light, rich soil, plenty of water while growing, and a sunny location. With proper one a plant is good for years. A fine plant for room decoration.

Leading - Lightsh - Perfume -RAB APPLE BLOSSOMS Crown Lavender Salts

Crown Perfumery 69

177, New Bond Street, LONDON.

The IDEAL POOD is all cases where nutrition is an important factor and dispositon is fivile. As nutritions as milk and ten times more nutritions than Cod Liver Oil and far more futbering.

You can take sufficient KUMYSGEN with you to your summer resert to last a mostly or two, as it never spoils. You can make it and take it while traveling on stemory or railroad.

When oil other foods full try KUMYSGEN; but it is better to try it in the beginning and save time and strength.

It will perfectly satisfy your thirst and hunger.
When you have no appetite it will keep up your strength.

It is largely used by Physicians in all parts of the orld. world.

KUMYSGEN is the only preparation of Kumyos that will keep. All liquid preparations of KUMYSS will keep but a short time and are constantly changing in the battle.

KUMYSS made from KUMYSGEN is far more paintable, easier digested and less expensive than the old style KUMYSS.

Unequalled by any other Food for Dyspeptics, Invalids and Convalescents

Correspondence Invited. Send for Circulars. Sold by all Druggists.

MANUFACTURED REED & CARNRICK, New York

MOTH PROOF BAG.

No pasts or glos necessary Garments can be removed and replaced instantly, and have no bad odor when taken

Air tight and perfectly proof against Moth and Dust. Durable, and can be used year after year.

SIZES : 24x48 in. when closed, price, 50 cts. each. 50x48 in. when closed, price. 60 cts. each.

---printed to any address on receipt of price. When ordering at Postel Note or Regulated Letter. THARE SUPPLIED.

DETROCT PAPER BAG CO.

Piano or Organ if you could see and hear one. Tone pure, action perfect, finish and workmanship the very best. And prices are very reasonable. Would like to say more, but rather send you a catalogue. Write for one it will interest you. Sent free.

GEO. P. BENT, Mnfr., CHICAGO, U. S. A.

FLOUR OF TOBACCO & SULPHUR.

FLOWERS ALL WINTER and SPRING
TWO CHARLOGUES: Ballo and Gard, Free,
A. BLANC & CO. - Philadelphia

TUBEROUS BEGONIAS FERRIS BROS., Florists, Kingston, N.Y. 25c.

VAN HOUTEN'S COCOA

mato sauce are excellent, my dear Mrs. Bardell, but Let the liquid be VAN HOUTEN'S

It is a glorious Restorative after A fatiguing fourney.

PERFECTLY PURE.

VAN HOUTEN'S PATENT PROCESS nereases by 50 PER CENT. the solubility of the lesh-forming elements, making of the cocca bean an ensity digested, delicious, nourish-ing and stimulating drink, readily assimilated even by the most delicate.

Ask your grocer for Van HOUTEN's and take As your green set van Houten and case 25cts, to sither Van Houten & Zoon, 106 Eastle Birest, New York, or 45 Wahash Ave., Chicago, and a can containing enough for 25 to 45 cops will be mailed. Newfore this publication. Prepared only by the inventors Van Houten & Zoon, Weesp, Holland.

45 sold in '88 2,288 sold in '89 6,268 sold in '90 20,049 sold in '91. 60,000 will be sold in '92

A Steel Windmill and Steel Tower every 3 minutes. C.T These figures tell the story of the ever-growing, ever going, ever going, ever going, ever going, ever spling, ever going, ever financial the story of the ever-growing. Steel Aermoter. Where one goes others follow, and we "Take the Country." Though old, we were smalle is made all of the 50,000 Aermoters to 10. Others often water the story of the ever smalle is been all of the 50,000 Aermoters to 10. Others often water the story of the story of the smaller than the story increase in every labitable premise of the given for every labitable premise of the given for every labitable premise of the given for every labitable premise of the given the Aermotor Co. is the the year of its causemen, cause to make manny times as many windmillies as all other many windmillies as all other many of the story in th of what, the two farm, assign, curvature and associated and a surface, the realistance of air is futualized, abstractions in the what, when he are the curvature and associated and it is such that the property of the what, when he have well as surry wooder arms, shuttrations to have the wheel, as is the varieties will, and many after some abstract, using a test less important operations. These all the two property of the beast which wheels could be doubled, and the AERMOTOR daily demonstrates. It has been done.

ANIZED

But the triberal policy of the Autmeter Ca., that general the test because of the contract of the season of the contract hering every sensetrable plane of windfull construction in and work, to the AERMOTOR CO, 15th and facely rell Sta., Chingo, et al. and W Fould St., San Francisco.

These Combination Suits can not be equalled in any other store in the U.S. The Suit alone is (the out the extra Pants and half would cost you onywhere diss $5.00. If you once order one, you will never have any other. Will send one of these suits ALL CHARGES PREPAID TO ANY PART OF THE U.S. FOR $5.00. WE EXPRESS! BURNATIES to refund money if suit is not satisfactory. THE HUB is one of the largest Clothing, Furnishing, Mat. Show, Clock, Gloos and Travel Stores in the United States. We keep everything from head to fost, and can subseque modey. Send 4e in stamps for our beautiful $2-page (libegraphed fushion book Samples of cloth for Mex's Suits and Discretize Sog's Clothing and Lades' Cloaks and Jackets sent free on application.

A. B. W.—Keep your freedas in the pots during sum-mer, letting the soil remain dry. Re-pot, and start into growth in September or October.

Mas, F. C. D.—Salvia splendens is not hardy enough to stand our winters in the open ground. You will have to procure young plants in the spring.

D.—Young lily of the valley plants often fall to bloom for a season or two. They make a strong, vigorous growth of root and top baseaut of giving flowers. As the soil becomes less situatiating, they have a greater tendency to bloom. Wait in patience.

ANNA RENKE-I would not advise attempting to grow water likes from seed. You might be successful, but the probabilities are that an ammieur would not be. Better purchase pintls.

Mns, Hannau II.—If the bulbs of your orchid are plump and green, it is probably taking its annual rest, and you need not be concerned at its failure to grow, Wall, and when the proper time comes it will get to work.

JENNIE R.—This correspondent writes that she has a tuberose four years old, which fails to bloom, but pro-duces a quantity of small bulbs. Probably the failure to biassonneomes from using an old bulb which had al-ready blossomed.

Mas. F. C. R.—You must select late-blooming varie-ties of the chrysanthemam if you want winter flowers. Keep the lobeler cactus rather dry after it has com-pleted the sensor's growth, until it shows a tendency in make more growth, or to blossom.

Mas. K.—The aphis can be destroyed by using inhacco-water, if you are careful to get to the under side of the leaves. Many kinds of worms will succumb to alone water. I would also suggest paris given applied in solu-tion, the same as for postatoes. This ought to kill both aphis and worm.

Pussy Williow-Cut the abutilon back in spring, and do not allow it to bloom during the summer. Re-pot-in September. Keep rather dry during the season, the fercing the plant to rest as much as possible. Cut the helictrope back in spring, and at intervals during the season. Re-pot in fall.

Miss. W. W. F.—Beveral years ago unts in the flower beds gave me a great deal of trouble, not only in the beds, but in the gravel paths. I deally gut rid of them entirely by covering their hills with powdered bornx and sagar. It took some time and patience to accomplish it, but at last I drove them away.

Miss. B. W.—This correspondent has a wistaria that is several years old, but does not bloom. The young branches winter-kill. What can be done with it? If the this is protected for a few years by laying it does u and covering it to full, it will, after a time, acquire lardness sufficient to withstand the winter without protection. When a plant becomes thoroughly established, it seems to have a greater ability to resist the effects of winter than at first.

Miss, B. A. K.—As I have repeatedly said, in this de-partment, my remedy is line water. I am effect told by correspondents that they find matches stock in the soil more effectual, and this their plants are not harmed by them. I find this in an old magazine in reference to this method: "Thrusting two or three common matches into the soil of a pot through the drain hole is a most effectual means of destroying white womes. The phos-phorus of the match is the destructive agent, but it is namices to the plants." I would suggest that you ex-periment and report success or failure.

w. F. Bassetty-I notice that you recommend celastrus schaders as a good, hardy climber. It certainly does make a fine display. I do not know that I over saw anything more beautiful than a plant of it I once found growing with. It had climbed a small bemick tree, and was at the time covered with terries. The ground was when with snow, and the green of the hem-lock, with the red fruit half concealed by its branches, made an exceedingly effective combination. A recent correspondent exiced about the use of box for hedges, because some of the plants kill out in winter, this leaving in but break in the bedge but Chinese tree box, var. longifults, considerably resembles the dwarf variety, is free from this objection, and makes much more beautiful hedge than the American arbor vita. I also note what you said about the bodly. I do not know that our American bolly (thex spars) is hardy much further north than New Jersey, but it is accesse perfectly there, and is one of our fluest evergreess without bestires. If you are fortunate entough to get a tree that fruits freely, it is a perfect gem. The servet of success in transplanting lies in removing all the leaves promptly when taken on.

ing lies in removing all the leaves promptly when taken up.

Mus, A. M., W.—By "perfect drainage" is meant that condition of soil which retains only a sufficient quantity of water to keep it modet all through. If drainage is properly provided, all surplus water will run off at the section of the pot. To drafe well soil must have a pererous mixture of sand. Chilas can be kept growing the year round, or rested. I prefer, and advise, rest during the summer, but I have seen very fine specimens that there some instead there are no sold of the section of the other hards and finer, however, on spectment that have been dried off in summer. I cannot tell you why the seaves on your plants curl. Bur't there some inseed at work on it? You write that the imantophyllum has described by some dealers as not being a both. I think they are right, and that I was inbiaken when I described what I may seed was an imantophyllum. My plant came in no labeled with that mains. From use of our most cure fat and reliable growers, and it restainly has a bullout most cure, stand a reliable growers, and it restainly has a bullout may my description was covered in every respect except that of the many like. Another party has written me in reference to the mailur, and he says my description was covered in every respect except that of the smartplinks, instead of bulletons. The plant sent memuta be some variety of the amaryliss, chough it is not growth. From what you way usent the bullet you planted, I imagine that they were decased before planting.

or growth. From what you say about the balls you planted, I limagine that they were diseased before planting.

MaNT Commission for the above I have to say that a great pile of betters has gone less the waste tested because. Seeme of them lest questions that have been answered fully in articles in the other columns of this department; some have ignored the fact that their questions are of no interest whatever to naty one except themselves; and many have asked for a reply "in the next number," notwithshanding what has been said, over not over, about the impossibility of replying through the pages in less time than three stantis. Some of the questions next at restrict m. The folial deraminm," and wants to grow one in the way fesselbed. How shall ske go to work; it is discovering to be asked for a lady writes that the road the article m. "The folial deraminm," and wants to grow one in the way fesselbed. How shall ske go to work; it is discovering to be asked such a question after all the gains I sook to make the article leads and explicit in its instructions! The article is all right, however. The questioner is one of a large chase who seem so think it necessary to have an answer to their particular questions before they can at. If as article fits year case, what more is necessity? Fer sure the information you want has not been already advent one before making questions. I have repeatedly advised through go what has before they can at. If as article fits year case, what more is necessity? Fer sure the information you want has not been already advent as selected through go what has been already after the sortice of the particular questions before they can at. If an article fits you have the particular questions to be already alvies the method of the particular particular that has been already alvent to some one before making questions. I have repeatedly as one of the particular questions are when the fact that has been already alvent to some or the particular that have repeatedly and the particular that a fact that

Clean your Straw Hat with Pearline.

Directions.

First brush out all the dirt possible. Then, with a sponge, wash the hat with the ordinary Pearline solution (in the proportion of a tablespoonful to a pail of water.) Steam it well over the nearle of a kettle; rinse well with sponge and warm water; press into shape, and dry.

You can do all this at home at a cost of less than one penny. It's simple enough, if you have Pearline-but, with Pearline, every kind of washing and cleaning

Directions for the easiest way, on every package.

Beware Peddlers and some unscru-pulous grocers will tell you "this is as good as" or "the dled; if your grocer sends you an imitation, do the honest thing-send it back. Sti JAMES PYLE, New York

Are You Baby's

Milk?

HOW MANY MOTHERS

Sterilizing

Walter Memoriaco, M. D. of New York city, says:

"It is probably not too much to any that the process known as sterilizing in finant mortality and dissential may other invention of the past fifty years. By far the best process that has come under my other invention of the past fifty years. By far the best process that has come under my other variety, is the above all others, is the Arnold Steam Sterilizer."

Any one can use it. Simple and increasive. Ask your drug-gist for it, or write for our pamphlet—"Sterifting JAW." WILL MOY CASTLE & CO., ROCHESTER. N.Y.

PILLSBURY'S BEST FLOUR

Makes More Bread Makes Whiter Bread Makes Better Bread

THAN ANY OTHER FLOUR MANUFACTURED.

Jishur deapolis

For Sale by all First-class Grocers.

"THREE BEE" BLACKING & "ROYAL POLISH."

of the nest paper-covered books, "BIXBY'S HOME SONCS." These books contain words and masic, and are designed as Source-wirs to consumers of our goods in all parts of the world, and an acknowl-edgmost of the increased patronage

Use these goods in your family and you may SECURE, POSTPAID, one or both

OUR PLAN.

WE PROPOSE, demag the year 1602 to MAIL, POSTPAID, ONE of THESE BOOKS to any person in the United States or Canada sending as-2 TWO-CENT STAMPS, PROVIDED they are accompanied by FIVE COLORED LABELS taken from the opper side of the lide of boxes, containing BIXBY'S "THREE BEE"

Blacking, for men's shoes, or from the sides of the bottles containing BIXBY'S" ROYAL POLISH."

We require this as an evidence that the books go direct to consumers of our goods. The labels may be readily removed by submerging the lab or bottles in water over night. State which book (No. 1 or No. 2) is desired. These who wish to secure both books may do so by sending as Too Couts in Postage Stamps, accompanied by the Five Labels as stated above.

When our patrons abroad send for the books the labels should be accompanied by stamps of their country doubte the value of U. S. A. stamps.

BIXBYS "THREE BEE" BLACKING and "FOYAL POLISH" are popular goods and sold everywhere at popular prices. If you have not tried these articles, it will pay you to buy the quantity from which you can remove the labels and secure one of these books. Address.

S. M. SILBE A. O. 194 & 196 MESTER STREET WAY TORK D. A.

We sell direct to Families And make it easy for you to buy of us no matter where you live.
The Murchal & Suith Plane is one of the Finest Plane in the World, reliable as a Government bond, and is used in the Lomes of our best people overywhere. PIANOS, ORGANS, $180 to $1500

S. M. BIXBY & CO., 194 & 196 HESTER STREET, NEW YORK, U. S. A.

THE MARCHAL & SMITH PIANO CO., 235 EAST 21st ST., NEW YORK.

30 tays on trial. Hood's Marie Scale, the popular Ladies Talloring System. Historistic circular free. Boso Manie Scale Co., Chicago, Ill.

FILL YOUR OWN TRETH with Crystaline. Sing pain and Decay. Lasts a lifetime, Circular free. T.F.TRUMAN, M. D., Well's firidge, N.Y.

The casting out of the devil of disease was once a sign of authority.

Now we take a little more time about it and cast out devils by thousands-we do it by knowledge.

Is not a man who is taken possession of by the germ of consumption possessed of a devil?

A little book on CAREFUL LIVING and Scott's Emulsion of cod-liver oil will tell you how to exorcise him if it can be done.

Free.

Scorr & Bowne, Chemists, 132 South 5th Avenue, New York. Your druggist keeps Scott's Emulsion of cod-liver oil—all druggists everywhere do. $1.

She can wash, rinse and dry 10 or 100 dishes at one time with a machine, without chipping or breaking a dish, and without using a dish mop or towel; she can save from two to three hours per day of disagreeable work, and prevent the destruction of her hands, by simply purchasing the lightrunning and noiseless Stevens Dish Washing Machine. You run no risk, as every machine is guaranteed to do its work perfeetly or money refunded.

Send for illustrations, testimonials, and special offer. Agents wanted.

STEVENS DISH WASHING MACHINE CO. No. 37 Arcade, CLEVELAND, O.

brilers, all widths to match, in propertion The Previdence Wall Paper House, 27-23-341-243

Westminster St.
Providence,
R. I.

The Van Dorn Iron Works Co. CLEVELAND, OHIO.

ertistic Wrought Iron Workers and Manufacturers of Iron Fencing, Lawn Seats, Vases, Stable Pittings; all kinds of Iron Work for Buildings, Vaults, etc.

NO COMMISSIONS. LOSE PRICES. CATALOGUES FREE

BUY OF MAKER. MONEY SAVED. ER. MONEY SAVED.

Raving received so many lettors of inquiry from ladies recarding our Solid Bright Hongrola Kid Button. Buots, we shall hereafter do we than 17 RE is any part of the U.S. on receipt of $2.30. Equal in the less $4 book relaied. Consumer saves wholes alery may regalery profits. As mainstatemers, we will guarantee Fit, $17 k and Quality. If sof satisfactory, money refunded or another pair sent free, Upera and Consumers to, William A.B.U.D. & L. in had sizes from $21 to.

LLEN SHOE CO., 31 Mik St., Boston, Mana SATISFACTION CUARANTEED.

BOON TO THE DEAF! of a Oraphone is the notroment that will the deal. Made se two-cent stamp for information and terms. 80 D BROS., our. 7th St. & Broadway, Oakland, Cal.

om and Lace, Plain Too or London Vip. Sizes, 6 libs 5 and d. Seed generaler; see 1607 ff gen. Shoe Co., 141 Februal St., Boston, Mass. (Formerly 200 Decembline St.)

USEFUL THINGS WORTH KNOWING

OFTEN it is the stray short hint or sugges-tion that we read somewhere which proves a mountain of help at some critical time, and the subjoined little helps have been gathered and put together in the hope that they may be of practical use to some one of the Journal renders.

TO REMOVE SHINE FROM BLACK SILK

LAY the silk upon a table, and with a sponge wet with eider vinegar rub the shiny places until they disappear. Then hang up in a shady place until dry, and the silk will look almost as good as new. The same treatment may be used upon line black disappear.

FOR A TROUBLESOME COUGH

TAKE an ounce of licorice, a quarter of a pound of raisins, a tenspoonful of flax-seed and two quarts of water. Boil slowly until reduced to one quart, then add a quarter of a pound of finely powdered rock candy and the juice of one lemon. Drink half a pint of this when going to bed, and a little more when the cough is troublesome.

GOOD SMELLING SALTS

ONE gill of liquid ammonia, one quarter of a drachm each of English lavender and of rosenary, and eight drops each of oil of bergamot and cloves. Mix all these ingredients together in a bottle and shake them thoroughly. Fill the vinsignette, or any small bottle which has a good glass stopper, with small pieces of sponge, and pour in as much of this liquid preparation as the sponge will absorb, and cork the bottle tightly.

A PRACTICAL ANTISEPTIC SOAP

A NY good soap material, to which sulphate
A NY good soap material, to which sulphate of copper has been added, in the proportion of twelve parts of the latter to eightyeight of the former, will make a valuable healing soap for the use of physicians, nurses and any other persons who may be exposed to blood poisoning from wounds and bruises.

A LOTION FOR FRECKLES

LOTION consisting of equal parts of lactic acid and glycerine will remove freekles.

INK STAINS AND SCORCHES

SCORCHES may be removed from linen by sprending over them the juice of two onions and half an onnee of white soap. Lemon juice and salt will remove stains of rust and ink. The articles should be exposed to the smalight after being well saturated in the mixture.

TO THE A SHOESTRING

PROCEED exactly as if you were going to the an ordinary bow-knot; but before drawing it up pass the right-hand loop through the knot, then give a steady and simultaneous pull on both loops, and your shoestring will be tied fast. When you wish to unite it pull the right-hand string, and you will have no difficulty. difficulty.

WASHING COLORED MUSLINS

COLORED muslins should be washed in a lather of cold water. Never put them in warm water, not even to riuse them. If the muslin should be green, add a little vinegar to the water; if lilac, a little ammonia, and if black, a little salt.

AN EXCELLENT TOOTH LOTION

It is generally admitted that the best way to prevent decay of the teeth is to use a good antiseptic botton. The following is a good formula: Take of carbolic acid fifteen grains; thymol, eight grains; boric acid, seven druchms; essence of peppermint, twenty drops; tincture auise, two and a half drachms, and water two pints. Mix thoroughly, and use every night and morning with a brush, as you would any other dentifice.

A NEW SILVER POLISH

PUT two-thirds of a pint of alcohol in a wide-mouthed bottile, with one-third of a pint of ammonia and a tablespoonful of whitening: shake thoroughly. Wet a small sponge with this mixture, and go over your silver or brass with it as quickly as possible, rubbing it off with a soft flannel before it has a chance to dry

WATERPROOF PAPER

COMMON paper may be converted into a substance resembling purchment by means of sulphuric acid. The acid should be of an exact strength, and mixed with half its weight of water. A sheet of paper placed in this solution becomes hard, tough and fibrous, yet its weight is not increased and it is far better for writing purposes than animal parch-

TO REMOVE A GLASS STOPPER

To remove a glass stopper that has become fast, put a drop of sweet oil or glycerine in the crevice about the stopper. In an hour or so the stopper may be easily removed.

KEEPING BUTTER SWEET

IF your butter seems likely to spoil, im-merse the vessel which contains it in cold lime-water and keep it there until the sweet-ness of the butter is restored,

TO CLEAN WHITE WOOLEN SHAWLS STEAM in a steamer over a kettle of strong

 scap-sads. This is a good way to treat soiled lace. USE OF GERANIUM LEAVES

ONE or two geranium leaves, bruised, and o applied to a bruise or cut will cause it to heal in a short time.

Canada is famous for its excellent educational standards.

LONDON, ONTARIO, CANADA. Completely equipped for giving an extensive and thorough education to

Young Ladies and Girls.

Full Anadamic Course, Conservatory of Music, School of Art, Elecution, etc. Heaviful Home. 150 acres. Passenger electator, Riding School, On through route between East and West-Grand Trunk, Canadian Pacific and Michigan Central Rallways. Students from 25 Provinces and States. For illustrated catalogue, address Days F. M. FMALLER.

Rev. E. N. ENGLISH, M. A., Principal.

COMPLEXION POWDER

is a necessity of the refined toilet in this cli-Pozzosi's combines every element of beauty and purity.

It is universally known and everywhere estremed as the only Powder that will improve the complexion, eradicate tan, freckles and

For Sale Everywhere.

BUFFALO

For the Babies

HUNTER MCGUIRE, M. D., LL. D., late Professor of Surgery, Medical College of Virginia, Elehmond

For some time I have been using Saffale Lithin. Water in the preparation of ARTIFICIAL FOOD FOR INFANTS. Cow's milk is the substitute usually resorted to when the mother hand able to suckle her child and It is impossible to get a wet zone. One serious objection along with many others, to com's mill, to its ACTOTY. Human milk is always alkaline, but com's milk, except when the arritinal is fed entirely upon grass, is almost always or id. This is the principal reason why the milk of rows disagrees with many habies, and time water is often added to this milk to correct the acidity. I believe the long-continued use of time under is hurtful to digestion, and last summer when I was feeding two of my own children on cow's milk, and found the nurse adding lime water to prevent colle and intestinal de-rangement, which the food atterwise produced. I directed her to use No.2 Huffalo Lithia Water in preparing the food, with invasibate and continued good venills. The water was added until the milk lost in actedity and was neutral or alkaline

Water in cases of one dozen half-gallon bottles, 85, f. o. b., here, or at all Druggists. THOMAS F. GOODE, Proprietor

Buffalo Lithia Springs, Va. 32-Page Illustrated Pamphlet sent Free. Hotel Opens June 1st.

Keep Your Need this RazorSharp.

Every "shaver" knows the TORREY STROPS. This Dressing has made them famous. For sale by desices, or di-rect from factory. Price 25 cents, postpaid. Send for Catalogue-tells How to Sha

J.R. TORREY & CO. Worcester, Mass.

$Full \, Dress \, Suits$

TO ORDER From $25 to $40 Equal in tabele, style, workman-ahep. fit and finish, to $75 and $100 mins of leading houses.

Why this is possible: We are the only Tailoring house in the U. S. making a specialty of Full Dress Garments and have of Full Dress Garments and have every facility for producing at lowest possible cont. It is well known that Tailors regard the Dress Soit a mere incident in their business and accordingly charge prices greatly out of pro-portion to prices tharged under brisk competition for business units.

The Dress Suit is to-day an Absolute Necessity

an Absolute Necessity to penternen attending Weddings, Recoptions, Parties etc. It is not only the Corner Doese on such eccasions but often other forms are absolutely prohibised Every gentleman should own a Dress Sun.
Comparatively few cloths are smitable for Doese Garmans, Samples of these we mail free on upplication with samples of trimmings and complete instructions for self parameterism. No one need be discouraged at the self-measurement requirement for our system is very sample.

Our Customers Risk Nothing.

Our Customers Risk Nothing.

Carments may be returned to us for any cause and when as asturned, we obligate correlives to pay all Express charges. We are general tailers and can femish by mail samples of any style of goods desired. For particulars and samples address (enclosing 6 cts. for postage)

KAHN TAILORING CO., 14 E. Washington St., BOX T , INDIANAPOLIS, IND.

Hires Root Do you Beer?

SOLD AND ENJOYED EVERYWHERE.

LADIES OF FASHION L. SHAW'S

Skeleton Bang and Ideal Wave, Natural curied, feather light, life beautiful, from $1.00 up.

WAVY HAIR SWITCHES, All long, convent Hair, from $5,00 up. $10,00 elsewhere

COCOANUT BALM.

ins. Makes the skin as fair and soft as a child's $1.00 sey box. All Teller Preparations of elemical PARFUMERIE MONTE CHRESTO. DYES ALL SELADES, A SPECIALTY. Send passiphist—How to be Bengiftid.

54 West Fourteenth St., New York.

$5 A DAY SURE. $2.15. Samples Free. Horse owners bay I to 6, 20 other specialise. E. E. BREWSTER, Helly, Mich.

KNICKERBOCKER SHOULDER-BRACE sad Suspender Combined

a Combined Shoulder-Brace and Spapender. It provides new and improved suspenders for men's pasts, and supporters for ladies' underskirts, which do the monte duty of hobling up and bracing up.

Sold by brugglete and General Stores, or sent, paid, on receipt of SI per pair, plain, or SI.50 faced. Send chest measure around the body. Add KNICKERBOCKER BRACE COMPANY, Easten, Pa. N. A. JOHNSON, President

Acme of Comfort

RAMBLER BICYCLES

GORMULLY & JEFFERY MFG. CO. 222 to 228 N. Franklin St., Chicago

"HEFEVELAGE FOR GIRLS" BOSTON, WASHINGTON Send House for Copies NEW YORK

FLAT-IRON SHERWOOD'S CLEANER CLEANER THAT .... CLEANS

and at the same time waxes the Iron with Beerwax. Removes every particle of Rust, Starch, Dirt, or Roughness, reduces the labor of imping greatly, and is worth to any family ten times the cost.

Price 25c. by Mail

AGENTS WANTED SHERWOOD MFG. CO., Mansfield, Ohio

THE MOSELY FOLDING BATH TUB

Takes the place of a BATH ROOM Operates like a Febring Sect. Saif Heating or filled with toilet cabinet for see with Hot and Gold eater connections, alvantages, apply with or without Water Works.

Once remarks. Only complete
Folding Buth Tub-in the market en-dorsed by the Jon-bing Trade. Write-for entalogue

The Needy Folding Buth Tub Co., 128 S. Carol St., Chicago

TAKE AN AGENCY for DAGGETT'S SELF-KASTING PAN Saves 20 Per Cent, to Searting, and Bake the first Broad in the world.

RIGHT NOW YOU CAN BUY CHEAP

No situative middence or castillag ophit complete without them. Solid somfort for spile people and a whole play hopefor shilten. Solid symptom or firight or seconds of price. Chair Hammonic & Frame with caregy top, blo est. ... $6.10 Williant Canery top. $4.0 Chair with the price $2.10 Address NKEDER & CRAIK HAMMOCK CO., Homer, Nich.

Home Batteries

The most complete, most salable and most satisfactory to the buyer, in excellent quality for its price, is The New No. 4 Home Sattery, with Dry Cell. No acids or liquide-sulvays rendy-clean—sofe in any position—contains all needed appliances—very convenient and easy to use—or curry about. Sent, prepaid, anywhere in the United States, on receipt of price, $7.50—Trade and agents 40.

J. H. BUNNELL & CO., 76 Cortlandt St., N. Y.

If You Have an Eve for beauty you can appreciate our efforts in the wall paper line. 100 complex matted for 8 cents. Prices, 5 to 54 cents a roll.

A. L. DIAMENT & CO. 1906 Market St., Phile.

LARGE FUR RUGS $2.00 Send 92.00 for beautiful Fur Rug, perfect in every respect, with long and Fur, either Silver White or Grey; 54 ft. Iong, 23 in. wide, soliable for any Farier or Recycline Halt, Our likestrated Book on Carpets and Cartains mailed rink. Reference—Bestler National Bank, Lawrence, Butter & Bonbana, Columbus, O.

IT'S WONDERFUL! "The New Treatment" for Catarrh, by retrolests. Send stony for 30 page pamphlet, froe. Agents wanted.

HEALTH SUPPLIES CO., 710 BROADWAY, N.Y.

USIC Send 10c for sample of Vocasi or fine*!

189 t. Song Frito book-st lo's weath into means

Windoor Music Co., 215 Wabash-av, Chicago

PANTS $3. Samples and specificalize by mail. BAY STATE TAILORING CO., Boston.

FOR HANDY ONES TO MAKE

A QUARTETTE OF SMALL BUT DEFUL THINGS NOT DIFFICULT TO FOLLOW

A LMOST every household has some mem-ber whose chief delight it is to "make something," and for the benefit of that useful one of a household is presented four ideas below, which are easy of construction and useful when nude.

A POSTAL CARD CASE

A USEFUL case for portal cards—bandy things to have around—can be made by covering a stiff card, six by nine inches in size, with old-rose plush for the background.
Find a shallow box large enough to hold a pack-age of postals. It should not be quite so long as the cards. Remove one end, cover with the plush and line with sat-in. With gold Postal Cards on a bit of bolting cloth. Lay the box in position on the stiff background, and then fasten it by bands of narrow ribbon sewed through the card.

card. Con-ceal the stitches by bows of the ribbon. Across the bottom is a fringe of knitting silk tied into rings, and through the rings a fancy pen or pencil may be slipped.

A TIN-LINED LUNCH BAG

JUST to what use it is possible to put a tomato can is illustrated in this little contrivance of a lunch bag. Be careful to select a tomato can that is round, even, and in per-fect order; remove the top with a pair of pin-chers so the edge will be chers so the edge will be smooth and not ragged, then empty the toma-toes into a dish, soak the label off the can, and scald it out. When the can is clean and dry, make a bag of gray local with circular bot-tom, to fit the can. Draw the opening together at the opening together at the top by means of brown cord draw-strings. Make the han-dles of double thickness of linea, and cover four button, madde with embutton-molds with embroidered linen as orna-

Before making up the bag embroider on one side a pretty design in washable brown silk, also the initial letter of your own name, or of that of the name of the person who is to use it.

Lina Braro

A CHILD'S TABLE-BIB

A CHILD'S TABLE-BIB

RED-STRIPED Turkish toweling of the best quality is the naterial selected for this pretty bib. It is a simple oblong in shape, with neck cut out, corners rounded off, and edges buttonholed with heavy red embroidery cotton. Before working the edge—to strengthen it—a double row of knitting-cotton is run around the outline, straight along the sides, and in soxilops around the neck and at the ends of the ends of the stripes. A stripes. A thick,twisted cord of the knitting cot-ton, with a little red mixed in one strand, is sewed around the neck just in-side the scallops, and the emis, left long enough to tie behind, are tipped with white tassels, brightened with red. A yard of toweling from the web would farmish material for a full set, and they need never be ironed. They are so thick and protective that they are very serviceable, and so attractive they are sure to please the little

A USEFUL DARNING BOOK

A UNEFUL DANNING BOOK

TOR the rovers take two pieces of cardboard six inches long by four inches in width, and cover on both sides with grey linen. Join them at the back by two small brown ribbon bows. Inside of one cover sew two straps of the brown ribbon, and slip under them four skeins of darning cotton—black, white, blue and red. On the opposite side place two leaves of white flannel containing darning needles. Decorate the cover with some appropriate motto done in sepin—as for example, this:

"If you would proverve your solos."

"If you would preserve your solos."

Or this is equally suitable :

"Let all the holes be neatly mended. Hefore the work is fully ended." ALRON C. TILDEN

I've washed at the tub, And I've scrubbed the floor, I've scoured the tin pans too; and Gold Dust did it in half the time that any soap could do.

Sold everywhere. Cleans everything. Pleases everybody,

N. K. Fairbank & Co., Sole Manufacturers,

Chicago, St. Louis, New York, Boston, Philadelphia, Baltimore, New Orleans, San Francisco, Portland, Me., Portland, Ore., Pittsburgh and Milwauker.

KODAK

14 STYLES and SIZES, $6.00 to $65.00

Every Kodak tested in actual use, loaded and sealed. We guarantee each one perfect. Complete Developing and Printing Outfit for any of above cameras, with mamual, $1.50. The completion of our new works at Rochester and Harrow, insures a full supply of sensitive films hereafter. Catalogue sent free. Specimen photographs on receipt of two 2-cent stamps.

THE EASTMAN COMPANY, 999 State St., Rochester, N.Y.

FASHIONABLE AND HEALTHFUL

THE GENUINE

Jackson Corset Perfect

Waist Superb Form

A perfect corset and waist combined. Famous for its style, graceful symmetry, and healthful qualities. Take no other Patented Feb. 27, post See potent stamp on each Watst-

Made only Jackson Corset Co., Jackson, Mich. IF YOUR DEALER HASN'T IT, WRITE TO US.

83.00

POCKETBOOK Weeth so cents, and made of imitation sent; also Edgant Ishoo Catalogue, sent on receipt of 20 cents pertage to LAPHAM'S, PALMER HOUSE SHORE STORE, Chicago, III.

OLD RAGS

Colored with "PERFECTION" Byes will make beautiful carpets and rugs and are generated to fade. If you mention this paper we will send a package each of "PERFECTION" Turkey-Red, Green, Wine, Medium-Brown, Ease and Grange Cutton Byes, with new sample couls and entalogue, for 60 cents; single package, is certs.

W. CUSHING & CO., FORCEOFT, MAINS.

THE YELLOWSTONE PARK

The florest trip in the world in by
THE NORTHERN PACIFIC RAILROAD
From Chicago and St. Paul to Yellowstone Park, thereon to Pauce Sound and Aleska. New made, new hotels and directabled transportation facilities now make the Park trip one of confort and delicht, while the jumper to Aleska is a fulling climax to the bour through the American Wonderland.
Write for field information, maps and books to
L. E. HANNAPORD.

Gest Trafe Manager.

Gest Trafe Manager.

Gest Trafe Manager.

Hard Face, and Teleri Agent.
ST. PAUL, MINN.

LACE CURTAIN Catalogue, 1 cent, and samples of Wall Paper, 4 oruts. Wn. DEARNESS, Circlorott. O.

SYLPH CYCLES RUN EASY

No complication; no ungainty features. A power saver; speedy everywhere. More fine special features than any other two makes, stue That 30.17: It's the vibration that true—not the later of propulsion. The Sylph 3 part spring frame with Duryen 15, in, contion thru issuecation best postumatic make riding over rough reads so had pavenuous, feasible.
Highest grade. 412 to 412. Agents wanted. Carloing free.

ROUSE-DURYEA CYULE CO. Makers, St G Street, Provin, Ill. Cont.

Our 8d annual adition of "MODERN INTENDING BUILDERS

It contains to designs of developes WE revered during 'H, and we quote actual contract figures which is IMPORTANT TO YOU and wherein it diffices from other books which is IMPORTANT TO YOU show designs that are improveded and impossible to build at costs quoted. Seed for, money order or silver, for a copy, perpaid, and if after you have READ IT over and find yourselves desarbeted with our book, return READ IT same to us, and we will refund you your money.

The Saving and Sensible Architectural Bureau 307-312 Arcade, A. Cleveland, Ohio

TO ALL COPRESPONDENTS:—Any question from our readers of help or interest to wamen will be cherefully answered to this Department. But write purely answered to this Department. But write your questions pointly and briefly. Do not war any unmountary words. The right to answer or reject any question is reserved by the Editor. The spirit of purely any possible distances to any other property of the possible distances of purely described by the surface of public approaching the property of the property of the public distance of public distances and observe, and for publication, but for reference.

A. G. B.-Always serve the ladies first at table

W. H. G.-Consult a good dentist about your teeth. Wallie-The Chicago fire occurred on October %h, 1971.

M. D. T.-Falence is pronounced as though spelled flay-aux, Munay—Jay Genid has only one daughter; her name is H size.

A. D. P.—Flour-de-lis is pronounced as though spelled flor-da-le.

SINTER-The "birthday stone" for December is the turquoise.

F. H. 1.—The twentieth century will commence January 1st, 1801.

Snow Dunr-Marriages between first cousins are not legal in Karous.

MARKE, Dogs are said to live about toronly years; cats about fifteen,

BALLY—There is no remedy for the spotting of an unsponged broadcloth. Environs a.—Tennyson has been poet increate of England store April, 1880.

Clares-It is said that vascine will stimulate the growth of the eye-lashes.

NKLLtk-The expression is "to the manner born," not " to the masor born,"

G. L. P.—Louis Napoleon, Prince Imperial of France, was born March 1916, 1866.

A. W. U.—Muriel is pronounced as it is spelled, with the accent on the last syllable.

MARKEL—Dinner invitations should be issued in the united names of the hool and insteas.

Int.su - Presents sent to a bride are usually marked with the initials of her maiden mane.

G. J. V.—The white ribtson is the hadge of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union.

Mass Rennes—Leland Stanford's term as United States Senator will not expire until 1807.

EREE-Greenwood Contenery is in Brooklyn, N. Y. It is easily reached from New York City. Invinoyon-The Postoffice Department aponethic for the loss of a registered letter.

Management - While performing the marriage ceremony the elergyman stands facing the bridal porty.

Mera-Sister Rose Gertrade married a Dr. Letz, of Hotolulis, about a year ago. She resides there, Mass. J.—Torpontine will remove greace or point from cloth; apply till the point may be scraped off.

ist nacranam.-Begin your letter "My dear Mr. --"Dear friend" is awkward, and altogether had form, VETERAT'S WIFE-The next Grand Army Encomp-ment will be held at Washington, D. C., in June, 1892.

Michigan — It is said that a wigh consisting of equal parts of lactic acid and glycerine will remove freckles.

Wansaw—Mrs. Grant and Mrs. Garfield each receive annual persions of $800 from the United States Govern-ment.

Wiger DAKLAND—The groom should provide the bou-ness for the bridesmashs, as well as the bouquet for the

H. G. S.—The stord "mirrobe" is presonated as though spelled mi-krobe, with the "t" and the "o" long.

CATHRILE—A gentleman always removes his glove before shaking hands with a lady. The lady does not remove hers.

MARTHA—A single entrance fee, probably fifty cents, will entitle visitors to entrance to the World's Colum-bian Expesition at Chicago.

G. R.—'The "Rosary" is the name given by Cathelics to a certain form of pracers recited on a string of beads, and to the beads theirselves.

MONTHORE—Home is called "The Flormal City," "The Queen of Cities," "The Seven Hilled City," "The Name-loss City," "The Mistress of the World,"

READER-The badge of the international order of King's Investment is a small malors; cross of sliver, usually worn with a piece of purple ribbon.

Mas. Harry—As your doughter is the only single lady in the facely site should have the surname per-ceded by the prefix "Miss" upon her visiting cards.

HANNAH—"A daughter of the gods, divinely tail, And most divinely fair." you will flut in Tennyson's poem, "A Dream of Feir Women."

B. A,—It was of General Sheridan that General Grant said that had the proper occasion arisen Sheridan would have proven even a greater military leader than did Napoleon. SALLE—It requires an expert to remove superficous air by ments of an electric needle. We should advise out to be very careful who you trust in this connection. Why not consult your physician?

A. A. A.—Place cards are usually dainty and small, and decorated with some quaint design. They bear, of course, the name of the green, and are half at each place to determine the order of the seals at table.

K. R.—If she chooses, a widow may, for social pur-cess, continue to use the name she bore as wife; there-

Grange-Initials on note paper are not considered good form, or ther are natographs. The present fashion in note paper is to have the city or country address expraved across the top of the plain sheets of bravy white paper.

CREAR RAPIDS—Plain white note paper is always in good taste. It wisseld, of course, he unruled. The ad-dress is acceptance engagered at the top of the sheet; if not, R may be written. The envelope should match the paper in size and quality.

Supercurous—Any pretty silver, china, or glass may left upon the sideboard. Finger-boards may be used he left upon the sidemant. Finger-mans may be used always at dinner, though they are not generally pinced agent the table unless fruit is served. This is entirely a matter of choice, however.

Young Hor were reas - Commencing with the oyster fork on the outer edge, the knives are forks on the dis-ner table about the arrangest toward the plane in the order in which the courses are 10 be served, the knives, of course, at the right limit, and the forks at the left.

M. T. C.—The eldest daughter of the house should have the surtame preceded by the prefix "Mrss" open her visiting card; the younger states should have both. Christian and surmane, preceded by the prefix "Miss." The house address should be engraved in the lower left-land corner.

Kur-There can be no impropriety in your answering the door bold; if the person of the door happens to be a violite, and a stranger, and offers you have violiting uned, take it and with some pleasant words bid her! witcome and tell her who you sire. Table will relieve you both from an embatrassing partition.

AMATRIES—Surah Bernhardt can bardly be said to present the greatest "Camille" ever seen on the stage. Opinions, of course, differ, but it is generally concept that houser more rightly belongs to Matikia Heron, one of the most forcess actresses of her time. She died in New York City fifteen years ago.

Gisconors s.—The only lady Procession over known was so the story goess the daughter of Lord Doneralle, which discretellers which the investif in an empty clock-case while the logic was being held at her failure's house, and walched the proceedings. She was discovered and compelled to submit to initiation as a metalist of the craft.

E. E. I.—The buildings of the World's Columbian Exposition will be desirated, with appropriate ceretoories, on October 17th of this year, after which the work of invaliding the exhibits will begin. The Exposition will open its doors to the public on May 1st, 1891, and close them on October 38th of the same year.

Chartette- If the young man is not in a position to marry you, is he not in a position to ask you to become rangaged to him? If he is not he is certainly technically very hadly, and you should not allow him to pay you any noses lover-like attentions. Girls cannot be too careful to avoid "even the appearance of evil."

MADANE—The "Wayside Inu," made familiar by Long-fidion's "Tales of a Wayside Iso.," was ready so but in the town of Sudbary, Massachastics, (2) Fee a some of five feet dwe inches, one hundred and thirty-eight pounds is the proper weight. (3) A salad, or a course at dinner, about is be avered before the dewort.

Lost Cates.—Ex-Empress Engesic, widow of Na-poleon III, mass daughter of Count Cypries de Mossijo, a Spanish grandes. She was been in 1926, married in 1826, widowed in 1873. Her outr child was killed in Zuhiland in 1873. A sketch of the Empress, with por-trait, was published in the March Josephan.

Jewes.—We do not think that the marriages of per-sons of opposite faiths are likely to tread as lampily as where both agree is that particular, but there are doubt-less exceptions to this rule. In marriage the one thing needful is love, the work which resembles churity in "hoping all things and enduring all things."

GRASSE.—There is no complexico powder or lotion that we can recommend. Bad complexions are usually the result of a disordered stomach and usuam to rejucted by outside applications. Take pierrly of exercise, and pienty of fruit, be sampadously clean, and if your com-plexion continues poor consult your family physician.

Purtal.—The present Joseph Jefferson is the third who has borne that same. All three over actes. The first theft in 1815 and the second to 1865. The present Jefferson in skrity-three years of ago. He was born in Philhadelphia, and began acting at the age of three, taking a chief's part in a drama called "Pizarro; or the Death of Eodla."

JACKSONVILLE—Articles mailed in one country in-bended for and addressed to another, which hear postage stamps of the country to which they are addressed, are treated by the gostil authorities as though they here no postage whatever. Postage may be prepaid only by-ments of the postage stamps of the country is which the articles are mailed.

A.—Verset, the painter, had a popil named Chic, to what he was devotedly attached, but who, unfortu-stately, died with quite young. After his death Vernet, almost invariably, when commenting upon the work of his other pupils, would qualify his price by adding, but your pirtures have an 'ether.'!" Hence the word "chic," which has shore been used to define an idea of style.

New Recenture—The Talmust contains the complete civil and canonical law of the decish Clarett. It is a back of decision, and this decisine is elacidated and commented agon in a series of disloques that reveal moch of the customs, practices and decisions of the Jewish nations in the agos of antiquity. The word Talmush is from the Heterew word "lammd," and means to hurn.

Mos. V. D.—A divorced woman may or may not re-sume the mane she hore before her marriage; there is no law upon this point. If there are any children it is generally considered before for the mother to reduce the married name, though she cannot be said to be legally entitled to E. (2) Hithou, embroidery and have will be much used for the trimming of white drowes this summer.

Marris.—Send a separate invitation to each member of the family. (2) Men are invited to afternoon bear and receptions. (3) If unsate to appear to person, send one of your own and less of your lessand's carely upon the day of the "at bone." (4) The invitation which reads "Wednesdays in Berember" needs only one acknowledgment. Make your call upon any one of the Wednesdays.

Westerstays.

You've Houvers expens—To prepare salted almonds, blanch them by pouring beiling water over them and rubbing the-brown skin off with a rough cloth. When they are blanched and gothe dry invalue to the present out of the present of an and over each capital of nuts pour a tablespaceful of the best ofter oil. Let them stand for an boar, and then sprinkle a tablespaceful of salt over each capital, making it theresighly. Spread them est on a flat the pan, jet there is a not see hat over for about ten minutes, or until they have become a delicate brown. Salted almonds remain on the disner and linech table from the beginning until the end of the mest.

beginning until the end of the mest.

PERPLEXED—We see no reusen why you should not habit upon your makes wearing the caps and aprons which you have provided for them, and unless they have proved themselves invaluable by years of fightful service, we should advise you to give them due notice of your desire to make a change if they persist in their refusal. The many noble eccures in our training schools are proud of their eags and sleeves and aproos which are beautiful their eags and sleeves and aprove which their mistresses desire them to wear. Of course, we cannot approve of automatics being exposed to the weather with no other head covering that a lare or make cap, but the average makenes is mindful of the health of her make, and will not be unreasonable in this particular.

8. A. W. Manney

S. A. W.—Men never wear their dessentis until evening, no matter how swell the recorden may be; six eleck would be the very carriest hour possible. (2) Men assuming sear glaves when making afferences calls. (3) At an afference to the mother should stand near the drawing-room door, with her daughters tested her. Invitations for afference has and receptions are unaily sen; out about ten days in advance of the date of the faceton. (4) "Reces tenanty reply to invitations are unaily sen; out after it was the fallowing: "The Misses—accept with pleasure the kind invitation of Mrs. —, for Wednerday evening. March 18th." The address and the thirdshould be placed in the lower left-hand corner. (5) At some hardwors the haftes do not remove their tomers. We do not approve of this custom, however, and should not rely be you to follow E. (6) We think that a wedding invitation stepoid be acknowledged, but the custom howadays is to allow them to go unancorred.

MANY CORRESPONDENCY. The astronomical year is measured by the length of time required for the earth to make a revealation about the sun. The length of this year is 36 days, it hours, it minutes and descended. The calculate twen is, therefore, about six hours no short. To remostly this fault the Romans, in the time of Julius Casar determined to introduce un extenday in overy four years. But a year of 36 days and it learns is a little larger than the account time required for the production of the earth about the sun. In the course of contarts this difference because condicastic, and in the exceeding the outer than they should have occurred according to the calendar, or on the tenth instead of the tweaty-first of March. To correct this the Conneil of Nice, reside by Paper tiregory XIII, orbited that the fifth of Ornor, 182, should be raided the fifteenth, and day the closing years in each contary should act be considered as leap years unless they could be divided by 40.

THEY sat en tete-a-tete that day, Absorbed in converse bright and gay; The dog intent forgot to beg. The maid engrossed scarce turned her head. You'd guess a year and not find out The subject that they talked about; 'T was not of fashion, beaux nor belles, Nor promised joys nor banished hope, But topic more engrossing far-The excellence of Ivory Soap.

COPERCENT 1891, OF THE PROCESS & GAMELS CO.

CLEANSES PRESERVES BEAUTIFIES

Dr. Lyon's Perfect Tooth Powder

Thoroughly cleanses the teeth and purifies the breath. Used by people of refinement for over a quarter of a century. Sold Everywhere.

What The Library of American Literature By E. C. Stedman C It will pay you to find out by writing to C. L. WEBSTER & CO., 67 Fifth Ave., New York.

The Genuine and the Sham

Every good thing has its host of imitations; every genuine article its counterfeits. The imitators always choose the most valuable and popular article to counterfeit, so that when they claim their sham to be equal, or as good, or the same as "So-and-So's," the public may depend upon it that "So-and-So's" article is the best of the kind. The sham proves the genuine merit of the thing it copies, and never has this been better illustrated than by the imitations of Allcock's Porous Plasters.

Allcock's Porous Plasters are the standard of excellence the world over, and imitators in their cry that theirs is "as good as Alleock's," are only emphasizing this fact and admitting "Allcock's" to be the acme of perfection, which it is their highest ambition o imitate. The difference between the genuine and these imitations, which copy only general appearance, is as wide as that between gold and copper.

The only safe way for purchasers is to always insist upon having

ALLCOCK'S POROUS PLASTERS

LEAVES A DELICATE AND LASTING ODOR. An Ideal Complexion Soap

For sale by all Drug and Fancy Goods Dealers, or if tenable to procure this Wonderful Soap send 25 cents in stamps and receive a cake by return mail.

JAS. S. KIRK & CO., Chicago SPECIAL.—Shandon Bells Waltz the popular society Waltz) sent FREE to anyone sending us three wrappers of Shandon Bells Soap.

CELEBRATED FOR THEIR Pure Tone, Elegant Designs, Superior Workmanship, and Great Durability.

BOLD ON EASY TERMS.
Old instruments taken in exchange. Write for catalogue and full information.

170 Trement St., Boston, Mass.

EMERSON PIANOS 3 60.000 SOLD

43 YEARS BEFORE THE PUBLIC. SWEET TONED.

SOLD ON

MODERATE PRICES, TERMS: REASONABLE. Every Instru-Warranted,

MERIT. Catalogues Free EMERSON PIANO CO. 92 FIFTH AVE. NEW YORK 174 TREMONT STREET, BOSTON, MASS.

"OLD MAID" REFRIGERATOR,

SIDEBOARD

CHINA CLOSET.

For people desiring the com-forts of life in small rooms. Antique Ash. Cold dry air. Six walls, air-tight locks, wa-ter cooler, drawers for effer-and linen, glass doors, mov-able shelves. Three articles in one. Price only 825. Wester ons. Price, only $25. Write for estalogue of fifty other styles, all new of the famous Leonard Cleanable Refrigerators. Best in the world. We pay freight

GRAND RAPIDS REFRIGERATOR CO., 2 to 30 OTTAWA STREET, GRAND RAPIDS, MICH

Beeman's Pepsin Gum

THE PERFECTION OF CHEWING CUM. A DELICIOUS REMEDY

INDIGESTION. 1-3 of an ounce of Pure Pension mailed on receipt of 25c. CAUTION-800 that the nar Seeman is on each wrapper.

Each tablet contains one grain pure pepsis, a digest 1,000 grains of food. It it cannot be obt dealers, sond five conte in stamps for sample pas BEEMAN CHEMICAL CO., 28 Lake St., Cleveland, Q. ORIUSATORS OF PERSON CHEMICA GER.

This is

Chicago

and you can secure some of the best of the inside of it for $40 down; ten dollars a month afterwards. Send for "Pullman; With a Moral "; free.

J. H. VanVLISSINGEN & BRO., Chicago, III.

Ladies' Park Phaeton

Absolutely free from borse motion or weight on animal. Unequaled for style, comfort and safety. Made in 10 styles. Send for entalogues and prices.

The Chadwick Two-Wheeler Co., Salem, Virginia

MME. CELIA CONKLIN'S CURLING CREAM

The best preparation on the market for boilding the Hair in Curi, Bangs and Prizzes; able to be controlled to the hair, one tried always used.

Price 50 cents.

Enclose P-cent stamp for fine card case to P. E. Keys, 65 State St., Chicago, Ill.

THE WALL PAPER MERCHANT

RASTESO. UNITED STATES the Gray POR 10 CENTS

TOASTS BREAD PERFECTLY OVER A SHORY FIRE. Weight, I like

SATISFACTION GUARANTEED.

SPECIAL OFFERS To further introduce this wenderful Broiler, we will send one, all complete, anywhere in U. S. all charges prepaid, upon receipt of only 10s. You call charges prepaid, upon receipt of only 10s. You cannot proline at express office, and if O. S., pay remaining 9te. If, after using 5 or 5 times, Broiler is not salidafastory, we will remove sume and return the declar Total cost to you, St. Warranted never to warp, crack nor break. Excellent terms to agents and dealers. SUN STAMPING CO., 406 P Street, EALANAZOO, NICH.

Metal

Tipped.

Almond Meal, MINER'S, the original,

Whitens and neuristies the Skin, re-moves Pimples, Eccetta, Barckheads, Wrinkles, Shiny Skin, Moth. Tan, Freckies, Liver Spots and all akin bism-ish. Ask for Miners (the scialing), Perfectly barmless. Il cents by mail, H. A. MINER, Maiden, Mass.

WRINKLES! With Almosed Nat Cream, postavely rat, then you can postavely rat, then you can postavely rat, then you can be seen to the water when you want to the water water to the water to the water water to the water water to the water

T Dress Reform UNDERWEAR SPRING GOODS REDUCED IN PRICE.

Sanitary Balbriggan, Sanitary Lisle Thread, Sanitary MERINO, SILK and Sanitary Balbriggan, Silk and Cashmere mixed For SPRING and The ONLY Sanitary Underwear, and SUMMER WEAR. Endorsed by the leading medical profession.

Serif for new Catalogue, Samples, and revised Frice List, If your dealer can-sot supply them, they can be obtained of the manufacturers.

DON'T BE DECEIVED. See that each garment is stamped with our Trade Mark-

"Ypsilanti Health Underwear." HAY & TODD MFG. CO., Ypsilanti, Mich.

4c. A DAY PER ROOM HEAT YOUR HOUSE

Either with HOT WATER or STEAM as preferred. If you are hullding a New Hume, or want to make the old one Comfortable, it will pay you FURMAN BOILER and System of Healing to investigate Of its FURMAN BOILER 150 page ILLUSTRATED MANUAL On House Healing and Ventilation sent free. Address, HERENDEEN MFG. CO., IO CLARK STREET, GENEVA, N. Y.

BARRY'S TRICOPHEROUS HAIR

SKIN

The SYLVAN TOILE, and our comprigated book "FACE MASSAGE, The BALM OF LILYS, Mach, built, built, built, and the control of perfected treatment of wrintles, &c., &t. Sails Sain Sono, Turrent, pure lastin inm delly, for inc. hurns, and chaps, 25c, Carbon, hope beneg and from gr ALL, sent prepaid, $2.50. SYLVAN TOILET CO., Port Hur

BRADLEY & HUBBARD MFG. CO.

MERIDEN, CONN.

Send for our little book, It will interest you.

Ladies' Hemstitched Handk'rch'fs. $1.80 per dos. Ladies' Hemstitched, very fine. $4.40 per dos. Handkerchiefs. $1.50 per dos.

sent free of money order LINEN to any part the U.S.

Mention this paper.

EVER READY DRESS STAY

Manufactured by the YPSILANTI DRESS STAY MFC. CO., Ypsilanti, Mich.

MISS BEACH'S Curling Fluid.

Keeps the hair in ourl for days mocernt as cologne. A tollet secessity. Not sent on trial. 30,000 Ladies Bave Endorsed It At drugatitis, or prepaid, 50c. LADY AGENTS wanted, DENISON CHEMICAL CO., 56 (C) LaSalle St., Chicago, In.

Will Not Cut Through. See Name "EVER READY" on Back of Each Stay.

Send 10 cents for a sample copy of INGALLS/ HOME AND ART MARKETSK, and full particulars. Address J. F. INGALLS, LYNN, Mass. Box J.

A POINTER!

Credenda Bicycles, $90 A high grade machine at a popular price. G. SPALDING & BROS.

Cate, free. He

inolia

Does not dry the Skin, Hair, and Nails

A slice of Transparent Soap held over a lighted match gives off the fumes of burnt sugar. Sugar causes soap to dissolve too freely and unlocks the alkali. This is why delicate skins cannot stand transparent soap.

Vinolia Soap

Vinolia Soap

Vinolia Soap

Is milled and made from white curd soap, while transparent soap is a boiled one made of yellow kitchen soap. Any statement to the contrary is not correct.

"Vinolia" is a natural soap, while transparent is made so with methylated spirits (contaminated with naphtha).

Is guaranteed neutral. What was heard of neutral soap before ours?

Transparent soap cannot be superfatted. Ordinary Soap, containing extra fat, cracks and lathers poorly. In "Vinolia" Soap the problem of superfatting has been chemically solved for the first time. The extra cream minimizes any possible action of soap upon the skin. This is one reason why the LANCET and BRITISH MEDICAL JOURNAL and leading medical men here and abroad indorse it and no other.

Another point. We furnish easy home tests, as well as complicated scientific tests for making analyses, besides instructions "HOW TO JUDGE SOAP." These are free to everybody on application. Would we venture to do this if we did not stand on a solid rock?

Prices: Floral, 15c., Medical, 25c., Toilet, 35c., Vestal, 85c. a tablet. For sale by all leading druggists. If your druggist cannot supply you, write direct, with price.

Beware of imitations. Get "VINO

BLONDEAU ET CIE., London, Paris, and New York

American Depot: 73, 75 and 77 WATTS STREET, NEW YORK

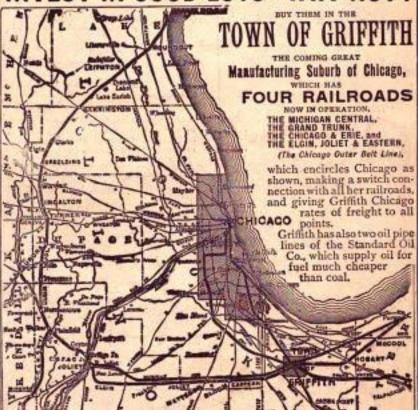

IMPORTERS AND RETAILERS MILLINERY, DRY GOODS FANCY GOODS, ETC.

HOUSE FURNISHINGS, CHINA AND GLASSWARE.

We beg to inform our Patrons that we have now on exhibition the finest line of SPRING AND SUMMER MILLINERY, COSTUMES, WRAPS, JACKETS, DRESS COODS, SILKS, Etc., in this city. Pay a visit to our Mammoth Establishment, or, if it is not convenient for you to do so, send for our Illustrated Catalogue, and see the inducements we are offering. We are sure we can please you both in quality and price.

PAID PARCELS DELIVERED FREE TO ANY ADDRESS WITHIN 75 MILES OF THIS CITY.

H. O'NEILL & CO., 6th AVE., N. Y.

Griffith is the only factory suburb of Chicago having two oil pipe lines and four railroads. These bring factories-factories attract population-population makes large cities out of small suburbs. If you can buy in a small suburb, and sell in a large city that's shrewd investing!

Griffith is still new-ground floor chances there yet! Residence lots sell for $120-best ones $300; business lots $300-best ones $650. Monthly payments $4 to $15, if desired; discounts for half or all cash.

The choicest locations can now be had in two new additions—but best lots go fast. To be sure of them send $10 per lot deposit, and we will immediately reserve for you the best unsold of the price and kind you specify—guaranteed high and dry—and will send you marked plat and full information. You can then investigate fully and if not suited exchange for any lots unsold.

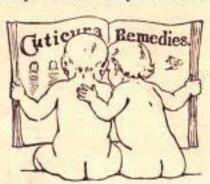

If you prefer to take the risk of losing choicest locations, send first for plat and select for yourself. Sent free. We are only waiting for your address;

JAY DWIGGINS & CO., 142 Washington St., CHICAGO, ILL. our standing we refer to the Columbia and Metropolitan National Banks, of Chicago

What Can Cuticura Do

For Baby's Skin, Scalp, and Hair

Everything that is cleansing, purifying, and beautifying for the skin, scalp, and hair of infants and children, the Cuticura Remedies will do. They afford instant relief, and a speedy cure in the most agonizing of itching and burning eczemas. They clear the skin of the most distressing of scaly, crusted, pimply, and blotchy humors. They cleanse the scalp of dandruff, scales, and crusts, destroy microscopic insects which feed on the hair, and supply the roots with energy and nourishment. They prevent inflammation and clogging of the pores, the cause of pimples, blackheads, rashes, red, rough, and oily skin. They heal rough, chapped, and fissured hands, with itching, burning palms, painful finger-ends, and remove the cause of shape-

Thus, from the simplest baby blemish to the most torturing and disfiguring diseases of the skin and scalp, even when complicated with hereditary or scrofulous taints, these great skin cures, blood parifiers, and humor remedles are equally successful. Everything about them invites confidence. They are absolutely pure, and may be used on the youngest infant. They are agreeable to the most refined and sensitive. They are speedy, economical, and unfailing.

Eg-"All about the Sens, Scalf, and Hain" mailed free to any address, 64 pages, 300 Diseases, 50 Hierarchies, and 100 Testemonials. A book of principal value to every sufficient.

Curricus Resembles are sold everywhere. Prios, Curricus the Gene Skin Cure, 500.: Curricus Soar, an Exquaste Skin Purifier and Beautifier, 200.: Curricus Resourant, the greatest of Blood Partifiers and Humor Remedies, $1. Prepared by Potters Dans and Curri. Cour., Books.

For Baby's Skin, Scalp, and Hair, use that greatest of Skin Purias purest and sweetest of toilet and nursery scops, the celebrated Cutlourn Scap. The only medicated toilet scop and the only preventive of inflammation and eloggisg of the pores, the cause of pimples, blotches, rashes, rough, red, and only skin. Sale greater than all other skin and com-plexion scope combined. Sold shroughout the civilized world. Price, 25c,

IES'K

ONE DOLLAR A YEAR

PHILADELPHIA, JULY, 1892

	PM6.00
Excuses Poem
XIX-MRS. EDWARD BELLAMY	. Fanny M. Johnson I
To a Literary Aspirant—Poem A Face We Often See—	. Robert Loveman
ANNA WILLESS WILLIAMS	Alice Graham McCollin . 1
Lawn Parties and Out-door Fetes A Camp in the Adirondacks	Jessamy Harte 3
Mr. Beecher as I Knew Him—IX . The Byrntell Golden Weddding .
Women and the World's Fair An Every-day Girl Part II	Mrs. Potter Palmer 6 Sarah Orne Jewett 7
When She Comes_Pem	Charles B. Going 8 8
Dainty Needlework for the Table FOR THE CENTER OF THE TABLE . HINTS FOR TABLE NAPERY THE NEW BUTTERFLY DESIGNS .	Maude Haywood 9
The Story of Two Hearts
Rowing for Girls	. Ellen Lee Garde 10
Both Ends of a Bell Wire  The Brownies Through the Year—X  Illumental by the Author

DEPARTMENTS
At Home with the Editor From a New Inkstand The King's Daughters The Horse and the Race Track Side Talks with Girls Side Talks with Boys In Literary Circles THE CHILD AND THE PORT Art for Art Workers Just Among Ourselves Everything About the House Hints on Home Dressmaking Some Suggestions About the Hair Small Belongings of Dress Costumes for Lawn Tennis Women's Chances as Bread-Winners  The Editor Margaret Bott T. De Witt Tal Ruth Askmore Foster Coates  Rate Tannatt Mande Haywon Maria Parloa Emma M. Hot Isabel A. Malia Costumes for Lawn Tennis	iette . 13 ome . 14 mage, D. D. 15 . 16 . 17 . 18 Woods . 18 od . 19 Abbott . 20 oper . 21
women as telegraphers	totall

JULY DAYS

BY JOHN KENDRICK BANGS

SOFTLY drone the honey-bees; Blossom scented is the breeze; Golden is the grain. Over all the faintest haze Rests, and song birds pipe their lays. In a sweeter strain. Prom the meadows comes the scent Of the new hay, clover blent— In the topax sky Fleecy clouds, like ships at sea, Floating onward lazily, Or at anchor, lie.

Nature now is doubly dear
To my soul, for doubly near,
At July's behest,
She has come, and coming brings Surcease from all weary things—Blissful sense of rest1

"SUPERIOR NUTRITION-THE LIFE"

THE GREAT MEDICINAL

FOOD

BRINGS HEALTH AND HAPPINESS TO THE HOME

IMPERIAL GRANUM is a solid extract from most superior growths of wheat. It has stood the test of time, and stands to-day unrivaled. Its sales are larger than those of any other dietetic preparation, and its merits are more universally known and appreciated.

For CHILDREN, infants and nursingmothers IMPERIAL GRANUM is the safest FOOD, because it is the purest and most nutritious, and, at the same time, the most acceptable to the taste.

TRAVELERS find it invaluable, as it is the FOOD best suited to all weak and delicate conditions of the stomach. Imperial Granum is always uniform and reliable, and is easily and quickly prepared, with water only, or with condensed milk when fresh milk is not at hand. IMPERIAL GRANUM combines the greatest quantity of nourishment with the least amount of labor necessary for its > digestion, making it a necessity in the room of the sick or convalescent. It is a delicious and wholesome article of diet for dyspeptic, delicate and aged persons.

For INVALIDS, and in Cholera Infantum, Diarrhoza, Dysentery, Fevers, and other diseases, where life seems to depend upon the nourishment, it is often the only food the stomach will retain.

EMINENT PHYSICIANS advise the use of IMPERIAL GRANUM; and thousands of mothers, nurses, pharmacists, and all acquainted with its virtues testify to its excellence as a pure, strengthening, nutritive FOOD. Its sales and popularity are constantly increasing.

The Most Easily Digested Medicinal Food

WORLD RENOWNED-UNIVERSALLY RECOMMENDED

SOLD BY DRUGGISTS. Shipping Depot, JOHN CARLE & SONS, New York

Send Postal Card to The Imperial Granum Co., New Haven, Conn., for Handsome Cards and Circulars

THE LADIES' HOME JOURNAL

Vol. IX, No. 8

PHILADELPHIA, JULY, 1892

Yearly Subscription, One Dollar Single Copies, Ten Cents

EXCUSES

BY ANNETTE RITTENBOUSE

THE cries which fear wrings from the robin's breast, But serve to show the cat where lies the nest:

Just so excuses, be they short or long, But go to prove the existence of some wrong,

*XIX.-MRS. EDWARD BELLAMY

By FANNY M. JOHNSON

husband is writing a book. He has been at work upon it for a year or more. I think it an unusual book, but I do not know whether it will be a great failure or a great suc-

The bady who made this re-mark some half a dozen years was the wife of a lawyer-journalist who was then quite unknown to fame, at least out-side his own town and county. The friend to whom she spoke might have forgotten the remark if there had not been good reason, a little later, to remember it. For the speaker was later, to remember it. For the speaker was Mrs, Edward Bellamy, and the book of which she spoke was "Looking Barkward."

MES. BELLAMY

Two years later the book had made a great literary hit and success, and as its sentiments spread it became the inspiration of the unitonalist movement. As the name of Bellamy grew famous, the name of Chicoper Falls, where the Bellamys reside, became familiar to the reading authic.

where the Bellamys reside, become familiar to the rending public.

It is a quiet manufacturing village, a part of Chicopee, one of the smaller Massachusetts cities. The Bellamy homestead is a character-istic New England home, a modest, two-story house on an elm-shaded street, built on one of the hills overlooking the Chicopee River. From the bend of the river, around which the manufacturies of the town cluster, the streets climb upward to pleasant homes built on the adjacent slopes and terraces, and by shady paths and fields where wild flowers grow idead gradually with the surrounding farm hands. The Indian name which the village once hore, Skenongomick, still clings to it in written records and town histories. Like soods and town histories. many of the older Massachusetts towns, its more retired streets are shaded with rows of elms and maples, which give them an air of elass and maples, which give them an air of pocture-spine repose.

Nearly all of Mrs. Bellamy's life has been passed in this quiet home. When she was a child she came to the village with her mother, Mrs. Sanderson. When the latter re-married and went away, the daughter Emma, then a girl of thirteen, remained with the family of Rev. Rufus K. Bellamy.

* In this sides of pen-pertrain of "Unknown Wives of Well-Kusan Mea," communication is January, 180, Journal L. the following, each accompanied with portrait, have been printed;

Mas. Thomas A. Eddoon	7.0	January 1801
MRS. P. T. BARNESS		- February "
MISS. W. E. GLAINTONES.	100	. March "
Mus. T. DE WITT TALMAST		April
MRS. CHAUNCEY M. DRPEN		a May "
LADY MAUDONALD	-	June "
Mins, John Changaria Harris		July "
LABY TENNYMON		August "
Miss. Will Carlierost .		representer "
Man, WELLTAN MCKENLEY		October "
Terr Prescess Insurer		November "
Mas John Wanamaker		January 1981
MISS, LELAND STANFORD
Man, CHARLESS H. SPURGERS	200
Man, Equippe Prints	8	April *
Mass. John J. Indalts.		Har
MADAUR VICTORIES SARIOUS		June "
Any of these back numbers of each by writing to the Journal.		had at it cours

New England parsonage she grew to woman-hood. There were only sons in the family, and the pleasant, sweet-faced girl soon came to be loved and regarded as a daughter. Ten years ago she became really a daughter, in fact and name, by her marriage with Edward Bellamy, now the famous nationalist. During the renainder of the father's life and since his death, the old homestend, where the widowed death, the old homestend, where the widowed mother still lives, has continued to be the home of Edward Bellamy and his family. Though the greater part of the working week he is deep in business at his office in Boston, a hundred miles away, but twice a week, as a rule, and always on Sundays, he comes home to rest and for a little while forget his business cares in the little parsonage.

The fame which came to Mr. Bellamy has made scarcely any change in the unpretending manner of their living. The many callers who have sought and found him at his home have come for serious business and not to be felly entertained. So no great burden of social en-come for serious business and not to be idly entertained. So no great burden of social entertainment has fallen upon his wife. One domestic suffices for their quiet home life, and Mrs. Bellamy has always been able to give the most devoted care to her two bright little most devoted care to her two bright little children, Paul and Marion. From their baby-hood they have never been trusted to the care or training of a stranger.

In the pure, wholesome atmosphere of a

Her own education was obtained in the public and high schools of the village, where her record was that of a good scholar, a sweet

Her own education was obtained in the public and high schools of the village, where her record was that of a good scholar, a sweet singer and a general favorite. During her first years of married life she could have had no idea of the stir her husband's work and ideas were to create. His fame has made no difference in her quiet, impretending manner.

Though she has been a wife for ten years, and a mother for seven. Mrs. Bellamy's face still retains much of the dedicate bloom which is the heritage of New England girlhood, and her figure the slender grace of youth. She has dark-brown hair, bright, expressive eyes, and a manner marked by quiet cordiality, devoid of either formality or effusiveness. Her musical talent is her chief personal gift, her voice being a mezzo-soprano, and considerable attention has been paid to its cultivation. For several years she has song in the choir of the village church, only a few rods distant from her home. She chiefly prizes her musical gift, however, for the pleasure it gives her husband and children, all of whom are exceedingly foul of music. The little melodican which she hearned to play upon when a girl still stands in one corner of the family sitting-room, and no Sunday afternoon or evening would be complete or happy without her singing to its simple accompaniment. Marion and her father love best the sweet old ballads, but Paul glories in war songs, music of march and battle, and rollicking plantation melodies. So far as they can understand the matter, the children are arilent nationalists.

The chief variation in this quiet life is in the summer, when the family spend a few months

So far as they can understand the matter, the children are arrient nationalists.

The chief variation in this quiet life is in the summer, when the family spend a few months at the seashore or mountains. The summer of 1800 was possed at the seaside, but was saddened by the long and serious illness of the little daughter. Last year their summer outing was spent on the highest acrossible spot of the Berkshire hills, and from that airy height the children came home rosy and healthy to fill the house and grounds with the merriment of happy child life. There is ample playground for the young Bellamys in the large home garden and among the fields and hills that surround their home.

In her husband's work and aims, Mrs. Bellamy is an earnest believer and hearty sympathizer. "Lam often asked," she says, "whether Mr. Bellamy seriously believed in the theories of 'Looking Backward," or whether it was written merely for effect. I know he was, and is, thoroughly in earnest in all he has written and done. He is far more sanguine than I, but yet I feel that the ends which he and his friends are working for will be brought about, and that much sooner than people can now believe."

Such is the theory and belief of this gentle.

now believe." Such is the theory and belief of this gentle woman, into whose calm life the accident of fame has wrought little change. Wholly in the quiet round of her home duties, a type of the many wives and mothers to whom loyalty and love for husband and children stand first, but whose influence is beyond all reckoning in keeping the standards of a com-munity pure, and its home life succt.

STARION BELLAMY

TO A LITERARY ASPIRANT BY ROBERT LOVEMAN

RATHER let thou the snowy page A virgin's death endure Than it should live a shamed age, Wed to a thought impure.

BY ALICE GRAHAM McCOLLIN

T is interesting to know that the girl who posed as the model for the Goddess of Liberty which is familiar to the sight which is familiar to the sight of this nation from its position on the face of the many silver dollars of the land, should have been born in the City of Brotherly Love, the "Cradle of American Independence." It is not only an interesting, but a fitting historical coincidence that this should be so.

Anna Willess Williams, the original of this nictured endless, was horn in Philadelphia pictured goddes, was born in Philadelphia during the Civil War. Her mother was of southern birth, the daughter of Dr. Arthur H. Willess, a wealthy slave owner of Maryland, who, while his daughter was still unmarried, who, while his daughter was still memarried, suffered financial reverses. When nine-teen she married Henry Williams, of Philadelphia, and removed with him to his native city. Mr. Williams soon became affluent but through some mismanagement he lost all his property, and his daughter, Anna, the youngest of nine children, was born under most adverse circumstances. While she was still but a child her father died, leaving his widow, although in delicate health, with the strongest determination to care for and educate her children, and it was entirely through the enchildren, and it was entirely through the en-dravors of her mother that Miss Williams received her education.

MISS. WILLIAMS

Early in 1876 the Treasury Department scarred the services of Mr. George Morgan, an expert designer and engraver, who had pre-viously been connected with the Royal Mint of England. He was assigned to duty at the Philadelphia Mint upon the design for the new silver dollar which was soon to be issued. He gave his attention first to the reverse side, for which a design of the American engle was afterward selected, hoping that a suitable idea would occur to him for the head of the Goddess of Liberty, which, it seemed proper, should be used as the principal figure on the coin. After considerable delay and frequent change of plan, it was decided that, if possible, the head should be a representation of some living American girl. In the pursuit of his duties Mr. Morgan had been thrown into the society of Mr. Thomas Eakins, an artist of considerable reputation, and the an artist of considerable reputation, and the similarity of their interests became the foun-dation of a warm friendship between them. It was through Mr. Eakins' influence that Miss Williams, a friend of his family, was induced to pose for Mr. Morgan for the designs of the Goldess of Liberty. The sittings took place at the residence of Mr. Eakins, on Mount Ver-non Street, below Eightreath, in November, 1870. It was some time before the cap, with its sheath, was decided upon as the ornamenta-tion for the head. tion for the head.

tion for the head.

For nearly two years after the issue of the Bland dollar, the model's identity was kept a secret. In the summer of 1879, however, an indefatigable newspaper man discovered and proclaimed Miss Williams! connection with the coin. Since that time the annoyance is which she has been subjected has been constant. Letters, visitors—both to ber home and school—and disagreeable personal encounters have been of almost daily occurrence.

Frequent as the requests for permission to publish a sketch of her life have been. Miss Williams has declined always to permit any such publication until now, and it is the good fortune of Tirk Lanus' Howk Jorkyat to be bettine of THE LABRE HOME JOURNAL to be enabled to present her to its many readers.

Miss Williams has become one of the most successful of the many clever women teachers of this country. She has been especially successful as an instructor of kindergarten training and philosophy. The success she has attained in her chosen vocation has been has attained in her chosen vocation has been entirely the result of persevering effort and natural ability. She has been a diligent student always, and an outhosiastic follower of the University Extension Movement. In March, 1891, she received the prize for the best original essay on psychology offered by the University Extension Society.

Miss Williams literary talents have found expression in interesting contributions to the current periodicals. Her taste in reading is principally for the philosophical treatises. Carlyle is her chosen essayist, and Howells her favorite novelist. The line arts also claim her appreciation. She is a devout member and regular attendant of the Baptist Church.

In appearance Miss Williams is most attrac-

In appearance Miss Williams is most attrac-tive. She is below medium height, of grace-ful figure, with a face worthy the honor be-stowed upon it of representing the goddess of her native country. Her complexion is fair, her eyes blue, her nose Grecian, and her bair, which is almost her convenience deep is midden.

her native country. Her complexion is fair, her eyes blue, her nose Grecian, and her hair, which is almost her crowning glory, is golden in color, abundant in quantity and of wonderful lightness of texture, the soft coil in which it is worn being especially becoming. Miss Williams is refined and gracious in her presence and free from self-consciousness. It may be said of her that she combines to a special degree strength of character and purpose with great pentleness and modesty.

The lesson of all lessons to be fearned from Miss Williams' life story is that while fame may light upon the young life, adding to its reputation for external qualities, as in this case, the real success, which is hers, comes from personal application and steady perseverance. In these things, as in her beauty, she has proved herself a worthy model.

The history of the silver dollar, however, extends considerably further back than 1879. The first issue of silver dollars from the Government Mint was in 1794. On July 18th of that year the Bank of Maryland deposited some $80,000 worth of "coins of France" (to be exact $80,715,733) with the Government, and on the 15th of October the first issue of 1758 silver dollars was returned by the chief coiner of the Treasury. The design of these first dollars was a head of Liberty facing to coiner of the Treasury. The design of these first dollars was a head of Liberty facing to the right. Above was the word "Liberty" and beneath the date "1794." To the left were eight stars, and to the right seven, representa-tive of the number of States in the Union. In 1798 it become apparent that it would be onto 1798 it became apparent that it would be quite impossible to add a star for every new State which the future might unite with the nation, and a return to the original thirteen was made, at which the decoration of stars has remained. On the reverse side of the 1794 dollar was an engle with raised wings encircied by branches of harred crossed, and around the wrenth was the legend, "United States of America."

In 1795 a change was made in the design of In 1735 a change was made in the design of the dollar. A bust, instead of the head of Liberty, was used, and the flowing bair from the head was bound with ribbon. The issue of 1796 was of the same design. In 1797 the number of stars was increased to include Ten-messee, and there were two issues, some of fif-teen and some of sixteen stars, during that year. In 1798, as has been said, the return to the original thirteen stars was made, and at the same time a further change was made in the same time a further change was made, and at the same time a further change was made in the reverse side; the design was an eagle with raised wings, bearing the United States shield on his breast, and in its beak a scroll inscribed. "E Plazibo Paon," a bundle of thirteen ar-rows in the right talon, and an olive branch in the left shows the scale was charle and in the left; above the eagle were clouds and thirteen stars, and about the whole "United States of America." This design continued in use until 1804, when the coinage of silver In that year $20,000 were issued, of which at the present time but eight examples are known to exist. Coinage of silver dollars was resumed in 1840 with a new design. It was a figure of Liberty seated on a rack, supporting with her right hand the United States shield, across which footed a seroll inscribed "Liberty." On the reverse was an engle with extended wines. This design was used until 1886, when it was slightly varied by the introduction above the eagle of the inscription, "In God We Trust," and this design was used until 1878, when Mi-a Williams' proffic was substituted,

SOME PRETTY LAWN PARTIES FOR THE LITTLE ONES, THE GIRL OF SIXTEEN, WITH A WORD TO THE MATRONS

URING the summer and early notions months country towns and vilinges are, as a rule, full of city visitors and boarders. How to entertain them is a matter of special interest to hostoses and their young friends. As a help in that direction this page offers a noval spressions.

variety of novel suggestions.

Whatever kind of fite is decided upon, it is Whatever kind of fite is decided upon, it is worth while to make it distinctive in type by suitable costumes, decoration and menu, Visitors are to be depended upon for help in this direction. Usually, very little expense need be incurred.

The degree of elaboration must depend upon the size and location of grounds, and the particular kind of serving intended. It tables are set, menu cards and plate souvenirs of rustic type should be used, also centerpieves representing the idea of the fite. If a picnic lunching is preferred, let the costumes and general decorating serve that purpose.

A "MOTHER GOOSE" FROLIC

A "MOTHER GOOSE" FROLIC

OHILDREN are always delighted with a costume party, and the Mother Goose family is to them an enjoyable company. So, the hostess who would wish to please the little people could do no better than to invite them to a lawn party, with the request that each shall come as one of Mother Goose's children. The hostess, or the little girl whoen she may choose, should serve as Mother Goose, and receive the company. The costumes required are so simple that no great skill or expense is necessary in preparing them. A well illustrated copy of the book would give helpful hints about what to wear.

A lawn furnished with swings, and with hoops to trumlle, also games—croquet, battle-dore and shuttlecock, ball, etc., etc., would ensure for the children a happy time. Yet as pertinent to the Mother Goose idea, a "goose-berry" tree is suggested as a vehicle of conveyance for bombons and gifts.

This tree should stand apart from the others, and may well be not cover sinks for ten! Un-berry" tree is suggested as a vehicle of conveyance for bonbons and gifts.

This tree should stand apart from the others, and may well be not over eight feet tall. Upon it toys, sugar animals, fishes, birds, etc., are hung, just like a Christmas tree. Each should be labeled, not for the children by name, but for the character they assume, thus: Sheep for Bospeep; Fish for Simple Simon; Baby for Rock-a-bye; Spider for Miss Muffit, etc., etc. A merry dance around the tree, and the singing of Mother Goose songs, should precole the picking of these unique "gooseberries" from the tree.

For plate souvenirs large sugar plums, with rhymes from "Mother Goose," each suited to the character chosen, pasted upon one side, are pretty; and a handsome pyramidal centerpiece may be made by stacking gooseberry tarts to form the required shape, then daintily decorating the same with flowers, the pedestal being covered wholly with roses. Tarts and roses are to be distributed later.

RUSTIC PASTIMES FOR GIRLS

RUSTIC PASTIMES FOR GIRLS

THE holiday costumes of peasants in all European countries are picturesque. Many of them, especially the Swiss, French, Italian and Alsatien, are very pretty. They are particularly suitable for out-of-door fetes, and a company of pleasure seekers could hardly choose more fittingly for enjoying a hardly choose more fittingly for enjoying a summer afternoon than to prepare for a peasants' party, with the idea of representing as many different countries as possible.

Games, dancing upon the lawn, and other sports may be enjoyed in imitation of the joyous fetes so famous among Europeans.

There is another popular suggestion—that of a shiry-maid party. This, too, is very pretty for costaming—the broad Gainsboro but, fan waist, velvet bodice, full and rather short skirt, with low shoes and colored stockings, being generally worn on holidays. The floor of the dairy house, or the big barn, is cleared, and by lautern light, and with the music of rustic fiddlers, old-time "figures" are recalled and games of other days revived. Then milk, cream, cakes, cheese, curls, whey, loes and berries are landed about, the company sitting the while upon milking stools—a most pastoral type of serving.

There were there is the corn root in its.

the while upon milking stocks—a most pas-toral type of serving.

Then, again, there is the corn roast in its season, just when the field corn is "in the milk." The evening is best for this. Com-panies ride to the roast, if they choose, in hay wagons. A glowing bard-wood fire greets the guests; they spear the corn cars with long, sharpened poles, then kneel down before the fire to roast them. Blankets are spread upon moveds of nowly-moved hay for seats, and the mounds of newly-mown hay for seats, and the corn, when roasted golden-brown, is served.

Dancing upon the lawn by moonlight, with Chinese lanterns among the trees, and the firelight sending forth cheery rays, is a scene to tempt a band of happy young people.

DUTIES OF THE MATRONS

THE absence of conventionality, while it may be, and is, one of the pleasantest features of country and seaside life, places upon mothers and chaperones a double duty and care. In preparing for lawn parties, which, by the way, should be matronized—indeed, there is greater need of this than in home society where everybody is well known— the older friends may do much to assist in matters of costuming, entertaining, refresh-ment-serving and introduction. The ideal pleasure party is one in which children, young people and grown-ups, all have a happy part. Guests at mountain and sensible hotels are not always the kind of companious parents would choose for their children and young friends set a kindle courters demand that friends, yet a kindly courtesy demands that to one shall be excluded from the general merry-making. It, therefore, requires a deal of fact on the part of the older people to suit-ably protect the younger members. The pres-ence of the grown-ups is the best protection.

LAWN PARTIES AND OUT-DOOR FÊTES

Arranged by Mrs. A. G. Lewis

A UNIQUE GIPSY CAMP A PARTY NOVEL IN EFFECT AND PRETTY IN COSTUME

"GIPSY CAMP" is a very pretty and attractive affair, and easily managed, even where there are but few trees in the grounds. In-vitations written upon cards cut from the inner peeling of birch bark, if such can be obtained, are most suitable, and may read something after this sort: "The Shoushone gipsies will camp at Steven's Grove. One hour after the sunset gan meet us, wearing the costume of your tribe."

By this card the parties invited understand by this card the parties invited understand that they are to join the company wearing the dress of their respective tribes. As many dif-ferent tribes as possible should be repre-sented, and from as many different countries. There can be very little difficulty in this age of pictorial literature in finding pictures or paintings to give models for the required cos-tumes. They differ very little among the semi-barbaric tribes (and those are the types most victurescane for representation) from the most picture-que for representation) from the costances of the pensantry, being rather more showy in color, and more profusely orna-mented with bends, buckles and bracelets.

The conventional gipsy costume generally worn by European tribes consists of the white blouse waist, with a bright-colored corset bod-ice, which is really neither more nor less than an ordinary corset worn upon the outside of the dress, laced at the back with bright red cord; bright colored, and full gathered, or plaited skirt; low shoes, with stockings to match the dress; broad-brimmed but, with match the dress; bread-brimbed int, with broad ribbon streamers, but more often an orange or red handkerchief tied over the head. Strings of beads of every variety of colored glass and corat are massed about the neck and waist. They also hang from the shoulders with the ends caught by bracelets above the elbow or at the waist, and are sometimes looped from shoulder to shoulder. Many valeoped from shoulder to shoulder. Many va-rieties of colors are combined, so that, even with the same style of dress, their costumes are wholly different in effect.

The men wear high-crowned hats, with long feathers or plumes; blouses in bright showy stripes; long waistcoats of contrasting color; long dark stockings; full trousers and low buckled shoes; fainy-colored necktic and handkerchief make up costumes both suitable and attractive. and attractive

TO PREPARE THE LAWN

It is a pretty idea to set up a goodly number of tents and booths. The tents, of course, should have canvas roofs, the sides being left nucovered. Booths are easily made, which look picturesque and pretty, thus:

Set in a circle a half dozen posts, say eight feet high, firmly in the sod with another posts a little longer, and one foot, at least, taller, in the center of these. Connect their tops with the center toothy marrow boards: also connect the center post by narrow boards; also connect the outer posts with each other in a similar way. Then form a network of ropes suffi-ciently close to hold up the fresh green boughs, ciently close to hold up the freely green boughs, which being benned upon it form the roof of the booth. Wind the posts with ivies and greens, then ornament them with flowers or bright bits of red, orange and blue bunting. Hang Chinese lanterns between the posts, and the structure is complete. It is pretty enough to remain all summer, with now and then a fresh covering of greens. A large booth of this kind, set in the center of the grounds, with a came free built near at hand, over with a camp fire built near at band, over which a gipsy kettle (nearly every farm-house can farmish one) is lung, with blankets spread about among rustic seats, makes a very spread about among ristic seats, makes a very good representation of a genuine glipsy camp. Chinese lanterus, plenty of them, should bang in the tents and among the trees. There should be music, also. The nearest imitation of gipsy music is given by playing upon rombs, Jews' barps and violins, accompanied by clapters or "bones," tambourine and drums. The mouth harmonicals also very good. The weigh and seemingly tameless nursin of the The weird and seemingly tuneless music of the gipsy cannot be imitated. The rhythm of it is strongly marked, and those who do not play is strongly marked, and those who do not play keep the time by clapping their hands, strik-ing their knees and joining in a guttural tone, emphasized at each rhythmic beat. A gipey dance upon the lawn would be suited to the hour. Songs, merry choruses and bright stories should abound.

THE QUESTION OF REFRESHMENTS

SERVED in gipsy style the refreshments may consist of coffee (suppossably cooked in the steaming kettle hanging showe the fire), tropical fruits, such as oranges, lemons, ba-names, muts, raisins, etc. Cool drinks should be brought around in large pails, and dipped therefrom into tin or carthen rangs. Plates, napkins and all other signs of a more civ-ilized serving should be dispensed with as far as possible. A large company may be thus served with very little effort.

Fortune telling belongs to gipsy life, though the more intelligent tribes of to-day make very little use of it. Mysterious oracles, "whose glib tongues spin mirthfully the thread of fortune," ought to have a place. Sometimes fetes of this kind are arranged for the correspond of maintain agency of the

for the purpose of assisting some charity, or for establishing a magazine and book club. Then young girls in costume sell oranges, peanuts, candies, etc., and pretty Halian gipsy girls play the tambourine and sing songs for the help of the treasury.

The novelty and brightness of this rural some, especially under the light of an August or September moon, cannot fail to delight a company of merry young people.

THE BEST PICNIC LUNCH

A FEW HINTS AS TO THE PREPARING AND PACKING A PICNIC LUNCH

HE binch is one of the most enjoyable autures of picuicking, and the following hints may prove helpful in preparing and packing the same, so that, when served, it may tempt both the eye and the appetite.

eye and the appetite.

Meats for sandwiches should be bedied the day before; then after removing bone, skin and gristle they should be put in packing thus, beserily weighted, and set in a cool place over night. Cut in very thin slices. Bread one day old is best, and a very sharp knife is needed for cutting it into thin slices not over three inches square. These, buttered slightly, may be dainably filled with ham, salad, sardines, torque, or whatever one likes.

Then cut pieces of confectioner's paper just large enough to cover the sandwiches neatly. Place them side by side, closely packed, and they will preserve their shape without breaking. The paper is not to be removed until served.

Cakes must also be one day old, and for picnic use a little extra flour in stirring, and an extra five or ten minutes in baking will an extra five or ten minutes in baking will ensure a firmer crust. Fresting, if put on hot, does not crackle and fall oil. Cookies are more desirable than loaf cuke, as are, also, cup and gent cukes. Jelly and cream confections are seldom nice for picnic serving.

Pies made of jellies, fruit or sweets are best cooked turnover fashion, the pastry covering the filling entirely. Lay them in paper covers, and they serve thus very conveniently.

Lemon, orange, struwberry, raspherry or currant juices should be extracted, then sweetened, and when well dissolved, bottled. Drinks can then be prepared by adding two tablespoonfuls of the liquid to a tumbler of fee water. All these juices combined make a delicious drink.

Strong coffee or lea may also be prepared and served in the same way. Bright tim rangs are more convenient than tumblers, and there is no danger of breakage.

there is no danger of breskage.

Hampers, with several trays, are more desirable for packing. Ordinary lunch baskets are a difficulty. White confectioner's paper should be used for bining the basket and for separating the different kinds of food; also, for covering neatly individual pieces. Cookies and crackers must be put in fight boxes. Plates are too beney, but bright, new biscuit ins.—the source shares are best—are very use-Plates are too heavy, but bright, new biscuit tins—the square shapes are best—are very use-ful in packing, and with fringed mapkins laid inside, they serve well for salvers in banding the food around. Paper mapkins are best, Whatever is to be enten last should be packed at the bottom of the hamper, and that to be served first at the top. Fruit, pickles, olives and choose must not be forgotten

A "FARMER'S SUPPER"

ERY attractive is the idea of a "farmer's supper." Though it be utilized for indoor use, it is prettiest on the lawn. It may be given by those who have simple grounds, with conveniences for entertaining large companies, or, simple fashing large companies, or, picnic fashion, by a company of young people, each person bringing contribu-tions for the table; or, if desired, it can be ar-ranged for in a hall or vestry, when membersof Young People's Benevolent Societies wish to Young People's Benevolent Societies wish to raise money to carry on their charitable work.

The "supper" purposes to call together, in rustic costome, the various characters belonging to farm life. The farmer and farmer's wife, with their sons and daughters, receive the company, and give a supper, to which all are invited—dairy men and dairy women; haymakers—men who swing the scythe, and maids who "spread the fallen grass;" beys who lead the sleep, and little "Bo-peeps" who lose them; plow-boys wearing gloves and whips, and berry pickers bringing their "pails heaped ripe and red;" gardeners and flower girls; hunters and fisher lads; market girls with baskets of eggs or fruit or vegetables, all come in costume suited to their station and work. The village lawyer, doctor, deacon and squire may also be added to the list, with the neighborhood rhymster and wit, and the singer of local songs. singer of local songs.

The customes may well be copied from ne couti the American type of a generation ago, since the farmer and his family of to-day wear little or nothing to mark by their dress the nature of their life and work

Tables spread upon the lawn should be furnished wholly with the fruits of the farm and dairy, the special dishes, such as boiled dinner, baked beans and brown bread not omitted. The farmer offers to his guests bread from his fields of corn, rye and wheat; butter, cheese, milk, cream and curds from his dairy; berries and fruits from his fields and orchards; flowers and fresh vegetables from his gardens; game and fish captured (perhaps) from his game and lish captured (perings) from his woodlands and neradow brooks; poultry and means fed by sweet pasturage and grains, and sugar from his own fair maple overhard. Where the size of the grounds permits, va-rious games, such as quoits, ball and croquet, etc., foot and jumping races, also swing-ing tilting and descine permits have now ing, tilting and dancing upon the lawn may be enjoyed. If in-doors, such old-time games as winkey, bunt the slipper, stage coach, apple march, pawns, and their like can be revived. Choruses, songs and recitations of the pastor al type, with tableaux and pantominae repre-senting scenes in farm life, may well be offered as a port of the entertainment.

SOME OTHER OUT-DOOR FÊTES A BUDGET OF NEW IDEAS JUST SUITABLE FOR THE SUMMER MONTHS

TTH July comes the Fourth, al-ways suggestive of the Red, Whiteand Blue-bunting, flags and fireworks; and whatever kind of eclebration is decided upon, whether booting, pic-nicking, or an "at-home" fete, the national emblem and colors must rule the day. The colors of no nation lend themselves so beautifully and so gracefully to decoration as do these of America, and in whatever felegiven out of doors our national colors should in some monner take part.

"HAYMAKERS' PICNIC" FOR JULY

A "HAYMAKERS' PICNIC," FOR JULY

It is the month, too, of hay making, and a "haymakers' picnic," furnishes a novelty with which city people, especially, are delighted. The young people braid yards of clover, daisy and buttercup blossoms for decorating the big lany wagon. Wheels, stakes and shaft, and the broad hay frame are all wound, festioened and wrathed. The oxen, too, are dressed in a flower-bedecked yoke; their horas tied with ribbons, and a broad floral saddle upon their bucks.

Girls wear broad-brimmed hats, gingham dresses, strong boots and long leather gloves to protect the hands while baying, and men wear linen "jumpers," their trousers tucked into high top boots; also leather gloves.

Hampers are packed with a generous hunch, and the hayers ride away in their gala wagon to the field which, if possible, should horder a lake or pand surrounded by plenty of shade. There the haying goes on, not with modern methods, but after the more pastoral type, the men swinging scythes, and the girls spreading the grass, then taking it rendy for making the lond.

Lanch is served at high noon, the hayers sitting upon mounds of newly-mown lay.

Lunch is served at high noon, the hayers Lanch is served at high noon, the havers sitting upon mounds of newly-mown hay. The conventional "moon hour" is extended, so that salling, rowing, fishing or berry picking may be enjoyed, after which a hay load of convenient size is prepared, and they all ride homeward, haymakers fashion, on the top of the

"FISH FRY" FOR AUGUST

D OG days and showery weather make the fish hungry; and there is no sort of a holiday that quite equals an all-day "fishing picnic." The party starts off in the cool of the some point of lake. They camp upon the shore and start a glowing fire. Then all take boots for fishing, with a right cornest purpose of catching enough shiners, trout or perch for there's little danger of failure; yet the for-times of the day are safest in the hands of extimes of the day are safest in the hands of experienced fishermen, such as usually frequent fishing grounds. They know the hannts of the speckled hearties, and are sure to bring them in. They can dress them in a trice, and no chef, though be may be a thousand times French, can produce such crisp, dainty, delicious morsels as will those same queer old fishermen, with nothing at band but a long-handled fry pan, a bit of sait pork, a dish of Indian meal and a wood fire whose very smoke seems to add the crowning flavor.

"If the day is right And the big fiels bite."

For side dishes take field corn, with the busks on, also patatoes and green apples; bury them either in white sund of the beach, or in clean ashes, then build above them a glowing fire, and after an hour's cooking they come forth dainties "fit to set before a king."

FOR THE WARM SEPTEMBER DAYS

CHTY people who linger during the warm. September days to watch the ripening fruit, and bringing in of the yellow corn and grain, must enjoy right heartily an "apple bee" or "husking," gotten up in exact insitation of the old-fashioned pattern of fifty years or those way. or more may

It is not difficult to find in ancient chests It is not difficult to find in ancient chests and attics well-preserved costumes of that period. Arrayed in these, the young people often begin the "bee" by gathering the ordard apples with their own hands during the afternoon; then in the evening young men come, armed with "jacks" for paring the fruit, and maidens equip themselves with ap-ple knight for your restriction and cosine." itfront, and matters equip themselves with ap-ple knives for "quartering and coring" it; also long, slim needles for stringing the pre-pared pieces. After stringing, the fruit is hang in festoons along drying bars suspended from the ceiling of the old-fashioned kitchen. Then underneath these they dance the "fig-ures" of "ye old time," and revive the games and frolies of that day. Refreshments should not vary much from the old-time menudoughouts and cheese, pumpkin ple, popped corn, home-made molasses randy and sweet,

A "husking," which follows the fashion of our grandparents' day, takes place on the big barn floor where corn "stocks" bank the outer barn theor where cutn "stocks" bank the outer walls, the center being reserved for the yellow mound of husked ears, to which all contribute a share. Milking stools are set for seating the huskers. As fast as the "stocks" are busked they are removed, and the corn is carried to the bin by busketfuls. Searching for ears of red corn furnishes a deal of merriment. By red corn furnishes a deal of merrineral. By these the sweethearts for the evening are chosen, duplicate cars in the order of fluding deciding the choice. When the corn is all back I, and the floor cleared, and the primitive vice of serving such old-time goodless as infine and pumpkin ples, apple turnovers, fruit, not and honey cakes, with coffee and cider has been enjoyed, then under the lantern light, the clean, soft lay sifting down from the overlanging beams and rafters, many versed songs, begands and stories fill the bour; or, to the noise of fiddle, fife and snare-drum the barn floor dance goes on.

An Early Morning "Spin" on the Lake

A CAMP IN THE ADIRONDACKS

By Jessamy Harte

THEN an enthusiastic Adirondack lover has finished reading

Murray's "Adven-tures in the Wil-derness," be is apt to be very discon-tented, and longs to have been amongthosemountainstwenty-live or thirty years ago, when the great North Woods were

North Woods were indeed a vast wilderness; when no axe had sounded along its mountain sides, or echoed across its peaceful waters. But in spite of the amount of descration this exquisite forest has suffered at the hand of civildesire forest has smarred at the hand of ever-ization, it still contains in its depths, far from the madding crowd of hotels and boarding houses, the same majesty that awed the first hand of discoverers who trespassed upon its solitude. The great trees of the "forest primeral" are there with their towering branches like large arms stretched out in loring protection above the heads of in loring protection above the heads of their little ones.

And yet, notwithstanding the thous-ands of people who annually visit these nountains and flock about the hotel versudas, comparatively few have ever known the joy of standing beneath one of these monarchs of the forest and of having camped under its deep shade. Many fishionable young women with Saratoga trunks journey to these mountains, only to sink exhausted upon the hotel mingas, where they rethese mountaios, only to sink exhausted upon the hotel pinzzas, where they remain for the most part, going hardly beyond the hotel limits during the rest of their stay. Of course, those who are great invalids must of necessity be content with the superb views which are so graciously spread before them; but for those more favored mortals who are capable of appreciating the physical as well as nsental enjoyments of the wilderness, camp life is the Edysium for which they are looking, and the Adirondacks their "Happy Hunting Ground." Camping, until of late years, has been the almost exclusive enjoyment of men, women having been considered rather women having been considered rather useless and burdensome under the cir-useless and burdensome under the cir-cumstances; as incongruous, in fact, as a Dresden vase would be. But now that women have proved that they are not so frail and helples-, and that total exhaustion does not necessarily follow the ascent of a hill, and that they are quite as capable of enjoying the rough life and thriving on it as their masculine friends, camp life has taken on a new charm, and the men are glad to have the companion-ship of the fair sex upon these expeditions. With a jolly party of both sexes there is no limit to the delight and fun that may be experienced.

limit to the delight and fun that may be experienced.

There is such a novel charm about the old forest, and such a fascination in being removed from ordinary daily life and of living a sort of romantic holiday. Many stand a trifle in awe of the vast woods, and the proposal "to camp" is often not by the following despairing objections: "Won't we catch cold? Aren't you afraid? What shall we wear? Won't we look like guys?" It is a mystery to me why people think that the moment they give up the restrictions of conventional social life, they must necessarily make themselves life, they must necessarily make themselves look as ugly and unattractive as possible.
Why should the old forest not be respected?
It indeed gives us a most beautiful and pecturesque background. Some of the costumes which I have seen must verily have offended its critical eye.

Crimson is a picture-sque color for the femi-Crimson is a picturesque color for the femi-nine camping dress. A very striking costume for a young lady is a short kilt skirt, a little above the ankles, of some blue material; a short, blue cordinary velvet jacket, blue and white striped tennis shirt, russet leather leg-gings, and big, red felt sombrero. The men's get-up varies little from the ordinary moun-tain garb—short corduror velvet trousers and jacket, woolen tennis shirt, and leather leg-gings. The latter are essential both for girls and men on account of the enormous amount of underbrush one encounters. You cannot imagine how picturesque these costumes look around the rearing camp-fire in the evening, around the rearing comp-fire in the evening, or in groups on the shorts of some benutiful lake. A gentleman once said to me, while ad-miring some pictures I had of "comp;" "Why, how well you all look! Do you know, I thought that in camp the women were health-thought that in camp the women wore healthful but hideous garments, and the men went unshaven and looked slonchy." So you see no young lady need ever be afraid of appearing at a disadvantage in camp, nor is her sweetness wasted on the desert air.

It is rather an arihous task though, to get up a congenial party, one that will hang together "in clear and stormy weather," as the saying is. In selecting your party you must not forget your finnsy man; he is as essential to its success as a clown is to a circus. He is the life of the camp always; the one He is the life of the camp always; the one who is always getting you into scrapes, and the only one who comes out of them un-harmed. You must also have a recognized head, or leader, with an aptitude for manag-ing, two or three trusty guides, and among the rist of the dramatis personic, good singers, story tellers, etc. Then, too, that "necessary evil," the chaperone, should be of semi-angelic character, else she will never successfully ac-complish the care of such a party. With such a chaperone and party success is sure.

A View of a Typical Adirondack Camp

The three-sided log camp or "lean-to" has become a substitute almost entirely in the Adirondacks for the ordinary canvas tent, and as the floor is also made of planed boards there is no danger of the dampness which was an evil of the floorless tent. The "lean-to" has a slanting roof at the back, two perpendicular sides, and is open in front. There is a bed at the back resembling a stateroom berth, which is made of boards thickly carpeted with balsam boughs and covered with blankets. There is no more comfortable bed in the world; the oder of the balsam is most conducive to sleep, and insomnia is unknown in camp. At the and insomnia is unknown in camp. At the front of the "lean-to" are usually hung cur-tains, generally of Turkey red, and when these are draped back during the day the ef-fect of these little houses, with the neverdying camp-fire burning before them, is picturesque in the extreme. This fire is kept burning as religiously as were the old Veslal fires of Athens, and the guides, though rather nugged priests, are as faithful as the Vestal

We camped once on Long Lake, Humilton County, one of the most beautiful of all the Adirondack lakes. Near its head stood one of the lovely mountain hotels, and close by were several riide farm-houses and a country store, but the rest of the shore was delightfully wild and picturesque. Here and there at con-siderable distunces one could discover campo peopling out from beneath the pine trees. We started from the botel for our destination, which was at the extreme end of the lake, at hout three o'clock on one of those clear, refreshing afternoons so common among the mountains. There was a elight breeze blow-ing, filled with the balsamic odors of the forest, faming the lake into ripples and waving the trees along the slave. The groves of slim, white birch trees, those pale maidens of the forest, whispered among themselves. Three of our boats were rowed by the guides, who took care of our "duffle," meaning lag-gage in camping parlance. We rowed under the floating bridge near the country store in single file, and passed the last farm-house, man. We were all very hungry, the breath of the pines having exaggerated our alrendy healthy appetites. Our first meal was a novel as well as merry one to us all. The long bark as well as merry one to us all. The long bark table was set in a most unconventional man-ner, tin plates, brown china cups (mosaucers) and old knives and forks, the table being dec-orated with leaves put under the plates and around the dishes. In the center was a long, green olive bottle filled with wild flowers and decorated with ferns, making a charming jar-dinière. The view from our dining hall was superb; the lake stretched before us in all its wild recognitic beauty. Far off in the distance unconventional supper; but I am afraid our table manners suffered greatly from its very unconventionality.

After supper we proposed rowing across the lake to see "Mother Nichols," as she was called, an eccentric old woman, the widow of an old woodsman who had died several months before. No one could persuade her to move from their little log cabin where her husband had brought her a bride, some sixty years before. Her house stood about a mile from the shore, half way up the mountain side. Our guides told us that "folks said the view from there was extry fine," and as the moon would soon be out there was no danger of being lost. So we started, leaving two of being lost. So we started, leaving two guides behind us to take care of the cump. When we received the consists above we When we reached the opposite shore we sounded the camp call; it was immediately answered by the report of a gun fired from camp. The path leading to the cabin was very rocky and hard to climb; and when we very rocky and hard to climb; and when we arrived at the but we were surprised to see no signs of life anywhere. "Why, it's deserted! "Where's the old woman?" we cried. "Husb," said our guide, "she's there all right taking her evening smoke." "Good evening Mother Nichols" said out chaperoue, addressing space; "we have come to pay you a little visit, and to take a look at your beautiful view." "I am proud to see rou, ma'am" said a view." "I am proud to see you, ma'am "said a cracked voice from the shadow, and an old woman stepped out into the moonlight. She was a verifable hag, hollow-checked and eyed, with no teeth and a bony, angular figure. In one hand she held her clay pipe, the other she extended to each of us as we were pre-sented to her by turn. This ceremony seemed to please her greatly, and she insisted upon getting us some cider and apples. She said that "since the old man died" she was in the habit of sitting there in the darkness and en-joying the view herself; but if she had known abe was going to have "kempany" she'd have "lighted up a spell." She pointed out to us the innumerable lakes we saw in the distance, calling them by name, and relating some little story or legend about nearly every one of them. I think she really appreciated the blessing of possessing such a view, for she seemed to take such interest in pointing out its beauties to us. She land always lived among the mountains, they were all friends to have among the mountains, they were all friends to her.

When we left her she insisted upon coming half way down the rocks with us; it was wonderful to see how agile she was, refusing all assistance that was offered her. I think she was not insensible, however, to the courtesy she met with, for her old eyes glistened stangely as we hade her good-bye, with promises to come again. Perhaps it was the vision of her own young days that had come to her with the youthful faces she saw about her, that dimmed her eyes. As we rowed away she seemed to us like some wizard who owned the great view she loved so well.

As we neared the camp, the friendly light of the camp-fire glowing through the trees seemed to welcome us back. The great forest had failen asleep, so still it seemed. Our guides had some sandwiches made for us, thinking we might be hungry, and we sat around the fire, listening to nearvelous stories from the guides, singing and playing on our banjos, until it was time to retire. If the rest of our stay was to be as jolly as the evening we had just spent we would indeed be willing to camp for the rest of our lives, so deeply in love with it we had already become. We climbed all the mountains about us, and explored every lake or pond for miles around. Our friends visited us from neighboring camps, when we entertained them with some impromptu charades given in the open air. The stage setting was a trifle Wagnerian, I will admit a most fitting backeround for a Salefeiol when we entertained them with some impromptu charades given in the open air. The stage setting was a trifle Wagnerian, I will admit, a most fitting background for a Seigfried or Branhilde, but we trusted to the imagination and indulgence of our audience to make our performances successful as social dramas. Every manner of game from whist to leapfrog was indulged in at camp. On rainy days we would all assemble on one of the largest "lean-tos" or in the dining-room, where we played games and sang, and in fact amused ourselves in a hundred different ways. I think we rather enjoyed a rainy day now and then, but more than one was not so pleasant. We we rather enjoyed a rainy day now and then, but more than one was not so pleasant. We fairly reveled in the sunshine after one of these "spells of weather."

Our dances, too, under the pines, were a never-to-be-forgotten enjoyment of the cump. As we were nil fond of dancing, these rural hops were indulged in, so that it was necessary to have a platform built for that special pur-pose. Numberless Chiuese lanterns were hung on the hearches above, and the pose. Numberless Chinese lanterns were hing on the hearches above, and the hinge trees encircled our ball-room with a weird charm. Our invitations were written on pieces of birth bark and delivered by the guides to our friends, when one of these feltes was about to occur. At eight o'clock the guests would arrive, the nen arrayed in picturesque tennis suits, and the girls in all their finery; mustin dresses that had lain asleep all summer were permitted to grace the vanities of the world once more. Our orchestra consisted of two fiddles and a cornet, which were played by the guides chestra consisted of two fiddles and a cornet, which were played by the guides with exhibitrating effect. Waltzes and polkas followed in rapid succession, but we usually ended our dances with a good old-fishioned Yirginia reel. What soft lights the lanterns shed, and how like wood-nymphs the girls looked, stepping out, as it seemed, from the very trees themselves. themselves.

When the hunting began, those who

When the hunting began, those who could shoulder a rifle wandered off with the hunters for into the forest, leaving the others to keep house at camp. Many a time I have waited on a rock at the end of a "run-way," with bated breath for the appearance of the game; but alas, no deer ever came near me. I am afraid the near thought the girls talked too much to be successful hunters; perhaus that was as true as it was uncom-too much to be successful lumters; perhaps that was as true as it was uncomplimentary. However, we had some fine rifle matches, when we distinguished ourselves with our high scores, and we quite outstripped the men in catching fish. We went on many exploring expeditions, rowing up some lovely little river, saddenly finding ourselves on some unnamed wild lake or pond, white with lilies. What exquisite views we saw about us duily, for we never looked out from our "lean-tos" but to feast our eyes on some charming picture. The wild, romantic lake always before us, the stately mountains ever in view. We grew to love every tree that shaded us, and I am surethis great intimacy with nature and mother earth could have had nothing but a helpful and inspiring influence upon us. The material for the artist to immortalize is always there, the silent thoughts for the poet to utter are there too, in the deep for the poet to utter are there too, in the deep shadows. The rest for the weary ordinary human being there awaits him,

"And so in mountain solitudes—o'ertaken As by some spell divine Their cares drop from them like the needles shaken From out the gusty pine."

The Log Dining Hall

Mr. Beecher As I Knew Him

By Mrs. Henry Ward Beecher

IN TEN PAPERS

NINTH PAPER

[All rights protected and reserved]

HAVE deemed it best to interpolate just here the special article announced as a supplementary paper, in order that my final words might be those which dealt with Mr. Beecher's last days. In this paper I will answer some of se questions which have come to me during se publication of this series, the cordial recogition of which from every side has been such a surce of pleasure to me.

"HE WRITING OF "NORWOOD"

MANY inquiries have come to me about "Norwood," asking whether "Mr. IVI. "Norwood," asking whether "Mr. Bescher had ever written a novel before?" or "What induced him to write "Norwood?"

'What induced him to write 'Norwood?'
ind "Did he find it a troublesome task?"
While securing an education before entering into any active business, most young people are tempted to write a novel or poetry, but I doubt if Mr. Beecher ever was. It surprised me; for, from our earliest acquaintance, I was quick to notice something of poetry and romance, even in his common conversation, and I once asked him if he ever felt any incli-nomance, even in its common conversation, and I once asked him if he ever felt any inclination for either. He replied:

"No: something of both mingles with my whole life, but of a far higher type than I should venture to put on paper."

Entering at so early an age into active work that demanded all his time and thoughts, the subject was never again alluded to or thought of by either of us until 1866. Then Mr. Robert Bonner came one day and urged Mr. Beecher to write a novel.

"I write a novel!" said Mr. Beecher, with a merry laugh. "It would be the most absurd thing I ever attempted, or you ever read!"

But Mr. Bonner was not to be provailed upon to so easily relinquish the idea, and he urged Mr. Bescher to make the trial. For a while he received only decided refusals. At last Mr. Bescher promised to "think about it." He did think about it more and more it. He dot think about it more and more seriously, and the possibility that he could do it grew upon him. Finally, after several in-terviews with Mr. Bonner, he decided to try. But it was some days after before he at-tempted to write. He had promised the first chapter on a certain date which was fast ap-chapter on a certain date which was fast approaching, and nothing had been written.

One morning he had sat silently at the tibrary table for some little time, when rising suddenly he west to his study in the third story. As he left there was a set, determined look on his face, which I read as meaning one of two things: "I will write to Bonner, "I cannot do it," or, "I will delay no longer."

An hour passed by, and I was naturally a little anxious. At last Mr. Beecher called, and throwing down a paper, said:

"Don't come up, dear, but I will send down a few lines for you."

His rich, happy tones reassured me, and

His rich, happy tones reassured me, and unfolding the note I found he had started on the first chapter and felt encouraged to go on. That was all I needed. I knew be would succeed—not in becoming a novelist, that no one could desire—but that he would do his work creditably.

work creditably.

Still, the work was never easy for him. One chapter every week was promised, and was written on that day so as not to infringe on other work. White writing each chapter he was entirely unlike his usual mood when other important writing was to be done. It was hard labor and depressed him. When the messenger boy left with the copy, Mr. Beocler for a few moments would be as jubilant as a boy. lant as a boy.

But as the story grew under his pen he began to feel an interest in the characters be was delineating, and he did his work easier and with more courage.

When writing anything in the line of his regular work, of special interest, he often rend it to me; but in writing "Norwood" he never did until near the close, when one day he read a portion in which he was evidently much interested, and when he had finished it, said:

"Well, I shall not be a second Walter Scott,

"Well, I shall not be a second Walter Scott, shall ? Butisn't it better than you expected?"
"No," I said, "it is very good, but no better than I knew you could do."
When at last it was completed, and the last chapter all ready to be sent, he called me, and threw down a slip of paper, with a muchworn quill pen stack through it. On the paper he had written:

"The work is finished, Oh, be joyful! I am sufficiently satisfied to be content. Bleesed is be who does not ex-pect great things! Verily be shall not be disappointed "H. W. B."

After dinner we took a ride. Soon after starting I said: "I am so happy that work is off your mind. I am well pleased with it." "You don't think, however," he asked, quiz-zingly, "that I give promise of becoming a distinctional moreflist do you?"

distinguished nevelist, do you?"
"No, I do not," I replied, "and should be "No, I do not," I replied, "and should be very sarry if you should. I think you have a higher, nobler work to do."

After the work was done, and before the public in book form, he seldom spoke of it. All criticism, or words of approbation, were placed on his study table, and I always told him all nemarks I heard about it. He read or heard these serenely, and, if favorable, appeared well pleased for the moment. But he went into his life's work with renewed vigor and energy, and gave this work but a small share of his thoughts.

HIS ONE POETICAL EFFORT

MANY have asked whether it is true, as has been recently stated, that Mr. Beecher at one time wrote a poem to me. It is true, in so far that during our long engagement, while Mr. Beecher was in college, I told him that it was time he wrote me some poetry. Wherespon he sent me a most indicrous verse, with the laughable request that I would not give it to "The New York Observer" until he had time to correct it, as he should expect that verse would establish his reputation as a poet, if anything would. When received, we had some sport over it, and then it passed by—seldom remembered, and then it passed by—seldom remembered. seldom remembered—until long after we came to Brooklyn.

Mr. Beecher was writing "Norwood" when Mr. Robert Bonner called one day. Just as he was leaving he told Mr. Beecher he had offered a distinguished public man a large sum if he would write him two verses of poetry, and added: "I will give you as much as I have for 'Norwood' if you will do the same, Mr. Beecher."

"What! I write poetry! I never wrote a line in my life," replied Mr. Beecher. I was standing near him and said: "Why, Henry! Don't you remember those lines you sent me while you were in college?"
"Oh, Mrs. Beecher, repeat them to me,"

"Oh, Mrs. Beecher, repeat them to me," said Mr. Bonner, earnestly.

Knowing what the lines were, I was greatly amused at such an idea, but gravely began:

"It was something like this"—

"Ennice!" said Mr. Beecher, quickly.

"Never mind him, Mrs. Beecher. Tell me what it was, and I will give you $5000 on the said."

"Well," I replied, "it begnn—'I started— "Envice!" exclaimed Mr. Beecher, exclaimed Mr. Beecher, with Now, Mrs. Beecher, do repeat it," said Mr.

I began again-" I started from "Euxick!" still more emphatically, "Don't heed what he says, Mrs. Beecher, I'll give you double the sum if you will repeat the lines.

"Now, Henry! just think of how much good such a sum would do, and you know it was simply for fun you wrote—! I started EUNICE!!" came from Mr. Beecher, and this time it was with almost angry earnest-

At this point, not having the least idea of repeating the lines, but seeing Mr. Bonner's enmestness, and Mr. Beecher's fear that I would do it, I was almost sufficiented with suppressed laughter, but said:

"Why, Henry! Do you really believe I would repeat it?"

would repeat it?

Then turning to Mr. Bonner I said: "It was only a little sportive nonsense, with about as much postry in it as 'Jack and Gill went up the bill, etc.,' which Mr. Beecher sent me years ago."

And this is the true version of the story of "Mr. Beecher's One Poem,"

MR. BEECHER AND COLONEL INGERSOLL

OFTEN has the inquiry come to meduring these past months; "Why did Mr Beecher countenance Colonel Ingersoll?" or "Why did Mr. Beecher grosp Colonel Inger-soll's hand in public?" and kindred quessoil's named in person? and kindred ques-tions. I cannot do better, I think, than to print here a letter from Mr. Beecher, never before published, addressed to Rev. A. N. Lewis, of Montpelier, Vermont, through whose kindness it is made possible for me to answer these queries in Mr. Beecher's own words. words.

As an explanation of Mr. Beecher's letter, Mr. Lewis writes: "In the year 1880 I wrote to Mr. Beecher, taking him to task (as one who had always believed in him, through good report and evil report) for his 'giving the right hand of fellowship to Colonel Ingersoll' on the platform at a political meeting. In the letter I also asked if he did not think that Rev. Dr. Backus's remark about the college bell making no more noise than a lamb's tail in a fur cap," was appropriated from Rabelnis, (Mr. Beecher had quoted it in one of his Friday evening talks.) His reply was so characteris-tic of the man that I have always preserved it in my scrap-book."

Mr. Beccher's reply was as follows:

Brookayn, November B. 1880.

Bran Sur: I think that there is only a resemblance, and not a ransal sequence. In the "fur bell" of (Dr.) Blackus, and the "feather bell" of Babelais.

I do not believe that the stout old Puritan ever brand of Habelais! and if he bad, and knew that an Episarpal minister was familiar with him, he would have held up body hands of herror? Not so do !! Not only do ! know Habelais, but Ingressell, whom you do not know. A rigid and relations despot of a father threw him off with fatal rebound in theology.

He be a man of pure morals, of happy domestic life, of warm friendships; an ardent personal friend of Garfield and minch esteroid by all who know him personally.

held and matrix essection by all who know an appearable.

He is an unbeliever in church and Bible, largely through ignorance; but on all public questions, education, morality, bemperance and purity, be is always sound and surnest.

It has been the rate of my life to work with any man of good morals, on all libes on which we agree, though is a franked others we disagree. Thus I work with Roman Catholies on charities, temperance, etc., with Roman Catholies on charities, temperance, etc., with Swobenbergimet. High Calvinies, whose through I admits for logic, and althor as a slander on tract; with a politicians, with any one "whose face is as if he would go to Jerusalem!"

officians, with any one "wiese tax is as the considered." It is desirable to be remarked the subsection of the subsectio think as they jocuse.

VARIOUS distorted versions have been given of an oath which Mr. Beecher is said to have used on a certain occasion, when very young, and, by request, I give the true story. It happened when he was nine or ten years old. He and his brother Charles were just scated at the breakfast table (his father was not at home that morning) when father was not at honse that morning) when his half-brother, Thomas, then quite a young child, took up a saltspoonful of salt and raised it toward his open mouth, as if he were going to take it. Quick as a flash, Henry gave the spoon a pash, which sent the salt into the child's mouth, to the great amuse-ment of both himself and Charles. But their mirth was of but a moment's duration. Their stepmother gave both a sharp box on the ears and sent them from the table without their breakfast. Henry used to say he never their breakfast. Henry used to say he never walked so straight, or felt so tall as when he and Charlie went from the house to the back of the barn. Seating themselves on a log, there was an ominous silence for a moment

"presaging approaching storm."

"Charles, what do ministers say when they want to swear? What words do they use?" asked Henry.

"I don't know," replied Charles,
"Can't you think of any?" asked Henry.
"No."

HOW HE ONCE SWORE

Another silence. Then drawing himself up very straight and bringing his doubled fist down on his knee with great force Henry exclaimed-Damen !

Then he used to tell that a great horror came over him the moment that word escaped tame over aim the moment that word escaped his lips. He was sure the devil must be very near to him. Without another word he stole back to the house and shut himself into his room in an agony of fear and remorse, and remained there till his father, who had been absent, returned, and called him.

"But why were you so very angry for being sent from the table without your brenkfast?"

I asked him once.

"Oh, that wasn't it," he replied, "but because she boxed my ears. She might have whipped me a dozen times without cause, and I should not have been so angry

Mr. Beecher always felt that boxing a child's ears was unpardonable.

HIS HABITS OF DRESS

THE question has frequently come to me during the last few months, "Was not Mr. Beecher untily or indifferent in his habits of dress?"

Mr. Beecher was never untidy, but he was careless in leaving things out of their places. When dressing or undressing, he often tossed things upon chairs and tables, or left the bureau things upon chairs and tables, or left the bireau in a somewhat disorderly condition. That, however, was more my fault than Mr. Beecher's, because I was usually near by and rendy to put away whatever was out of place. His family said I spoiled him. I think not. But no man could be more fasticious than Mr. Mechanges includes a beringdom than

Mr. Beecher was in always having clean linen, collars, cuffs, and handkerchiefs, boots blacked, and clothes well brushed. Heing an early riser, he often dressed hurriedly, leaving clothes and boots unbrushed, and sat down at once to a writing table—which was always kept in our room—to develop some thought that came to him when he first woke, or while dressing, and he would often write until breakfast. Immediately after breakfast and prayers he often went at once to his study and wrote for an hour or two to finish what he had begun. But it was seldom that his clothes had begun. But it was seldom that his clothes and boots were not in order before breakfast.

When in college and in Lane Seminary, his wardrobe was of the simplest and chengest. His father could provide no better. Of this be never made any complaint. But during his last six months at the theological seminary, he was offered the position of editor of the tincinnati. Journal "for a few months, with some prospect of its being nermanent, as the some prospect of its being permanent, as the editor's health had falled and he had gone abroad with little hope of ever being able to resume his work on the paper. Mr. Beecher, therefore, had reason to feel almost sure of continuing as editor, and in that case it was his intention to accept a call made to him by a church a few miles from the city.

Up to this time he had never bought any clothes for himself, but with this work in prospect, he hoped to relieve his father from all further expense in that line. When his first payment from the paper cause in, needing an overcoat, he went to the tailor's in a very independent state of mind and made his first purchase. Delighted with this new experience, be hastened to write me and describe the overcoat, "a beautiful piece of black cloth, with velvet collar, lapels and cuffs. I have always admired velvet, but now I have some, When I come east for you I mean my wedding suit shall be as fine as my overcoat,

Alas for human expectations! Soon after Mr. Beecher had bought the overcost, with its velvet trimmings, and just as he had finished his theological course and was ready to begin work, the editor returned with improved health and resumed his editorial position.

For many reasons it was a disappointment to Mr. Beecher, but he accepted it cheerfully, as was his wont in all disappointments, and wrote me a humorous letter, saying: "Instead of a new welding suit, I shall have to borrow a coat of brother George's, but I've got the new overcost and the velvet collar, anybow,

After we came east, for many years a dear friend sent him a full suit every Christmas or New Year's, of the very best material. The quality of the suit was a great pleusure to hiso, and he knew much more about it, where it was made, or if there was anything specially excellent about the material, than I did, and he was particularly careful of it.

Mr. Hereber always admired velvet, and would have collars and ficings to his costs made of it, without regard to what might be the fashion, and from that, doubtless, arose the story that he had once worn a complete velvet suit, which he never did.

USE OF WINE AND TEMPERANCE VIEWS

MR. BEECHER was always a strong tem-Define advocate, and until 1850 no wine or liquor of any kind ever came into our house. At that time he came so near breaking down from overwork that he was sent abroad by his physicians, and upon his re-turn, not having regained his usual strength, they ordered him to take a glass of wine with his dinner. This he did, but only when at his dinner. This he did, but only when at home. After a short time he gave it up. In 1863, during war times, when his energy was taxed to the utmost, the physicians again ordered the use of wine with his dinner, and gave instructions that in future, after any ex-baustive effort, Mr. Beecher should resort to this stimulant. From that time we always kept wine in the house, and Mr. Beecher used it when under special mental strain.

He never urged those who had became in-the never urged those who had became in-temperate, or who were in danger of becoming so, to take "the Pledge,". If any wished to do so, he was always ready to write the pledge for them, and it was very strongly written, en-closed in an envelope, and left with him as a sacred deposit. But this was done at the re-quest of the individual, not from any urgent speed from him, Mr. Beecher. Judging others by bis own nature, he felt that strong appeals by his own intere, he led that strong appears to their bonor, their manhood, should be more effectual than any pledge. The fact that Mr. Beecher did use wine at such times became known, for he took it openly—but not the reason for it—and this was the foundation of the many stories circulated, all calculated to misintermed his attitude on the temperature. misinterpret his attitude on the temperance question. But there are hundreds who, if they heard such statements, remembering how he had helped and saved them, could correct such impressions by giving their own exper-

AVERSION TO TITLES

SOME have usked me: "Why did Mr.
Beecher an persistently decline the rich D Beecher so persistently decline the title of "Doctor of Divinity?"

I know no reason except an utter aversion to such a thing as a title to his name. If others accepted the title it was their right, and in addressing them Mr. Beecher always used it. He used to say that such prefix titles as Judge, General or Doctor designated an individual's General or Doctor designated an individual's duties or calling, and were more of a convenience than anything else, and in some cases were almost a necessity. And "Reverend" for a clergyman might be classed in that category. But, he would laughingly say, the "Reverend Doctor of Divinity" was too much of a good thing for him to be burdened with. This title was offered him, I cannot now recall how often, but in every instance it was declined. His own views are expressed in a letter of declinature of that title, now beside me, and which I copy: beside me, and which I copy:

PERKERILL, August 21, 1800.

To the President and Board of Trusters of Amberet College, GENTLEMEN: I have been duly notified that at the last meeting of the Board of Trusiees the title of D. D.

was conferred upon me.

It would certainly give me pleasure should any respectable institution bear such a testimony of good will, but that Amherst College, my own mother, should so kindly remember a son, is a peculiar ganification. But all the use of such a title ends with the public expression. If the wish to confer it be necepted, for the rest it would be but an incumbrance, and firmigh an address by no mount acressible to my tests. I greatly seeding would be but an incumbrance, and fermish an address by no insurin agreeable to my hosts. I greatly perfer the simplicity of that which my mother uttered over me in the holy hour of infant consceration and haptism. May I be permitted, without seeming to under-value your kindness or disveteening the hotor meast, to re-turn it to your bands, that I may to the end of my life be, as thus far I have been, simply Hanny Ward Buscheri.

ATTITUDE IN PUBLIC MATTERS

HAVE been asked to say something of the methods which Mr. Bercher pursued in reaching his decisions on public matters.

In all questions of public interest, Mr.
Beecher never decided hastily as to the course

he should pursue, but after most prayerful and carnest deliberation. In political matters, he never worked for a party but for that which, after long and serious thought, he was convinced would be for the best interest of the whole country. But once assured of what it was his duty to do or say on any important matter, he was immovable. No personal consideration, nor the acute distress he always felt when compelled to differ from friends, and particularly from any of his church, had power to change the course his conscience called him to pursue. Next to his country, in his love, stood his church, and to feel com-pelled for his country's sake to disagree with any of its members, was a martyrdom little un-derstood by them at the time.

But that trait in his character is now, I think, truly recognized wherever his name or works are known. In looking back, all who knew him will recall many trying times when he was supposed to have made some serious, if not fatal mistake, and will now remember how patiently, and yet unfalteringly, be moved on in the way his conscience led him, without regard to the injury to himself, personally, that might result from such action, until at last the clouds between those he so truly loved were lifted, the old friendships were again resumed, and the truth of the judgment and wisdom which had guided him was frankly acknowledged by many. However much at various times Mr. Beecher may have been mi-judged or censured, no man ever necused him of acting from ill feeling toward any. No man was ever surrounded by such true and loyal friends, many of whom loved him and recognized the sincerity of his convictions even while disagreeing with him, and all the more when time and further reflection showed that on many points they had not rightly understood his motives, and learned at last how safe had been the light which guided him.

Mrs. Beecher's concluding paper, recounting the last days and death of Mr. Beecher, will be printed in the August JOURNAL]

THE BYRNTELL GOLDEN WEDDING

By Marjorie Richardson

HE south wind stirred the budding roses that claim-bered in wild profusion up the trellis till they reached the slanting roof of the old gray house. One slender branch, set free by the breeze, swayed de ii-antly for a moment, and then fell across Mes. Byrn-tell's lap, as she sat rocking and knitting on the porch below. She gave a little start; the ball of yarn fell from her knee and rolled slowly down the steps, to be converted into a plaything for the house cat, Dinah, when it plaything for the house eat, Dinah, when it reached the garden walk.

There was a far-away look in the elderly woman's face as she lifted the branch and gazed at the clustering buds; and she drew a long, contented sigh and put her check tenderly against the thorny little flowers. Dinah, undeeded, chased the ball of yarn up and down the steps, and finally began a work of destruction on it right under her mistress' eyes. Even Judge Byrntell came unnoticed across the lawn. He stopped in front of the porch for a non-porch for a mo-ment, and gazed at his wife's unobser-vant lace, at the discarded knittingwork in her lap, and at the frayed and ragged ball of yarn in Dinah's possession. An amused expression came into his face, and be went quiet-ind he went quietly up the steps to her side.

"I hope they are pleasant dreums,
Rachel," he said.
She gave a startled little turn, and then hughed softly as she met his smiling eyes. "They were," she answered, laystill held the fallen vine, on his arm. "They were of our wedding day, John. These roses carried me back a long, me back a long, long time—fifty years, John."

"It has been a short time, Rachel dear," corrected the Judge gently. "So short that I can remember just how you looked when you drove away with me in the old chaise that June morning. You stood underneath the drooping rose vines for a moment, and you much a and you made a comely picture standing there, your white dress and bonnet out-and bornet outlined against the dark foliage, and the reseson your cheeks matching those on the vines, Well, well, that was a happy day, Rachel!

"And what a happy day its fittieth mariversary will be, John. Truly, a golden wedding day, with all our children and grandchildren around us to

"Hark!" interrupted the Judge, bendling his bend to listen. "I can hear thoring; the old couch must be coming. Yes! there it is, humbering over the causeway. Come. Backel, quick! Stand on the steps, so that the chil-dren will see you the first thing when they turn the corner."

But the scious of the Byrntell family were so much absorbed in contemplating the old homestead, with its broad acres, that their eves never once sought the porch; and Mrs. Byrntell's welcoming smile received no recognition, even the Judge's hand wave passed by unnoticed.

Quite a charming estate," Mr. Van Slater was saying. "It puts one in mind of some of the old English country places; the grounds are so extensive, and that bit of forest hand at the side might easily pass for a park. Beally, you know, Isabelle," turning to his wife, "I had quite forgotten what a delightful old spot

Tremendons amount of land about it," remendors into an in a first and a said Mr. Benjamin Berntell, eyeing it reflectively. "If those nolls in the adjoining town amount to anything, it reight be a good investment to run a street railroad through here, and then cut up the land father doesn't nere, and then cut up the land father doesn't need into building lots."

"Oh, Benjamin!" exclaimed Mrs. Van States, in tones of languid repress, "the West has certainly wrought a great change in you. How differently you and Nicholas regard things; you worship the American def-lar"—

"And he the English sovereign!" put in Mr. Byrntell, with a short laugh. But here the coach turned in at the driveway, and the passengers became aware of the expectant old couple waiting on the porch steps to receive them.

It was ten years since the family had all been together in the homestead, and there was something strangely pathetic in the anxious welcome of the old Judge and his wife, for they suddenly realized that a great change had come over their sons and daughters, and that their greeting had no tender significance to the grandchildren.

"I feel as if I hardly knew you, my dear," said the grandmother trenolously, as she held the hand of a tall, hundsome girl in both her own, "It seems wonderful that little Katie own. "It seems wonderful that little Katie should have grown up into a young lady." Miss Katherine Van Slater smiled faintly, and looked a trifle bored. Her grandmother dropped her hand and turned toward her sister, a girl with a sweet, uncertain mouth, and large blue eyes.

"And this is Gertrude, who was hardly more than a baby when you went abroad, and Rosanumd—can this great girl be Rosanumd?"

Gertrude and her cousin, Rosamund Byrn-tell, received their grandmother's caresses rather carelessly; they were looking past her into the hall beyond, where several of the chier people had already gone.

"It is not in the least-changed," said Charles Beyond, the hadre's very past way, backing Byrntell, the Judge's youngest son, looking about him. "One could fancy one had never been away."

"Yes;" said the Judge, heartily, "Mother

"Don't fret about it, mother," said her son Benjamin. "Lately Anna puts up the white flag on all occasions, and it is something you will get used to. When her handkerchief comes out, you may know that she is going to declare herself in the wrong." "But, mother," said Mrs. Van Slater, "you really ought to question Katie and Surah; one-camot be too careful in these days."

At this moment Katie amenyed at the half

At this moment Katic appeared at the ball

At this handle of the control of the mistress' notice.

That was a very different evening from the one the Judge and his wife had so often looked forward to, when sitting alone by the library fire, or on the wide porch, they had talked so happily of "the children's homecoming."

talked so happily of "the children's homeconing."

Old Mrs. Byratell felt as if she were in a dream as she booked about her, and tried to realize that these worldly men and women were the same boys and girls who had possed their early life in this New England home.
Not that they were wanting in deference and even seeming affection for their mother and father; but there was something missing, something that had gone forever.

And the grandchildren—they were like so many strangers; and before long grandmaintma began to stand in some secret awe of them. Katherine and Gestrude were so signified and self-possessed, and Resamund, Benjafireli. Katherine and Gerrinal were so digitation and self-possessed, and Resamund, Benjamin's charghter, laughed incossintly and talked about so many things of which her grandmother had never even heard.

"I am afraid I shall never feel very much at home with them," thought grandmamma, and then chided herself for this unnatural senti-

It was not until after breakfirst the next morning that the subject of the golden wedding, the ostensible reason for this family gathermy gracious! Did you ever hear anything so futury? Do you suppose pa and ma and I and fricing? Do you suppose pa and ma and I and Annt Anna have come all the way from Senttle to go to a tea party?"

"Rosamand!" said her mother, reprov-ingly. "You see," she explained, turning to Mrs. Byrntell, on whose checks a faint flush had crept, "Rosamand means that this is too great an occasion to be celebrated in any small way. I agree with Isabelle; you certainly ought to do something out of the common, and I'm sare the neighbors will expect it of you."

you."

"It is quite the latest fashion in England to celebrate anniversaries at the family country place," said Katherine Van Slater, " and I hear everyone is beginning to adopt it over here, It sounds so well, too, if one has a large place like this, and can entertain as one ought."

"Oh, how lovely it would be," exclaimed her sister engerly, "if the tenants could have a holiclay and build bonfires and things. Of course, you have no tenants, but then there a holiday and build bonfires and things. Of course, you have no tenants, but then there are the village people, or the farm hands, or—some one," she added, vaguely.

Mrs. Byrntell looked distressed.

"Perhaps we had better wait and ask your father," she said, addressing Mrs. Van Slater.

"We are such simple people I burdly think he will want any such—demonstration made."

Mennwhile the Judge was having his bad quarter of an hour with his sons.

The four men had strolled through the old barn, had inspected the wheat fields, and now seated themselves on a wall, under a shady scated themselves on a wall, under a shady apple tree, and looked across the broad mead-ows that stretched before them to the river.

ows that stretched before them to the river.

"Judge, I have a proposition to make," said his son-in-law, at last breaking the silence.

"Isabelle and I talked it over last night, and decided to speak to you about it. We want a country place in which to spead our summers. Now, what do you say to selling this? Wait a bit; don't answer me till I put it all before you. You and Mrs. Byrntell are getting old don't you.

ting old, don't you know; you haven't enough money to keep up the grounds in the way you should; and besides, it must be a tremembous re-sponsibility. I would remodel the house, build a new stable, and give you a large price for it. and you might live here just the same, you krow. We should come down in the spring and spend the summer, and I would buy that piece of forest land at the side, too," he added, generously; "then that would prevent its being built upon. I see the town is beginning to creep up in this direction very fast."

"I should hope it was," broke in Benjamin Byrntell, indignantly, "If that isn't just like you, Van Sta-ter! I won't have father selling the land; it's growing more valuable more valuable every day. It won't be long before it's in the heart of the town, and if any-thing is to be done with the member and woodland I'll buy them myself and tut memother ment, anyway." headded, musingly, "There's a big water power here, just above the dam."

The Judge looked from one to the other,

The Judge looked from one to the other, surprise growing into anger upon his face.

"I don't wish to sell," he said shortly, "Mother and I have money enough left to live here without any changes being made." Charles Byrntell laughed lazily,

"I call that an excellent decision," he said. "Father doesn't care to be disturbed; he is like me. I say, get as much comfort out of life as one can without moving. I have reduced it to a science. I should not care if I never stirred from my club again. Every sort. never stirred from my club again. Every sort of an exertion is a bore. Now, if "--The Judge did not hear the last of the sentence. He left the little group under the ap-ple tree, and walked away from them through the long sweet grass toward the barn. His lips were set firmly, and there were some lines on his face which had never been there be-fore. Hethought of the old days, when he and his boys had looked proudly across the fields, and talked of the time when they should have made enough money to buy that little wood-land they had been speaking of. Then none of the trees should ever be cut down, except just enough to open a little vista through which one could get a view of the mountains. And in leading them to that place this morn-ing, the Judge had wondered wistfully if they would remember that old ambition which had never crased to be an ambition with him.

Well, he saw it had been forgotten with the other associations, and——"Rachel must never hear of this," he murmured. "It would break her heart to know they said such things." wich things.

For the first time during fifty years the old Judge and his wife avoided each other, and when they were together they were singularly

"It is time you let people understand that you are the natural leaders here."

and I wouldn't have a thing altered; we united you all to feel that whenever you came back to the old home you would find it"— "Stand perfectly still; don't one of you move an inch," shricked Mrs. Anna Prescott suddenly, as she sent her maid crawling on her hands and knees over the floor, "Ob, do not more; you may step on it."

"Couldn't very well help it if we moved," gingled Bosamund Byrnstell, watching the maid stretch out her long, angular arms, as sise inchedulong, giving the carpet elephantine pats with her large band, every now and then.

But wher's the sense Aust Anna! Still But what's the game, Aunt Anna? Still

"My gold vinalgrette-I have lost it, and here I am on the verge of hysteria; it must have been stolen since we arrived. Mother,

"Honest? Why, Anna," said Mrs. Byrn-tell, with gentle rebuke in her voice. "Don't you remember Sarah and Katie? They have been with us twenty years or more.

"And probably stealing twenty years or more, too," seturned Mrs. Anna querislously, "I wish you would ask them about it now: it—it—has associations. Mr. Prescott gave it—it—has associations. Mr. Prescott gave it to me—just—before he died, and—and—I." —here her voice was lost in a sob.

You had a new top put on it at Chicago, and then in Detroit you broke the bottle and had that replaced, so I wouldn't cry about the sociations, it seems to me," said Mrs. Benjamin Byrntell, blantly,

"You have no feeling, Julia," returned her sister-in-law, drawing out her hundkerchiel;

but, of course, I am in the wrong. Lalways and I neknowledge it," and she walked up the stairs to her room, followed by her male.

Mrs. Byrntell cust un uneusy glance at her daughter's retreating figure, and looked appealingly at the faces around her, ing, was broached. It was Katherine who mentioned it.

"Mamma," she said carelessly, "don't you think you eight to order grandmamma's gown for the fete on the eighteenth?" Hergrandmotherstarted, and looked around

She had been listening anxiously to the plans Rosamund and Gertrude were making of lay-

Rosamust and Gertrade were making of inving out a tennis court on the smooth lawn in front of the house.

"It would be selfish to object," she had said to herself, "and yet John and I have been so proud of that piece of velver turt."

But at Katherine's words, drawing her-thoughts in a new direction, she turned The fite on the eighteenth?" she fultered.

"Why, my dear, it is my anniversary day,"
"Of course it is," cried Resamund, catching the last words, "But don't anniversary and fète and golden wedding all come in the same class, you dear old thing?" Resamund was russ, you dear out thing? Rosaming was never very deferential to any one.

"You see, mother," began her daughter Isa-belle, as if she were explaining matters to a very young child, "you and father have a position to maintain in the neighborhood. It is time you let people understand that you are the natural leaders here; and there is no better way of doing so than in giving this five or garden party, or whatever you choose to call but we shall arrange for you."

We had planned to do something," said grandmamma, looking at her daughter with auxious eyes. "Your father and I thought it anxious eyes. anxious eyes. "Your after and thousant as would be pleasant to gather about us a few of the old friends who are still left. Some of them were even at our wedding, and we thought we would have a quiet little tea party, and open the box of cake that was scaled up-

fifty years"—

"A tea party!" broke in Rosamund. "Oh,

They did not like to speak of the many changes that had been made, for feur of custing blame upon the children. They even made a pretence of enjoying the renovations, though grandmannan did took a trife doubtful when she saw the Judge's oid chaise pushed into a dusty corner.

"The world has taken a stride, mother, and left us with the chaise for behind."

He threw a wistful glance, however, at his old friend before he left the barn, and grandmannan walked slowly back to the house.

Her daughter Anna's sharp voice called her as she entered the door. They did not like to speak of the many

Her daughter Anna's sharp voice called her as she entered the door.

"Is that you, mother? Where on earth have you been? Your wedding dress and caplaive come, and we have been waiting a long time for you to try them on." And she harried the old lady into the sitting-room.

Mrs. Van Slater was just lifting a mass of silk and lace from a luge box, and as her mother entered she gave a final little shake, and held it up to be admired.

"Oh, isn't it handsome!" said Mrs. Benjamin Byrntell, taking up a corner of the luce.

jamin Byrntell, taking up a corner of the luce.

"Grandmamma is not used to managing a train, I fance; oughtn't she to try it on, and practice walking with it a bit?" suggested Katherine.

Katherine.

"Oh, not yet!" said her Aunt Anna hurriedly. "I want her to try on the cap first."

And she removed the simple little muslin cap from grandhamma's gray carls, and replaced it with an airy structure of violets and lace.

Resummad burst into bond laughter.

"Why, Aunt Anna!" she shricked, "Grandmamma's head looks like a flower bed."

Mrs. Proceeti's handkerchief was helf way.

maining a head looks like a flower bed."

Mrs. Prescott's handkerchief was half way to her eyes; but, catching sight of her brother Charles in the doorway, with a telegram in his hand, she put it hastily down,

"Nicholas asked me to give this to you, Isabelle," he said: "It is from the rector of Smit Mary's, Mr. Wyeth-Gordon. He is coming to-morrow morning."

"How delightful!" cried Mrs. Van Slater, taking the telegram eagerly. "I forgot to tell you when I came, nother, that Mr. Wyeth-Gordon had half promised to come down here. He is to repeat the marriage ceremony on the eighteenth."

"To repeat it?" said grandmamma, questioningly. "I don't think that is necessary. Have you spoken to your father about it?"

"It will make no difference to father," returned Mrs. Van Slater, impatiently. "As we are attending to the arrangements, we can't stop to consult you about everything."

"No, indeet!" put in Charles, with a mocking smile. "This is the girls' wedding you must remember, mother, not yours."

"If we could only have some choir boys come in ahead of grandmamma and grandpapa." marriaged Gertrude.

Old Mrs. Byrntell removed the violet capfrom her bend with trembling fingers, then without another word she left the mom.

Half as hour later the Judge found her sitting alone in her room. In her lap lay a time-stained box, from which came a faint scent of lavender flowers.

"See, John," she said, tremulously, taking from it a pair of gloves and satin slippers, yellow with age. "We used to say the time was short between that day and this; but I am realizing now that we were wrong. We have no place in the world of to-day."

"Not a bit of it, my dear," said the Judge." I have a plan which will show them that ing to-morrow morning."
"How delightful!" cried Mrs. Van Slater,

"Not a bit of it, my dear," said the Judge,
"I have a plan which will show them that the old chaise and the old couple aren't to be put in a solwebby corner just yet." He looked at the gown grandmanama had laid on the bed—an old-fashioned black silk, with thy the bed—an old-fashioned black silk, with they sprigs of pansies woren in it. "That is the gown you were going to wear on our golden wedding day, and that is the gown you shall wear. A minister coming! a rector, as they call blan, an Episcopalian, to repeat the marriage oeremony! as if the knot was not tied firm enough by a good old Orthodox parson they years ago."

"And boys to sing, John!" put in Mrs. Byrntell, faintly.

"And boys to sing, John!" put in Mrs. Byrntell, faintly.

"We have stood a great deal these last two weeks, Rachel." said the Judge, his anger rising. "The whole place has been made over to suit the children's whims, without a thought of our comfort. They sent the old horse to pasture yesterday, and stowed away the carriage that we have risiden in for twenty years. But we will have them both back again to-morrow. Now, listen to my plan, Rachel," and as he closed the door softly, Charles Byrntell came out of his room, across the ball, and walked showly down the stairs with a queer smile on his face.

At souset the next day, in the midst of the flurry of exterers and florists, who had come to make preparations for the fist on the morrow, an old horse and chaise was driven unnoticed out of the lane behind the barn.

But as it approached the first turn in the

But as it approached the first turn in the road, a man rose from a low stone wall and strolled toward it

"Stop a moment, father," said Charles Byrntell, putting his hand on the slowly turning wheel, "I have your wedding present here, wheel, "I have your wedding present here, and perhaps I had better give it to you now, and perhaps I had better give it to you now, for I want you and mother to have it on your anniversary." glaucing with a half smile at the large value on the floor of the chalse. "It isn't much, but I thought you would like it as well as mything. It's a deed of the forest land and south mendow we were speaking of the other day. I wanted you to know that I hadn't quite forgotten our old talks. Too't thank me, I don't deserve it. But there is one thing more I would like to say," be added, beaking down, with a slight flush on his face.
"I know our visit has been a disappointment to you, but don't think too bank of us; it has been more thoughtlessness than anything

The Judge grasped his son's hand heartily, and Mrs. Bryntell leaned down to put her lips to his forchesd in a parting kiss, but neither spoke. Then the old chaise disappeared around the head in the road in a cloud of dost. Grandmaranns and Grandpapa Byrntell were clouder.

were cloping.

WOMEN AND THE WORLD'S FAIR

By Mrs. Potter Palmer

HE Board of Lady Managers of the World's Coumbian Cam mission, the first body of somen le-gally ap-pointed to act in a national capacity by any government, was created and au-thorized by the concurrent action of Congress and the Columbian Commission to take care of the interests of women at the coming Exof the interests of women at the coming Ex-position. The appointment of the board was certainly not necessitated by any imbility upon the part of the National Commission to perform the duties assigned it; therefore, its creation can only have been a practical ac-knowledgment of the really helpless position of industrial women, and of the possibility that they and their work neight be overlooked in the preparations for the great enterprise.

IN November, 1890, the Board of Lady Managers met and organized. After its adjournment the first work assigned its members was to provide for the appointment of women on the various boards, as without such women on the various boards, as without such recognition in every State and Territory, and a share in the appropriations made in each instance, the work of the board would have been rendered very difficult. An amended bill was issued, asking that women be given representation on the various State boards, and a share of the funds to carry on their work, and, through untiring efforts, this has been generally adopted. In many of the States the legislators remarked that their attention was first called to the subject of the World's Fair, and the necessity for an appropriation, through the members of the Board of Lady Managers, who had spoken or written of Lady Managers, who had spoken or written to them about it. The various powers con-ferred on the board by Congress, the Commis-sion, the Directory, and the Legislatures of most of the States and Territories, influenced it to decide to mark the first participation of women in an important national enterprise by gathering such an exhibit of woman's work, and of all statistics and data in connection with such work, as would prove an object les-son, showing the progress made by women in every country of the world during the century in which educational and other privileges have been granted them; and showing, also, the in-creased usefulness that has resulted from the creased usefulness that has resulted from the colargement of their opportunities. It may, at this point, be mentioned in illustration of what the board is endeavoring to do, that several schools of industrial art and technical design for women have made application for space for exhibits. Within the few years in which technical training has been procurable, women have made mirrelous advancement. American women are now supplying practical "working" designs of great commercial value not only to manufacturers of their own country, but to almost every part of the earth, even try, but to almost every part of the earth, even to Japan.

THE board thus aims to show to the bread-The board this aims of show to the break-the winners who are fighting unabled the battle of life, the new avenues of employment that are constantly being opened to women; to demonstrate in which of these their work will be of the nost distinct value by reason of their natural adaptability, artistic tempera-ments, and individual tastes; what week rements, and individual tastes; what work receives the best amount of pay for the lenst labor and time expended; what education would best enable them to enjoy wider opportunities and to make their work of the greatest worth, not only to themselves but to the world. The Board of Lady Managers have, therefore, invited the women of all comtries to participate in this great work, to the end that it may be made not only national, but universal, and that all may profit by a comparison of methods, agencies and results.
Through the Department of State the governments of each country have been invited by the Lady Managers to appoint a commission of women to co-operate in this work, and it was thought best to make this request direct of the rulers of the countries, as the women thus naroud, especially among the nations of thus named, especially among the nations of Europe, where the power is more centralized than with us, would feel that their commission was almost like a patent of pobility. In many ountries where w consen have her been recognized, such an appointment could not fail to place their work upon a higher plane. The invitations of the board have met with prompt and gracious response. In England the Woman's Committee has already been announced, under the immediate patronage of the Princess Christian. The list of names composing the British Woman's Commission comprises many of the most dis-tinguished in Great Britain. In France a slight unexpected delay was occasioned by the change of ministry, but the French Woman's Committee has been finally an-Woman's Committee has been finally an-neunced; it is composed of many of the most influential ladies in France, and is now act-ively at work. The Empress of Russia has been graciously pleased to evince a strong personal interest in the purpose and plans of the board, and has named a committee to co-operate with it. The ladies composing the Russian Woman's Commission are of the highest rank and the nest advanced philanthropy. The president of the committee is Madane Vish-negradzky, the wife of the Minister of Fi-narce. In Germany, the Princess Friedrich Karl, at the personal request of the Empress, has consented to serre as the protectress of the German Woman's Committee, which has just been announced. This committee includes ladies of rank and great social influence, and several recognized leaders in the movement for several recognized leaders in the movement for the advancement of women, now attracting so much attention in Germany. Switzerland will be represented. Miss Neville, of Geneva, sister of the celebrated Egyptologist, will organize the Swiss Committee. Holland, also, has a Woman's Committee. Altogether, the bosral's invitation may be said to have met with general acceptance. The commissions of women, organized in all countries as auxiliaries to the Board of Lady Managers, will be asked to recommend objects of special excel-lence produced by women, and the producers of such successful work will be invited to place sperimens in the Gallery of Honor of the Woman's Building.

THE board has decided that in the general Exposition buildings, where the competitive exhibits will be placed, it will not separate the exhibits of women's work from that of men, for the reason that, as women are working side by side with men in all the factories of the world, it would be practically impossible to divide the finished result of their contributed labor.

Nor would women be satisfied with prizes unless they were awarded without distinction as to sex and as the result of fair competition as to sex and as the result of fair competition with the best work shown under the general classification. They are striving for excellence, and desire recognition only for demonstrated merit. In order, however, that the enormous amount of work being done by women may be appreciated, a tabulated statement will be procured and shown with every exhibit, stating the proportion of women's work that enters into it. The application blanks now being sent out to manufacturers contain this inquiry. contain this inquiry.

Beside the foregoing extensive exhibit, women will have another opportunity of displaying work of superior excellence in a of displaying work of superior excellence in a very alvantageous way in the Women's Build-ing, over which the Board of Lady Managers will exercise complete control. In its grand central hall—the Gallery of Honor—will be grouped the most brilliant achievements of women of every country and in every line of work. Exhibits will be admitted only by in-vitation, which will be considered the contraritation, which will be considered the equivavitation, which will be considered the equiva-lent of a prize, and no sentimental sympathy for women will permit the admission of second-rate objects, for the highest standard of excel-lence is to be rigidly maintained. In the sur-rounding smaller rooms will be arranged a display supplementary to the wider race ex-hibit shown by the Department of Ethnology in the general buildings. This showing is in-tended to disprove the statement frequently made that women do not possess creative minds. It is designed to prove by ocular demonstration the fact generally conceded by minds. It is designed to prove by ocular demonstration the fact generally conceded by archæologists, that woman was the inventor of the industrial arts among all the primitive peoples, and that it was not until these became lucrative that they were appropriated by men. While man, the protector, was engaged in fighting, or i., the chase, weeman constructed the rude semblance of a home. She cooked the food and later ground the grain between stones and prepared it for bread. She cared the skins of unimals and fashioned them awkwardly into purments. Impelled by the the skins of minuls and fashioned them awkwardly into grements. Impelled by the necessity for its use, she made the needle, twisting the fibres of plants into threads. She invented the arts of basket making, weaving and knitting, and discovered the use of vegetable dyes. The first potter, she molded the coarse clay into jars and other domestic utensils, drying them in the sun and gradually learning to ornament them.

PH18 exhibit in the Woman's Building will illustrate the history of women from the time of the cliff-dwellers through the mediatime of the cliff-dwellers through the media-val ages, when, though her mind was not developed, her delicacy of touch was made useful in copying the elaborate manuscripts of the day and in nasking the rich illustrations that accompanied them in books of poetry; in textile fabrics, wonderful embroideries, drawn work, rare laces and celebrated tapestries, which have been famous in every country and period. The board will endeavor to secure, through its home and foreign committees, the originals, reproductions, or illustrations of various famous objects made by women which have had important influence on the epoch in which they were produced, such, for example, which they were produced, such, for example, as the celebrated Bayeax tapestry, made by Matilda of Flunders, the best and most com-Matikia of Flanders, the best and most com-plete history of the conquest of England by her husband, William the Conqueror, and which is constantly referred to by every authority treating of the military science, arms, accountements, manners and customs of that day. An effort will also be made to procure a reproduction of the famous doors of Strasburg Cathedral, which were the work of Stalina van Szighand sister and assistant Sabina von Steinbach, sister and assistant of the architect. Permission to make the copy has been officially asked by the Board from the German Government, and it is intended to use the doors for the main entrance of the Woman's Building. These illustrations will follow in historical sequence down to the present time, when her active brain is educated to cope with the scientific problems of the age, and her trained hand to make the delicate machiners of the watch. Such an exhibit as nuchinery of the watch. Such an exhibit as this has never been made, but so quick are the French people to seize an idea, that since the announcement of the plans of the Laty Managers in Paris, last June, an exhibit illusrating the history of noman's progress has already been arranged for most year in the Palais de l'Industrie, so that, though the Board of Lady Managers has the honor of originating this idea, it will not be the first to put it into practical execution.

BUT interesting as the exhibit in the Woman's Building may be, it is not alone designed to show the history of woman. The Board of Ludy Managers hope that such alone designed to show the history of woman. The Board of Lady Managers hope that such statistics and such representation may be procured from every country as will give an adequate idea of the extent and value of what is being done in the arts, aciences, and industries by the women of to-day. Several competitions have been opened since the formation of the board, which have already resulted in the awarding of prizes to women in the lines of architecture, sculpture and designing. The Woman's Building, designed by a woman, in itself, as well as in all its decorations, both exterior and interior, will serve to excuspify women's progress during the past few years in these new and heretofore untried pursuits. Not only has woman become an immense, though generally unrecognized factor in the industrial world, but hers being essentially the works of mercy and peace, herebest work is abown in the numberless charitable, reformatory, educational and other heneficent institutions which she has established for the allevixtion of suffering, for the correction of many forms of social injustice and neglect, and for the reformation of long-established wrongs.

A FULL and complete record of woman's

A FULL and complete record of woman's progress in these fields—what she has done, is doing, and endeavoring to do for humanity—had never been attempted before the board began the collection of this data from every country. The catalogue is already well under way, and the Lady Managers earnestly entreat every one who can add anything, no matter how small, to the list to thing, no matter how small, to the list to communicate with the board without delay. All organizations of women must be impressed with the necessity of making an effective showing of the noble work which each is carrying on. The board of Lady Managers especially desires to have represented in the rooms reserved for that purpose the educa-tional work originated or carried on by women. rooms reserved for that purpose the educational work originated or carried on by women from the kindergarten organizations up to the higher brunches of education, including all schools of applied science and art, such as training schools for nurses, manual training, industrial art and cooking schools, domestic economy, annitation, etc. When not practically exhibited, the work of such organizations should be shown by maps, charts, photographs, relief models, etc. The beneficent effects of this particular undertaking cannot fail to be great and permanent. An international comparison of methods, agencies and results, furnishing opportunity for the selection of the best features of each submitted system, must necessarily reflect universal good.
To the hopeful it seems possible that from the occasion may come solutions of certain previously insoluble problems, and that by this means may even be discovered that subtle secret which has hitherto eluded the philanthropist's too solid grasp—the helpfulness which teaches self-help.

FACTS ABOUT THE WORLD'S FAIR

THE dedicatory ceremonies of the World's Columbian Exposition at Chicago, Illi-nois, will be held on October 12th, 1892, the four hundredth anniversary of the discovery of America by Christopher Columbus.

The exercises will last three days. The President of the United States will be present.

In April, 1895, a grand international naval review will be held in New York harbor.

The Exposition will open its doors to the public on May 1st, 1883, and close them on October 30th, of the same year.

The Exposition will be held under the aus-pices of the United States Government.

Almost all foreign nations will be repre-sented. Foreign exhibits will be admitted free of duty. A reproduction of Columbus' caravel, the Santa Maria, will be exhibited.

The Exposition will probably not have an Eiffel Tower. There will be, however, three observation towers about 300 feet high.

The reception of exhibits will begin November 1st, 1892, and continue until April 1st, 1893,

Queen Victoria will send sperimens of her own work done in spinning and knitting when she was a girl. Princess Louise will contribute some clay modeling, and Princess Beatrice several paintings.

It is estimated that the number of exhibitors delivered every hour.

Over 11,000,000 persons have, up to date, petitioned that the gates of the World's Fair be closed on Sunday.

Hetween 10,000,000 and 20,000,000 silver half dollars of a special design will be issued by the United States Treasury Department for use as admission tickets to the Exposition.

Insurpnce aggregating $3,000,000 is now carried on the buildings.

In the South Dahota exhibit there will be a life-size statue of a Sioux Indian maiden,

The Baroness Burdett-Courts, who is head of the Philanthropic section of the English Woman's Department will, if her health permits, be present at the Exposition. She is nearly eighty years of age, but suffers very little from ill health.

Plans adopted for lighting the buildings provide for 138,218 electric lamps. The light-ing will cost about $1,500,000, and will be tentimes as extensive as that used at the Paris

"It isn't the thing we do, but the way we do it, that can make us famous."

AN EVERY-DAY GIRL

By Sarab Orne Jewett

PART SECOND

ARY FLEMING sat by her window one afternoon just before July came in. It was not in her little bedroom, but she felt great comfort in being alone, and the green pear tree boughs into which she looked waved about in a way that was consoling. School had been fluished that very afternoon, she wasdone with the labor, the companions the liberty all of the consoling afternoon; she was done with the labor, the companionship, the restrictions, the liberty all at once. Things had turned out better than she feared; she had won the prize for history, and so had not come home empty-handed. The prize book lay in her lap, but she wished that she had not brought it up stairs. Her mother must take it and keep it; she had made a great sacrifice this last year to keep Mary at school, and alas! the hopes of seeing her a good tencher or even a good scholar were disappointed. Mary Flemling had a clear head, and common sense quite beyond her years, but she had not the quick memory that makes young people show best in recitation. She had fought very hard to keep even a moderate position in the class.

Now it was all ever, and she regretted many things, as girls and boys do at the end of

Now it was all over, and she regretted many things, as girls and boys do at the end of school days. It seemed so nauch easier to keep on with the familiar routine than to manage an inexperienced liberty. She did not know what to do with her feedom; she did not know what to do with herself and her life, She was grown up now, and she felt like a frightened, awkward child. Did every girl have such miscruble days of reckoning? She looked down at her peetty white gradu-frightened, awkward child. Did every girl have such miserable days of reckoming?

She looked down at her pretty white graduating dress, and the tears filled her eyes; one even spattered down upon the prize book. Well, the world want on and the people were cheerful enough, after all? Did everybody worry and fret and feel builded, or was it only one girl now and then who tried to look things in the face and was agraid?

The peur leaves gave a last cool rustle; the sun was almost down and the summer breeze was still. There were skrill voices of children playing in the street, and people going by on the sidewalk talked loudly about one thing and another. Nobody spoke of the last day of school; even that was a small affair to the little town; it happened every year. The little town; it happened every year. The little town; it happened every year. The little girl at the window had a curious sense of apartness and lack of sympathy, and presently she took off the white dress impatiently and lunng it in the closet, and reached for her clean old checked ginglana, which she had been wearing in the morning. It did her good to touch it; "yes, this is mine," she thought with a thrill of relief and pieusure. "Wearing that dressed-up prickly white thing made me feel as if I'd always got to, and as If it would always keep hindering me." She haughed a little at her own fancies as she dressed herself in a hurry; it was almost ten time. Before she keep hindering me." She laughed a little at her own funcies as she dressed herself in a her own funcies as she dressed herself in a hurry; it was almost ten time. Before sha went down stairs she stood by the window again, and then with a sublen impulse she knelt down and rested her forefood on the window sill. She never had longed to be good and happy and not to make mistakes as she did just then, and for the first time in all her life there came to her a sense of help and pres-cuse, a warmth of sympathy and love, as if somebody heard and assured her in her be-wildred and trusting inthe prayer. She never had liked sermons and prayer meetings she would never go much with the girls and longs to evening meetings to whisper and hugh to-gether when they were not awe-struck by the gether when they were not awe-struck by the occasional solemnity. She had scorned the pions talk of certain people, but now she never could forget this moment by the window; her mother must have known such moments, and mother must have known such moments, and other people, and that was what they tried to tell about. She knew now for berself that there was a love useen, and another life, and that there was light in dark places. All this was known in a wordless way; it was all felt in the silence of the summer evening, in the happy peace of her young and troubled heart, and Mary Fleming ran down stairs with shining eyes and went to find her mother and give her the prize book.

Mrs. Fleming had longed to go and speak to her girl, but she had taken off her best dress and begun to get supper and with great forbearance had left the child alone. She was sitting in the side door-way on the upper step mending a coat.

mending a coat.

"Why didn't you stay dressed, my dear?"

Mrs. Fleming asked with a little sladow of disappointment on her face. "I thought perhaps we'd go over to see old Mrs. Danforth after supper."

haps we'd go over to see old Mrs. Danforth after supper."

"I can put it on again" said Mary, crowding her mother a little so as to sit down at her side. "Where's father?"

"He's late to-night," said Mrs. Fleming, "I feel worried about father, Mary. I wish I could have done his work and let him gone to the exhibition to-day. I know he thinks a great deal of you, but he never can say much. He'll be so pleased about your prize."

"I ought to have had more: you have done exercthing to belp me along," said Mary.

"Supper's all ready whenever your father comes," said Mrs. Fleming, a little embarrassed by Mary's outspokenness, then she turned and kissed the girl as she had not kissed her before since her childhood. They were undemonstrative New England people, and it was only in some moment of excitement like this that they forget themselves enough to show the affection that was always felt.

"There's father coming, dear," said Mrs. Fleming. Her face was flushed and there were tears in her eyes. Her quick cars had caught his familiar step far down the street, and she arose and went into the house. For only one instant the girl felt the old instinct of repression and reticence, then she run down the wooden steps and along the path and met her

sion and reticence, then she ran down the wooden steps and along the path and met her wooden steep and along the path and met her father at the gate.

"Well, it's all over," she said. "School's done father, and I did manage to get one prize, for history."

Her father took her by the hand as ise used when she was a little bit of a child, and they walked up the path together. He looked moved; his face was pale and he did not say a word, yet there was something fatherly and tender about him. Mary thought that he was pleased about the prize and that he was tred. When her mother saw him she started and asked quickly. "Why, what's the matter, Henry?—tell me quick!"

"I'm out of work," said the poor man, "and worse than that, I'm past work; I've got to trust to you and Mary now." He sank into a chair and covered his face with his hands. Mary and her mother stood speechless and looked first at him and then at each other.

It was one of Aunt Honnah's favorite say-It was one of Aunt Hannah's favorite say-ings" that there never was a wall without a door in it." Mary thought of this wisifully, and wondered where she should find the door in this wall which seemed to close her in. How she wished, that sorrowful night, that side could see good old Aunt Hannah's wrin-kied face, and her flowered border handker-chief, where there usually was some infullable herb stoneyd way that was professed to be just chief, where there usually was some infullible lier's stowed away that was professed to be just the thing for whoever impened to be ill. Aunt Hannah had a curious gift of instructive knowledge; she would follow her impressions wherever they might bud, and so she went from heave to house making earli her home in turn, receiving her inevitable welcome with quiet pleasure and then some morning flitting away unexpectedly, no matter what merry-making or necessity might claim her necessary making or necessity might claim her presence for another day.

Mary wondered as she tried hour after hour to go to sleep that night whether this erratic adviser and friend might not soon appear. She could hear voices in her father's bedroom, and her mother was moving about as if he were in pain. He had hardly told them anything more than his first distressed outcry as he came into the house. Why he had lost his work and what made him so ill his daughter did not know. Her mother had quieted and befriended him in the sweetest way, as if he were a child, and when Mary came to her room he had came to her room he had been asleep some time. Now all was going wrong again, and at last shegrew frightened and got up and went softly down stairs. The door was open at the steep stair-foot and the cool night air blew in. There were some hilarious men going by in the street men going by in the street, men going by in the street, shouting and singing in the quiet midnight, but their harmless racket seemed a horrible sort of thing, as if they were the harbingers of thre or irreparable disorder. Mary Fieming had a childish, helpless feeling as she stopped and listened to them: then she found herself thinking of John Abbott and wondering if he were awake on that Abbott and wondering if he were awake on that farm which he tal ked

about up among the hills.
She did not like to go to her mother's room; she sat down on the last stair and waited. It was chilly, and she drew her little old shawl closer about her shoulders, and thought, not knowing why, of her simple finery of the daytime, of the white dress and the graduating class; they seemed to belong to the past; the noon of that day might have been a year ago.

to the past; the noon of that day might have been a year ago.

Perhaps her father was going to die; the thought gave her a great pang. She never had known him very well; they were not intimate friends as she and her mother had always been, though she was the only child, and should have been more to him than if she had belonged to a large family of children. They had often treated one another sulkily, and yet she could remember him taking her to walk on Sandays when she was a little bit of a thing, and being so kind and affectionate. Oh, if he was going to die she never could show how entirely she had meant to be good to him, and to do kind things for him.

A tree toad in their little garden began its shrill note. The fragrance of the grape vine blossoms came blowing in, faint and sweet. She was tired after the excitement of the day and her later anxiety; she could not help crying as she sat upon the lower stair.

After a little while a light flashed bright into the little slitting-room and her mother came hurrying out of the bedroom looking very palcand dressed as she had been in the evening. She had not been in bed, and looked worried.

"Why Mary!" she said starting, "go back to bed, child. Father's a good deal easier now, he'll be better in the morning. I came out to shut the door and then I'm going to bed myself."

"Isn't be going to die?" faltered the girl, catching her mother's dress and hiding her face against it. She feared the answer more than she could say.

"No, dear, no," said Mrs. Fleming. "Why, Mary, this doesn't seem like you. He isn't so very sick, he feels and because he's lost his place, and this her feels and because he's lost his place. and this house may have to go; you know he hasn't paid so much on the mortgage as be thought he could. He's been real miserable," she whispered, "and I don't suppose he has been so smart as usual and they're cutting down on the help. There's a great many men know how to feel for him. He's been all worked up, crying and saying he doesn't know which way to turn."

"I'm going to work just the first minute I can get anything to do," said Mary, "that'il be something; do tell him I said that, won't you, mother?"

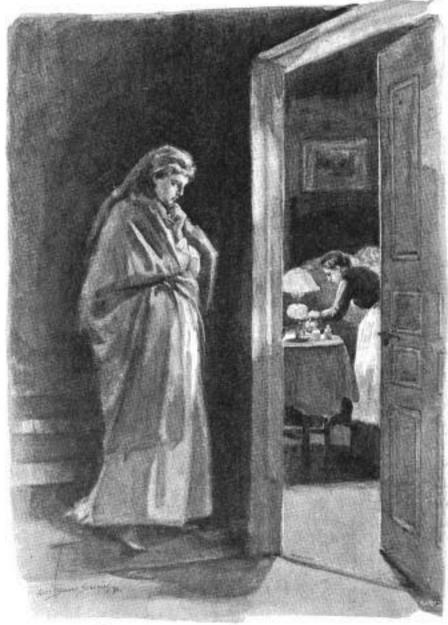

"Yes, but now you go to bed; come, I'll go up with you and tuck you up real nice just as I used to when you were a little girl. The trouble is that we never ought to have left the farm, but father meant you should have a good. farm, but father meant you should have a good chance to go to school, and we heard what chance to go to school, and we heard what wages folks were getting and nothing would do but he must come."

Mary knew that her mother had always opposed this change. She had often heard it discussed, sometimes with considerable spirit, but her own heart shrank from the fancied loneliness of the hills and fields. She liked the petty bustle and newsiness of the village life; she had known nothing else, and she thought long about what could be done just where they were, after her mother had said good-night and gone down stairs again. "There must be a door in this wall; Aunt Hannah said there was always a door," but Mary could not find it that night, however hard she thought about it, and wished to know her difficult way.

Next morning when Mary Fleming awoke

Next morning when Mary Fleming awoke she felt a dult sense of heaviness and sorrow before she could clearly remember what had happened. Here was her father sick and out of work, and here was herself well and out of work, and here was herself well and out of work. What could be done? She hurried down stairs and found her mother busy with breakfast; her father was up, too, looking discouraged and cross, and Mr. Davis, the lodger, was drumming impatiently on the kitchen window-sill—Mr. Davis was prompt and methodical to a fault, and breakfast seemed likely to be late. They never talked at the table; they all ate too first if they had only known it, and presently Mr. Davis had gone. Mary's father looked after him wistfully as he took his hat from its mad and departed; the poor man's pale face flushed crimson, but he said nothing. He and Mr. Davis had always gone to their work together, summer and winter, these many years. Mary saw it and was sorry for him; her mother was in the pantry; she must have felt it, too—it was two or three minutes before she came out.

"At last she grew frightened and got up and went softly down stairs."

The breakfiest work was quickly done and still Mr. Fleming sat in the kitchen. He looked a little cross, but Mary only pitied him. When it grew too hot there he went name. When it grew too hot there he went out and sat down on the doorstep. A little later she passed him, dressed to go down the street. "Father," she said, "you've got a day or two at home now, why can't you hoe times beams and make the garden look a little better?"

I don't know, perhaps I will, dear," said "I don't know, perhaps I will, dear," said the discouraged man, starting up with something like cheerfulness, "Maybe I've forget all about farming." This attempt at a joke was very touching under the circumstances, but his industrious habit of life was satisfied with the suggested work. There was no danger of a crucky day now, and a few minutes afterward Mary remembered, with an old feeling in her throat, that he had called her "dear." She had a strange, new feeling of authority, and felt the beginning of a new power over herself and the events of life such as she never had known before. It dawned as she never but known before. It dawned upon her that if she were pleasant and kept firm hold of herself it helped everybody else.

Mary went straight down the street to the largest shoe factory and up its long flights of stairs to the stitching room, where she knew several of the girls. She had often come before to see her particular friend, Mary Arley, who had left school the year before to go into the shop. There was a heavy wooden box close by her machine to hold the stitched uppers of the shoes, and Mary Pieming perched on this to have a little talk.

"How are you, busy?" she asked, but Mary Arley shook her head.

"This is the first work Eve had for a day or

This is the first work I've had for a day or This is the first work I ve may for a day or two; it won't take me an hour. That's why I got out to go to the exhibition yesterday, Where were you all the evening? We kept thinking you'd come to the schoolhouse hall. Some of the boys wanted to go and get you, but I told 'em your father was sick. My father told me about him when he came house to supper. I'm real sorry. It's an awful hard time to get out of work. They talk of shut-ling shown here the first day of July for a fort-ting down here the first day of July for a foctnight and perhaps longer."

"Ob dear!" said Mary, "what shall I do?
I need to go to work right off. I must be earning something as quick as I can."

"There's no work here," repeated Mary Arley, "and I don't believe you'll get in anywhere before fall work comes on. They won't take on any beginners when they're turning off their old help." She bent over her work to turn a difficult corner carefully, and thes said as she dropped it finished into the box:

"I'm going to leave and go up country. I

"I'm going to leave and go up country. I wish you'd come, too."
"Where? What are you going to do?" asked Mary Fleming, her spirits instantly

"To do updairs work in one of those som-mer hotels. I can get a good chance, or I can do parlor work. My mother scoush is house-keeper, and she said I might see about some girls to some with me, and she's coming down next week and will talk with them. She says she won't take anylody without seeing her. It's a new hotel and very high-toned."

Mary Flowing laughest. "I mean to ask mother," she said. "I should like it forty times better than the shop and the smell of all the poste and leather."

poste and leather."

"You're a proud piece," said Mary Arley.
"No, you area't, either. Some of the girls that come here are made sick for ever so long before they get used to it. I wish there'd be a patent for airing out shops surself, but I heree minded it so much as some. Yes, I'll come over to-night after supper. Your mother knows I'm steady. She'll let you go with me."

The girls laughed; they both knew that Mary Arley, with her quick, bright ways was not bull so steady as Mary Pleming berself, but she was sensible enough and most attach-ing. They were both pleased with their sum-mer's plan, but when Mary Fleming found heres joan, but when stary resulting forms heres! In the quiet street again she wondered whether she ought to go away from house. Perhaps she could find something to do in town, after all. But the great trouble was that when work was dull at the slove factories it affected everything. There were few boarders or lodgers to be had; there was no sloop work or hadgers to be mar; there was no storp work to be done at home; nobody had any sparse money. Going to school and graduating and having a prize for history second to have les-sened a girl's chance in life instead of bettering Her fingers were trained to no useful work or eleverness; she must start at the beginning. But it was something to have clear wits, and to know what one's disadvantages were, even if she did feel far behind the girls who had come out of school the year before and gone into the sloop.

A few weeks after Mary Fleming and Mary rley node their summer plans in the noisy stituling-room of the shoe factory they were sitting together on a high hillside in the shade of a great pine tree. The tree was a little way not in the open pasture, as if it were cap-tain of a troop of its fellows in the thick woods shore. When you sat in its shadow you could look off over green hills and blue mountains far into the distance, and close at hand were the valley farms and the new hotel on its high knoll. This was a most attractive looking huilding, of good proportions and simple, shapely roofs, and it stood soberly ned solidly in its place. Beside the book of pleasantness and attractiveness, it seemed very homelike to our two friends, who already felt themselves an intimate part of the great establishment. "I thought at first that Mrs. Preston was poing to be cross and hard to suit. I must say so if she is your consin," said Mary Flem-ing, "But I like her better every single day; Like homestly."

ing. "But I like her better every single day; I do, hourstly."
"So do I," said Mary Arley. "I never knew her very well, only mother has always been wishing I was just like her, and that's enough to discourage anybody. Mother took me to see her ance; she last a lovely burse and exerything nice in it, but her bushand failed and then the house was burned and he was sick and died. I was a little girl, but I remember mother feeling very bad about it."

"She said something so lovely to me the other day, that she once had a happy bome berself, and now that it was gone she wanted to live to make things bomelike and pleasant for other people. She said that it was what she had to live for now, and she was giad of this splendid chance to be good to people in a bir hotel."

this spicified chance to be good to people in a big hotel."

"Lots of the people who come don't want anything of us except to keep their pitchers filled," said Mary Arley, pattibly,

"Well, I do like to lift their pitchers and have the water fresh and everything nice," in-sisted Mary Fleming, "Oh, how I do wish you had beard Aunt Hannah talk to me one day about doing little things. I keep remembering it whatever I undertake. She says that thering it whatever I undertake. She says that 'tisn't the thing we do, but the way we do it, that can make us famous. I've been think-ing about that ever so much since I came up here. You don't think much of women who here. You don't think much of women who know how to cook at home, but you find how nauch the head cook up here has to think of and how much he gets paid for it; and we don't think much of sweeping and house-keeping, but Mrs. Preston keeps everybody's work in her head and keeps as all spinning, whether we have got any head or not, and she is a great woman. I think she is, don't you? And everybody thinks so much of her, and she's so kind, and yet it's nothing but common housekeeping splendidly done. I heard those lovely people in the corner rooms saying that they were going to take their recons for all next summer.'

"You till their pitchers, don't you," asked Mary Arley, mischievensly. "You're always thinking about sober things. I suppose it's being an only child and always being with your mother. Now, I'm one of seven children and we all just grew up in a heap and never thought about anything. Come, we must go back, it's most pitcher time; there come the nien with the nulk. Can't you see them down there in the farm land?"

"Who's that big fellow coming this way? No, I don't mean in the lane; right down there beyond those junipers," exclaimed Mary Fleming. "Why, I believe it's Joan Abbott!"

The two girls scrambled to their feet, it was still warm out in the sanshine; they always left the old tree with regret and always came to it, if they could, instead of going to their rooms in the afternoon, as many of the girls did. The young man was harrying along the path; they could see his face now, and it was John Abbott, brown and manly. Mary Fleming had a strange, very dear feeling in her heart as she looked at him. know how to cook at home, but you find how

Fleming had a strange, very dear feeling to her heart as she looked at him.

"I came over to bring some spring chick-ens," he said, after the first eager greetings.
"Didn't you know that we were beginning to raise them on the farm when I saw you in the spring? They're just fit for market now. We supply a great many vogetables for the hotel, and now the chickens are salable we have to run two teams and I shall be coming twice a week. I didn't know you were here until yesteolay, or I should have managed to come before. It's only six miles from our farm,"

"Our busiest time is just coming on," said Mary Arley with importance, but Mary Plenning looked shy and eager.

"Perhaps you can go to ride with me some Sanday or off day," said the young man.

"Oh, we're engaged for weeks ahead all our space afternoons," said Mary Arley, amiably, but Mary Fleming and John laughed a little as they walked along together.

a little as they walked along tegether.

"How do you like being in the notel business?" asked John, patronizingly. "I suppose h's easier than farming, and that's something,"

"Mary's the head pitcher," laughed Mary Arley. "She's also making a great reputation for being the best duster on our floor. Now I'm quick myself, but nobody ever said I was

I'm called the champion onion-wester on our place," announced John Abbott. "Tye got a premium for having the fastest eye for a got a premium for having the fastest eye for a canker-worm's nest in the whole State of New Hampshire. We re conting out alread on our apple crop all on account of me."

"Everybody is famous but poer me," said Mary Arley, with an appearance of mournful-ness. "The trouble is that Mary Fleming is so smart that we all get scolded for not doing just as she does."

The young people were full of fun as they

The young people were full of fun as they scurried down the hill, and presently the two girls saw John Abbott go off in state on his long wagon with the empty chicken crutes. When Mary Arley joked about him and made damaging remarks about the appearance of his cruvat. Mary Fleming found that she felt is if she were being remarks found from the cold. as if she were being made fun of herself. She knew in that minute how entirely they belonged to each other. She seemed to be carried on a great wave far beyond the things of everybut life, and her old feeling of affection for him. She suddlenly remembered that night in the spring when they had both been to-getter, and wished with all her heart that she could have it over again to make it so much dearer for him and for herself. She had believed that he was not very far away, but some one lool said at first that the firm where he lived was over in another valley. Beside all this new joy and eagerness it was like see-ing somebody from home-size had never ing somebody from home-side had heree been away from her own people for three whole weeks before. She was afraid that Many Arley's quick eyes would be making discoveries, but for a great wonder she was spared any tessing, and so they went in to their evening mork.

(Continued in next JOHENAL)

*,* Simultaneous with the conclusion of Miss Surah Orne Jewett's story of "An Enery-Day Girl" in the next (August) Jornaya, will be commenced Miss Julia Magnuber's new novelette "A Live Ember." It is a beautiful story of the south, full of a quiet remarkle interest, and residered doubly attractive by a series of ambits (flustrations). series of arristic illustrations.

WHEN SHE COMES BY CHARLES B. GOING

MY love may come in early spring Through orchards, April kissed, With happy blue birds carolling in dreamy skies of mist, Then sing, glad oriole, and hush The mourning of the dove; But sing! sing, bobodink and thrush, Of love, and love, and love!

Or she may come in summer days, When heated meadows rest, And down the fields a goldfinch sways Upon the thistle's crest. Then, blackthroat, sing! You love the sun; Sing, quail, amid the heat; And all your songs shall make this one, My sweet! my sweet! my sweet!

Her path may lie through leafless trees; Her dainty feet may stir Soft rustling leaves; the chickadors May all make love to her. Then, sun, shine soft from golden skies; Stay, happy wind, to kiss Her cheek, and fill my sweetheart's eyes With bliss, and bliss, and bliss!

Across a track of drifting snow if she should chance to tread, The lingering flakes shall come and go Around her darling head. The longing flakes shall touch her hair. Then, snowbird, 'round her dart; Sing, shining snow and shining air, Sweetheart! Sweetheart! Sweetheart

I would, if she shall come in spring, That springtime might be here; I long for winter, if it bring My love a day more near For what is spring, or what is fall? Love only makes the skies. My love shall blend the joy of all Sweet seasons in her eyes.

WHERE BRYANT LIVED AND RESTS BY HARRED GODWIN

FOUR years ago the one-lun-dredth anniver-sary of the old Bryant homestead was duly cele-brated at Rodyn, Long Island. The old bewn beams of the house rang, but with the merry laughter of a far different genera-

William Creams Bayast

William Creams Bayast

William Creams Bayast

Wind dwelling place such as the Quakers, who thickly populated this entire region, were went to build—square, solid, with a row of secret columns adorning the front, and, it is said, with windows mude inordinately high, said, with windows made inordinately high, so that the feminine part of the family might not be entired from houseledd dusies by wayward peepings out upon the highway just in front.

A lovely spot, indeed, was that which old Kirk built toward the end of the last century. It was but twenty miles away from New York city, but it was wild and beautiful and inaccity, but it was wild and beautiful and inaccessible. In those days there were but a few thousand composing what was to be the magnificent metropolis of the New World during the next hundred years. Even when Mr.
Bryant went to live there, it was like a remote corner of the earth. Built upon one of the sloping hilloides of Hempstead harbor, the spot was one which was graced by every naturat beauty, while the surroundings were as still as a mountain fustures, except for the songs of wild birds which came in great quantities as if to a chosen retreat. It must have been this solitade, mingled with the natural charm of a gently rolling country, half wooded, half-cultivated, which made the author of the "Forest Hymn," of "Thanatopsis," and of countless verses singing the praises of Nature in all her moods, think it the nost Nature in all her moods, think it the most beautiful spot he had ever seen. Here he de-termined to pitch his tent in 1843, and here he lived for thirty-five of the years of an ever active and busy life as editor of the New York "Evening Post."

And to-day, Reslyn is much as he found. The steepy little place from which the towers of the great Brooklyn bridge, and the spire of Trinity can be seen, and the born of the busiest city of America can almost be heard, has escaped the envious eye of the land developer.

After taking possesion of the losse, he trans-formed it as well as the grounds anoual it, and the simplicity of the Quaker gave way to the compara-tively hazarious taste of a New England Paritan.

It seems not a little odd to speak of Pori-tanie luxury. Mr. Bynant was imbaed with the most orthodox New England views, and clung to the stern and rigorous tenets of his forefathers throughout his life. Nevertheless, his tastes transt have seemed almost Oriental to the stiff necked old Quakers of Long Island, as they watched him distard the straight-backed rush-bottomed cluir for the lesser terror with hair-cloth covering. He lesser terror with hair-cloth covering. He was a moderate coun in all his tastes, but yet was a moderate man in all his tastes, but yet there was one thing in which he was extrava-pint, and that was his love of the country— the trees, the birds, the water, flowers and fruits, shruhs and vince, the air, and all the life and color of the landscape. To this taste his home at Roslyn ministered. There he loved to work, and, though he yearly made his pilgrinage back to his New Kinghand home at Canamington, in the Hampehire Hills, Ros-lyn was, I am sure, the place he loved best in all the world, because of its wonderfully varied beauties. Within a stone's throw of his workshop—a well-stored library—was, on one side a crystal lake with its langhing brook; on varied beauties. Within a stone's throw of his workshop—a well-stored library—was, on one side, a crystal lake with its langhing brook; on another was the garden with its teening flower beds and fruits. Further off was the solt water bay with its hills beyond, above which the poet viewed the setting sun from his window. On another side of him the hills nose abruptly, and there stretched a piece of woods—dense, like the forest of Fontainebleau—anot lending with rambling paths to a point where, from the clearing, the low, rolling hills and the distant waters of Long Island Sound sprend an enchanting panorana at his feet. As the lay narrows to the south, following the stores with the eye, the little village of Roslyn is seen nestling between overlanging hills, a jucture-sque hamlet, as sleepy now as it was then, and every whit as qualist.

Mr. Bryand's grounds were stuple, and he scarcely needed to wander from them to find inspiration for one of his thoughtful poens. He beautified the more innoculate surroundings of the house with shreds and trees, but left the rural parts as he found them, taking pans to preserve their purely rustic character.

The post rests lessible a most loving wife upon the hill overhooking this, his stamping ground for many years. There were bone thereabout who did not know his slender figure. Armed with a stek cut from the underthush of his wood, he was a constant crosscountry wanderer, and at eighty was still expert in vanithing the five-harred fences of that region, putsing as he went to pluck the wild flowers or to note some novel aspect of mature which interested him.

Hisday, when away from the editorial duties in his auter, was an alternative of work and which interested him. Hisday, when away from the editorial duties on his paper, was an alternation of work and play. In the mornings he shut himself up in play. In the mornings he some number of this library, occupying himself, in his later years with his translations of Homer's great work was a more or less arduous years with his translations of Horner's great epics. The work was a more or less arduous one, but was accomplished with the regularity of clockwork, each day adding its quota of lines to what had already been done. From the time when this lask was over be was at the service of his friends, of whom he nearly always had a boxiseful, or armed with pruning knife, or other implement was at some talvaialways had a houseful, or armed with princing knife, or other implement, was at some physi-cal labor in the open air. Had be fived in the days of the amateur photographer we should doubtiese present a picture of him as he ap-peared in those nonly outlings, a generous Panama hat shading his face while he busied himself calling a handful of berries. He was a great believer in the cultivation of fruit, and, while not a strict vectorian at very analysis. while not a strict vegetarian, ate very sporsely of ments. Insleed, there was a generous corner of the

Indeed, there was a generous corner of the library itself devoted to works upon horticultural art, the margins of which, nearked with various notes in his handwriting, attest the care with which he read them.

As for the rest of the house it was large and roomy, and was filled rather with someynirs of the peet's life than with articles which appealed alone to the taste. He cherished more than any other thing the collection of antographic pointings presented to him on his seventheth hirthday by the artists of New York, It was a diminative, yet characteristic, collection of the work of his contemporaries and friends. Some of these were illustrative of his poens, others were merely characteristic landscapes. This little collection—for none of the pictures was more than a foot square—lang in the dining-room, as it does still.

In his last years be hurried to this retreat early in the spring and lingered until late in the autumn, making only occasional visits to the city bought never vivine up his interest in the autumn, making only occasional visits to the city, though never giving up his interest in public affairs. He scanned the new-papers closely till the last and dispatched his editorials by messenger from Rossyn as occasion arcse. It was this easy and modest activity in his old-age which kept body and mind in splendid-vigor till the day of his death, when the de-sire, expressed in one of his poems, that he might die in Jone, came to pass, and children from the village scattered over him the field theorem of which he was so food. flowers of which be was so fond.

The Bryant Home at Roslyn, Long Island

FOR THE CENTER OF THE TABLE

BY ANNA M. PORTER

RETTY designs for table service are always acceptable to the house-always acceptable to the housewife whose household belongings pay a silent tribute to the definess of her fingers. Illustration No. I shows a dainty effect in yellow and white. The material employed for the ground is fine white linen.

The edge of the mat is formed by the irregular outline of the leaves used as a border design.
Each leaf is worked all around with buttonhole stitch in white embroiders wilk and close hole stitch in white embroidery silk, and close against this edging is a feather stitching of yellow silk. The veins are also in feather-stitch, of both yellow and white silk, worked one into the other. The stem and tendril forms are worked in a treble outline, having a yellow thread in the center with a white line upon each side.

AN EMBROIDERED CENTER PIECE (Illus. No. 1)

The design for a center piece in Illustration No. 2 is for appliqué in the Honiton braid on a ground of line white linen lawn. The braid is tacked on according to the form shown in the drawing, a slightly larger braid being used for the edging of the mat. The buttonhole stitch is worked, in white embroidery silk, and the centers by which and the centers by which the braid is held together are rendered also in white silk in the simple manner indicated. The material is cut away from beneath the braid after the work is finbraid after the work is fin-ished, giving a very delicate open-work effect. The flower forms are embroi-dered in long and short stitch with white silk. This design might be readily adapted for an ob-long shaped cloth, if desired, by simply repeating on each by simply repeating on each side the middle section of the pattern the required number of times to make it the right size. The work it the right size. The work could be rendered more elaborate by the introduc-tion of the wheel or other lace or drawn work stitches similar to those already shown in the doilles pub-lished in the May number. The ten-cloth, Illustration

No. 3, is executed in a simi-lar fashion to the preceding design, a variation in the effect being produced by the introduc-tion of yellow silk for the buttonhole edging, Instead of the yellow, a delicate shade of any desired color may be employed, pale blue or sea-green being particularly duinty in effect. Care should be taken not only in applying the braid for these designs, but it is necessary to spare no pains to keep the pattern even.

about seven inches is a good size, and smaller doilies for tumblers, after-dinner coffee or Roman punch sets measure from three to five inches, according to individual taste and re-

A point that cannot be emphasized too strongly is the necessity for the exercise of judgment in order that the pieces employed may not only be in harmony as to color and style with each other, but also with the china and other table decorations. Furthermore, it easion upon which it is used, and in keeping with the cir-cumstances of the household. Eccentricities as to form, design or color should not be insign or companion not be in-dulged in unless it is possible to afford the possession of a number of sets. The choice as to style is wide, and the extreme daintiness of much work that we see the object of wondering admiration as individual associadmiration, as individual specimens of artistic skill, but the wise housewife will consider the practical side of the ques tion also, and select for her use only what will be durable and lasting. In most cases beauty, richness and dur-ability do go together, as with deawn work and many line and handsome productions in lace and similar work, but where it comes to less expensive styles for the table, let what is used be the best of its kind, the unquestionably most suitable fabric for this purpose being fine linen.

DAINTY NEEDLEWORK FOR THE TABLE

Worked by Skillful Fingers Especially for The Ladies' Home Journal

HINTS FOR TABLE NAPERY BY MAUDE HAYWOOD

THERE is, at this time, apparently no field presenting such possibilities for dainty noedlework as that covered by the requirements of a table fally, and yet nearly, suppilled with decorated linen. In saying decorated linen, very elaborate embroidery is not necessarily implied, for although rich and delicate needlework way well-seried.

although rich and delicate needlework may well enrich the napery used on festive occasions, that employed every day in the family should also not be without the stamp of individual handiwork. For ordinary use the table cloth and table nuclins may have for their napkins may have for their sole decoration the united initials of the husband and wife formed into a mono-gram and worked solidly in white. The monogram can be embroidered for a ong tablecloth at the two right-hand corners, far enough in to lie on the sur-face of the table, or it may be placed so as to appear just beyond the edge of the center mat. It is per-missible to introduce the monogram, worked in a suitable size, in connection with any design, upon all the dollies used for various purposes, working it either in the center or in one corner, but as a rule it is liked only upon the cover

No. 1) liked only upon the cover or plate dollies, and not upon the smaller ones. The center mat varies in shape and size according to the dimensions of the table. For a round table a square, round or triangular shaped center piece may be employed, but care should be taken that all the linen employed may be in keeping. When a table cloth is dispensed with, upon a polished table, the cover dollies must measure at least sixteen inches, otherwise twelve inches is considered the correct size. For dessert dollies

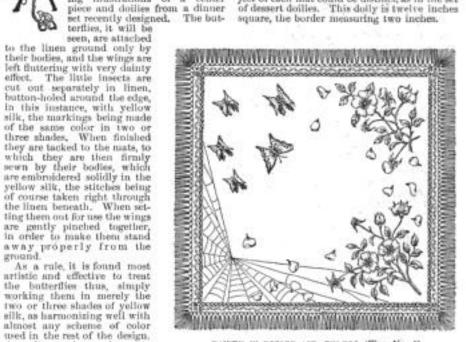

A HONITON BRAID TEA-CLOTH (Illus, No. 3)

A PRETTY PLATE DOILY

A PRETTY PLATE DOILY

I LUSTRATION No. 6 gives a plate doily which is particularly happy in choice and arrangement of the flowers, a sweet clover field being, as is well known, the happy hunting ground of honey-loving insects, and the four-leafed spray introduced among the foliage is prettily suggestive of good fortune and sumshine in the pathway of life, as the blossoms and butterflies themselves bring back to the mind a picture of summer days. The entire set might be in the same flower, using the white, pink and purple varieties, and making overy design different; or, if preferred, the subevery design different; or, if preferred, the sub-ject of each mut could be distinct, as in the set of dessert deilies. This dolly is twelve inches square, the border measuring two inches.

DAINTY IN DESIGN AND COLORS (Illus, No. 5)

of any special set, however, various hues may be intro-duced. But it is rarely wise for this purpose to attempt anything like a realistic representa-tion of the insect in its natural coloring. A SET OF DESSERT DOILIES

In Illustration No. 4, six out of twelve des-sert doilies are given. They are all dif-ferent in design, and of extremely delicate coloring. In size they measure seven inches each way, including the border, which is an inch and a quarter deep and is made of the linen itself fringed out in the manner shown. The ribbons used

According to the requirements

THE NEW BUTTERFLY DESIGNS

By Mas. D. Barnes-Bruce

NOVEL and pretty feature in the decoration of embroidered table

linen is shown in the accompany-ing illustrations of a center in the design are on half the number of mats of a light dult blue, and on the other half of a maize color. The flowers employed according to the order in which the doilies are arranged in the drawing are ns follows: Carna tions, in pale pink tints, with a blue ribbon; pansies, in shades of rounve, with a maize ribbon; pink tipped daisies, with a blue ribbon; forget-me-nors, in pale blue, with a little pink in the buds, and a maize ribbon; this-tles, in dull light purples, with a maize ribbon; and pale yellow narcissi rith a blue ribbon. The other six de signs which complete the set include violets, clover and lilies of the valley with maize ribclover and files of the variety with manar ris-bons, and also buttercups, eglantine and haw-thorn, having blue ribbons. The flowers are embroidered solidly, and the ribbon may be variously treated, according to taste. It may be worked solidly, merely outlined, or out-lined and filled in with brier stitch, darning, or any fancy stitch preferred.

DIFFERENT MODES OF FINISH

THESE dollies may be variously finished ac-A cording to taste. Some prefer a plain hem-stitched border to the fringe; others, again, like a scalloped edge worked with silk in button-hole stitch; but it must be confessed that the preference lies with the fringe made of the linen raveled out, if only it is nonnaged proper-ly. The effect of the whole set when finished is very dainty, the coloring being kept delicate sc-cording to the cording to the prevailing taste, the almilarity in the shades used for the rib bon throughout, and in the general arrangement and treatment of the designs, giving a harmonious effect to the twelve doilies when seen together, while variety is obtained by the use of different flowers on each mat.

CENTER PIECE OF BUTTERFLIES AND ROSES

THE same finish is used for the center piece 1 (Illustration No. 5), and it is well to notice that the labor bestowed upon the edgnotice that the labor bestowed upon the edging of the mats in this way is a characteristic of really high class and artistic work, and is a by no means unimportant detail which marks the difference between good and careless needlewomen. The roses on the center piece should be executed in delicate pinks, and the web is preferably of gold-colored silk. One of the flight of batterflies is worked on the linen ground instead of being applied like the others. Sometimes on large times on large pieces the last two or three are em-broidered flatly in this way, and made very small, as if they were fiding away in the distance.

The butterfly designs can be em-ployed for other purposes besides table lines. They are especially liked for burean sets, Very dainty pin-cushions are made in this manner, and as if the but-terfly had just set-ted on the edge of

WER AND BUTTERFLIES

WER AND BUTTERFLIES

No. 80

WER AND BUTTERFLIES

No. 80

WER AND BUTTERFLIES

No. 80

WER AND BUTTERFLIES

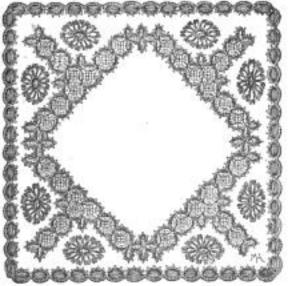

They are pretty when quite small and round, finished with a puffing of silk.

The idea of applying portlors of the design in the way described can be carried out with many variations in style. Single flowers can be treated in the same way as the butterflies shown here, the greater part of the work still shown here, the greater part of the work still being embroidered flatly, and a few blossoms being raised and arranged with a view to their greatest effectiveness. Small drugon-flies or other insects having gauzy wings night be rendered in bolding cloth on a ground of the same. The markings could be indicated by a fine thread of silk, or the brush called in to the sid of the needle, and any tint or veinings required painted upon them. This latter kind of work would of course not be to perful or work would of so durable as that worked in wash silks upon linen, which can be repeatedly laundered.

A PLATE DOILY OF CLOVER AND BUTTERFLIES

A CENTER PIECE OF WHITE ON WHITE (Illus. No. 2).

A SET OF DESSERT DOILES (Illus, No. 4)

THE STORY OF TWO HEARTS

By Isabel A. Mallon

AY up in the high Scotch high Scotch hills where the heather makesa beautiful purple bed for the birds to rest in, where the rocks and the rocks and the sky are the same curious gray shade, and where the nearest neighbor is twelve miles away, there lived in an old manor house, with his mother, a boy named James McFarland. Hig, blonde and handsome Jamie walked around watching the birds as they flew, the sky as it changed, the flowers and foliage as they had first one light and then another upon them, and be tried with his pencil to reproduce that which he saw in nature. All of his heart seemed full of color, all the world full of color, and he longed to put those tones where they would just, and to put those tones where they would just, and yet the big, shy follow, who did not wenr his beart upon his sleeve, hid his face in his mother's inp when he told her that he wanted to leave home, that he wanted to go to that great city called Paris, and hearn to be a painter. Now, God creates nothers. And al-though the neighbors scoffed at what seemed Jamie's idle desire, yet the noother determined that her boy should have his own way. So she went to a far distant kinsman and borrowed a little money that Jamie might begin his

THE canny Scotchman was louth to part with the siller, but he knew that his own people were bonest, that the grounds about the manor house were good and gave forth plenty, and that he would receive back not only his money but a good interest with it; for, as he shreadly remarked: "There is nae use of putting a leddy under obligations when it can be made business." So with a hopeful good-bye and a "God bless you, my sou," from his mother ringing in his ears, with a curious determination to succeed for the dear mother's sake, and a brave heart to make a name for himself, Jamie reached Paris, He went into a world-famous studio and he worked, and worked, and worked. His fellow students laughed at him and urged him to go with them to hear beautiful music, to see beautiful women and to have a merry davee, but Jamie good-naturedly shook his head and said: "No, no; I'm here for work." They laughed at his lack of sentiment, so they thought it. They laughed at his willingness to derote days and nights to his work, and one day a pleasant American put his hands on his shoulders and said: "Now, my Scotch-to devote days and nights to his work, and one day a pleasant American put his bands on his shoulders and said: "Now, my Scotchman, what do you intend to be?"

Jamie's clear blue eyes looked up into his and with a warmth that was unexpected he answered: "A great artist." Then a merry little Frenchman called out "What about your sweetheart, Jamie?" The eyes drooped, there was a faint blush on his face, and Jamie said: "I cannot let anybody talk to me about said: "I cannot let surbody talk to me about that. When God gave me a heart to love and an arm to project a woman He created the woman for me, and some place, perlupe, far off in the world, she is waiting until I come. May-hap she will come to me, but until then 1 do not want to waste my time in saying words of love to lassles that are as nothing to me, to tire my eyes by looking at beautiful women who couldn't make me love them, nor in chip-plug up my heart into little bits until it would not be worth offering to a pure woman such as I mean my sweetheart to be."

as I mean my sweetheart to be."

Nobody laughed; the little Frenchman grew silent, the big Englishman caught Jamie's hand full of paint brushes, and gare it a squeeze that meant." You are right, old fellow," and the kind-hearted American boy turned away and stared at the wall through two big tests.

NOBODY works with all his heart without putting heart into it, and after four years of study when other workers—fiful workers—had produced one picture and then stopped, when names had been of moment for a day and when names had been of moment for a day and then forgotten, there was shown at the Salon a picture about which all Paris crowded and of which all the critics talked. Nobody could deny its beauty, nobody could deny the good work that was in it, and fame was predicted for the man who had done it. It was the picture of a woman, simply dressed and holding in her hand a little bunch of violets; from out her face came a look of pure, strong womanbood, a book such as the great masters knew so well should be put into the face of the Virgin Mary, and a look which is the right of girlhoot. Far down in one corner was the artist's sign manual, two little hearts united, and in the catalogue you saw the picture was called "My Ain Sweetheurt" and that it was by James McFarland.

One day a big blonde man brought a little

One day a big blonde man brought a little Scotch lady to look at it—a little Scotch lady gowned in gray and with a denure little bounes, from under which looked a face full of pride and love, and these two stood in the crowd unknowing ned unknown. And the muther whispered to harmen. Thereis also the mother whispered to her son: "Dearie, she will come to you some time—wait for her."

ER own people had always called her a Puritan, and it was deemed a jest in the family to say that Dorothy Adair had a bit of Plymouth Rock in place of a heart, for she never let any man grow well enough acquainted with her to whisper a single word of love. Those in her own household knew of the loveling bindows that made her whole life a heart. Those in her own household knew of the lov-ling kindness that made her whole life a beau-tiful story, and yet even they would ask her: "Dolly, when is the prince coming?" and Dolly would raise her head and look at them and answer "He's not coming; he's waiting for man".

One year a little child among them was taken very ill, and it was decided that to keep the little one he should breathe warmer air, see bluer skies, and go where the flowers blossom in wintertine, and Dorothy, because she was a ministering angel, went to see that the little haldle was well carrel for for anyon she was a ministering angel, went to see that the little laddic was well cared for far away from bome on the shores of the Mediterraneau. With his old nurse every morning saw Doro-thy start on the side the invalid's carriage and tell him of all the wonderful sights, encourag-ing him about his weary back, and thinking out for him some amusements. He always wanted to draw, until at last they attached to his chair a board on which the paper neight rest, and the thin nervous fingers could easily guide the pencil that drew caricatures of everybody. He made the girl that laughed seem nothing but one enormous smile; he made the pretty girl look a slave to her beauty, so interested was she in it, and he ridiculed his decreated laughed at his nurse with a never-tring neural. tiring pencil.

ONCE when Dorothy was not with him a man came up and stood beside the sick boy's chair, looked at his pictures and then said: "I think you and I ought to be friends, because we are both artists," and then be showed him one or two mistakes he was making, and he told him he ought to try and do better and nobler work than that, and talked to him in a gentle and easy way, until the little in-valid had a new interest in life; but as Dolly came near his new friend fled, as if her silken skirts had frightened him. She was soon told the story, and then she hoped that she might say thank you to the man who had made for brother a happy half bour, but the days went by and though the boy and the man became treat friends the man pager would story or by and though the boy and the man became great friends the man never would stay or would come if he saw Dorothy there. To be sure, he had never looked into her face, and it was said of him that he dreaded to meet women, and somebody who knew told Dorothy that he was the great artist James McFarland, that he had never gone among women at all, and that he was here on the Mediterranean because he had lost the one nearest and dearest to him, his mother? and that his old studio seemed cheerless and lonely without her kindly presence, so that he had made out her kindly presence, so that he had made one here. That he was always glad to see his men friends, that he knew the wives of some of these, respected and honored them, but that not even one women could say she had ever heard a word of love from him; that his sign manual on his pictures was two hearts united with a tiny blue ribbon. That he had made his fame with one picture which he would not sell, but that from it had come not only reputation but riches.

You know how invalids are, especially in-valid boys, and so one day when there was a little bit of mist and Dorothy's poor lad had to stay in the house all day, he mourned and refused to be comforted because he could not see his artist friend. He wanted to go after him, he felt that he could not live unless he saw kim, and so it was concluded that nurse should go and ask him to come; but that did should go and ask him to come; but that did not satisfy the little man. Nurse? Yes, but Dorothy too, and so she went out to meet her prince. In the big studio they waited silently useff the great man came to them, and then Dorothy quietly told what their errand was, and she wondered that this world-famous artist should stare at her and blush and stam-mer like a boy, although he said at once he would come to his little friend and would bring some marvelous colors. He did come, not only once, but many days, for the poor little man was undergoing an operation that meant either life or death to him. On one side of the cot was the artist, bearing the ill side of the cot was the artist, bearing the ill tempers of the sick boy, guiding the weak little hand and doing pictures for him that if they had had the two hearts upon them would have been eagerly sought for by the rich man who was filling his gallery with the works of the great men of to-day.

On the other side was Dorothy, now sewing on a hit of lines, now arranging a dainty disk.

on a bit of linen, now arranging a dainty dish for her boy, now watching him so that she might see whether the pulse was too weak, or whether he was tiring himself, but always busy as a true woman is when some one she loves is ill, and busy in the way that bespeaks the woman of refriement. No noise in her movements to jar the invalid, no insistance of what he did not want, but a placid readiness to do as he asked, and to make him comfort-able.

Dropping his pencil the laddie looked into Jamie McFarland's eyes one sunny morning and said: Jamie, why do you always put two bearts on your pictures?"

The needle on the other side of the bed went

The bestlie on the other side of the bed went very quickly, and Jumie, who had been doing a little sketch, raised his head and looking over beyond the boy, answered:

"My lad, when I was young, I thought out that God himself had somewhere for me a heart that would respond to every beat of mine, a heart that would be my joy, my pride, and my resting place. I did not know where it was. I could not offer it my love, and so I mye it my work. To-day I can do more. I gave it my work. To-day I can do more. I can say I know where it is. I can say that the work and the love both belong to it and I do say, Dear heart, you have come to me from way over the sea. You are mine."

And the laddle said:

"Whose heart is it?"

And Jamie answered:

"Thou will it. Provided by the said."

"They call it Dorothy's heart." Somehow they never quite knew how, just above the little heart that was beating with so much excitement there lay a small white hand and on it a larger, stronger one that clasped it firmly and knew that he had his own. It seems like an every-day story—this one of two bearts—and it is. Months afterward when the invalid was well and strong, he stood beside Jamie and handed him the golden circlet that he put on Dorothy's finger—the circlet that he put on Dorothy's finger—the circlet that in the sight of God and man united two hearts forever. And later on, when they all went back to the old studio in Puris and they saw the first great picture which Jamie had painted, the boy, who had the heart and the eyes of an artist, looked at it and said; "Why, it is a picture of Dorothy!" and so Jamie with his arms around his "Ain Sweetheart" told how the dear little mother insisted that she was to be waited for.

This is the story of two hearts whom God had destined should come together, to live and love together; to bear each other's hurdens, and claim each other's joys.

ROWING FOR GIRLS

BY KLASN LE GARDE

I has always been noticed

Thus always been noticed that girls who from child-hood are necustomed to row are of a cheerful temperament. As if that was not enough of a recommendation, such girls have never known what dyspepsia means. If the exercise is vigorous, the faster is the flow of the blood. With the quickening of the circulation, perspiration becomes profuse and the body is enabled to throw off all poisonous matters. If I knew a girl who was duli, heavy footed and heavier thoughted, with a blotched and muddy colored skin, who sometimes thought she wanted to be as well as another girl, but did not do anything to reach it, nor knew how, I should put her in a row hoat in a shallow pond, place the oars in her hands and tell her to take care of herself. Unkind? I think not, I should have a long rope, you know, attached to the boot, one end in my hand. The position night frighten her a little at first, but the natural instinct to help herself would come to her uid, and then, too, rowknow, attached to the boot, one end in my hand. The position might frighten her a little at first, but the natural instinct to help herself would come to her aid, and then, too, rowing is not difficult to learn. To most girls it comes as naturally as walking. They creepalong the water, not far off shore, first with one oar, then trying two, keeping stroke for stroke, up and down, "catching crabs" occasionally, old Nep's protest at being conquered by such a courageous piece of prettiness, and in the three or four attempts may be the delightful sport is theirs. So this girl with the torpid liver and the lethargic feeling must be the gainer, for she has to think faster, she must move and breathe quicker in that unison of time kept by her fast impelled oars. How can such a girl long remain ill or stupid?

Rowing, too, expands the chest. The next time you see a boat's crew at practice look at the breadth of shoulders of its men and propare to be envious. And should you ere be in the Cove of Cork, marked on your modern geography as Queenstown Harbor, notice the women who "welcome the coming and speed the parting guest," in their little boats that toes like very cockle-shells under the shadow of the great stenner on whose deck you stand, These women have the broad shoulders, the bright eyes, the roey complexious, the full of the great steamer on whose deck you stand. These women have the broad shoulders, the bright cyes, the rosy complexions, the fail chests, the strong organs of respiration that are bred of healthy, vigorous exercise on the water. Like all women that row from girlhood their backs are strong, "strong as iron bunds." Corsets, or "stays," as they would call them, they never owned. Nothing so becomes a woman as health, and the girls of to-day need not use ronge at their dressing tables nor sigh for beautiful complexions and figures if they will exercise constantly and regularly in the open air.

open air.

The good effects produced by rowing upon.

The good effects produced by rowing upon.

The good effects produced by rowing upon the muscular system can be secured by certain mechanical movements produced by the rowing machines of the well-equipped modern gymnasium. The latest invention, a bydraulic rower, gives the same stroke and same resisting action as does the water.

In so practical a matter as rowing, written instructions are of little value. Experience is the best teacher. The girl rower in learning, requires a good steady boat, a light oar and a companion who knows how to pull. The latter can either act as steeres or pull too, but should encourage the tyro to exert all her power and "pull, pull away." The learner must have her hands properly placed, the outside hand grasping the oar with the thumb above the handle, the inside hand holding the "loom" of the oar just where the rounded "loom" of the oar just where the rounded part joins the square, and keeping the thumb beneath. The elbows must be kept close to the sides, and well straightened immediately after the conclusion of the stroke. The stroke is finished by feathering the oar, and this is done by a turn of the wrist, which places the blade of the oar parallel to the surface of the water instead of vertical to the surface as durwater instead of vertical to the surface as during the pull. In rowing, the body should awing to and fro in a straight line with the stem and stern of the boat. The rower should throw herself well forward, in taking hold of the water with the oar, and lean well back in lifting it out of the water, the oar not being dipped in the water beyond the blade.

A little practice will enable the beginner to feather her oar but feathering is not because.

feather her car, but feathering is not necessary at first. Backing is effected by pushing the blade of the car through the water in the direction opposite to that of rowing, and feathering the our as it leaves the water. Keeping time and stroke becomes necessary when two or more are pulling together, and in the first is the exact execution at the same moment of the feathering of the oars and their recovery by the whole crew.

Girls can just as well learn a good style of stroke from the start as a poor one. The best stroke is one which does not cause the boat to jerk. It should begin with a nest and delicate drop of the our in the water without any splash; the rower cutching hold of the water at once and gradually increasing her power.

BOTH ENDS OF A BELL WIRE

BY FLORENCE HOWE HALL

OOR beils are pretty fair indicators of character. Probably you have not been conscious of it, but every time you pull a door bell you register what manner register what manner of man you are as certainly as though you were dropping a nickel in the ubiquitous slot. Your ring will not tell everything about you, from the color of your eyes to your taste in flowers, but to those who know the signs the door bell is as good as a title page. Anyone who has had occasion to answer bell pulls knows how much difference there is in them. One person's difference there is in them. One person's method varies very little from time to time, difference there is in them. One person's method varies very little from time to time, though the difference between that method and somebody's else, while slight, will be sufficiently well marked. It is seldom that two rings are exactly alike.

Any busy housewife doing or superintending her own work, and anxious to avoid unnecessary interruptions, learns the language of door bells with almost unerring certainty. The one she knows best is perhaps the postman's. That has a professional snap and ving in it which is unmistakable. It says as plainly as words, "Come now; I'm in a hurry, I shall stand here just forty-live seconds, and then shove this letter under the door." The grocer's young man has a bad temper; we do not have to watch him to know all about the quick, vicious jerk that almost snaps the wire, and sends a wild jurgle into every corner of the house. That bell almost swears. The ring which announces the minister's wife is as different as can be; the bell seems almost proclaiming "peace to all in this house."

So the housewife recognizes each; the impatient man, who pulls the bell twice in quick succession, and does not wait long before try-ling it again; the one of more philegenatic tem-

So the housewife recognizes each; the impatient man, who pulls the bell twice in quick succession, and does not wait long before trying it again; the one of more philegenatic temperament, whose ring is slower and more substantial; the hesitating woman who draws the knob out in a succession of nervous little jerks; the seedy individual with matches to sell, who stretches the wire carefully to its full length, and then allows it to relax with a faint, apologetic thickle; and the jolly friend who knows he is welcome, and therefore grasps the knob with a hearty swing that is fairly eloquent with good nature, and sets the bell to shaking its sides with such peals of echoing laughter that it positively cannot stop all at once, but subsides gradually with a merry, irrepressible, little titer. A door bell has as many voices as visitors.

There is nearly as much difference in the way bells are answered. It is quite as important to know how to answer the bell as to know how to ring it. Servants are upt to be quite neglectful in this particular. I know of certain houses where you can always tell whether the mistress is out or at home by the speed, or lack of speed, with which the servant comes to the door. To be sure, it is not always possible to respond instantly. In houses where there is only one servant she always possible to respond instantly. In houses where there is only one servant she may be engaged in kneading bread or scrub-bing a kitchen floor, and will, of course, remay be engaged in kneading bread or scrub-bing a kitchen floor, and will, of course, re-quire a couple of minutes to wash her hands and put on a clean apron. But servants are not always the offenders in this matter of slow response to a bell. It seems almost to amount to a fad among certain fishionable people to keep one standing on the door step an unconscionably long time, no matter if the weather be wet or the thermometer down among the teens. Perhaps it is intended that the visitor shall have an abiding sense of the importance of the bousehold, or it may be that the mistress wishes more time to make a change of tollette; but whatever the cause the delay is highly exasperating and altogether unpardonable. The practice does more than cast a doubt upon the hespitality of the house-hold; it is a gross discourtesy. In your par-lor you would not wait fifteen seconds before answering your visitor's question; why should you keep him on your door step five or ten minutes when he rings to know whether you are at home?

The publicacephy of door bells is not known. are at home?

The philosophy of door belis is not known to the etiquette books, but it includes some things which may be remembered with profit at either end of the wire.

THE CHICAGO WAY

A group of Western and Eastern members were recently sitting in a committee room in the House, at Washington, when the subject came up of Sousa, the famous bund-master of the Marine Band, going at Washington, when the satgect came up or sours, the famous band-master of the Marine Band, going to Chicago.

"Why, Chicago'll want the Capitol next," an Eastern member remarked.

It is this "Chicago way" of getting good things that has given the great prairie city her pre-embence in so many important business lines. Chicago is the greatest manufacturing center in America, and investors have a fishion of following in the wake of factory strongholds, for that meme stability and permanence.

In the center of Chicago's manufacturing district Chicago Beights is studied. A lot in this most destrable growing location is a safe, permanent investment. The syndicate of wealthy and surcessful men owning this property have prepared a handsome booklet—"Chicago, Beofra, Path"—and a request sent to the Chicago Beights Land Association, Chamber of Commerce, Chicago, will bring it to the address of any person who wishes reliable information about Chicago's interesting features.

We send free to all applicants our booklet on Highland Evaporated Cream Dainties. HELVETIA MILE CONDENSING CO., Highland, III. **

Nothing is so refreshing to brain and nerves as Ricksecker's Reviving Smelling Salts. Genuine at droggists', tifty cents.

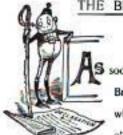

HOME STUDY. Young and middle aged thorough and practical trestruction by Mans, at their own Manss, in Book-keeping. Business Forms, Pennanship, Commercial Archmette, Letter Writing, Business Law, Shorthand, co. Adapted to all ages and both sevies. Students from every State. Detaurace no objection. Low Writing and State of the Commercial Students from every State. Detaurace no objection. Low Writes to BRYANT A STRATION'S, 459 Bale M., Ballale, S. Y.

THE BROWNIES THROUGH THE YEAR

A NEW SERIES OF 12 ADVENTURES OF THE FUNNIEST LITTLE MEN IN THE WORLD

By Palmer Cox

NUMBER TEN THE BROWNIES

sunny-faced July Brought round the time when banners fly On every pole, o'er every door,

IN JULY

The country through from shore to shore, The Brownies met to have their say Respecting Independence Day. Said one: "If I have reckoned right The days as they have taken flight, We stand upon the very brink Of that great day when people think Of heroes who so freely gave Their sacred lives on field and wave, That generations yet to be That generations yet to be Might live and move in liberty." Another said :

" My comrade true, Your mental almanae won't do, You're just two dozen hours too fast; I have the days from first to last All jotted down in black and white As plain as printer's ink can write; To-morrow night will usher in

The time for banners and for din, When children all are up and dressed Before the stars have gone to rest, And when the sun looks down at folk The earth is blue with powder smoke."

A third remarked: "Then let it be
Our plan to-morrow night to see That city stretching in its pride, With streets so long, and parks so wide, That holds the Hall where Congress broke In flinders fine the monarch's yoke. In finders tine the monarch's yoke.

To never after be resigned.

To timber of that galling kind.

Around the table we will stand.

Where people signed, with steady hand,

The document that did declare.

Their home and country free as air."

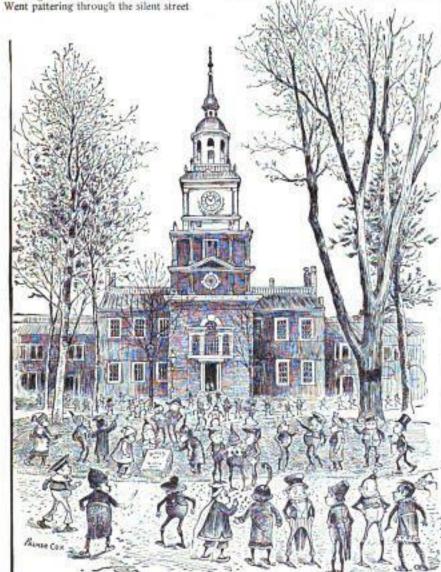

That night indeed, the Brownies' feet.

Want nattering through the silent street.

The Hall was reached in half an hour, As one might judge who knows their power, And how they laugh at bolt and bar, At heavy staples driven far, And locks that few can comprehend, With combinations without end. As through the ancient rooms they passed On many things their eyes were cast

That brought a smile, a frown, or sigh, According to what drew the eye. Said one: "The rust is working well To make away with sword and shell And musket; they will hardly last Until another century's past." Another answered: "Well, who cares How soon the rust eats such affairs; The blunderbuss, head-cleaving blade, Horse-pistol, shell and hand-grenade But call to mind the trying days When people saw their hamlets blaze, And saw the hireling Hessians stride Upon the land, with pomp and pride, But other steel and other lead, Than they had brought was painted red, And many mounds soon rose to show What numbers came, that failed to go." From place to place the Brownies went: At this they paused, by that they bent To study out the writing old That something of its history told. The Brownies tried to imitate The manner of the statesmen great, Who by that self-same desk of oak, Had stood for hours, and firmly spoke Of taxes, duties, slights and harms, And stirred the people up to arms, Oft asking in a stinging vein If they would wear a bond or chain, Or were prepared at once to fling Defiance at the tyrant King.

Unnoticed by the men in blue Who searching glances ever threw As here and there with solemn round They guarded people sleeping sound.

Around themselves the flags they wrapped That o'er the Continentals flapped, When through their ranks, on hill and vale, The whistling bullets swept like hail.

Said one: "By weapons hacked and worn, And battle flags blood stained and torn, That find a place on every wall, 'Tis plain as A B C to all No easy task they undertake Who aim established laws to break,

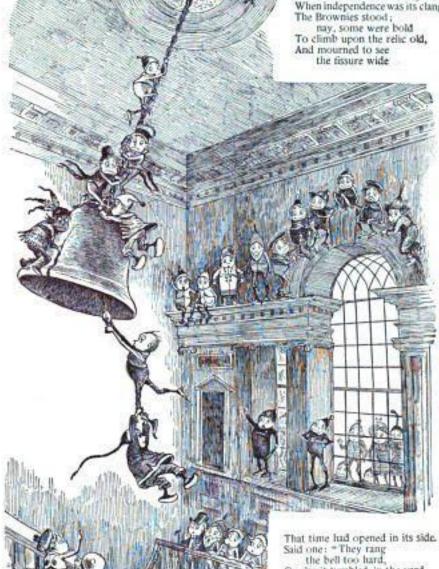

To right their wrongs like men begin, And independence strive to win."

Another said: "This still is found Where too much wrangling does abound; While those at home dispute and spout About their orders and their doubt, Those in the field who face the foe Are standing barefoot in the snow."

Around the bell that loudly rang When independence was its clang, The Brownies stood; nay, some were bold

To reach a sofa long and wide Now Brownies ran from every side Each striving to be first to treat Himself to such a famous seat.

Said one: "Upon this soft strong That here you see has rested long, And been well tried by moth and rat,

And called to mind the hopes and fears And hardships of those trying years When in his army, staunch and true, There was not one whole coat or shoe,"

Or else it tumbled in the yard From belfry beams, and struck a stone, That cracked it bad, and changed its tone: It now sounds like an earthen pot

But what of that? It matters not. It did its duty on that day, And to its credit, let me say, That there was meaning in its ring

That well might stun a listening king. Now let it rest, for sword or gun Can ne'er undo what has been done." So many Brownles had a mind Upon that bell a place to find They started it upon the go Till swaying wildly to and fro It caused a punic and a scare That soon disturbed the bravest there. -Some to the chain above held fast, Some flat upon the bell were cast With arms and legs extended wide And with it sailed from side to side; While banging round with heavy stroke

The restless clapper silence broke. Alarmed lest such a fearful din Would bring the wondering people in, The Brownies tried in every way

To choke it off without delay.

At risk of limb, and life as well, Some bravely hung below the bell, As back and forth it rocked and swung, And did their best to hold its tongue, And glad enough were Brownies bold When they at length the bell controlled. So all were free to gain the street And hasten off to their retreat.

LADIES' HOME JOURNAL

Unstrated Family Journal with the Largest tion of any Magazine in the World.

Published Monthly by

CURTIS PUBLISHING COMPANY 433-435 Arch Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

'ress-Rooms at 401-415 Appletree Street

Edited by

EDWARD W. BOK

ociation with MRS. LYMAN ABBOTT MISS RUTH ASHMORE MARGARET BOTTOME ROBERT J. BURDETTE FOSTER COATES MAUDE HAYWOOD EMMA M. HOOPER MARY F. KNAPP ISABEL A. MALLON MARIA PARLOA EBEN E. REXFORD ELISABETH ROBINSON SCOVIL. REV. T. DE WITT TALMAGE, D.D. KATE TANNATT WOODS

Advisory and Contributing Editorsrepresentatives at London and Paris.

Rates

One dollar per year, payable in advance. Single copies ten cents.

vertising Rates

Five dollars per Agate line each insertion before (this) editorial page; three dollars per Agate line on succeed-ing pages and all covers. Reading Notices, six dollars per Nonpareil line. These rates are net.

BRANCH OFFICES:

York: Potter Building, 38 Park Row Joston: 7 Temple Place, Cor. Tremont St. Chicago: 508 Home Insurance Building San Francisco: Chronicle Building

LONDON OFFICE: Imperial Buildings, Ludgate Circus, E. C. English Subscription Prices: issue, 6 pence; per year, 6 shillings, post-free

Philadelphia, July, 1892

J HOME WITH THE EDITOR

VERY careful student of the sexes has written that men have twelve distinct advantages over women calculated to make life for them essier and happier. Just what those twelve ad-yantages were, as thus recorded, I do not now recall, but surely one of them must have been the greater made elaborate, it is from choice. With coman it becomes almost a necessity; that is, f she wishes to be in "the fashion," and what roman does not?

Till's question of costume is, I believe, becoming more and more of a hardship rith women each year, and I do not wonder that many of them are becoming positively ampatient at the foolish rapidity with which changes are demanded and made. Whether more was exacted of women by the dictates of fashion last spring I know not; but it sconed to me that I never remember having met so many women as I did at the opening of the present out-of-door season, who were positively at their wits' end about their costumes. One fact seems certain: Simplicity is not the aim of those who decree what women shall wear. The fashions are becoming more confusing; the changes are radical where once confusing; the changes are radical where once they were slight, and the mental strain, to say nothing of the financial manipulations neces-ary, is not calculated to make our women either lealthier or lappier. A garment is no somer considered in good form than the edict goes forth that it is "out of style." The con-stant wonder to me is how women actually get even a reasonable amount of wear from their garments before they are decreed un-fashionable. Such a thing as "making over" one year's dress to bring it in accord with next year's style is becoming almost an impossi-bility. The present aim seems to be rather in the direction of putting even sensible economy out of the question. And no place of the matter has brought with it so many difficulties as this. Where dress with a woman was once a pleasure, it is now a burden, and each recurring season seems to add fresh perplexites. And yet no woman can neglect the matter of how she dresses. It may be unfortunate, as it is undoubledly an error, that we are upt to judge a woman somewhat from her dress, but the fact remains. We expect of woman, far more than we do of men, that they shall be well dressed, and to be well dressed is not an easy matter. Where the money is provided, taste is often lacking, and where good judg-ment exists, there too often the "all-essential"

I HAVE never been in sympathy with that class of writers who constantly ridicule woman's dress, or whose greatest pleasure seems to be to make a fool of the woman who tries to be in fashion in her costume. Ridicule, to my mind, is always a poor instrument in argument; and when it is applied to woman's argument; and when it is applied to woman's dress it makes no one more ridiculous than the one who employs it. A love of dress is implanted in the heart of every moman, and it is unnatural to ask her to overcome it. Nor do I think it should be asked of her. A well-dressed woman is always a pleasure to the eye, and I believe it is a woman's duty to make herself as presentable in her dress as her circumstances will permit. Whether we men will admit it or not, there is nothing that we like to see so much as a woman well dressed; and what we like to see, my friend, we should be perfectly willing to pay for. From the manner in which some men pay a milliner's, or a dressmaker's bill, you might think that they never paid anything for their own clothes. I have no patience with that class of men who seek every opportunity that presents justif to I have no patience with that class of men who seek every opportunity that presents itself to comment upon the cost of the wardrobe of their wives or daughters. If a man takes pride in seeing the women of his family becomingly dressed, he should take equal pleasure in paying the cost. A woman cannot dress on nothing any more than can a man. And because she wants a few more things than does a man it is because she is a woman, and it is right that she should have them. If men would universally adopt the system of giving their wives allowances, the question of dress with women would be robbed of at least one of its unpleasant features, i. e., asking their of its unpleasant features, i. e., asking their husbands for money upon the occasion of their smallest necessities.

THERE are men who, reading these words, will accuse me of encouraging what they choose to term "the feminine vice of dress." Dress, with women, is not a vice. It never has been, and never will, in the hands of a sensible, prudent woman. It can be made that, of tourse, and more, just as anything can be car-ried to excess. The great trouble is that some men do not seem to realize that a woman's wardrobe, be it ever so economically arranged, cannot be so simple as that which will an-swer for a man. What is absolutely neces-sary for the proper costume of a woman is altogether too often looked upon as a luxury by a man; and he calmly reckons out to him-self that as he indulges in no luxuries he does not see why his wife or daughter should ex-pert any. When it comes to woman's dress not see why his wife or daughter should expect any. When it comes to woman's dress there is such a thing as stretching economy a little too far on the part of a man. I have very little respect for a husband or father who makes it a source of constant humiliation for his wife or daughter to approach him on the subject of their dress and its cost. No good woman will ask a man to go beyond his means for her wardrobe, but she should be given what she needs, and that cheerfully and with a willing hand.

No advocacy of extravagance in woman's dress is intended in these words, for I yield to no one in the strongest admiration for simplicity of costume. And I believe that if women would follow their own common sense a little more, and pay less attention to some of the stily fashions constantly originated, they would be far happier. The lesson which some of our average women have yet to learn—although they are learning it. I think, better every day—is that the wealthiest women, the nicest women, the women of taste and refinement in this country, follow strict simplicity in their dress. Anything that approaches conspicuity is being entirely left to the lower and vulgar classes, which believe that they are well dressed just in proportion as they attract attention. I was talking on this subject, a few days ago, with the pastor of one of the wealthiest congregations in New York, a church whose membership represents hundreds of millions of dollars, and he said: "I often look over my congregation from the pulpit and notice the difference in the dress of our women. The wealthiest and most substantial dress the plainest, and make absolutely no show whatever in their garments. These women, whose husbands command millions, invariably affect the quiet in costume, and the most subdued colors. They positively shun anything in the way of outward show, and jewels on their custumes are, without exception, always conspicuous by their absen. The showy-dressed women are always thos who either have become suddenly rich, or who have everything they possitive that because they contract the a wealthy denly rich, or who have everything they possess in the world on their backs, and believe that because they come to a wealthy church they must dress in the most approved fashion. I can invariably pick out what are called the 'solid women' in my congregation has from the perfect simulatity of their dress." just from the perfect simplicity of their dress."

THERE is no truth so valuable for our women to learn than this, and for those who have learned it to bear in mind. The evil in feminine dress of to-day lies not with our wind women, but with our women of average means. The wealthy woman rarely overdresses; the average woman far more often, and she stamps berself by that very indiscretion. It is not the mistress who overdresses as much as it is her servour who tries. dresses so much as it is her servant who tries to initate her. The nice and refined women, the women of taste, are not the purchasers of the showy dress patterns and mislit hats which we see in the show windows. Just in propor-tion as a woman is refined in her nature is she quiet in her dress. A refined woman never dresses loudly. The present tendency in red is not followed by girls and women of refine-ment. It is affected by those who forget that red is the most trying color which a woman can wear becomingly, and that there is no color of which one so soon tires. Only a few women can choose a perfect shade in red, and those are, as a rule, not the women who wear it,

If there is any woman who should dress quietly, it is she whose income is limited. Where the domestic purse is sufficiently copious to stand the strain, the caprice of a conspicuous dress pattern or a startling color can be indulged in, since when the eye is tired after wearing it two or three times it can be discarded. But the vast majority of women in this country cannot afford this. Hence does the precisity become greater for patterns. discarded. But the vast majority of women in this country cannot afford this. Hence does the necessity become greater for patterns or styles which are quiet and unobtrusive, so that they can be mande to do full service. Men of even more than nooderate incomes invariably pursue this plan, and leave exaggerated fashions severely alone. And they save themselves an enormous amount of worry and unrest by this practical method. And what is possible with men is in a measure just as possible with women. Caprices in dress are for the luxurious classes.—I was just going to say for the wealthy classes, but they never recognize them. The women who avoids showy materials and styles is the woman who is not only in stricter necordance with what is best and most tasteful in fashions, but she is far more content and of easier mind than she who affects all the latest "kinks," and stamps herself as being on dress parade every time she emerges into public view,

WHERE hundreds of women show a lack of common sense in the matter of V lack of common sense in the matter of dress is in the mistaken idea that they can "wear anything." Take the "box cost" as an example. Since I have taken any interest whatever in woman's dress I have never seen an uglier garment conceived. The style was originally designed for men, but it was so hideous that they refused to adopt it. So the fashion creators decided to try it on women. To the credit of the great majority of women be it said, however, that they are not permitting it to become a general style. Yet a few have affected it, and some results that I have seen are positively ludicrous. Now, the "box coat" can be worn gracefully by very few women, and even upon those who possess the cont" can be worn gracefully by very few women, and even upon those who possess the all-essential figure and proper height it looks only passable. But to see a short woman with a "box cont," as I have seen her on the street, is a sight for the gods to behold! And the same is true, only in a lesser degree, of the Russian blouse. On a tall woman it looks well; on a woman of short stature it looks distinctly out of place. The adoption of the shirt front was another mistake for many women. Fortunately, however, that style has been confined to a certain class which is ever women. Formulately, however, that slyle has been confined to a certain class which is ever ready to accept anything that is either far-fetched or unfeminine. I believe it is called the "smart set"—a particular set that is always known for its bad taste in dress and vulgar display.

RECENTLY we have been undergoing a siege of the "bell skirt." I concede that the bell skirt is one of the most graceful garments ever designed for women. But, like garments ever designed for women. But, like everything else that is good, it seemed destined to be overdone. When this particular skirt was first brought out it was made just to escape the ground. Then a train was added, and it was dragged out into the street. Now, while the bell skirt with train is a beautiful garment for the drawing-room, it was never intended for street wear. And when its mission was distorted, it ceased to be a garment of grace, and became an accumulator of filth, so that a woman of cleanly tendencies and a bell that a woman of cleanly tendencies and a bell skirt became impossible, unless she chose to encourage backache or spinal trouble in carry-ing her train. Now we are through with the bell skirt, since the fishioners in Paris have decreed that skirts shall be short and barely touch the ground.

I SAW an illustration of the little annoyances which present styles are calculated to bring upon women in a New York surface car the other day. A young woman entered the car, and selecting a sest occupied it with the customary feeling of consciousness that everybody was looking at her. Now, this poor girl had quite forgotten that fashion had lately made yards of streaming ribbon hashionable, and in a moment both she, and, of course, all the other passengers in the car, were startled at seeing her head-gear suddenly, and in the most mysterious manner, rise from her head and settle back against the window-pane of the car. Naturally everybody in the car tittered—all except the girl, who had not grown quite accustomed to the new style of silken appendages. And it is singular to me that women do not get into more trouble with these ridiculous streamers. I call them ridiculous, for they are scarcely anything else. It does not make a woman look a bit more graceful on the street, when there is a refreshing breeze, to see her walking along with four or five yards of ribbon standing out straight breeze, to see her walking along with four or five yards of ribbon standing out straight behind her like the streamers on a flag-pole in

THERE is one consolation about these ex-A aggerated styles which are gotten up for women, and that can always be found in the fact that they are short-lived. Caprices in dress, once they become general, are very quickly taken up by the cheap manufacturers, and women of taste are quick to discard what is worn by the woman who promenades on the streets of our cities on Sunday afternoons decked in all the colors of the rainbow—and a decked in all the colors of the rainbow—and a few never seen in any rainbow. The accordion skirt came, was abused, and has gone: the tan-colored jacket, now that it can be had for three dollars, has been shelved; the "bell skirt" has had its day; ribbons are so cheap that the streaming ribbons will soon be con-fined to a class; the "box coat" died at its hirth; the Russian bloase has been overdone! And thus coes on the merry way of weapen's And thus goes on the merry war of women's dress—a war which, as a man, I can look upon with complacency, for, like seeing a battle, it is ever most interesting to those who view it from a distance.

IT lies in every woman's hands, however, to make the battle long or short, as she wills. Women can complain as long as they choose at the burdens laid upon them, but the matter rests in their own hands, and when they elect to throw off the yoke they can do so. A style unnoticed never becomes popumatter rests in their own hands, and when they elect to throw off the yoke they can do so. A style unnoticed never becomes popular. If we would not patronize so many of the farce comedies on the boards of the theater of to-day, there would not be the influx of such trash now inflicted upon us. The creators of fashions are like the managers of our theaters—they supply that for which there is the most demand. The creation of fashions is simply a business with them. If women will countenance the ridiculous in their costume by their patroniage, they will be given pleaty of it. But if each for herself concludes that simplicity will be the order of the day, simple fashions will be given. And when fashions become more simple, then will woman's dresses become far more effective, since a woman rever shows to better advantage than when she wears a well-fitting gown of quiet color and devoid of any elaborate accessories. The eye should ever attract the eye except for its perfect fit and becomingness to the person who wears it.

GIRLS OF WHOM WE ARE PROUD

HEN somewhat over a year ago
THE LABURS' HOME JOURNAL conceived its offers of free general education at Vassaror Wellesley Colleges, or a musior cuestey Colleges, or a musi-cal or vocal training at the New England Conservatory of Music, in Boston, the pro-jectors had little idea of the hearty reception of the plan and the degree of success which has attended it.

THE results have been of the most flattering order. Three girls were sent to Vassar and Wellesley Colleges as the outcome of the first offers of a general education. Then came the offers of a general education. Then came the offers of free musical and vocal training at the New England Conservatory of Music, in Boston, and during the term just ended the Jounnal has had the gratification of seeing over forty girls win an entrance into the Boston Conservatory. The majority of these girls have been at the Conservatory during the past winter and spring, and with the opening of the new term on September first the rest will enter. The reports received by the Jounnal from the management of the Conservatory regarding these girls have been of the most encouraging character. "They are among the brightest and most energetic girls we have ever had at the Conservatory," says one report. From the girls themselves the Jounnal has likewise received a succession of the pleasantest letters recording their progress. JOURNAL has likewise received a succession of the pleasantest letters recording their progress.
"We receive the very best the Conservatory affords," wrote one of the girls. "My room is all that I could wish, large, airy, sunny and wall heated—in fact, one of the most desirable in the building. I already feel at home in such a delightful place, though abroad continent is between me and my home. The advantages here are the best the country affords."

WITH the great success attending the plan, the Joensal has removed the limitation of time originally fixed in connection with the offers, and next term will see even a larger coterie of girls at the Conservatory than attended during the senson just closed. Already over twenty-five girls will enter at the opening of the new term on September first next to make their home in the great Boston institution, and that number will probably be largely augmented before the date comes around. Likewise has the scope of the original plan been broakened so as to include the study of art and painting as well as of music and singing. This addition now places before the girls of America the most complete series of free educations in the fine arts ever attempted. The girl who loves to paint has now the same The girl who loves to paint has now the same opportunity as the girl who loves to sing—an opportunity never before offered and which will perhaps hever be repeated by any other periodical.

THERE are thousands of American girls THERE are thousands of American girls with a love of music, singing or painting, who have never had a chance to develop their talents, and it is to these girls that the Jounaal's offers hold out a special degree of attractiveness. We are anxious, in every sense, to give these girls their opportunity, and in these offers we believe they have it. The effort asked of them is but a slight one, and the humblest village girl has the same chance as the girl who resides in the city. The offers have remerable been consisted with the confers the confers have consisted to the consistence of the confers have consistent as the girl who resides in the city. The offers have especially been conceived and so arranged as to place them within the reach of every girl, no matter what her circumstances. Many of the girls whom the Journal has already maintained at the Conservatory never believed that success was possible. But they tried, and won. The thing which looked a formidable task at the start became a pleasure when it was once taken up.

I CANNOT here, in the limited space left me, say much of the detail of the offers; but the story has just been printed by the Journal in an attractive booklet, and this will be cheerfully sent to any one who will write for it. There will be found in this booklet are complete explanation of the offers, and that how they can be sequent. and just how they can be secured. Some twenty of the successful girls have been induced to tell the stories of their success in winning the offers; and these are given in their own language, and with their portraits as well. I wish that every parent who reads the Journal, as well as every girl, night send for a copy of this little book, and rend what can be done by girls who have energy and push and determination.

Perhaps it may turn out a song, Perhaps turn out a sermon.

N. born of woman. full of whims and fancies as becometh the son of his mother, is a slave to precedent and habit, as is seemly in his father's child. Like unto his mother, he doeth exactly the right things in precisely the right way against all reason, and committeth such fenrful blunders as make the angels laugh when be essayeth to be logical. And following in the footsteps of his father, he walketh cautiously in the reaon his name, he wanged cantonsy in the rea-sonable ways of his own perfect invention, and cometh out wrong every time, and crieth un-to the wife of his bosons: 'What did I tell you?' with condemnatory emphasis on the "what." One of his weaknesses, inherited from a long line of ancestors of both sexes, is to consider that the stars in their courses compel him to go into the country, when by rea-son of the closing of the schools the children are turned back upon the home. Year after revolving year, he offers himself a willing sacrifice, upon the incalescent alters of July, untaught by all the sacrifices of preceding

MIDSUMMER MADNESS

MIDSUMMER MADNESS

WHEN he who lives on senoty salary, in a rented house in town, begins to draw plans of a neat, inexpensive cottage in the cognetry, a cosy little summer nest that might be built by an economical and painstaking architect for about $25,000, somewhere on pine-crowned mountain slope or down by the loud-sounding sea, the poison is working. When his conversation turns to long exhibitrating transps through leafy woods, and all-day strolls by purling brooks, where eager trout leap far out of the water to see if you have brought along your book of flies—keep the f's in those two words far apart and pronounce distinctly—it is time to send for the doctor. When he, who would fall off a sur-horse standing still unless he had something to hold on by, talks of inspiring gallops down windon by, talks of inspiring gallops down wind-ing country roads and shadowed bridle paths, with the free winds lifting the lair from his heated brow-he whose hair was lifted clear heated brow—he whose fair was lifted clear back to the crown by the scalping knife of Time summers ago—you should write his mother to come on at once. And when he babbles about the independent life of the farmer, of the lowing kine that come sweetherathed and with slow step from fragrant postures in the shadowy twilight, of the merry song of the jocund resper, as he goes a-field, he is a gone man for the summer. Close the house, bar door and shutter, give everything over to the passing sneak-thief and the domiciliary visits of the inquisitive burglar, and hie thee away to the country with kim. All is over.

WHEN THE DOG STAR RAGES

CERTES, it is rather warm in the city. The CERTES, it is rather warm in the city. The passing water-cart, the artificial shower of pent-up civilization which is brought forth rather than down, without the aid of fair science or General Dryenforth's bombardments, does not lower the temperature; it merely changes it from the dry furnace heat of the pavements to the moist heat of the steam coil at the same degree. The loud-voiced buckster, selling despondent clusters of heart-broken vegetables that have died of grief and homesickness in the wilderness of brick and mortar, breuthes up all the air on your block in half a dozen shrieking inhalations of his double-acting lungs, as he goes howling down the street. The only bird in sight, the pugnacious English sporrow—whom not the summer's heat, nor winter's storm, not the summer's leat, nor winter's storm, nor hate of men, nor rubber slings of boyish archers nor yet the prowling cat that climbs the trailing vine or walks along the dizzy reaches of the cornice to feed upon the tooth-some sparrow squab—the sparrow, whom not all the stings and arrows of outrageous for-tune can subdue, quarrels and fights all day after its kind, and keeps you in a state of continual irritation, when you would be cool and calm. You try to read, sitting before the coolest window in the shadlest nook in the house, but every room is kept so dark for fear of heat and flies that you cannot read at noonday without lighting boup or gas, and that would turn the room into a roaring, fiery

If by stealth the man should let in a little light and air—that is a man's idea of cool-ing a room, to open it wider than the Chicago Exposition, and let in all the dust, and bent, and noise, and flies, and glare the street can pour into it—he is discovered every time. She whose genius had made every room in the house a storage warehouse for night air comes in and wonders "where all these flies came from?" He, with extravagant gesticulation, doesn't know-at least he says he doesn't, and doesn't care, which is true; what he wants to know is when they are going back again? These constant companions of man in all i sunny hours make life a burden to her. He comes home from the wearisome office, and she meets him at the door. The smile of welcome still lingers faintly on her face, the ghost of what it used to be a few weeks before

TEARS, IDLE TEARS

A N anxious look sits enthroned in her A eyes, which behold not him, but seem to be fixed upon invisible things in the circumto be fixed upon invisible things in the circum-ambient air. In one band she holds a fly brush or the ever-ready apron. She holds the screen door open about three inches, that is, if he is six inches in diameter; if he is eight, she will hold the door an inch wider, but never quite so wide as he is; he wriggles in sidewise, holding his breath to make himself harrower, and as he makes the passage, above his head, and under his feet, around his less his head, and under his feet, around his legs that apron will which and rustle and flap like a restless comet that has lost its bearings and got into the wrong system. When he crowds in at length two flies follow him; not on him, but after him. She lets the door swing to with all the emphasis the inanimate spring can throw into a slam, and weeping, says that she can go in and out of that door fifty times and any and never let in a fly, while every time anybody else comes in millions of flies follow them. Tears, idle tears. Little do the flies care for them. One vicious slap of a folded newspaper disturbs a fly on the wall more than all the tears that have been wept since Niobe roads a spectuale of herself. made a spectacle of herself.

FLY TO THE DESERT, FLY WITH ME

EVERYTHING then, finding the city un-endumble, flies to the country in the summer time. Even the circus withdraws from the dust of the town, finding much deeper dust and much dryer on the country ways. Man is not a free agent; he obeys not only inexorable laws of destiny, but likewise only inexorable laws of destiny, but likewise his wife's. He decides on going into the country; she selects the locality. She is the last one to leave the house. She trusted him once. That was thirteen years ago. He left the back kitchen door wide open and also the gas burning in the front hall. Cats and dogs and things dwelt in that kitchen, and that fan-jet of gas burned like the "fire that burns for are" or at least used to on the altars in the aye" or at least used to, on the altars in the temple of Puldownjahr Vesta, all that summer, temple of Puldownjahr Vesta, all that summer, Let us draw a veil over the home-coming that year. They did. Since then she has been the last to leave the ship, as indeed is the captain's place. Rest and quiet follows the excitement of preparation and departure, and she leans back in her sent in the pleasant car, with the expression of a woman who is waiting for her wings to come home, and is confident they will match and fit without alteration. They debark at the station, where the wagon is waiting to take the happy family to the snammer house. Horror smoothes her tranquil face the wrong way! She just remembers that from sheer force of habit she left the front door key under the mat. She looks about for a clean place in which to have left the front door key under the mat. She afit. And she would have it too, but her husband's laugh recalls her. He means it for a triumphant taunt. Instead of gall and wormwood, it is nepenthe, first proof and heroic dosc. She is herself again. He laughs at her all the way to the farm. Then he remembers that after carefully locking all the trunks he put the keys in his cout pocket, and then changed his coat. The keys are hanging over the back of a chair in his room one hundred and sixty-five miles away. Carone hundred and sixty-five miles away. Cur-

"UNDER THE TREES"

It is pleasant loitering under the leafy cano-ples of July woods, far from the madding crowd, from the city sights and sounds. It is rather a strange sensation, at first, to get the rather a strange sensation, at first, to get the weather prognostications two days afterward, but that soon wears away, and you find yourself wondering, with no little anxiety, when you plan a little picnic, a fishing excursion, or a mountain climb, what kind of weather we probably had day before yesterday? It is something of a hovelty to learn the art of making ice cream without a freezer; also without ice; likewise without cream. What ingredicuts are used you never discover, but you ents are used you never discover, know they are new to your astonished palate. Your busband wears a flaming red and black striped blazer as he strolls across the pasture, and learns that animals are not color blindstriped blazer as he strolls across the posture, and learns that animals are not color black at least not all of them. He reaches the fence in time to prevent your budding into charm-ing widowhood, but the animal which escorted him thither bears away the bated blazer on its borns, like a triumphant law and order siety that has mided a procession of anar-ists. You lie down under the whispering trees, but the lawn is not the velvet land-made grass plat of the town lot. It is roughly grass pint of the town lot. It is roughly moved with the swift sweeping scythe, and is of the stub, stubble: you give that up. More-over, while the fly has ceased to trouble, the intrusive ant has come upon the stage, and say what you will of the fly, he did not crawl up one's sleeves and down one's back, nor inup one's sleeces and down one's back, nor into one's shoes. Files are bad enough, we think, until we strike a few choice, fat and menty mesquitoes or a handful of sportive ants! You ask the farmer how soon the blackberries will be ripe. He says this week, if your boys go back to town. If they stay out he doesn't reckon we will have any ripe fruit of any sort this year. This settles the farmer's standing with mater familie. What time those dear innocent boys have to interfere with the fruit prospectus is more than you can conjecture. THE GLORIFIED BLACKBERRIES

THE creek is four miles away, and the boys disappear regularly soon after breakfast with bait enough to feed a state hatchery, and hooks and lines enough to fit out a mackerel fleet. They return at supper time, wet and muddy to the eyes, and with nothing about their persons except appetites, which seems to have been lost by some wandering ostrich of the desert, accompanied by vacuums to match. When the blackberries, taking advantage of a wild midnight ride for the dector, seven miles away, and the subsequent advantage of a wild midnight ride for the doctor, seven miles, away, and the subsequent sequestration of the boys in bed for five or six days, finally do ripen, you revel in the luxury of eating "live" berries from the vines. Your joy is a little tempered now and then. The trail of the serpent is over everything in this bright world of ours. We could manage the serpent, maybe; the hogs will run the snakes out of any bramble patch in one season. But there is a bug with a name as long as a snake that abides among the blackberries. He does not eat them. He just haunts the patches where city boarders are staying, and makes it his business to arise early in the morning and crawl over the largest and finest and ripest berries. When you cat a blackberry and ripest berries. When you cat a blackberry that has been glorified by a visit from this bug, you just lie right down in the briars and ask to die. You do not want to live a minute longer. Not with that taste in your mouth. If I understand rightly what a bramble is, the blackberry, in a state of nature, is the brambliest thing that ever brambled. A hu-man being, clothed and in his right mind, who goes in at one side of a wild blackberry patch and comes out at the other is moved with wonder at the compensations of nature. with wonder at the compensations of nature, For every one of the thousand scratches on his perishing frame he has a rendy-made landage hanging loosely from his rainsent. How men can behold such things and yet vote the other ticket is a mystery to everybody eise. If you will run your hand, or better, your sleeve, lightly down a blackberry cane, from top to root, you will observe that all the briars hook upward, to catch everthing that comes down. Then, if you will run up the other way, you will observe that all the briars hook down ward, in order to catch everything as it comes ward, in order to catch everything as it comes up. You remember the woman who always brings the biggest basket to the Sunday School picnic brings it empty? Well, she is a sort of human blackberry cane. You watch her breaking her back when she carries that basket

WHAT'S IN A NAME

What's in a Name

The blackberry has more good points and better staying qualities than the strawberry, but the strawberry has the longer pedigree and the larger family. Last spring, having occasion to lay in a new strawberry bed—I had slept in a fearful hollow of a large assortment of billowy hotel beds all winter, and wanted a change—I sat down one evening to read up on the strawberry. After ascertaining that of some one hundred and thirty-five varieties, not more than one hundred and seventy-four could be conscientiously recommended as the best by the editor, I wrote for another magazine. It had a list of only eighty-six varieties, but they were all new, and all different from the other man's. I understand that of the eighteen thousand new words added to the language in the Century dictionary, if that is the correct number, some fifteen ary, if that is the correct number, some fifteen thousand were secured from the catalogues of the nurserymen, and twelve thousand of these were the names of strawberries, mostly new. I have resorted to naming everything in my garden over again, as soon as I buy it. In this way I can remember the names, and the berries and things thrive quite as well under

A FIELD FOR INVENTIVE GENIUS

WHAT is needed in the small fruit market W HAT is needed in the small fruit market is not so many names but a few more berries, say about two pints to the quart, Every berry in the land has more names now than a caterpillar, and be has more than he can remember. When he begins business he is a plain enterpillar, and everybody who steps on him knows just what to call him. Then he retires—that is if he has a chance to retire before he is trodden under foot—and is known as a larva; then he gets to be a pupo or a chrysalis or something, and by the time or a chrysalis or something, and by the time he gets to be a butterfly he forgets what the old firm name was. You are probably think-ing of some people just now who, like the strawberry, travel on their names. And do not just exactly know how they got them,

A POWER FOR EVIL

have fostered and developed, if they did not create, a passion for gambling. But the strawberry wears the blue ribbon when it comes to making liars of men. It has got to be so that men and women universally disbelieve the combined statement, supported by affidavits, of the strawberry man, the strawberry box, and the strawberry himself. The purchaser turns the box over to look for the telescopic bottom, he measures the box to estimate its canty cubic contents, and then be pours the service out on the table to see the corruption and littleness and greenness of mendarity hidden away under the aweet-faced, honestlooking liars that lie on top. This also is vanity. Still, one must not too harshly nor yet too quickly blume the strawberry for all this. A newspaper says "The steam and horse railways of this country compel 150,000 men to labor and break the Salbath every week." Well, yes; so they do. But you can't hold the railways responsible for the other 285,000 men who insist upon going fishing

Robert J. Burdette

HOW AND WHERE CHICAGO GROWS

INTERESTING QUESTIONS CONCISELY ANSWERED

Q. At what rate is Chicago growing as shown by the last census? A. One new inhabitant every nine minutes from 1880 to 1890.

Q. To what is this remarkable growth largely attributed? A. To the location of new manu-facturing concerns.

Q. How much population do some of the larger factories bring? A. From 5,000 to 10,000 at a time.

Q. What is remarkable about the location of factories? A. They do not find sites inside of Chicago, but in some of her manufacturing suburbs

Q. What about factories that grow up inside the city? A. When they reach large proportions they also remove to a manufacturing suburb.

Q. What is the reason for this? A. They are afforded ample room at very low prices, and better shipping facilities than inside the city; also cheaper taxes, cheaper labor, and immunity from strikes and troubles incident to city legislation.

Q. What must a given point possess to be attractive to factories? A. It must be the junction of two or more railroads, affording it the Chicago rates of freight to all points.

Q. What kind of railroad affords the best shipping facilities? A. A Belt Railroad, which encircles a city, making a switch connection with all its railroads and thereby effecting a quick and complete system of transfer for freights.

Q. What other facilities ought a manufactur-ing town to afford? A. The cheapest and best fuel in the market.

Q. What is coming to be the favorite fuel with the largest consumers? A. Crude petro-leum, because it is cheaper and its supply is uninterrupted and automatically regulated, thereby dispensing with firemen.

thereby dispensing with firemen.

Q. What notable example of fuel oil may be mentioned? A. The Illinois Steel Company, perhaps the largest fuel consumers in Chicago, formerly used train loads of cost daily, and owned and controlled their own coal mines, coal railroads, and coal cars. After experimenting with fuel oil, they discarded coal altogether and now burn 5,000 barrels of fuel oil daily.

Q. What advantages has the new factory town of Griffith? A. It has four railroads, including a complete belt line and also the two oil pipe lines of the Standard Oil Company.

Q. What facilities do these afford? A. Chi-

Q. What facilities do these afford? A. Chi-cago rates of freight to all railroad points, a very cheap local rate to and from Chicago, and a constant supply of fuel oil free of freight charges and uninterrupted by the delays of shipments, strikes, and washouts.

Q. Can any other manufacturing suburb lay claim to all of Griffith's advantages? A. No. A few have equally good shipping facilities and others have fuel oil, but NO OTHER POINT HAS

Q. What has been the history of real estate investments in other manufacturing suburbs of Chicago? A. They have been uniformly profit-able, and values have increased much faster than in ordinary residence suburbs. A few lots bought early have made their owner rich.

Q. Have Griffith lots already had a rapid advance? A. No. The point is new, and investments can be had on the ground floor.

Q. What can lots be had for and on what terms? A. Residence lots range from $100 to $300, and business lots from $350 to $625 on monthly payments of $4 to $15 if desired.

Q. Why are business lots generally considered the best investments? A. Because their number is limited, and the value to which they may rise is unlimited.

Q. Where can a map of Griffith, showing its relative location to Chicago, be seen? A. On the back cover page of the February, April and June issues of THE LADIES' HOME JOURNAL.

Q. Who are the promoters of Griffith? A. Jay Dwiggins & Co., 142 Washington Street, Chi-cago, who sends plats and all particulars free.

Q. How may lots be purchased by those who cannot now visit Griffith? A. Having sent for a plat with prices and terms printed upon it, a selection of lots may be made and a deposit of $10 a lot sent, which will secure them for thirty days within that time the full or half cash payments may be sent, entitling the purchaser to a liberal discount, or monthly payments may be made if desired.

O. In case the nurchaser does not wish to

POWER FOR EVIL

Q. In case the purchaser does not wish to rely upon his own judgment and wishes to secure lots, in a general way, than any other one thing, perhaps, in all the world. Cards have fastered and developed, if they did not a deposit of factories and developed, if they did not a deposit of $10 per lot and request Jay Dwig-gins & Co. to select for him the best lots unsold of the price desired.

Q. What have purchasers found to be the business rule of this firm relative to lot selections? A. Those who visit Griffith and look over the ground may have any lots they please; those who leave the selection to their judgment. those who leave the selection to their judgment get none but the best located lots unsold of the price and kind desired.

Q. What guarantee do they make? A. All lots selected by them are guaranteed high and What privilege have customers who are unsuited with selections made for them? A. They may exchange for any lots unsold.

What does THE LADIES' HOME JOURNAL recommend to those thinking of making real estate investments? A. A thorough investi-gation of Griffith's claims before buying else-

Q. What assurance have THE LADIES' HOME JOURNAL readers that they will be fairly treated by Jay Dwiggins & Co. should they wish to invest? A. The firm is one of high reputation and good standing in Chicago, and refer to the Columbia National and the Metropolitan Na-tional Banks of Chicago and the Chicago Real Estate Board, who may be written to.

this Department is to bring the members of the Order of The King's Daughters to closer relations by personal and familiar "Talks" and "Chais." All letters rs" bearing upon this one and special purpose only, should be addressed to got The Lantes' Home JOHENAL, and she will be glad to receive them. Please end letters to MRS. BOTTONE concerning membership in the Order, or business f any nature. All such should be addressed direct to the headquarters of the wenty-third Street, New York city, and prompt attention will be given.

TO HEART TALKS

REALLY think that this menth I ought to tell you of some things the members of my Circle have said to nie. One dear woman writes me that she has joined our Circle, but that she does not expect to do any great work in the world, but says she has a field of labor, for she has a large family; and she adds that it seems to her a greater work to over-come berself than to endow a college when one has plenty of money; for she is planty of money; for she is r case, it would be easier to give n to practice self-denial, and I with her. "A large family!"
such that means when all the girls n and the boys men. To "show nome" (it does not say talk it) is creat a work as some of us will ever : writes and thanks me for trying om "things" to "thoughts," and for the girls to think more truly and live bly than neerely for self and worldly
s. She says where she is the tide of reldiy life is so rushing, the air so full ish struggle. She closes a most internud to me helpful, letter, with this w: "I am only an ordinary mother; res and problems and first work, and all a strength for, lie right close to me in one; but I feel a sleep interest and symone; but I feel a deep interest and sym-in all lines of progress leading upward." all I can say is, I wish we had more ordinary mothers.

OUTSIDE-INSIDE

i passing along one of our principal avennes the other day, and glancing, as one apt to do, at the houses, I was surprised to, in the windows of a "brown stone front," stead of flowers statuary; and the faces ore toward the street. They were very stead of flowers statuary; and the faces are toward the street. They were very vely, but they impressed me painfully. I nought of those inside the house who had of the benefit of the beauty, as strangers on he outside had. As I walked on, I fell to hinking. Was not the statuary facing the street a picture of real facts that exist in many houses, where the outside gets the benefit of the beauty and pleasant things, rather than the inside? Have you not noticed that there are hoones where the sweetest things are not said to those in the home, to those hearest, but to the outside, to those not connected with the family? Many a woman is charming in appearance, in conversation, to the outside, but is far less charming inside the home; and, but is far less charming inside the home; and, of course, it is equally true of men. Some men are leveliest at home as husbands, as men are loveliest at home as husbands, as fathers; some men are most charming in their club and with those outside the homes. We seem to take it for granted that the things most vital to our happiness will grow inside the family without cultivation, and all the cultivation to insure admiration is expended outside the home. The husband is apt to drop the lover in the husband; and the wife, who before marriage did everything to please, acts as if that was all over, and the statuary faces the outside, and from the outside rather, perhaps, than from the inside, we hear the perhaps, than from the inside, we hear the words, "How lovely!" We take too much for granted as wives and mothers; because he is our husband, and they are our children, we think that all we want ought to come to us.

FAMILY RELAT

THE fact is, we must cultivate the friendship of our own—the fact that they are ours in the sense of family relationship does not neces-surily make them ours in the sense that we most need them. Friendship must be grafted on the stock of family relationship. Many a bushand is not a gentleman at house though a gentleman outside of home, and equally so with the wife; but the wife needs the gentle-man, and the hushand needs the lady. Then if you add to this the educated woman and the educated man, and education must always be going on, so that the interesting article in the magazine and the daily news should be shared, then you get companionship, and that is necessary to both: and whether in landshand or wife, what they do not get inside the home we must not be surprised if they get outside the home. We are now and again startled by revelations we do not eare to speak of, but what led to the fatal step we do not hear. Then in regard to our children; we must make friends of them, and friendship is a thing that needs cultivation. I know families where the sons and daughters almost worship the mother; but in such cases they are unlike what gave me the thought I am gaving to you the best was not given to the outside,

CULTIVATE THE HOME

NOW, do not misunderstand me. I do not mean that the outside must not not mean that the outside must not have anything, that the mother must always stay at home. If she does, she can never give her best to the home. She needs to be freshened by outside contact. She must minister to the highest in her husband and her children, and to do this she must not stay in the bones all the time. There are women who, as they say, only care for their husband and their children. Well, they are in danger of not belog much cared for by them in some future; for a woman must grow to keep up with her husband and children, and to grow she must not stay in the house all the time if she can get out. She must go out and get, in order to take in and give. There is, or should be, such interest in emptying the budget of order to take in and give. There is, or should be, such interest in emptying the budget of news at night when all get home. Cultivate your conversational powers at home. There must be a change in a good many families; perhaps each member of the home interests people outside, and when home is reached each one is selfishly silent. I wondered how that statuary looked that I saw on the avenue to those taske the parlor. Take the lesson, Daughters and Sons (for I find the Sons read this page). Do not neglect those you really this page). Do not neglect those you really love the best, and on whom you will have to depend some time for your greatest comfort.

GIVE AND IT SHALL BE GIVEN YOU

THE flowers will not cost you any more now The flowers will not cost you any more now that the pretty girl you sent the flowers to is the mother, do you think she will not appreciate the flowers? As I stepped into a lovely room a few days ago, and looked at the great tall roses, my friend, who has been married about three years, said to me, as I exclaimed at the beauty of the ruses, "My husband sent them to me. He has kept me in flowers ever since our marriage, just as he did before we them to me. He has kept me in flowers ever since our marriage, just as he did before we were married." And verily he has his reward in the radiant face of his wife. I said, calling her by name: "Any one, to look at you, would see there were no strained relationships in your case." In this case there was plenty of money, and perhaps some of you are saying: "I would give costly flowers, too, if I had the money." Smiles, kind, appreciative words, do not cost money, and they are Insperishable flowers. If you married that you might have a housekeeper, do not be surprised if you only have a housekeeper. You will get in your family, as well as outside of it, what you give and no more. "Give, and it shall be given you." applies to the home, and many a woman gives her sweetest smiles to those outside the home, because from outside she gets them, rather from the inside where she ought to have them. So it will pay us to she ought to have them. So it will pay us to look at this subject from all sides. I am rather tired of seeing all the flowers at wed-dings and funerals; we need a few in between. dings and funerals; we need a few in between, Maybe a few flowers put into the land when it was warm, instead of when icy cold, night have kept the hands warm a little longer. Anyway, it would have made the beart, that has at last ceased to beat, a little lighter. The first bit of poetry I ever remember to have committed to memory commenced:

"Let us love one nuother, Not long may we stay."

LIFE IN OUR CIRCLE WHAT work is your Circle doing?" This W is the question that comes to me, and the writer adds that she fears the Margaret Bottome Circle is selfish. Well, if we were asked individually whether we were unselfish, I imagine the answer would be: "I want to be unselfish." I find I have a great business on my hands in trying to be unselfish. So you see, my dear friend, that each member of you see, my dear friend, that each member of the Circle has a work to do in being unselfish from day to day. I know the lives of many of my Circle; they tell me what they have to endure—how hedged in so many of them are. If I should tell you the histories of many of those women you would need no other novel. Oh, the hard battle that is being fought out that only God knows about! Day after day the deep mean of suffering hearts comes to see from my Circle. Now and seem comes of the deep mean of suttering nearts comes to me from my Circle. Now and again comes a burst of sunshine from some happy daughter, who tells me that her life is a stream of joy, her husband lovely, simply worships her; and her children are a perfect delight. One of this class wrote me the other day that after rending my talk one month she thought she would write to me and tell me to write in people who had no troubles; but before the letter was written one of the dear children sickened. and when her letter come to me it had a dark border. How few have no troubles! How quickly the bright life finds itself in shadow! The truest way of getting light ourselves is by trying to give light to others.

BE NOT EASILY CAST DOWN

THEN a rare letter from what we call a so-"HEN a rare letter from what we call a sa-ciety woman in our Circle. She says:
"Please take me in the 'Mangarez Bottome Circle." I am rich in temporal blessings, but oh, so poor in grace and strength, so easily 'cast down!" I hesitate from telling you the trials of this person in attempting to form a Circle. She was so surprised at the pride that was shown by church members in regard to the social standing of those that were in the Circle; she saw so much self-seeking and self-aggrand/zement that she retired from what is aggrandizement that she retired from what is called Christian work; but in being with us in our corner she tells me that she was brought back to the true spirit of our order. I am sure this dear sister will not feel that I non betraying any secrets, for she is only one of many who could write just the same from their "exquisite homes." She says "It is harder for us who live in the whirl of society, with pressure home duties to pressess His harder for us who live in the whirl of society, with pressing home duties, to possess His spirit continually. It is so hard to find the time for taking in, so I fear we miss knowing His will toward us." And then she tells me of her disappointment in the spirit of "children workers." So much is done for the poor, she adds, and so little for the rich, and they are so often the spiritually needs: their trials dren workers." So much is done for the poor, she adds, and so little for the rich, and they are so often the spiritually needy; their trials are legion where money does not belp. The most tender part of the letter I cannot give you, but she has been won to the "better part" through our talks in the Journal. I thank the dear sister for her letter; and what shall I say of so many letters that have come to me? One lies before me now that almost took my breath away for very joy. The letter is from California. She tells me her life is a "sweetly busy one," but that she sits once a month close to use and takes in all I say in the Journal. But what made my beart give a great bound was this: "There are fully one thousand King's Daughters in southern California asking for the Father's loving benediction to rest upon you. Is there a possibility that we may see you here some day not very far away?" Well, really, I felt like starting at once, and I assure you I am still hoping to see the State I have so wanted to see; but whether I ever will or not, that letter took me through a golden gote, and I was in a climate where the flowers of love were very wonderful! And for a moment I seemed to realize my extreme wealth in the love of many women. I can never tell the joy this Journal, has been to me, and it seems to me I never saw a magazine so loved by those who take it."

USING THE WILL

To keep your faith in a good God, under some circumstances, is no little thing, yet you must. You must "hold the fort." You must use your will; get it on the right side and use it. 1 will! I will! fell do right if it kills me! I will die doing right! There is a sentence it would be well for us to meditate on: "Satan entered into him." Satan never enters well it will be right has cidided. I have "Salan entered into him." Salan never enters until the will to do right has yielded. I have had the saddest things come to my knowledge of late, cases where the will had been yielded to do the wrong thing so long that it seemed to have no power to do right; and when I targed the cessation of wrong-doing the answer has been: "I may say I will not yield to temptation, and yet I know I shall when it comes. I seem to have no will," O, how pitiful it all was! And then I did so want to urge upon the young to get in the habit of using their will upon the side of right.

CHARACTER SOWING

EVERY action is a seed you sow, and you reap habit; "you sow habit, and you reap character; you sow character, and you reap destiny." I am glad to think of how many will rend these words at this time. Use your will! Guard your will; it is the citadel of your character. I like, at this time in my life, to look back over the way I have come; and, for the sake of others especially, get at the sources of power and weakness in my own character. I was brought up in a church where we ter. I was brought up in a church where we were trained to speak of our spiritual life as a kind of Circle of the King's Daughters, though not so called. I belonged to a "class," as it was called. I well remember that at one time was called. I well remember that at one time in my young life I simply said one thing week after week: "I do not belong to Satan, and he shall not have me. I do belong to Christ, and I will be His." Ab, well, it has been the refrain of my life, with variations; and after all these years I still feel the need of "I will," and "I will not." I wish I could get you to see that the very thorn in the flesh in your life, which you may know and do know, may become the source of power in your life.

Do you think, dear Circle, that I talk too much to you on this subject? Well, perhaps I should not but for the letters my Circle send me. Sometimes I think that whatever the should not but for the letters my Circle send me. Sometimes I think that whatever the work of others may be, mine becomes more and more a ministry of sympathy, there are so many broken hearts to be bound up, and the oil of sympathy is constantly called for. And at times all I can say is: "I am so sorry for everybody, dear God, do help everybody," and I am sure He will. I am sure that this night of sorrow will soon end in joyons day, and we can lighten our own load by taking a little of somebody's else load. Strange paradox, but it is true! O, believe me, dear daughters, as you turn from your load to help, even just ns you turn from your lead to help, even just a little, to bear somebody's else load, your own will lighten, or there will come fresh strength to bear. We will not be selfish; we will care to bear. We will not be selfish; we will care for some more fortors sister, and maybe, some time, will not on the suggestion of the one who wrote she feared we were selfish, and we will take hold of hands and lift from the pile of misery, and enlarge the pile of happiness.

BAD TIMES FOR BABIES

By A. P. GHINNKLL, M. D. Dean of the Medical Faculty, University of Vermont.

After using lactated food for five years in cases of children suffering from cholera infantum, and in debilitating or wasting diseases, during which time it has never failed me, I have pleasure in calling the attention of physicians to it, and in recommending its use.

Affinells

The statement above is one of inestimable value to mothers, if they will but avail them-selves of Prof. Grinnell's experience.

More than one-third of all the babies born die before they have lived a year, and two-thirds of the little unfortunates die in the thirds of the little unfortunates die in the summer months.

Cholera infantum is, of course, the most de-structive cause. The infant's stomach gives out, and frequently the natural food is not nourishing. That is one reason why lactated food is used. This food is pleasant to the taste, ensily digested, and contains the elements of strength that the little ones so sadly need. It is what physicians term a predigested food. It is what physicians term a predigested food, and they consider it especially valuable in all weak conditions of the digestive organs, not only for infinits, but for invalids, the agest, and all whose atomichs are weak. Thousands of packages are prescribed every year by physi-ciaus, but the greatest demand comes at this

Wells, Richardson & Co., of Burlington, Vt., who put up lactated food, have probably received more heartfelt letters of gratitude from delighted mothers whose habies' lives the food has saved than one could read in a month. Hundreds of photographs of little ones have been sent to the company by grateful parents. A child's life is too sacred a thing to be trifled with. Lactated food should be used from now on through the summer, until the child is old enough the summer, until the shift is old enough to cat other food with safety. It is not expensive; it is not a secret; it is prepared under the supervision of no less a man than Prof. Boynton, of the Vermont University; it will prevent cholera infantum; it will save the life of the child who is wasting away with this dread disease. From every away with this dread disease. From every part of the country come the most grateful testimonials of its vulue—from mothers and fathers whose babies have been saved, and from invalids to whom it has given strength.

We wish to impress upon the readers of Trix Lanus' Home Journal that herated food is not a medicine—it is simply nature's substitute for mother's milk, and is a pure food that has savel many a little one's life. All reputable druggists sell it, or it can be mailed on receipt. of price, twenty-five cents, lifty cents or one dollar. We will send free to any mother, a pamphlet containing valuable information, and also a beautiful birthday card for her baby, at her request.

WELLS, RICHARDSON & Co., Burlington, Vt.

Are you a member The International Order OF THE Bing's Paughters and Sone ?

The Silver Cross?

DO YOU TAKE

The Silver Cross?

The early official organ of the Society, published by the Created Council at the Residence of the Society and official organ of the Society, published by the Created Council at the Residence of the Created Council at the Residence of the Created Council at the Residence of the Order. The Stitves Cross is the only journed that publishes the popular Perwing-Room Ribbs Tarks of Mrs. Margaret Sottome. Presidence of the Collect For many years Mrs. Ratioms has inspired large such season of the Collect For many years Mrs. Ratioms has inspired large such season to the Collect For many years Mrs. Ratioms has inspired large such season of the Collect Residual to the Collect Residual properties of the Collect Residual to the Residual to the Collect Residua

CATALOGUE PREEL

WHEEL for INVALIDS To propel one's self in, comfortably, reliable sort. Send with cut prices on CHAIRS and CRIPPLES.

or be pushed about easily, and of the stamp for cutalog all styles and stres.

SHITH WHEEL CHAIR CONCERN, 120 William Street, New York

The ROCKER WASHER

has proved the most satis-factory of any Waster over placed upon the market. It is warranted to wash an ordinary family washing of 100 pieces in One Hour in clean as can be washed on the washboard. Writeon the washboard. for prices and full descrip-

R WASHER COMPANY Fort Wayne, Indiana ROCKER

THE HORSE AND THE RACE TRACK

By Rev. T. De Witt Talmage, D. D.

ROM many sources have there recently come to me letters asking that at this particular season of the year I shall write something of horse racing; whether I believe in the whether I believe in the turf, and if racing a horse means cruelty to it. It was my privilege, some years ago, to preach a special sermon on the horse, and I said then, what in this day bolds good, and even more so, that there needs to be a redistribution of coronets among the heute creation.

brute creation.

THE HORSE IN THE BIBLE

FOR ages the tion has been called the king of beasts. I knock off its coronet and put the crown upon the horse, in every way nobler, whether in shape or spirit, sagacity or intelligence, affection or usefulness. He is semi-human, and knows how to reason on a small scale. The Centaur of olden times, part sman sense. The center of odern times, part-horse and part man, seems to be a suggestion of the fact that the horse is something more than a beast. Job sets forth his strength, his beauty, his majesty, the panting of his nostril, the pawing of his boof, and his enthusiasm for the battle. What Ross Bonheur did for the cattle, and what Landscor did for the dog, Lob with mighter paged does for the borse. Job, with mightier pencil, does for the horse the horse in the Bible.

Job, with mightier pencil, does for the borse—
the horse in the Bible.

Eighty-eight times does the Bible speak of the horse; he comes into every kingly procossion, and into every great occasion, and into every triumph. It is very evident that Job and David, and Isalah and Ecckiel and Jeremiah and John were fond of the horse.
He comes into much of their imagery; a red horse—that meant war; a black horse—that meant famine; a pale horse—that meant death; a white horse—that meant victory.
Good Mordecai mounts him while Haman holds the bit. The Church's advance in the Bible is compared to a company of horses of Pharaoh's charlot. Jeremiah cries out:

"How canst thou contend with horses?"
Isala says: "The horse's hoofs shall be counted as filnt." Miriam clasps her cymbals and sings: "The horse and the rider hath He thrown into the sea." St. John, describing Christ as coming foeth from comquest to conquest represents Him as seated on a white horse. In the parade of heaven the Bible makes us hear the clicking of hoofs on the golden pavement: "The armies which were in heaven followed Him on white horses."

As the Bible makes a favorite of the horse, the patriarch, and the prophet and the evangelist and the apostle stroking his sleek hide and patting his rounded neck, and tenderly lifting his exquisitely formed hoof, and lightening with a thrill to the champ of his bit, so all great natures, in all ages, have spoken or him in encomiastic terms. Virgil, in his Georgies, almost seems to plagiarize from this description of Job, so much are the descriptions alike—the description of Virgil, and the description of Job, so much are the descrip-tions alike—the description of Virgil, and the description of Job.

THE HORSE IN HISTORY THE Buke of Wellington would not allow I any one irreverently to touch his old war-horse "Copenhagen," on whom he had ridden fifteen hours without dismounting, at Waterloo; and when the old horse died bis master ordered a military salute fired over his grave. John Howard showed that he did not exhuest all his sympathies in pitying the human race; for, when sick, be writes home:
"Has my old chaise horse become sick or spoiled?" There is hardly any passage of French literature more pathetic than the lameentation over the death of the war charger, "Marchegay." Walter Scott has so much admiration for this divinely-honored creature of God, that in "St. Ronan's Well" be orders the girth slackened, and a blanket thrown over the snoking flanks. Edmund Burke, walking in the park at Beaconsfield, musing over the post, throws his arms around the worn-out horse of his dead son Richard, and weeps upon the horse's neck, the horse seeming to sympathize in the memories. Rowland Hill, the great English preacher, was caricatured because in his family prayers he supplicated for the recovery of a sick horse; but when the horse got well, contrary to all the prophecies of the farriers, the prayer did not seem quite so much of an absurdity. THE Duke of Wellington would not allow prophecies of the farriers, the prayer did not seem quite so much of an absurdity.

MALTREATMENT OF THE HORSE

WHAT do I think of the maltreatment of of God, you ask me? If Thomas Chilmers, in his day, felt called upon to utter a protest against ornelty to animals, how much more, in this day, is there a constant need of articles and books in defence of the horse! All bonor to the memory of Henry Bergh, the chief apostle for the brute creation, for the mercy apostle for the brute creation, for the mercy he demanded and achieved for this king of brasts. And no smaller wreath of laurel for Miss Sewell, for her God-inspired work, "Black Beauty." A man who owned four thousand horses, and some say forty thousand, wrote in the Bible: "A righteous man regarded the life of his beasts." Sir Henry Lawrence's care of the horse was beautifully Christian. He says; "I expect we shall hose 'Conrad,' though I have taken so much care of him that he may come in cool. I always of him that he may come in cool. I always walk him the last four or five miles, and as I walk myself the first hour, it is only in the middle of the journey we get over the ground."

THE MAN WHO TORTURES A HORSE

THE MAN WHO TORTURIS A HORSE

I DO not believe in the transmigration of sonis, but I cannot very severely denounce the idea; for when I see men who cut and bruise and whack and welt and strike and mani and outrage and insult the horse, that beautiful servant of the human race, who carries our burdens, and pulls our plows, and turns our threshers and our mills, and rons for our doctors—when I see men thus beating and abusing and extraction that creature if for our doctors—when I see men thus beating and abusing and outraging that creature, it, seems to me that it would be only fair that the doctrine of transmigration of souls should prove true, and that for their punishment they should pass over into some poor, miserable brute, and be beaten and whacked and cruelly treated, and frezen and heated and over-driven into an everlasting stage horse, an eternal trav-eler on a tow-path, or tied to an eternal post in an eternal winter.

Oh, is it not a shame that the brute creation.

eler on a tow-path, or field to an eternal postin an eternal winter.

Ob, is it not a shame that the brute creation, which had the first possession of our world, should be so maltreated by the race that came in last! The fowl and the fish were created on the fifth day, the horse and the cattle were created on the morning of the sixth day, but the human race was not created until the evening of the sixth day. It ought to be that if any man over-drives a horse, or feeds him when hot, or recklessly drives a nail into the quick of his foot, or rowels him to see him prance, or so shoes him that his fotlocks drop blood, or uses the diabolical check-rein, or puts a collar on a raw nock, or unnecessarily clutches his tongue with a twisted bit, or cuts off his hair until he has no defence against the cold, or unmertifully abbreviates the natural defence against insectile annoyance, that such a man as that himself ought to be made to pult and let his horse ride!

THE QUESTION OF SPEED

DUT not only do our humanity and our Christian principles and the dictates of God demand that we kindly treat the brute creation, and especially the horse; but I say that whatever can be done for the development of his flectness and his strength and his majesty ought to be done. We need to study bis anatomy and his adaptations. I am glad that books have been written to show how he can be curred, and what his usefulness is, and what his capacities are. It would be a shame if in this age of the world, when the florist has turned the thin flower of the wood into a gorgeous rose, and the ponologist has changed the acrid and gnarled fruit of the ancients into the very poetry of pear and peach and plum and grape and apple; and the scarling cur of the Orient has become the great mastiff, and the miserable creature of the olden time harmyard has become the Devonshire and the Alderney and the short-horn, that the time harmyard has become the Devonshire and the Alderney and the short-horn, that the horse, grander than them all, should get no advantage from our science or our civilization or our Christianity. Groomed to the last point of soft brilliance, his flowing mane a billow of beauty, his arched neck in utmost rhythm of curve, let him be harnessed in graceful trap-pings, and then driven to the furthest goal of excellence and then fed at huxuring on this. pings, and then driven to the furthest goal of excellence, and then fed at luxuriant out bins, and blanketed in comfortable stall. The long-tried and faithful servant of the human race deserves all kindness, all care, all reward, all succulent forage and soft litter and paradisal-cal pasture-field. Those farms in Kentucky, and in different parts of the north, where the horse is trained to perfection in fleetness and in beauty and in majesty, are well set apart.

WHEN THE TURF IS INJURIOUS BUT what shall I say of the effort being made in this day, on a large scale, to make this splendid creature of God, this divinely-honored being, an instrument of atrocious evil? I write no indiscriminate assault against the turf; I believe in the turf if it can be against the turf; I believe in the turf if it can be conducted on right principles, and with no betting. There is no more harm in offering a prize for the swiftest racer than there is harm at an agricultural fair in offering a prize to the farmer who has the best wheat, or to the fruit grower who has the largest pear, or to the machinist who presents the best corn-thresher, or in a school offering a prize of a copy of Sunkespeare to the best reader, or in a household giving a lump of sugar to the best-behaved youngster. But the sin begins where the betting begins, for that is gambling, or the effort to get that for which you give no or the effort to get that for which you give no equivalent; and gambling, whether on a large scale or a small scale, ought to be denounced scale or a small scale, ought to be denounced of men, as it will be accurred of God. If you have uron fifty cents or five thousand dollars as a wager, you had better get rid of it -get rid of it right away. Give it to some one who lost in a bet, or give it to some great reformatory institution; or, if you do not like that, go down to a river and pitch it into the water. You cannot afford to keep it; it will burn a hote in your purse; and you will lose all that, perhaps ten thousand times more—perhaps you will lose estate, and you will lose all that, perhaps ten thousand times more—perhape you will lose all. Gambling blasts a man, or it blasts his children; generally, both and all. It is very rare that a gambler makes either a good hisband or a conscientious father.

Cultivate the horse, by all means; drive him as fast as you desire, provided you do not injure him, or endanger yourself or others.
But be careful, and do not harness the horse to the chariot of sin; do not throw your jewels of morality under the flying hoof; do not, under the protext of improving the loorse. not, under the pretext of improving the horse, destroy a man; do not have your name put down in the ever-increasing catalogue of those who are ruined for both worlds by the dissipations at race-courses.

GAMBLING OF THE RACE TRACK

THERE is one word that needs to be writ-HERE is one word that needs to be writ-ten on the brow of every pool-seller as be sits deducting his three or five per cent, and slily "ringing up" more tickets than were sold on the winning horse, a word to be writ-ten also on the brow of every book-keeper who, at extra inducement, scratches a horse off the race; and on the brow of every jockey who shackens pace that, according to agree-ment, mother may win; and written over who stackens pace that, according to agree-ment, another may win; and written over every judge's stand, and written on every board of the surrounding fences—that word is "swindle!" Yet thousands bet. Lawyers bet; judges of courts bet; members of the legislature bet; members of Congress bet; professors of religion bet; ladies bet, not di-rectly, perhaps, but through agents. Yester-day, and every day, they bet. They sain. professors of religion bet; tadies bet, not di-rectly, perhaps, but through agents. Yester-day, and every day, they bet. They gain, they lose; and this summer, while the para-sols swing, and the hands clap, and the huszas deafen, there will be multitudes cajoled and deceived and cheated, who will at the races go neck and neck-neck and neck to perdition.

SLOW AND SWIFT DRIVING

AT the same time, I do not believe in slow driving. There is no more virtue in driving slow than in driving fast, any more than a freight train going ten miles an hour is better than an express train going fifty. There is a delusion abrond in the world that a thing must be necessarily good and Christian if it is slow and dull and plodding. There are very good people who seem to imagine it is humbly pious to drive a spavined, galled, glandered, spring-halted, blind, staggered jade. There is not so much virtue in a Rosinante as there is not so much virtue in a Rosinante as there is no a Bocchaltus. At the pace some people drive, Elijah, with his horses of fire, would have taken three weeks to get into heaven. We want swifter horses, and the church of God needs to get off its jog trut. Quick tempests, quick lightnings, quick streams, why not quick horses? In time of war the exvalry service does the most execution; and as the battles of the world are probably not all past, our Christian patriotism demands that we be interested in equinal velocity. We might as well have poorer guns in our arsenals, and clumsier ships in our navy-yards, than other nations, as to have under our cavalry saddles, and before our artillery, slower horses. From the battle of Gunicus, where the Persian horses drove the Maccionian infantry into the river, clear down to the horses on which Philip Sheridan and Stonewall Jackson rode into the fruy, this arm of the military service has been recognized. Hamilicar, Hamilhal, Gustavus Adolphus, Marshai Ney were cavalrymen. In this arm of the service, Charles Martel, at the battle of Poitiers, best back the Arab invasion. The Carthaginian cavalry, with the loss of only seven bundred men, overthrew the Roman army with the loss of seventy thousand. In the same way the Spanish everyte horsets T the same time, I do not believe in slow threw the Roman army with the loss of seventy thousand. In the same way the Span-ish cavalry drove back the Moorish hordes.

A MESSAGE FOR THE SUMMER

BEFORE these words shall be read in The

BEFORE these words shall be read in The Ladius' Home Journay, I shall be across the ocean where, with members of my family, I hope to pass a summer of rest. Although absent from these shorts, I shall speak to you through the Journay, I shall speak to you through the Journay, probably better because of the rest I shall seek, and get, thun if I remained at home; but while in foreign lands let me leave a message for this summer with each and all of my readers:

Wherever your footsteps may lead you during the warm season before us, let me enjoin you to rest heartily unto the Lord. Conscientionsly avoid resorts which tax by requirements of style, or be independent enough to resist them. Recreation must be regulated, or it may run into dissipation and defeat its legitimate ends. Gain flesh, gain sleep, gain spirit. Recuperate! rejoice! Rest with an easy conscience and a happy heart, coming home chal in new armor, to fight the battles of the Lord.

7. De with Talmage

Epirois's Nork—The regular departmental heading, generally used in connection with Dr. Talmage's writings in The Ladges' Hong Jouns at, will be discarded for a few beaus to come, since Br. Talmage's assember articles will be of such a nature—European in their flavor—as to provide their being classified under one general beading. Dr. Talmage's article in the August Jounnat, will be cultively different in character from anything which has previously appeared from his pen in this magazine.

GIVES a GENTINE OXFORD TEACHERS HIBLE, Containing, 1450 Pages, and measuring open, fare included 7x10 Inches, Froo to all New Subscribers at $2.00.

Contains ALL THE It is Leather Bour lt is Leather Bound, with Bound ALL THE lapping Edges, and Contains ALL THE HELPS, including CONCORDANCE, 40,000 References, Subject Index 16,000 References, TWELVE COLORED MAPS, and Other Valuable Helps.

De Hitt Talmage 11, 10, 11, 14, 90 BIBLE BOTCH, NEW TORK CITY

For Heating Dwellings Public Buildings, etc., by Hot Water Circulation, the

Gurney Hot Water Heaters

are the original and best. They have never failed to take the highest awards wherever shown.

Send for our illustrated book " How Best to Heat our Homes." a work of art on the subject of house-warming.

GURNEY HOT WATER HEATER CO., 163 Franklin St., Boston, Mass. Selling Agents for Niddle States, 47 So. Canal St., Chicago, III.

~~~~~~~~~ The "PASTEUR"

THE ONLY

GERM PROOF FILTER

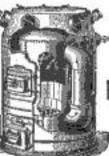

Paris. France. March 1, 1886.
This Filter was invented in my laboratory where its great ascidiness is put to test every day. Knowing its full scientific and hygicule value, I wish it to bear my name.

Pasces, Enamete and Painte which stain tands, injure the iren, and burn off. The ig Sur Stove Points in Brilliant, Odorless, ble and the respective repay for no tim or package with every purchase.

HAS AN ANNUAL SALE OF 3,000 TONS.

HOME COMFORT Steel Hot Air FURNACES

Guaranteed Free from GAS, SMOKE OR DUST! MADE ONLY BY

WROUGHT IRON RANGE CO. Paid up Capital, $500,000.

Established 1864. St. Louis, Mo. SOLE MANUFACTURERS OF

HOME COMFORT STEEL RANGES Write for Cook Book-mailed FREE

Artistic Wall Paper

A. L. DIAMENT & CO., 1306 Market St., Phila.

This Department is conducted and edited by RUTH ASHMORE, who cheerfully invites questions touching any topic upon which her young women readers may desire help or information. Address all letters to Ruih Ashmore, care of The Ladies' Home Journal, Philadelphia, Pa.

OU want to make it the sunshine of a day, don't you? The sun-shine from above looks down on you early in the morning, just as it looks on the tallest tree and the tiniest flower, and makes them glad. So it must come to you.

So it must come to you.

And it must not give a gladness that lasts only for the hour, but all the day through. Do you know what I mean? When your heart sings with joy as you awaken and find yourself in a flood of golden light, you should say: "I am going to be the sunshine of the day," which is, by the by, being the one who makes everything pleasant for everybody else.
It means excusing faults, seeing virtues, and giving a helping hand wherever it is needed:

It means excusing faults, seeing virtues, and giving a helping hand wherever it is needed; it may mean taking a sick baby in your arms for an hour while its mother rests; it may mean being the conciliating spirit between two friends that do not quite agree; it may mean giving a willing hand in the house, setting the table, making the beds, or sweeping the floors, but it certainly does mean the doing whatever is nearest to you, by lifting the burden from tired shoulders.

Try it for one day out here in the country, where the flowers will all nod approval, and where, as the sun sinks to rest, it will seem to laugh out its delight at the mental sunshine that you have made. You are doing better work, my friend, when you make yourself the sunshine of a house, the reliance of those who are not very strong, than when you go to far-off lands to look after the heathen. So try, through one of these long summer days, what you can do. And you are not the girl I think you, if you do not make all the remaining days of the years as fruitful of good deeds as is this first one.

THE GIRL WHO CONDESCENDS

The Girl Who Condescends

I Do not like her, no matter where she is, whether it is in the city or the country. And I am perfectly certain that every one of my girls agrees with me. Sometimes she is well taught, and then she thinks that nobody else knows anything; and on matters of information she would condescend to anybody even as learned as Carlyle himself. She is offensive, but occasionally she meets her match, and everybody is happier after she realizes this fact. Sometimes she is a beauty, and from the height of her good looks she condescends to every other girl not equally blessed. She is faintly surprised to find out that a girl with a less beautiful face and better manners is more popular than she is. Of course, though, she does not realize that this beauty of hers is only a question of a few years, and then how misa question of a few years, and then how mis-erable her condescension will seem. Some-times she is top-loftical, simply because her-gowns are fine, and her jewels many; this is the meanest of all, and the one easiest laughed at. She evidently does not realize that moths can destroy her marments, and that her good at. She evidently does not realize that moths can destroy her garments, and that her good fortune may disappear as has that of many another before. What shall you do when you are condescended to? Why, nothing. It may be disagreeable—so is a dose of medicine. Swallow the dose of medicine with a smile, and look at the condescending young woman as an awful example that you must not fol-low, and later give fervent thanks that that particular small sin, the rudeness of conde-scension, is not upon your list.

WHAT NOT TO READ

What Not to Read

I't was my dear country girl who asked me that. That is, she put it this way: "You see we have a great many visitors during the summer; when they come they bring with them the books they have bought on the train, and when they go away they are apt to leave them behind. Of course, we are not near book shops, and most of us are greedy for good books; sometimes those left are delightful; sometimes they make me wonder, and I am left undecided as to whether they are quite the books I ought to read. Of course, I know the difference between a good and know the difference between a good and a trasby novel, but there are other books the worth of which is unknown to me. How shall I decide?" I can only tell you of one way. After you have read a book, or when you begin to read it, unless you would like to tell every word of it to your father and your brothers I advise you to drop it. Then there is another way: If it is a book that in any way shakes your belief, drop it; do not wait to see how it ends; do not wait for anything, but egarding it as a weapon of evil, put it in regarding it as a weapon of evil, put it in the fire. Between you and me, the so-called re-ligious novel has done more to make people unhappy than anything I can think of, and I do not advise your reading it. Even a be-lief that seems sure may be shaken, and it is wisest not to tamper with it. I do advise your reading good, sweet, honest stories— stories of devotion either to duty or to love; in fact, I do not think there is anything quite as good for a girl as an honest love story as good for a girl as an honest love story which ends happily, and where the right peo-ple get married, and try their very best to be happy ever after.

A COUNTRY LUNCHEON

A COUNTRY LUNCHEON

You are a country girl. You are bright, well read and interesting. Your cousin from the city has come to visit you; you want her to meet your friends, but you think to yourself, with a sigh, that whatever entertainment you give her will be difficult to manage, because you know just what your friends will do. They will come gowned in their best, and two or three of them, though they are good, sweet girls, have not the remotest idea of the gown which is suited to the country, as differing from that which is worn in the city, and so they will appear in bot silks, heavy cloths, or whatever they have heard of as the last, new, and most desirable toilette. You remember the fine luncheons that your count gare last winter, and you know you cannot attempt to vie with them; but you can do something much better, you can be perfectly original, and give that most delightful of all things, a country luncheon. Have it at twelve o'clock, so that before the extreme heat of the day is reached your guests can, if they wish, go home. In each invitation put these few words: "I trust that you will come in a cotton frock, as otherwise you will not harmonize with my table, and I am sure you would not wish to be a false note in its symphony." Now, spread your table with the whitest of linen, and if you have any old china about the house use it either for decorntive dishes, or, if ther is enough, have it for your service. The most important thing about your china is that it should shine like a mirror. Get down the 'old candlesticks, and whether they are brass or silver, put them at your china is that it should shine like a mirror. Get down the old candlesticks, and whether they are brass or silver, put them at each end of the table, with a candle in each, not lighted, but wound about with ivy; you do not want smilax in the country. In the center have a big bowl of glass or china, filled with country flowers, great bunches of white roses, hollyhocks, and all the flowers that grow out of doors, that just grow of themselves and by the help of God Almighty's sunshine. Have a dish of bright red radishes, with their green leaves, surrounded by plenty of cracked ice; and then, at the other end, have a dish of those pretty, though much despised, long-stemmed onions, arranged in ice like the radishes. Let your sweetnests stand on the table, on each side of the bowl of flowers.

DAINTY PLACE CARDS

T each place have an ivy leaf tied with a white ribbon, and written on it in white A white ribbon, and written on it in white ink the name of whoever is to occupy the seat. It is just possible 'that your city cousin may be a bit of an artist; and in that case, if she wishes to help, let her paint some quotation cards in green and gold. You will have to est cold ham, cut as thin as a wafer, and surrounded with beautiful fresh parsley; with this you will serve lettuce heart: almost as white as litles; this will come after your main dish, which I should suggest might be small chickens, fried in the Baltimore fashion, with cream gravy, and with this serve hot asparagus, with a plain drawn-butter dressing. Have that most delightful of all things to est, good bread and butter, and to drink plenty of cold, well-made lemonade, in which you have bread and butter, and to drink plenty of cold, well-made lemonade, in which you have thrown a handful of strawberries, or, if they have gone, either raspberries or blackberries may be substituted for them, while what tooks like a bouquet on the top of the pitcher is really a bunch of spicy mint, plucked from the garden early in the morning. For your sweets have that something which you can never get any place but in the country, whipped cream, which is so much better than iced cream that really they ought never to be compared. With this serve either lady or pound cake, cut in thin slices. When your finger-bowls are brought around, let each one have a spray of fragrant citron aloes floating on top, or, if this does not grow at your home, then put a leaf of rose geranium. The girls will come in their gingham gowns, looking as pretty as possible; they will be at ease, your guest will see the best side of them, and after guest will see the best side of them, and after it is all over and everybody has gone home, she will tell you she never had such a delightful time as at your country luncheon.

A FEW DON'TS

THEY are for the country girl. I say to Don't imitate your city coasin in her use of

Don't imitate your city cousin in her use of

Don't imitate your city cousin in her lazi-

Don't imitate your city consin in any of her faults, but in all of her virtues.

Don't let your city cousin hear you use bad nglish or spenk with a twang. Don't let your city cousin see you over-

Don't let your city cousin imagine that country living will do anything but make you a post charming woman.

Don't let your city cousin think that country girls and country flowers are not as charming and lovable as those bred in a bothouse of the

WHAT YOU WANT * * TO KNOW * *

Under this heading I will cheerfully answer each month any question I can, sent me by my girl readers—RUTH ASHMORE.

A M AND OTHERS-I cannot nevise any kiseing

R. L. E.—The propriety of a young girl going to a ball, even to look on, must be decided by her mother.

H A. N-1 can recommend nothing for the removal of moles, except a visit to one's family physician.

Violatt N. -tientle massage, using vaseline or office oil to facilitate it, will tend to make the neck plumper. C. T. H. – The article on graduation gowns in the May Journals will give you some suggestions which may be helpful.

T. -In writing a basiness letter to a woman, whether she is married or not. "My Dear Madam" would be the proper mode of address.

MILLIE - Throw a small lump of borax is the water in which you bathe your face, and unless the group look comes from some stomach trouble this will lessen it.

F. & G. - There is no necessity whatever of your as-sing the young man to assume his cost and hat; he is approved to be capable of looking after them himself.

H and M.—It is not ladylike to stare at anybody through an opera glass. (2) It is not wise, to say the least, to permit every one to call you by your first name.

GREATLY ANNOYED—When one perspires to such an extent as you describe, it is caused by physical weak-asses, and you should get your doctor to give you a tonic to brace you up.

GRACK S.—A girl of fifteen would suitably wear ber hair braided, tooped and tied with a black ribbon. If it is becoming, I would advise the hair being drawn off the face and no bang cut.

W. M. -i think the very best cure for a had skin is an absolutely bealthy body. Find out if there is not some reason uply your face is so covered with black heads; attack not the effect, but the cause.

Violet - Usually the one who goes away is the first to usele. I think an all-white would be pretired for the graduation dress. It is not is quite good taste for a young girl to go out driving with a young man.

M. N. AND OTREMS—I do not speak especially to the girls who do housework, because I count them in with my working girls. My dear child, it is not in this world the work we do, it is the way we do it. Never believe that I do not consider every girl as my friend.

A. E. S.—It is in very bad taste to send your visiting eard as a mode of expressing your regret in not being able to accept an invitation to some entertainment. In-stand write 'Miss Jones regrets her inability to accept Mrs. Heavie's courteous invitation for Friday evening." J. J.—If you make an effort to remove the flesh from your face you will certainly regret it, for the loose skin will form into wrinkles and you will look much older than you really are. I trust that you will take my ad-vice and allow the flesh, which is evidently indural, to stay there.

C. M.—In eating, the fork is used exclusively, the knile being only given to one for the surpose of sepa-rating the fixed. When a plate is handed to you keep it, the custom of passing a plate on lawing entirely gone out of style, and the host naturally serving the visitor first.

E. P. J. I.—I would not advise your thinning out your bang by using any preparation upon it, but inswed draw some of the feat to the back, allowing it to mingle with the back hair so that it will grow long. A blick bend, or a very heavy one, coming low on the foreband is not feationable.

V. U.—An invitation gives in honor of your daughter should read to this way. "Mr. and Mrs. William Gray request the pleasure of your company on Thursday greening, June 19th, to meet Mr. and Mrs. Charles Jackson "909 Fifth Avenue."

Quiro—I do not think I would send the young man flowers. Very simple acrs of courtesy are too frequent-ly construed into meaning a great deal. (2) Men visitors are supposed to look after their own costs. (3) Regular exercise and care as to your diet will do more to reduce your fiesk than anything else.

F. W. V.—I cannot suggest to you any employment whatever. If, as you say, you have as much money as you want, it seems to me it is your duty to leave the money-paying peadloses to the women who need them. The work intended for you is very certainly near you, but you must find it out for yourself.

C. J. C.—If a man friend after being very politic should neglect year, and you are sure that you have done nothing to invite this treatment from him, it would be most dignified for you to ignore him altogether, though, of course, you would give a polite though de-cidedly formal bow when you need him.

ELEER AND OTHERS—I cannot refrise anything to change the color of the halt. I have said this a number of times, and I very much wish that my girls would not ask me this question again. Heached hair is an ecidence of extremely had taste, and well-beed women would as soon think of publicing their faces black as of changing the color of their halr.

Vigron.—When some one gives you a message of re-membrance from an absent friend, it is only necessary to say "Thank you." (2) The proper mode of accepting an invitation for the theater would be, "My Pear Mr. Brown, it gives me great pleasure to accept your kind invitation for Wednesday evening. Thanking you for your consideration. I am, Very cordially yourg, Alice Smith."

Lect.i.s.—Wash the scalp carefully in manu water and ordinary brown soap, applying the lather which the scap has made to the skin with a soft brash; after-ward wash the lead thereughly with ober manu water and fan it dry. If it is given this treatment once every two weeks, and brushed thoroughly every day, there is no reason why it should not be entirely free from dandreff.

Musea.—There would be nothing improper in your sending a bunch of flowers to the gentleman who is going to graduate. (2) A pretty shade of thin, or a most green suffing, would make you a senari grown. Got a dark blue serge jacket; do not have it made too long and it will mewer for both spring and summer. I do not advise a light coat, as I think they will seen lose their promiarity. their popularity

Miss X.—Why not just your bangles on a chairtaine? This would be a decided change from wearing them as bracelets, 12: In writing a note to a young man commence it: "My Dear Mr. Brown," even if you are in the habit of addressing him by his Christian name. (1) A pretty handkerchief, or small bunch of flowers, just a posy to wear on the breast, would be pretty to send your girl friends. (4) it is not a quastlan ever of the cost of a precent; it is the thought which prompts it that makes it valuable.

Gypsy S.-If your skin is in a very had condition I could suggest your consulting a physician; but if it is would suggest your consulting a physician; but if it is simply the ordinary breaking out that is so apt to come in the spring, take supplair and mobases such some im-provement is rediced. (2) I do not think it right for a girl by marry a mean where she does not form, but as your say you like not respect the man, is it not just possible that that like may grow to be love? (2) Some suggestions and welding dresses were given in the June number of the Jounna.

NEVARA—If a brother and a sister receive invitations to a party of any kind their acceptances or regrees should be separate. (2) Only in very full dress, when the gloves are not to be removed. Is it programme leadest year bracelets outside of these. (3) If your name leadest year is a stranger in received be seen proper to say. "Miss Smith," for you are, of course, giving the title for which you wish is becauted. (3) If you are willing to discuss which you wish when you wish to be called. (4) If you are willing to do by low to believe the first which you wish when you were time. (5) If a wortone text drive meditive well, it is quite as proper for her to drive a pale of larges gauge.

ABOUT PIANOS

THERE are two mistakes to avoid in buy-THERE are two mistakes to avoid in buying a piano. One is to save that hundred dollars or two which mast be paid in order to get a really good one—the other is to pay a hundred or two for nothing.

Where to draw the line? At the Ivers & Pond. In some respects it has no equal; in no respect has it any superior.

Where can you see one? They are sold by dealers from occup, or you can have dealers from ocean to ocean, or you can have one sent to your house for approval. Write

IVERS & POND PIANO CO. 183 Tremeat St., Boston, Mass

MADAME GRISWOLD'S Patent Skirt-Supporting Corsets

AND SKIRT SUPPORTERS,

For circulars and terms to agents send to MADAME GRISWOLD, 923 Broadway, New York: 7 Temple Place, Boston, WANTED.

Mass.; or to General Agents, M. M. Wygant & Co., Fredonia, N. Y.; J. B. Putnam, 126 State street, DEXTER SHOE CO., 143 Federal Street, Boston, Mass.

DRESSMAKING SIMPLIFIED.

Any Lady Can now Laura to Out Perfect-Pitting Dresses. No sea average Chart or Square cas amapets with The McDewell Germand Drubling Machine in Cetting Stylinh, Georbia and Perfect-Firing Garcinesis. Easy to Learn, Rapid to Un, Fra any Form, Fellows crary Fathios. As the vention as Uniful as the Saving Ma-vention as Uniful as the Saving Ma-Free M days to test at your own home.
Send for Unstituted Chemian.
THE McCOWELL CO.
4 West 54th Street, New York City.

Send 25 cents for cupy of our elegant French Fashion books explaining how to cut latest style garment.

Agents wanted in every large place. Ledles can make from facos to facos a week. Address the BR AINER D & ARMSTRONG SPOOL SILK CO., for Market Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

CLAXTON'S Patent.

EAR CAP.

For remedying Prominent Ears, Preventing Bisfig. urement in after life, In all viscos.

Sond measure around head stove cars; also from lottom of lide of carover head to bottom of oth a sar, not under ohin. Price $1.25,

BEST & CO. 60 & 62 West gad Street, N. Y.

We will send you a fringed linen Tidy of "An Our! Mald," From to work it, Inmit! book of slitches and E-page Facilities of Stamping Outlies, etc., all for six fo, stamping Outlies, etc., J. F. Isoania, Lyan, Mass. Box J. J. F. Isoania, Lyan, Mass. Box J.

MR. COATES cheerfully invites questions touching any topic upon which his young readers may desire help or information. Address all letters to FOSTER COATES, care of THE LADIES' HOME JOURNAL, Philadelphia, Pa.

CORES of letters reach me every mouth from boys asking how they may ob-tain work in New York city. A great many of my readers seem to have an ir-assistible desire to begin their business careers there. I have been at some pains to seek the advice of I have been at some pains to seek the advice of eminent business men on the subject. New York does not differ from any other city in the method to be parsued in seeking an engagement. Much depends upon what line of work a boy wishes to follow. It would probably be quite as easy to begin in any other city, although there is no doubt that in the end New York offers more opportunities for both fame and fortune than any other city on the American continent. However, if every boy thought this way, New York would soon be over-run with a vast army seeking employment, and there would be few positions that would be really worth the liaving. There that would be really worth the having. There are many opportunities claewhere that promise well, but it is a difficult matter to obtain places of responsibility and power in small cities, because of the limited scope of trade.

BRIGHT BOYS IN DEMAND

HAVE said before in the JOURNAL that I bright, enterprising, studious and thoughtful lads are always in demand in a big city. The opportunities are more numerous, the capital invested is much larger, and promotions, because of the great volume of business, are more rapid than in the smaller cities. The compensation, too, is somewhat higher, and altogether the field is more promising than anywhere else; that is, of course, if boys are willing to work hard for small pay until they can demonstrate their usefulness and their ability to make money for their couployers. I do not want any of my readers to misunderstand me, and to get the idea that New York is the only place where success in business comes quickly. A great many men, who have never seen New York, have amassed enormous fortunes, and made splendidly successful business careers. They might have done even better in New York. Hen who work hard, and who are honest and faithful usually make a success in any line of work they take up. It is all a question of getting a proper The opportunities are more numerous, the capiup. It is all a question of getting a proper start, knowing what you can do, and then working with tircless energy until the end in view is accomplished.

KNOWING WHAT YOU WANT TO DO

Be sure you know what you can do, and what you want to do, before you begin to seek employment. Boys, as well as men, fall because they work at something they do not understand, or do not like. You must not expect to find just the sort of work you want without some trouble or inconvenience. "The difficulty with most boys who present themselves for engagements in our stores," said a prominent wholesale grocer to me the other day, "is that they are totally unprepared for the positions they seek. They are looking for some light employment, where the hours are short, and the pay high, and they profess to be willing to do anything that is wanted of them if the labor will not soil their hands, and they are unrestricted in their liberties. They are apparently eager for employment in our great grocery house, but they have given the subject of our business no thought before making application for place: they forget that in all commercial houses the way to begin is at the bottom, on small pay, with a prospect of rapid advancement if the services rendered are valuable to us. A boy seeking employment with us should, first of all, have a natural aptitude for the grocery business. You can see at once that if a boy's mind runs in other channels the work would be distasteful to him, and he would simply be doing what he was told in a perfunctory manner, hopting that something would turn up in the business. he was told in a perfunctory manner, hoping that something would turn up in the business or profession upon which his mind is set. Such boys are of no value to us; we want only those who are not afraid to toil day and night, if necessary, until they have established their usefulness, or created a place for them-selves. Once we find a boy who is doing this, who is thoughtful of our interests, who gives evidence of business ability, and is strictly honest and faithful, advancement is rapid, and he may hope, in time, to obtain any position in our employ—places worth having, with an annual salary anywhere from twenty-five hundred to twenty thousand dollars a year. It is a free field and no favor. Every business house in the country wants bright, industrious, and money-making boys and men, but the boys must be willing to begin at the very lowest rung of the ladder, and carve out their own fortunes. There are many men in our stores who have not begun with us as boys. stores who have not begun with us as boys, but have learned the business elsewhere; but the majority of our employes have been with us since boyhood, and they are now carrying on our vast business. One man, who is now in a very responsible position here at twenty thousand dollars a year, began fifteen years ago at six dollars a week. So you can see there is plenty of opportunity. If a boy fails it is largely due to himself."

POSITIONS IN OTHER STORES

WILAT this gentleman land to say in speaking of his business is largely true of other great commercial houses. The boy seeking employment in one of the wholesale dry goods houses must be well educated, have unexceptional references, be willing to work early and late for small pay, with the chance of rapid promotion when he is worthy of it; he must also have, as I said before, a natural aptitude for the work, and, of course, the more knowledge of the business he may possess the better chance he has of he may possess the better chance he has of securing a position. No firm cares to bother with a boy who is not himself ambitions, and who will not work with courage and determination for the interests of his employers. It is perfinent to know something as to the compensation a boy may expect when he begins work in commercial houses. There are a good many large firms who insist that a boy shall give three to six months of his time without now. There are other houses who begin with pay. There are other houses who begin with only a small sum per week, say two dollars and a half or three dollars, notil the beginner has given evidence that he likes the place, and his employers esteem him, and that he will be worth employing permanently. There are still other houses that have no fixed rules on the subject and who may four three dollars to six dollars per week, according to the work the boy may be required to do. In the main, I should say that the average rate of pay for a boy who is beginning work in a great store is four dollars per week for the first six months.

EMPLOYMENT IN BANKS

DOSTTIONS in banks and banking houses DOSITIONS in banks and banking houses are very largely sought after by boys and young men because of the gentility of the work, the easy hours, and a belief that the compensation is large. I was talking to the president of one of the largest banks in New York the other day, who began twenty years ago by sweeping out the office. He rose from one position to another, from $3.00 a week to $25,000 a year through his own industry and business tact and ability. He had no idea when he first entered the bank that he would romain more than a few weeks in its service. beginess tact and ability. He had no idea when he first entered the bank that he would romain more than a few weeks in its service. The work was hard, the pay was small, and he knew nothing and cared less about the banking basiness. But he was for-seeing for all that He was the first to reach the bank in the morning and the last to leave at night. He did not wait to be told what to do, but husied banking the terrory moment, doing uncomplainingly eresything that came to his nand, and studying fate into the night, until he become an expert mathematician. He also began to read and study books upon banking and currency questions, until he had fairly mastered some of the great problems of finance. He also watched and studied how the business of the office was conducted, and he gave such evidence of business shrewdness that when a vacancy occurred he was made messenger for the institution. He become asymmetred with business men and the employés of other banks, and it was not long before he was again promoted. Gradually his pay was increased as he was pushed up from one place to another. The business of the bank increased very largely, because the city was growing and it was in a favorable locality. All this time the young man had one ambition. It was to be cushier of the bank. It was a long look forward, but he was young and could afford to work and wait. In less time than he imagined he was made cashier, then vice-president, and when the president of the instination suddenly died, he was called to sit in his place, and many of the directors of the bank were near who had known him when he was only an humble messenger. What one mush can do on he done again. I simply cite was only an humble messenger. What one man can do can be done again. I simply rite this as a notable example of what hard work, patience, integrity and ability will do. Talking to this gentleman recently, I asked him what was the best meshed for a boy to pursue who desired to enter a bank or a banking He told me the above story of his own house. He told me the shove story or misown life, and said that he knew no better way than for others to begin as he did. Of course, not every boy can be as successful, but he can work and hope. Compensation in banks varies according to the work performed. There is only small pay for beginners, and from $800 to $2,000 a year for first-class clerks later an

GOOD TRADESMEN IN DEMAND

IN a recent article in the Jouanas, I dis-cussed at length the question of a trade or a profession for young men. You will re-member that I decided in favor of a trade. My article attracted a great deal of attention. Hundreds of letters came to me endorsing my views, and I was able to place a number of my readers in communication with trades schools, so that they might begin their career successfully. There is not much that I can add to that article upon the value of trades for young men, but I am more convinced than ever that every boy should learn a trade before he begins to study for professional life. The pay to young apprentices varies from $2.00 to $6.00 a week, according to the usefulness of the boy and the work to be performed.

WHAT THE LAW OFFERS

NEW YORK has a large army of lawyers. A small percentage of them are able men and understand their business. The others do not amount to very much and conothers do not amount to very finich and con-sequently make little headway. Many of the great legal firms employ large forces of clerks. These men are not very well paid. Young men who desire to become lawyers must be well educated, have great patience, evenly balanced minds, have some ability as public speakers—the more the better, of course—be good students of bussas nature, have the good students of buman nature, have the power to grasp quickly the pith and point of the subject in hand, and know how to analyze and solve all sorts of complex problems. There is not nuch in the law for clerks. Only a few offices find it necessary to employ high-priced men, and by high-priced men I mean those whose salaries will run from $2,000 to $6,000 per year. Young men who enter law-yers' offices do so usually on very small pay, so that they may learn from association with their superiors how to conduct husiness for themselves in the future. It would be hard to say just what the average New York lawyer carns in the course of a year. A very few of earns in the course of a year. A very few of the giants in the profession curn $100,000. the giants in the profession carn $100,000. There are others who make from $20,000 to $30,000, and there are a great many who find it difficult to make $2,000. It all depends upon the lawyer's ability and the opportunities that may come to him in getting big cases. The profession does not promise much for a young man who must rely upon his own ability to make money. There is hardly a living in it, unless one possesses more than usual ability, or is belped by friends.

Why NOT CREATE A PLACE?

WHY NOT CREATE A PLACE?

Why NOT CREATE A PLACE?

If financial success is what is desired, there is plenty of room for boys who can create positions. By this I necan working in some new line of business that is not overcrowded, where the remuneration is sure and large, and fame awaits those who are shrewd and farsecing. Look at the army of men who have made fortunes out of electricity within the past dozen years. This is a business still in its infancy. Not even Edison, the wizard of Menlo Park, to whom the world is more indebted to-day than to any man of this age, dare say what progress will be made in this line of work in the years to come. Very little is yet known about electricity. Experimenters are bosy day and night in this work, and their profits are very large.

Take, for another example, book and news-their profits are very large.

Take, for another example, book and newspaper illustrating. Ten years ago there were only a few men at work trying to bring this most important work to the perfection it has now reached. I say perfection, but ten years hence the work of to-day will seem very crude. There is an excellent chance here to make money if one has the pluck to work and the ability to offer something new. Our newspapers and books are mone generously illustrated to-day than ever before in the history of the world. But it may be necessary to walk upon new lines and new ideas to succeed.

tory of the world. But it may be necessary to walk upon new lines and new ideas to succeed.

There is no end of other work that will pay well, too; professions and trades that are not overcrowded, and offer splendid openings for bright boys—designing of all kinds, engineering, new ideas that may be used to make lighter and quicker work now being performed in a crude way. Look at the vast fortunes that have been made out of seving machines, typowriters, telegraphy, the telephone, and you will see that there is bope for those who have ideas, and are willing to work.

The truth of the matter is that the world is not standing still. Great changes are going on about us every day. We have not reached the age of perfection in anything. The people, particularly Americans, are hungry for novelies in every line. Boys and men with new ideas are always in demand. So I say if you cannot find the position you want in life, it is in your own power to create something that will sait you. Do not sit down and wait for some one to come to you with an offer of a profitable place. The "some one" is disappointing always. Learn to help yourself. There is plenty of profitable work in this country for every one. The complaints that constantly reach me that this and that line of work is overcrowded and profitless are undoubtedly true, and I know the difficulties that beset a boy in trying to get a foothold in life. But with study and persevernnee, with eyes always open to make the most of the opportunity presented, with a fixed determination to get on, no master what the obstacles, portanity presented, with a fixed determina-tion to get on, no master what the obstacles, success is sure. Honesty, faithfulness, pluck, and patience always count in this world. Once you have begun right, the rest is easy. You cannot fail if you do right.

ONE THING TO REMEMBER

BOVE all, remember that it is only by bard work that success is achieved. If you would win in the great struggle of life you must study and work without intermission. As one of the most famous of our self-made men has said, "You must not only work, but you must select your work with intelligence. you must select your work with intelligence. You must be preparing the way for what you intend to become." What your hands find to do, do it so well that you will satisfy not only your employer, but yourself. Bors who do this are bound to achieve financial success, and that is a great deal in this world, but not all. Financial success does not always bring happiness. You can round out your enreers in a splendid way by doing something for others as well as yourself. If you find some weak brother who is not as able as you are to weak brother who is not as able as you are to cope with the world, be generous and do what you can to sid him. Try to do something for others every day. Helpfulness is a word that you should always keep in mind.

SOUND, PRACTICAL ADVICE TO YOUNG PEOPLE

A BUSINESS education is necessary to business success. Every person should study book-keeping, business forms, penmanship, letter writing, business law, or shorthand; as home, by mail. Successfully taught by BRYAST & STRATFOS'S COLLIDE, 450 W. Main St., Buffalo, N. Y. Write for Prospectus.

WHAT DO YOU FEED THE BABY?

Lacto-Preparata and Carnrick's Food are the only perfect Infant Foods that have ever been produced.

Lacto-Preparata is composed wholly of milk, and when added to water, yields a food that is almost identical with human milk in composition, digestibility and taste. It is designed more particularly for infants from birth to seven months of age, during which time infants should have only milk.

Carnrick's Food, composed of half Lacto-Preparata and half dextrinated wheat, is designed for infants from seven to twenty months of age.

The above two Foods are the only Infant Foods worthy of the name, and the only ones that will always perfectly nourish a child. Send for free samples and a 64-page pamphlet, entitled Our Baby's First and Second Years, by Marion Harland, with advice by an eminent physician, on the Care and Feeding of Infants.

REED & CARNRICK, NEW YORK

SPENCERIAN STEEL PENS ARE THE BEST

SOLD BY STATIONERS EVERYWHERE. Samples FREE on receipt of return postage, a cente SPENCERIAN PEN CO., "NEW YORK.

Acme of Comfort

RAMBLER BICYCLES

GORMULLY & JEFFERY MFG. CO.

222 to 228 N. Franklin St., Chicago

-BICUCLING FOR GIBLS - BOSTON, WASHINGTON Bend Many for Copies NEW YORK

HUMBER CYCLES

Absolutely The Highest Grade Catalogue Free SCHOVERLING, DALY & BALES 302 Broadway, N. Y.

DAISY KNIFE-CLEANER

Next, clear, efficient, churable, Complete by man 25 cts.

THE CHILD AND THE POET

BY KATE TANNATT WOODS

HE front door with Doc-tor Oliver Wendell Holmes has always been kept open. Every stran-ger has felt at liberty to call upon him for advice, hooks, autoroupts, and call upon him for aivice, books, autographs, and even pecuniary aid, and the great-hearted poet has responded unselfishly to most of the appeals. There is not an author in America who has done more to encourage young authors than Ductor Holmes. The "front door of his feelings" has been ruthlessly pushed open more than once by the intrusive and unworthy, and yet no word of bitterness ever escupes him. It is a liberal education to number such a man among one's friends, and the "secred chambers" must be guarded with jealous care. With reverent hands we gontly lift a corner of the curtain which shields this favorite of the reading and thinking world from the gaze of idlers, and bid those who are discreet and wise to remember how little the world really knows of one whose name is a household word. household word.

THE poet has taken his readers into his con-THE poet has taken his readers into his confidence on many occasions, both in prose and verse. We have walked with him under glorious trees which he has measured for us; we have looked with him upon the Charles River from his oriole window, and nature has brought us healing through his interpretation. As a physician and professor he has made for himself an undying name; as an author all lands sing his praise; and yet there is another side to his life which is known only to those who have seen him in his home.

The inside hie of an author is like the heart of a rose, more intense in color, folded with complex precision, richer in fragrance, and more attractive than the outer petals which the winds sport with and the sun fades. For this reason, biographies are so often unsatisthis reason, biographies are so often unsatis-factory; they never get into the heart of the

LET me tell you how one friend of the gifted. Dector first saw him. It was many years ago when a large square house stood upon one of the principal streets of the city of Salem. The steps of this boase were often occupied by noisy boys and girls on their way to and from school. There dwelt that excellent scholar and true gentleman, Hon. Charles W. Upham, the author of a valuable work upon witchcraft. His wife, a noble woman, was the sister of our beloved "autocrat," and to this house he came at a time when the writer was just old enough to admire greatness in the intellectant world, and young enough to sigh for her first long dress. Numerous plans for helping the poor and needy were made within those walls, and the gifted hostess found ready sympathy and assistance from the mother of the small girl alluded to. Thus it chanced that one memorable evening, when a certain French translation had been correctly made, and the music had been duly thumbed and thumped out through an aution read of certain French translation had been derrectly made, and the music bad been duly thumbed and thumped out through an entire page of "Richardson's instruction Book," that a re-ward of merit was offered in the form of per-mission to sit up later than usual to call for the mother at the large house, and there see the wonderful and adored poet.

I't was a very great and grand event, and the small girl's curly locks were dressed with trembling fingers. At last the bour arrived, and the child who had been guilty of scribbling over the fly-leaves of her books, and what was worse, had been severely punished for writing some jerky lines on the title page of her Bible, was really and truly going to see a great poet who not only wrote out his thoughts in verse, but in prose.

Three times did that small girl walk about the block before she could summon courage

Three times did that small girl walk about the block before she could summon courage to ring the bell and dismiss her attendant. Was it really true, there words of a wicked big brother, that the great man would amile in Greek and wink in Latin? At last she was inside, and a gentle voice was saying: "Why did you not come earlier, dear?" and another somebody said: "And this is the gentleman you were so anxious to see. Yes, there he was, seated in a large cush-ioned chair, his bend thrown back a little, and a little on one side, his eyes sparkling, his face beaming with smiles, and one small white hand ressing on the arm of his chair; this was Oliver Wendell Holmes. The small girl never Oliver Wendell Holmes. The small girl never quite knew how she approached him, or how he came to be hobling her hand; memory plays no tricks with the words he attered. "So you are the girl who writes poetry? Well, child, anybody can write verses." For a moment the small girl felt like crying. She was forever disgraced before this brilliant man. Who could have told, and how ashaned she was. Soon the host spoke in that melodicing voice which had been admired even in compressional halls. "Do not look so distressed," said he, "your mother has shown their research," said he, "your mother has shown the same of your lines, and you can still write, I think, for she has consented; only, I had to see the verses. It will not harm you to sing for yourself and on old man like me, and some lay I should not be received for any lay I should not be received.

and some lay I should not be surprised if you sang to the world.

WHAT an evening it was! The Doctor told stories, and made jokes with everybody, while a pair of young eyes were constantly on his face. The happy time came to an end that night all too soon, and on the way home the small girl was questioned thus:

"Well, child, you have seen the poet, and how do you like him?"
With the simple directness of childhood the reply came: "I think he writes bigger than he is."

The years flow away and the Doctor's young

than he is."

The years flew away, and the Doctor's young admirer traveled far and wide, always returning him with the dear friends at home. So it chanced that some years after, when she was holding in her arms a little child whose life was slowly going out into the great unknown, that a letter was brought in from the gifted man, who is hever too busy to be kind. In the hush of midnight, within the shadow of death, the man whom the world applauded found time to pen words of comfort to a young mother whose heart seemed breaking.

To use his own words: "He has capital enough of humanity to furnish sympathy and unshrinking service for his friends in an emergency."

gency."

On another occasion, when he was enduring great personal grief from the death of a beloved son, he not only announced it himself the son and the son a spinal strain. fored son, he not only announced it himself to a friend who was suffering from a spinal trouble due to a fail, but at the close of his letter added, as if to lessen the gloom: "The best news I can hear of you is to know that you have got your back up."

This absolute forgetfulness of self is rare and beautiful.

In that charming study where Doctor Holmes writes, there is an opportunity for many lessons of importance. No one can be seated there for an hour without being impressed with the methodical and orderly habits of its owner. Letters answered, or to be answered, bave each their appropriate place, and until recently the Doctor has not employed other eyes and hands to assist him.

As a young lady recently remarked: "The table in that study has all the daintiness of a ladies" bouder. Brie-à-brae is about, with dainty toys sent by friends, and every appliance for rendering work easy can be found near the pen and pencils. All these things bespeak the fine nature which must have system and order to perfect its work.

bespeak the fine nature which must have sys-tem and order to perfect its work.

In this cheerful room, with the sunlight creeping in to touch the long rows of books upon the walls, sits Doctor Holmes still, working with the energy of a young man, al-though he constantly alludes to his years, and calls himself an old one.

THE wife of his youth, a son in all the vigor of manhood and the decoted daughter, who was his companion in that memorable "One Hundred Days in Europe," have all passed on before him, yet he makes no moan, utters no complaint, and fondly talks of the children still left him, or his grandchildren, with the loving warmth of his most generous nature.

In the summer by the sea, or in winter before the open grate in his luxurious study, he is always the same cheerful philosopher, chatting with his friends of the past and present, discussing new books, or teilling a story to amuse a chance visitor. He is the same loyal, kind and discriminating friend whom the small girl believed him to be in the long ago.

As I saw him but a few weeks since, with asternoon sin, and as I noted how gently time had dealt with him, I breathed a fervent prayer that he might live to bless the world for years to come with his presence, as he must always bless it with his written words.

THE STORY OF A POEM

N the minds of many the authorship of the well-known poem "If I Should Die To-night" is still a matter of doubt. At various times it was attributed to Henry Ward Beecher, but when its authorship was denied by him it was in turn by others. The real author always claimed by others. The real author always kept in the background, her modesty not allowing her to step in where others dared to tread. Then friends took up the matter, and claimed that the author was Miss Belle E. Cinimet that the author was alias below in Smith, one of the instructors in Tabor College, Tabor, Iowa, where she still resides. Asked not long ago to give a history of the writing of her famous lines, Miss Smith wrote to the Editor of The Larges' Home Journal in a letter now lying before him:

"The verses were written in the fall of 1872.

They were first printed in 'The Christian Union' of June 18th, 1873. The poem was soon copied quite widely, and claimed by several authors. Within a short time after its publication my time and strength were so absorbed by the duties of a trength, life that my sorbed by the duties of a teacher's life that my thoughts were turned from literary work, and I paid little attention to the varying fortunes of my verses. Besides being too busy, I was too proud to make a claim where others had asserted their right to my work. At last friends assumed the privilege of friends, and claimed the verses for me without my knowledge. I have been almost daily surprised at the courteous recognition I have received from many sources, though I am aware that many still support others' claims." too proud to make a claim where others had

*LITERARY * QUERIES

Under this heading the EDITOR will endeavor to answer any possible question con-cerning authorship and literary matters.

M. C.—The author of "Fluvia" and "Glaucia" is E. Lestie.

M. M.—The publication you name is published in Den-ver, Colorada.

M. V. M.—I do not know of a translation of Toepfer's
"Nouvelles Generolies."

ZULIEKA—Any letter addressed in our care to Mr. Will Carleton will be forwarded to bins.

TALMA—Mrs. Browning is the author of "Aurora Leigh." There are several editions published.

EURENA-Engene Field is the author of "A Little Book of Western Verse," and "A Little Book of Profit-able Tales,"

M. H.—The work I have frequently instituted as suitable for the purpose is "Periodicals That Pay Con-tributors." Price, $1.00.

V. S.—William Allen Butler is the author of "Nothing to Wear," in which the character Miss Flora McFlimsey appears. It is published in book forts at 75 cents.

CLATE AND T. B. A.—I do not know the nature of the lot, or who the characters are intended to represent, of se books you mention. Write to the publishers of the ENNY-The author's name is not printed on the title page of "Gerabline; a Tale of the St. Lawrence," nor is it given in the latest catalogue. It is written, however, by A. Hopkins.

HATTR-See "Old Forty" in this column. Read the book mentioned; you will be aside to obtain many sug-gestions that will enable you to write an away on books and reading.

P. E. P.—Ossinn, called the warrior band, was the so of Flugal, King of Morren, and the first wife was lke crana, daughter of Cormac, King of Ireland. His poem can be had for a moderate price.

M. J. W.—There is an extensive literature on physical culture, especially on calletheoles. As good a work as you would probably need is Pome's "Swedish system of Educational Dymnastics."

B. K.—Oliver Dinon & Co. is probably one of the largest music publishing houses in the country. The principal house is in Baston, Massachusetts, Address them regarding any music you desire published.

OLD FORTY—You sak me to give you a list of books solitable for a young woman of twenty to read. It would be impossible for me to do so. Frocare a copy of Purter's "Books and Ressling." It will help you greatly.

Aquia—I doubt whether William Bean Howells ad-brers at present to the Swedenborgian bellef, although this carty training was under that influence, his father having been a believer in the seachings of Swedenborg

F. F.—All young writers naturally find the literary road a hard one to travel. Energetic and continuous work is the only thing that will help you toward success. (2) Your spelling is incorrect. No writer shoulders in this.

B. M. G.—Caroline Atwater Mason has written "A Daughter of the Done," "Mrs. Resilier Lamar," and "A Christman Girt" etc., for the Judustat. A two-part story by the appeared in the last May and June issues of the Journal.

M. R.—Mrs. Anne Jenness Miller's work on physical culture has recently been published. Its full title is "Physical Benety: How to Obtain and Row to Pre-serve I." The price is $2.00. The Journal's Book Department can supply it.

8. D.—If you want a work that will assist you in teaching your class of little girls sewing, get a copy of "Needlecraft," and for your class of boys, "How to Use Wood-working Trook." The latter work tells what can be done with the knife, etc.

8. E. C.—The "Young Mee's Journal" is published by Reveil & Co., Union Square, New York. (2) I can-not give you a list of precious stores and their mean-ings. Consult some book on the subject: King's "Book of Precious Stores," for instance.

 H.—"The Arabian Nights" is a collection of stories from the Arabia, that have been translated into Eng-lish. There have been several translations, the most rotatio one being by Ilurius. An abridged edition has been prepared by his wife, in six volumes. J. D. R.—if you have postical inclinations, and desire to improve them, you will dud the following works of value and assistance to You? Walkerse "Blaymer Blaymeter; or, the Bale of Blayme," $1.50, and Mosel's "The Blaymeter; or, the Bale of Blayme," $1.50. These can be had through our Book Department.

J. S.—I would not advise you to take advantage of the fact that you are an occasional contributor to a periodical to send frequently articles for consideration, lear in mind that no editor desires, or can afford, to have one contributor appear too often in his columns. Distribute your work.

ANNER M.—John Greenbeaf Whittler, the poet, was born near Haverhill, Massachusetts, in 1906. He has written very little of late. A complete edition of a works was found a few years ago, and subjected to his personal supervision. 12) A letter addressed to Mr. Whittler, in our care, will be forwarded to him.

A. S. H.—Bancroft, Presecti, Hildreth and Molley are geominest Alucrican historians. (2) Presume a copy of Periodical That Pay Countibutors." (3) In writing fic-tion, you can use the names of real piaces. (4) Write to some of the principal magnition and ask them If they would care for a story of the special kind you mention.

ABREE-The last work of General Lew Wallace is "The Boybood of Christ." (2) The name of the author of "Looking Forward" is not given. (3) E.P. Stock has book was "Taken Allvu." It was not quite finished when he died, but he left noise sufficient, so that the story could be completed satisfactority by others. This was done.

M. L.—Short stories have been in much demand with-a the last year or so by the imagnities. But the popu-ir desire for collections of stories in book form has allen off. Good trackallons of strong and effective stories, that have not been translated before, are more or lose desired. Try some of the publishing houses. Prices paid for them vary.

W. M. AND OTHERS—When in search of periodicals and magnatines, you will save yourselves much time by addressing at once such houses as The American News Company, Strontano, or The International News Company, all of New York. You can practice all direting and demostic periodicals from them, in every branch of industrial and general literature.

M. A. D.—Those who write criticious upon books are generally paid a salary by promisent formula. (2) Publishers send copies of their new backs to critics is advance of publication for the juryose of being read and criticised. (3) You must seek such a position, and make your desires known. (4) There is more train in writing than implements, unfortunately, (5) It is advisable to present permission whos "writing up" a person with a view to publication.

8. V. F.—The "Encyclopedia Britannies" was originally poblished in Great Britain. When the ninth edition was begun, the English edition was said in this country. Charles Socilour's Sons soid, by arrangement with the highsh publishers, a cheaper edition. This was done to compete with the "Staddard" reprint. Since them many cheap editions have appeared. There has been much courierency over the number, and many actions as law to restrain reprinting.

G. B.—The question year ask regarding international experight would be difficult to answer fully. Write to the Librarian of Congress, Weshington, B. C., and ask him to send you a copy of the copyright inw. There is no charge for it. (2) French works can be immediated and published here without the author's consent, but it is better to secure the nother's approval. (3) If a work is politished here in French, and copyrighted, no one can publish a translation without the consent of the owner of the copyright.

NOW READY-THE JULY PART OF THE YOUNG LADIES' JOURNAL

The best Journal for Ladies and Pamilies, co-order to LATEST AND BEST FARMINES, PROPUSSLY ILLUSTRATION: A MARKOTH COLORED SUPPLEMENT OF FARMINES, SUMPROVE COMPLEX STOCKES of absorbing interest, and the species chapters of a NEW AND ORDIGINAL SERIAL NORMY coulded "TREGOATELYN," best-SERIAL NORMY coulded "TREGOATELYN," best-see North EMBIODERT DESIGNS, Es. The most com-piete reaspector to believe advisibled. Price, 30 Centa, Youte, $4, including the Christops women, All productions, and THE INTERNATIONAL NEWS COMPANY, NEW YORK.

4 NEW NOVELS 15 Cents FAMILY LIBRARY MONTHLY.

Of all Newsdealers and
THE INTERNATIONAL NEWS COMPANY, NEW YORK,
$3 and $5 Disease Street, one door East of Brendway.
Scheenpions Received for any Periodical Foreign or Dommite.

THE ILLUSTRATED WORLD'S FAIR

Do you want the frost, most attractive, and profusely illustrated magazine in the world? The only publication illustrating the progress and every phase and feature of the great exposition from start to Hulch. It has the most rapidly increasing circulation of any publication in the world. Now over $6,000. Every home should have a bound volume. It's a Picture Galbery. Price to boundful paper cover, $5.00. Club Ruisers and Agents should know that we offer any person 7.5c, commission for each new yearly subscriber sent us at regular rates, $4.00 a year, when 3 or more are sent at same time. When remit-ting, deduct commission. Send 25c. for Sample Copy or 50c, for copy and Instantaneous Pho-Copy or Me. Mr capy and Instantaneous Pho-tographic View, 10 x 40 inches, of the World's Fair Grounds and Buildings as they now ap-pear. Address, JEWELL N. HALLIGAN, Gen-eral Manager, McVicker's Theatre Building, Chicago.

The Finest Edition

Of Hawthorne's famous "Scarlet Letter," is sent out by THE LABOR' HOSE JOURNAL, postpaid, as a premium for two yearly subscribers; or, for forty cents, postpaid. It is the Cameo edition, bound in half veilum and stamped in gold.

The Latest Book

Of representative selections from the works of Prof. Henry Prammond, is called "My Point of View." It is bound in white vellum, heavily stamped sides and beck in silver with silver tops. Each volume is wrapped in cloth and yacked in a box. THE LADIES' HOME JOURNAL mails it on re-ceipt of sixty cents, or two yearly subscribers.

25 CENTS

Uncle Tom's Cabin

Sold by Booksellers. Sent, postpaid, by

Houghton, Mifflin & Co.

4 Park Street, BOSTON, MASS.

A Dainty Ballad—THE YEAR'S SWEETHEART

Wards by Madellee S. Rekkers, words by Leils France, words in The Latest House Joynese of John 1881. "Algebiage between his love ber: The States and Allels pear.

Will prove to be use of the most pendar suggest of the day. Pub-lished by THE CHICAND RESIL CO., 103-107 Waters are., Chicage For Sale as all Mario Stores—Price, 48 cents

5000 LADY AGENTS WANTED FOR DARKNESS & DAYLIGHT

or LIGHTS AND SHADOWS OF NEW YORK LIFE

A WOMAN'S therthing tracy of Gospel, Temperance, and Rescue Total, "19 his Sana" in the great under works of New York. By Rev. Lyman Abbott, D. D. A weakerful took of Christian love and lath. But thereman Lab remarkable Blastiation, from materially photographs of real life. C74000 more agents Wanted-Ase and Money. 2004 to the C74000 more agents Wanted-Ase and Money. 2004 all and Give Crofts. Blastice to Rhetrance for we give Evran All and Give Crofts. Blastice to Rhetrance for we give Evran All and Give Crofts. Blastice to Rhetrance for we give Evran All and Give Crofts. Blastice to Rhetrance for the give Evran All and Give Crofts. Blastice to Rhetrance for the give Evran All and Give Crofts. Blastice to Rhetrance for the give Evran and Pay Freights. Guille Free. Write for discussions to A. B. WOMEN-SOTON A. Ed., Martherd, Comm.

MUSIC

Elustrated.

Nyle of "Popular Science Monthly," Most comprehensive and desirable musical publication ever undertakes, $1.00 per year, Send $1.00 pc trial subertiplies of Sur months, or 30 cents for sample copy,
W. S. B. Mathews, 240 Wabash Avenue, Chicago, Boom 53, A

Beecher's Only Novel!

Read refreshing "Norwood." Originally $2. Now, post free, $60 conds in super; $1.50 in cloth. Serolic Serolic, Stoward & MULBERT, New York

NEW "FIBHING ON THE FIRE"
"IN THE OLD SCHOOL DAYS"
SONGS RESTS FRAID - LESP LAST A-BERKING tt. risch, pintpaid. Lawrenere & Co., State & Shib Stop Chicago.

Lyon & Healy, Chicago.

0. Dilton & Co., Smite.

400 RECITATIONS and READINGS Mailed to the apest and test book ever issued. Address J. S. Ottl.VIE, 51 Sone St., New York.

THE TOURIST-$1.00 a year. Utica, N. Y.

Miss Maude Haywood will be glad through this Department to answer any questions of an Art nature which her readers may send to her. She cannot, however, undertake to reply by mail; please, therefore, do not ask her to do so. Address all letters to Miss Maude Haywood, care of THE LADIES' HOME JOURNAL, Philadelphia, Pa.

FRENCH TAPESTRY PAINTING

response to the general expression of interest in the subject of the art known as French tapestry painting, it is proposed to devote a few articles to the care-ful explanation of the ful explanation of the method, which in reality is very simple and is readily acquired by an artist having some previous knowledge of drawing and color. The true art of tapestry painting consists in the imitation of the woven goods by means of applying liquid dyes to a woolen canvas, manufactured to imitate exactly the Gobelin stitch, the colors being after-ward fixed and made indelible by the action of steam. It is claimed, therefore, that the main difference, apart from the merit of the work, between the woven and the painted piece, is that in the first case the threads are dyed before being woven, and in the second case afterward. The advantage, of course, of this painting process is its small cost com-pared with the product of the looms. The main items to be considered in reckoning the value ainted tapestry is the amount of time it will take to execute, and the price of the can-vas employed as the ground, which must be all wool and of the best quality, and which in this country costs seven dollars and a half a yard, fifty-six inches wide.

THE necessary outfit, including the set of THE necessary outfit, including the set of Grénié dyes, and medium, about a dozen brushes, glass palette, and a few small jars in which to mix the washes, costs considerably under five dollars. The brushes are made specially for this kind of painting, and are of bristle, short and stiff. The dyes are put up in a concentrated form, and require much dilution with medium and water for ordinary use. Buttle beginners realize the strength of the Until beginners realize the strength of the colors they are apt to be wasteful by putting out much too great a quantity on the palette, and also are liable to make their painting at first too dark and heavy. As they come from the laboratory the dyes appear strong and crude, but when once their possibilities are understood the advantage gained in being able to obtain them pure and unmixed will be ap-Every conceivable shade and tous of color can be produced by their means.

T is much better, if in any way possible, to L take a few lessons in order to see practi-cally the handling of the dyes. However, where this is not feasible, the best plan for a beginner who has procured an outfit and feels in absolute ignorance of how next to proceed, is prob-ably to take a simple flower or conventional abiy to take a simple flower or conventional border, which may be put afterward to some decorative use, and in attempting this to be-come acquainted somewhat with the mixing and applying of the dyes. It will be advisable to have a spare piece of canvas at hand on which to try the tints, experimenting with various combinations of color until a satisfice. various combinations of color until a satisfactory result is gained.

T may be helpful to suggest some artistic I T may be helpful to suggest some artistic and useful mixtures for ordinary purposes. For greens usix in various proportions indigo, Itsitian yellow and sanguine; indigo, yellow and cochinesl; also emerald green and yellow used extremely pale. The best method usually is to paint in the shadows, allow them to thoroughly dry, then put a wash of the high light over the whole form and where necessary to work up the half tones with a complementary shade while this wash is still slightly wash. To not in the half tones are consected. moist. To put in the half tones successfully in this way, however, requires some experience with the dyes, and great care in preserving the high lights pure, but the result, if good, is a very soft bleuding of the tones. For yellow or golden coloring use for the lightest shades either yellow pure and very pale or with a little touch of poncess added, and brown with some yellow added for the shadows. For blue objects make the shadows of a greenish blue, employing indigo, and mix for the wash ultramarine blue and emerald green very much diluted, possibly working a little pure sanguine into the half tones. Make the shadows of delicate pinks, quite grayish, in the first in-stance, and use for the wash a light shade of either ponceau, sanguine or rose, according to taste. Wherea large surface is to be covered mix a sufficient quantity of color in a jar, diluting it with medium and water in equal parts. The it with medium and water in equal parts. The medium must be used freely, and none of the dyes applied without it. The importance of this role lies in the fact that the addition of the medium is necessary in order that the steaming shall properly fix the colors and render the painting indelible. The highest lights are best obtained by gently scraping off the necessary amount of color encefully with the rounded blade of a pen-knife; of course, this must not be done until the wash course, this must not be done until the wash is perfectly dry.

HOLIDAY SKETCHING

THE ART OF ILLUSTRATING

URING the hot summer months, when studio work seems out of the seems out of the question, the artist turns naturally to out-of-door sketching and study. In the case of a student freed from the routine of daily classes involving necessary grind at the drudgery of one's chosen profession, it proves a more effective as well as a more congenial recreation to change the character of work undertaken, rather than the charmeter of work undertaken, rather than to lay aside pencil and brush altogether, for the time being. The majority of our art students spend the summer months in the country, among the mountains, in pleusant until districts, or by the river or senshore, and aketching will usually form their principal secupation and enjoyment. Now, broadly speaking, sketching may be considered as of two kinds. The first is done more or less perfunctorily, whether for study or amuseperfunctorily, whether for study or amuse-ment; the second is undertaken with a definite object, to gain material which shall prove useful in that branch of art to which the present or future aim may be directed.

THE ambition of very many students turns nowadays toward illustration work, and truly in their case a summer holiday cannot be better employed than in trying their apprentice hand at work which possibly may for the present be beyond their scope to undertake successfully, but which will prove an excellent training if taken up in the right apirit and with the truest sims. The tendency of school study, excellent and indispensable as it is, tends somewhat to train the average pupil in conventional methods, and requires to be supplemented by work which shall decelop supplemented by work which shall develop originality, and give scope to the imagination. Each judividual student should endeavor to see and interpret nature independently.

A FIELD of work that contains many pos-sibilities, is the illustration of children's cooks. But to achieve true success in this line demands the exercise of the highest and best qualifies of an artistic temperament. In the first place, in order to appeal to a youthful audience it is necessary to possess a direct simplicity in dealing with one's subject. Children and child-like, not childish, natures come nearest to a true understanding of the mysteries of creation. A further quality desirable is an imagination which is able to invest all lives with an individuality and a reason. ing things with an individuality and a mean-ing of their own in the great order of things. Very dear to the hearts of lads and lassies are those stories which have for personages in their drama birds, flowers and insects, with a background of sunshine or storm, forest, dell or glade. The pictures illustrating such a tale ought all to be made out of doors where the ought an to be have actually happened, and where indeed, as the pencil travels over the paper and the living things come and go in the sunshine, it needs but very little imagination to weave endless fancies and quaint con-ceits, winning readily from Nature herself the material in poetry, prose and picture for a dozen books for little folks.

GAIN, there lies a fruitful mass of mater-ial for illustration in the multitude of fairy tales and folk-lore which are the heritage of every nation, and which, existing as they do under various forms in almost all known countries, may be regarded as sufficiently mi-versal in character to find their legitimate set-tion and the scenes in any land. Allocarch ting amid the scenes in any land. Although fewer in number than those of the old world, local tales and traditions, such as that of hip Van Winkle, do exist even in America. Whatever may be said of the matter-of-factness and the materialism of the age, the fact remains that romance and idealism, whether in art or literature, does not fail to find an appreciative audience. The form in which a book or audience. The form in which a book or article is gotten up contributes more than the average amateur supposes, to the result of suc-cess or otherwise. Rules cannot be given, and even general hints will not prove of much avail unless the artist personally have the re-quisite decorative instinct, but every detail of arrangement is worth careful consideration and thought, it being no less a part of the artist's business to study the due relation of letter-press and illustrations, than to make the drawings adequate interpretations of the text. The methods of reproduction for illustrative purposes are, of course, numerous. When colored drawings are attempted it should be re-membered that each added that increases the expense of producing the plates. Some of the most effective and most popular illustrations in recent years have been made in outline with the pen, either in brown or black, and colored in flat washes, only a very few tones being used, but these few being employed to the utmost advantage.

HELP IN SYOUR OWN WORK

Under this heading I will be glad to answer, every month, questions relating to Art and MAUDE HAYWOOD.

J. T. R.-You can use oil paints on chamois skin thinning the colors with spirits of turpentine.

F. A. 11.—I have mover heard of "Short Hand Painting," so can give you no information concerning it.

Mas. H. M.—Offing out the picture preparatory to the second painting will probably remedy your trouble with the umbers.

GRAPHITE-You can fix penell drawings by dipping them in a dish of milk, making them thoroughly well Hang them up to dry by two occuers.

S. R. C., A. G. R., Mus. F. E. M. AND MANY OF HERS-I must repeat that I cannot give addresses of firms or personal recommendations in this column.

Ourna.—To obtain the desired magenta shade, mix Antwerp bins with crosson lake, or it the tore he very deficate, substitute rose madder for the last-named color.

A. E. H.—Use prepared lineard oil for oil paint' log. A good medium for ordinary use is made from lineard oil, epirits of terpentine audicupal variable mixed in equal parts.

GRETHUDE.—Rub lineced oil into the palette every day until the surface is thoroughly glossy. To prepare a palette successfully a little oil and a great deal of rub-bing is homospry.

Tu C. II.—The series of handbooks on various branches of art, as published by Wissor and Newton, and obtain-able through drulers in artists' materials, are helpful for self-istight amateurs.

A. W., Mas. F. K. W., Mas. M. H.—Lam net acquainted with any immiliant on ritions embrodery. Direct inquiries to the Society of Decurative Art, 28 East 21st Street, New York City.

Bga—It emissing depends on the rates at which the journal or magazine pays for the illustrations, and sector vary greatly according to the standing or financial prosperity of the publication.

BACHEL.—Yes, small sketches of animals can be well rendered in water cuters, although life-size studies are made with greater facility in oils. (2) Water cotors should be framed with a mat.

M. F. E.—Frepare the wood panels with linseed oil, robbing it well into the grain with a soft rug. Repeat this treatment every day for shout two or three wasks, until a sufficient possib is attained.

L. F.—This page is specially intended to give help to readers who have not many opportunities of gaining art instruction. I do not largest to know of any free acticols out in your part of the country.

Mas. C. J. and L. H.—Mineral colors are employ in painting china, and the pieces have to be fived it kiln. A series of articlose on the subject were publish ket year, beginning in the March Jouanal.

B. E.-I am well that books for children, if really good and original, command the readity market. (2) It is impressible to give any adequate idea of prices, so many things affect the permitary value of work.

MARGARET—To reply fully to your question would require the space of an article. In the asswers in this column from time to time, directions for the coloring of passe and other flowers have frequently been given.

Lényue—Von would be more likely to get the tor-ture of the beard with an ordinary flat hog-hair brash, if your query refers to oil outsides. Hair should be rendered in a beld, free manner, not in nigging strakes.

Liona.—First paint the sunset coloring down over the brures of the distant mountains. Thes by their forms in with purplish tones, avoiding barsh or distinct out-lines, theroding them off imperceptibly into the back-ground of sky and choods.

Mns. V. C. V.—The only thing for you to do is to take your painting to a picture restorer. The reason of the cracking is proteinly owing to its having been variabled too soon, or else to the quantity or quality of the med-tum employed in maxing the colors.

Tonawania.—The flue lines hemstiched delles would be far more effective and durable if embroidered in waching silks than if painted in any manner. Scattered flowers in light yellow, or is white outlined with policy, would be a presty decoration.

"Mas. G. C., writes Mrs. H. H., will find that repeated-offing of the canvas after the painting is theroughly dry, will cause the duliness to entirely disappear. Ranthe off well into the canvas once or twice a week until the desired result is attained." In several ways this might be a better plant than varnishing the picture.

L. A. D.—I think you could get a stamping octifit from any dealer in materials for embrokery. (2) In paint-ing to office and the country of the country of the center and paint outward, taking care the paint does not specied. (4) In amount leaves introduce yellow other, new siemas, burnt siems, cadmium and rose modeler.

M. S.—A good method of becoming acquainted with the requirements of illustration work is to study the drawings which uppear in the best imagedness. For and ink drawings are smally reproduced by the photo-en-graving process and are drawn larger thangibey appear when published. No knowledge of culor is necessary in this branch of work.

P. M. U., Max, M. H. H., Max, G. C., Max, A. E. D. S., —Tapestry painting, properly so-called, is done with liquid dyea upon a woolen canvas, the colors being afterward fixed by the action of steam. The series of articles begon this mouth are being published in response to inquiries on this subject. The dyea are seed with good office upon slik for various decorative purposes.

Man.s.—The method is simply to work over the solar print with a crayon, strengthening the shadows and defining the forms all the time carefully following the original. Make good use of the print, that is to say, get the effect with as little additional work as possible. (I) The number of times it should be enlarged depends, of course, on the size of the head in the cabinet photograph.

M. A. J.—If you mean drawing with a pen in India ink, I shows know of a handbook on the subject, but there is a chanter devoted to it in Handerton's "Graphic Arts." Exching is the art of drawing on cop-per, the lines being outen out with acid. From a plate so made the "cichings" are printed. (2) If you wish to variable an oil painting, use pale copal or mastic variable.

Asknots Astrist—The only way to obtain liberalism work for papers is to submit dimerings to the editors, as you have already successfully provent. that discretion as to the style of work sent to a particular magazine, in order that it may be smithled to its probable requirements. Attention to this point saves much unnecrosory disappointment. (2) Guan water may be used sparingly in liming photographs.

E. M. B.—A wash of India link or sepia laid on with a brush may be used respectively in backgrounds of pen drawings in black or brown. (2) Whatman's hot pressed paper can be employed for pen and ink drawings. (3) Probably the greater ment of the work, or possibly the reputation of the artist, caused the smaller drawings to be weeth a higher price. In art matters quality rather than size determines value.

Mas, C. O. L.—The Gréniel dyes can only be fixed by steam upon whole stilk and so rendered inficints. It is impossible to fix them in the same way on a linen or cotton ground. Painting of any kinds mentioning for the decombine of materials intended for frequent washing. For firther information read the articles on impostry pointing now in course of publication. (2) Lastra paint-ing and fitter work are not the same thing.

But a.s.—Your idea for treating the wooden blanket to make a pertiere is good. If you wish to use offs, employ the kend manual rope silk. Flax thread would asswer the purpose very well and be much less expensive for a large piece of work. (2) I should not attempt to point the ground itself, but a dade of better sheeting in a definel, contrasting shade, having a design tinted and embrosleeed upon it, would be effective.

NEW ENGLAND CONSERVATORY

Dr. Eben Tourjee, OF MUSIC, CARL FARLTEN, Director. Music, Electrica, Literature, Languages, Fine Arts, and Tuning. Send for Illustrated Calendar. FRANK W. HALE, Gen'l Manager, Boston, Mana-

PEIR(E (OLLEGE ... or BUSINESS

攀 and SHORTHAND A high class commercial school affording complete equipment for bosiness life. Also French and decrman. Office open all pinesser for exemplated on an enveloperal of standard. Fall form begins Monday, Peopl. 8th, 1865. Application bisnics now ready. Early enrollments heressary. For College Annual, Shorthand Announce-nism, Graduating Exercises, including Mr. Andrew Carnegie's remarkable address on practical education, call or address.

Vices. May Prince, Ph. St., Principal and Founder, Record Building, 97-98 Chestnut St., Philadelphia, Pa.

STUDY LAW

TARE A COURSE IN YOUR SPRAGUE CORRESPONDENCE

SCHOOL OF LAW, J. COTNES, Jr., Sec'y

BH WHITSHY BLOCK Who are seeking a #### superior school should send for the

HARCOURT PLACE SEMINARY Gambier, Ohio

The entalogue will be accompanied by a hand-some book of Gambier Views to those who men-tion where this advertisement was seen.

All expenses paid to energetic students

The Uties (N. Y.) Conservatory of Music, having facilities for more pupils, offers free for the school year beginning Sept. Sh. room, beard, plane, and $12.50 feelinning Sept. Sh. room, beard, plane, and $12.50 enter the institution for "One Year Course." Other advantages to those who hadnes fewer than six. Plan of action and estalogue sent free. In 1891, 400 students.

- LOUIS LOMBARD, Director.

SHENANDOAH VALLEY * WINCHESTER VIRGINIA ACADEMY

Thoroughness' probably unsurpassed in America or England. Plan of Univ. Va.: oboice patronage. See quinlogue of South's highest standard school.

J. B. LOVETT, M. A. (Univ. Va.), Principal

DELICATE Anst all others spend winter in pure, initid air, at the UNIVERSITY OF TENNESSEE Engineering, Law and Normal, Write for announcement.

WESTERN MICHIGAN COLLEGE

Grand Rapids, Mich. Characte and Bome Accommodations. Leading Library, Musi-al, Art and Commercial Institute. Send for year bank.

WALNUT LANE SCHOOL

Boarding, Day and College Preparatory for cirls, 50th year opens Replember 58th. For elecular, address Mas. Threetona B. Richanne, Principal.

Miss Sana Louise Teary, A. M., Associate Principal.

Germanowo, Philadelphia.

CINCINNATI CONSERVATORY OF MUSIC. Miss Clara Baun, Directores. Detablished 1887, addes from a distinct may beard in the Conservatory, here they are under the personal supervision of the irectors. Students may eater at any time. For cath-ages, patterns Miss Clark B. A.UR, the denset, Ohio.

HORNER MILITARY SCHOOL, OXFORD, N. C. Modern beildings, healthful ellmate, beautiful sor-roundings, munisers limited. A model school for boys. Caralogue was on application. HORNER & DREWRY, Principals.

ELOCUTION DELSARTE SCHOOL Opera July Mb. 15th year. For terms, write M, H, SOPER, Principal, 24 Van Buren Street, Chicago For Soren's RECITATIONS, 9 numbers, 25 cents each.

Woman's Medical College of Pennsylvania The Gil Annual Session opera Get. 2d, 1992. A 1 years' graded course of 7 months is given in lectures and clinics. Address CLRA MASSIALL, M. D., Desu, N. College Avenue and 31st Street, Philadelphila.

SHORT-HAND Send for Catalogue of Books and Julya Belle TAUGHT for self-instruction

by BEEN PETMAN and JEROME B. HOWARD, to THE PROSOGRAPHIC INSTITUTE, CINCINNATI, ORIGINAL

SHORTHAND The desGOODBY SCHOOL OF STRONG RAPHY, Buchester, N. Y. Instruction by study only. Terms, $10.00, including necessary books. Instruction thorough and complete, Synopsis for Scent stamp.

DO NOT STAMMER

Prof. H. C. Wood, M.D. LL.D., University Promoptionals, written: "I have seen a testable of cases of statuenting in which Mr. Johnston obtained most excellent results."

Send for $4-page pamphlet to E. S. Johnston's Institute, 1631 Spring Garden Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

A Department devoted to a sociable interchange of ideas among JOURNAL readers. Address all letters to MRS. LYMAN ABBOTT, care of THE LADIES' HOME JOURNAL, 433-435 Arch Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

HAD recently the pleasure of a quiet talk with Mrs. Ballington Booth. Her face showed that although she was in the midst of much questioning and un-der a pressure of care that would overwhelm most persons, she was quite at peace in her heart; and one thing which she said very casually would, I think advantageous for all of us busy housewives to ponder. I asked her if she had met a certain person in the town where her home is, and person in the town where her home is, and she said: "Yes, but I have seen very few people there, for my home must be quiet for both my husband and myself." It is hard to make a quiet home where business must creep in, but what a blessed thing it would be if we could have a little holy of holies in every house into which the family could go every house into which the family could go and get away from the pressure of the burdens, whether they are in the shop, the office, on the farm or in the kitchen. For the physical health of the family, and its moral and men-tal health, such a place would be more effec-tive than the most elaborately served meal or the most beautifully decorated parlor. It would draw the children closer to the parents and to make the fifth serveries. and to each other if the sunniest, sweetest room in the house was where father and mother and children could go to get away from the bustle and friction, though the rest could last but a short time.

... SHOULD a girl of sixteen by given an allowance?

MOTHER.

A girl of sixteen should have had an allowance for many years. On the principle that it is never too late to mend, she should have it at that age if it has been neglected before. By the time a girl is eighteen her allowance should cover all her regular expenses, excepting her board. Emergencies caused by sickness or accident she need not be responsible for. So much has been said already in this page on this subject, that I refrain from enlarging, as I might, on the wisdom of giving all children an allowance and training them by degrees to a allowance and training them by degrees to a knowledge of the value and the use of money.

... SHOULD a wife rebuke her husband for extravagance of focusionally he is reckless enough to spend a dollar or two on flowers, when every penny is needed for bread, butter, shoes, stockings, etc. 7 Viota.

I think a wife does not gain much by rebuking her husband on any subject; and if the flowers he buys are brought home for the enjoyment of the family, and he is willing to take a little less butter on his brend in order take a little less butter on his brend in order to buy the flowers. I should try to share the lack of butter with great cheerfulness and take my share of enjoyment from the flowers. If the husband is thoughtless in regard to the absolute necessities, and inclined too much to indulge in luxuries, propose to take charge of the family purse. In one household, admirably conducted, the husband has for many years turned over the entire income to his wife, taking from her a suitable allowance for his own expenses. As prosperity has come to them, that allowance has increased. Would it not be well for husband and wife to sit down together and, carefully going over sit down together and, carefully going over the expenses, see if they cannot be adjusted to allow of an occasional flower, which may atone for a patched shoe and scant butter.

FOR the women who ask through your columns what they should do to interest the children on Senday afternoon I would sugged the sking of a libbs scrap book, which I found very held tween my libbs girl was old crough to read and write. The pictures may says afternoons I would suggest the apking of a libble scrap book, which I found very held; when my little girl was old coough to read and write. The pictures may be cut from papers and imagaines, baaching the child to reject the coarser pictures. After pasting them in the book, which may be an ordinary account book, with bere and there a few leaves cut out, a libble verse should be chosen to soit the picture and written above or below it. The mother can give help when the question is asked, "what can I have for this picture?" by pointing out some prominent feature; for instance, if of sheep feeding in a measion, tell them to look for the word "sheep" in the Concordance; then from the many sweet verses they will find under that head to select the one they like best. A well suggests many texts; so do tross, some of the selections may be a little incongruess, and bring a smile to the mother's lips, From my little girls book I take the following: Between a bringard scene is written. Behold the foods of the air, for they say not, "etc. A lake with boots has," Now as the walked by the Sea of Gaillee He saw Simon and Andrew his breather." A picture of Whillier in his scarty with its shelves of books from flour to celling, seems to have suggested with breach, and much singly be a warriness of the flex in the said with the sea appreciation. "of making many books there in the sense in the end, and much singly be a warriness of the flex purpose, that of giving glomaters and comparison is the child with tracks up the books a new very uneful, and

These Bible scrap-books are very useful, and afford a great opportunity for unconscious study of the Bible. The incongruities are sometimes very amosing. A band of children were making such a scrap-book recently, and had put in a picture of some skaters. The text, "the wicked stand in alippury places," seemed in a certain way appropriate, but was rather severe on the furpuy looking children who were sploying the exercise. These Bible scrap-books are very useful, and who were enjoying the exercise.

I WISH our dear girls would stop and think offener? I know they do not mean to do wrong, but sometimes appearances are against them. While I do not agree with a friend of mine, who, in discussing some bright, gay girl who had brought cussers and severe criticism upon herself by indulging in what seemed to her harmless fin, said "she had as well be wrong as seem so;" still, we will agree it is best to be prudent.

The case was this: When driving from a watering place to a neighboring town, she and her escort laughingly resolved to register as Mr. and Mrs. ——. They did so, and spent the morning and early afternoon shopping and driving. As such things will do, their joke (7) become known, and for asthlie her life was miscrable. See has lived the unpleasant remore down; but she fully realizes the suffering that may result from thoughtlessess. She did it for fin. Wherehold she find the far I fulled direct cut also often received? In the failure to receive cards to a large reception to which all her companions were invited? I say she has lived it down; still, there are some people who will never forgive nor forget the offenes, and will be continually on the look-out for errors and further indiscretions on her part. Does not the Ebbe warm is against the appearance of evil? Take the admonition to yourselves, and give no one cause to speak elightingly of you. Elizaneris.

A wise caution very gently given.

WORRY is the enemy of work. It is the Chinese wall mirror that calarges, distorts and mains it.

Does your attle need "going over," and is it a bugbear to you, dear little woman." Bort you remember that three days is long enough in which to assort, straighten and regulate everything in an attle. Go at it and get it dose, and put worry to flight. How often do we hear women of all ages say! "I have been buy all day, but have done nothing." It is proverbial that women fritter away their time. How is it to be avoided? My dear sister, think over the deeds of one day and see where your time went. Did you not struggle to get in too many things, and then have a constence-emitten feeling that much was left undone? Have the courage to give up doing forty things that can't possibly be done, and do, say, Eur others well, but do them; let nothing prevent it. Put away the forty things from your mind. Toes them overboard, and let them go.

Worry over tunnerwancy things is the com-

Worry over unnecessary things is the commonest cause of mental and physical breakdown. It is hard to learn to let the unnecessary things go, and probably these words will fall fruitless on the minds hardened by continual pressure of fretting and anxiety. Ambition and vanity are hard task-masters, and drive us to the performance of much hard work; and the most hopeless thing about such slavery is that emancipation is not desired.

The fact that I am a woman, eager for woman's advancement in every proper sphere, may have much to do with making me impervious to the hackneyed arguments against our fitness for the practice of medicine. He who argues that the practice of medicine is not a suitable profession for our sex does not deny that there are many brilliantly successful women in it. Admit, then, that you may employ a man or a woman with equal satisfaction, it is purely a matter of individual taste whom you choose. Speaking for myself, and for many of my friends, I can say that we most decidedly prefer the woman. Possibly the prejodes that guides us is as footish as the one that londs the conservative to say: "Oh, I never could treat a woman to attend me; I feel so much safer with a man." It seems to me, however, that good sense and gued morals are with us. As to my own particular doctor, I wish she might be met and known by him who writes of the loss of womanly sweetness. Why, even were she less able and hoss successful, I almost fear that most of her patients, including myself, would still cling to her because she is so sweet, so womanly and so lovable. And yet she always impresses one with her power and firmness. I have always had a woman physician when I could get out, and the old idea to the conteary notwithstanding. I feel that I have propriety on my side, as well as personal preference.

There is no longer any question as to the advisability of having some women physicians. It is not worth while to argue either for or against it. Women have proved their fitness to practice medicine, and whether one employs a man or a woman depends on circumstances and preferences. But I think the business woman, whether she be doctor or not, needs cautioning that her pushing about in the crowd of workers does not make her less gentle and fine in her manners. The exceptions are noble, but the large majority of women who have entered into competition with men in the earning of money are not so with men in the earning of money are not so charming as is your beloved physician. The new conditions, it is easy to see, may produce unpleasant results, which will not follow when there has come to women a longer ex-perience of the outer world.

FOR over a year I have been a very close reader of your page of the Jouintal, and have often been touched by the appeals for a little light by the way; and again have felt very indignant at others, such as "Happy Wife," in a former assumer. In talking to friends about her very severe treatment of "complaining about tous" for bread and received a stone." Please let us turn the tables on "Happy Wife," and, adopting her even expression, tell her that we have no patience with such Finarisaical natures as here that would say "I have fullowed such and such a line; go and do like who, and if your access is not the same as mine it is your own fault. So reap the consequences in silence; do not distort me with your failure." And they wrap the robes of selfishness closer around them and "pass by on the other side." In all probability, the surroundings or dispositions of no two of our readers are alike, and how can the more fortunate ones say to these others, "If my plan does not succeed with you, blame yourself." My own home is indeed very happy, due a great deal, as I believe, to my own exertions; but I am sure it is due a very great feed to my surroundings and my husband's disposition. To these treathed moment on, and you must arrely win.

Traily one must steer a may from Scalla in Truly one must steer away from Scylla in avolding Charybdis. Gratitude at one's own happy situation must not be changed into conceit; neither must gratitude be misjudged and called vanity. There is no lesson more forcibly taught in the so-called lower walks of life than that a cheerful disposition makes even great burdens light; and if one has found the way to lessen sorrow, and to compar great difficulties, shall she not tell her "glad tid-ings," and urge her alsters in misery to try the same good way?

WHEN THE LADDEN HOME JOURNAL came this morning, and I was reading the many letters written by women who think they are unhappy because their dross are in a sense contracted, I thought I should like to tell a little about the life of one who has every leastly—everything that momey can buy! But oh, their women, I am adrikt the best thing of all, happiness, will never be mine! I cometimes think there is no such thing as happiness in all this dark world. For the past year my life has been so full of secretor, yet to the eyes of the world I ought to be the most happy of women.

Righteen months ago I was persuaded, against my better Judgment, to marry a very weakiny man over twice my age. Unfortunately, I have what the world calls beauty. Ah, this endowment is sometimes the greatest curse a woman can have! I see now it has led now into all my follow. I am treated as a mere doll, decked out in gorgeomese, to display my bushand's weath. I have been passionately lond of reading all my life, but even this is denied me, because I once foolishly corrected my husband in some literary matter when he made a mistake.

Do any of was a secondary to the most party of the party of the made a party of very manual party when he made a mistake.

my hishand in some literary matter when he made a mistake.

Do any of you remember the life of Dorothea in George Ellot's "Middlemarch?" because her life is nothing compared to what I have to endure. When I read of these mothers who are worn out with the care of their little children my heart longs to tell them how they should appreciate these little blessings which God has been so good as in give them.

I am never allowed to be with my little son more than one heur a day, and I sincerely hope you women will never know the aching of my heart when I hear his baby voice and know I am powerless to soothe him. Now you must understand how sad my life must be. At twenty-three there seems nothing before me but black closels.

Can you not exercise a little independence, and spend more time with your child? What would be the penalty if you should say: "I must care for my child; he is mine to train and to love; I must have him with me?" It may be a hard matter to control your indignation and your temper, but if you could, without neglecting the things which would make the home attractive to your husband quietly the home attractive to your husband, quietly arrange your time for reading and for caring for your child, and assure your husband that you feel it is right to do so, would you not

I HAVE enjoyed this department so long, and obtained so many useful hints from its colemas, that when I discovered a good thing yesterday, I said: "Fit send it to the Jou's xai." If do most of my own work, but for all that my hands are soft enough to be almost burned into histors with the beat that will find its way through the iron holder. This is the "good thing" I discovered: In making a new holder yesternay I shifted between the layers of doubled faced canton thansel a thick layer of sebestos, the fluffy, therets preparation used so much in our unitural gas fires. The result is a perfect success. The holder need not be mark thick enough to strain the hand, as the sebestos thoroughly protects from the heat. My hesband thinks it ought to be patented. May be it is, but I never heard of it.

Such a holder as you describe would be very useful in the household, and for the frequent "pressing" which every woman finds necessary if she keeps her wardrobe in order, would be a great saving of hands unaccustomed to the use of the ordinary flat-iron holder. The impulse which caused the writing of your letter is so good a one that I venture to ask why we do not often let others share the benefit of our "discoveries of good things?" Surely we must be discovering them all the time! Wise women ought to find better ways of "doing things," as they throw the light of modern learning on daily labor. There is scarcely a machine in use that will not be antiquated in a decade because some one has "improved" upon it. Are we not a little at fault that we are not as eager for better methods as the machinist is for better tools?

A Sone of your interested readers may I ask a practiAll cal question concerning bone life? Ever since my school days, years and years ago, my social friends have contiled to me their heart traits, and I heartily desire to become wiser and broader in my views of human nature to help these nucleus longing, tried ones.

The following is one question: Is it duty, or a mistaken sence of duty, for one in a family to suffer in the continuance of a daily service for another, who, but for the habit of looking for it, burece able in every respect to do the work himself? I refer more particularly to the edserty, who unconsciously fall into the habit of expecting aftention. A lady who could not secure efficient "help" walted on her sick bushand for weeks, day and sight. After he was able to be up and riding out daily he would look for her to start up the moment he came is and unbutton his wrap, adjust his footstool, get him something to est or pat the medicine into his menti.
He wanted her to do something for him continually from very love of baving her sear him, he said. She, however, became so tired and nerveus that she could not est with any degree of comfurt, neither could she get any sound, refreshing sleep. He wondered at her condition, understall not seen have such light mistakenthing for the matter for a wife to attempt to claim her needed rust in a case like this, and in some homes the would rather work on and die, as more than a few have done, than try it.

A physician and an earnest church worker living in one of the fairest cities of our land wrote to his deconsed wife's parents the following. "The brave, loving heart that had borne its borden for years, had reached its jimit and could not raily by any earthly sestioned.

As a matter of fact, her work has been beyond her strength dering our changedid life here. She, however, was better and uncomplaining, talked hopefully of an early day when she need not have so many cares, still theorem showed she had exhanned for her to such a degree for commel an

These typical cases show that "children of a larger growth" want to be coddled and petred and nursed just as the babies do. The petted and nursed just as the babies do. The habit of depending upon others is almost uni-versal, and we are all in danger of putting that habit on. So we may look in these mir-rors which our sister holds up before us, and see whether they reflect us. It is very true that women are most likely to suffer from the nuconscious carelessness of those whom they love, but they are not the only sufferers. And women are oftener than men the sinners, I think. Daughters allow their mothers to do for them what they should do for themselves, and mothers become over-dependent on their daughters. What is more common than to see an elder sister in a family made the beaver of the burdens of the entire family. Such experience often works out in her an exquisite character, but she gains her beauty at the expense of those whom she so unselfishly serves.

A.F. St. Abbott.

When the Pie was opened

The Birds began to sing the praises of Bird's Custard Powder

An English Table Luxury Providing Dainties in Endless Variety The Choicest Dishes and the Richest Custard Entirely Without Eggs

Birn's Custard Powder is now introduced into America, and will very shortly be on sale at all the principal retail stores. Meanwhile every American lady is invited to send to Alfred Bird & Sons, 2 Wooster St., New York, for the Dollar Sample Box of Bird's exquisite English Home Specialties, and to entertain her family and friends with a few choice English dishes by way of a change.

THE DOLLAR SAMPLE BOX

contains four of the articles for which Bird's name has been a household word throughout Great Britain and her Colonies for more than half a century.

CONTENTS OF THE BOX

FIRST, a packet of BIRD's CUSTARD POWDER, sufficient to make four pints of the richest custard without eggs, which may be served either from a dish or in the ordinary custard plasses, and is delicious with all canned, bot-tled, or fresh fruits. Bird's Custard possesses the richness and nutriments of cream without risk to the most sensitive digestion.

SECOND, a packet of Bind's Blanc-manor. Powder, enough to make three large Blancmanges a pint each The Blanc-manges are most agreeably flavored and are highly nutritious, and can be pro-duced in a variety of tints, forming a charming dessert dish, and contributing to the decoration of the table.

THIRD, a tin of BIRD'S CONCENTRATED EGG Powners, a complete substitute for eggs in pud-dings, cakes, buns, griddle cakes, and all simi-lar kinds of English and American confectionery, to which it imparts the lightness, the richness, appearance and flavor of new-laid eggs. This tin is equal to 30 new-laid eggs.

FOURTH, a canister of Bind's Giant Bariso Powser, claimed to be the strongest and best article of the kind in the whole world. It will go twice as far as ordinary baking powder, and is guaranteed free from alum, animonia, or any impurity whatsoever, all the ingredients being of the highest quality. N. B.—Messes, Bind were the original inventors of Baking Powder in 1842, and the secret of their process has never yet been discovered. process has never yet been discovered.

For a fifth article the box contains a copy of hints and numerous original recipes of tasty dishes for the dinner and supper table. The recipes are all new to American cookery, and suited to American measures, methods and cooking utensils. The whole of the above are enclosed in a tastefully finished artistic Cartoon Box, an excellent specimen of English fancy box ware. When the samples are taken out, it will make a very pretty handkerchief, glove, or cotton box.

This Dollar Sample Box is intended solely to introduce Bird's English Specialties into American Homes, and cannot be purchased retail, and Mesers. Bird will not be able to supply more than one sample box to each household. Remember the object in view is to distribute samples of the Special Domestic Lexuries for which Bird's name stands first nd foremost as a guarantee for Purity and High Quality, A remittance of one dollar to Messrs. Bind & Son's New York Offices, 2 Woosren Strang, New York will bring the sample box EX-PRESSED Free of Charge. If any dissatisfaction, the money will be willingly refunded, providing the goods are sent back intact.

ASKI ASKI ASKI ASKI O. n.i Stores! Everywhere! Every Day! For BIRD'S CUSTARD POWDER. Google

MISS PARLOA will at all times be glad, so far as she can, to answer in this Department all general domestic questions sent by her readers. Address all letters to Miss Maria Parloa, care of The Ladies' Home Journal, Philadelphia, Pa.

Cooking receipts are not given in this Department, hence do not ask that they be printed and do not send manuscripts of that nature to Miss Parloa.

MONG the letters which come to me every month there are some which so appeal to my sympathies that there is a strong de-sire to write many long personal answers; but this is not often possible, as my friends must readi-ly understand. When the questions are of such the questions are of such general interest that they touch nearly every housekeeper the answers should go into the Journas. I have before me several letters which it would be a pleasure to print in full if there were space. As they are on a subject which troubles many housekeeper. I will nearly four them. housekeepers, I will quote from them.

LIMITED INCOMES CAUSE PERPLEXITY

Limited Incomes Cause Perplexity

A BROOKLYN woman asks: "Will you of advice? There a family of six, who require fresh meattwice a day, at least, They will eat no soups, stews, nor neade dishes, no matter how well propared. The meat bill is thirty dollars a month. Can 1 do better than that and give what is required? What ought to be the sum for dry groceries for a month for six persons who average four guests a week?"

Every housekeeper finds that meat bills are the heaviest of all the table expenses. With a reasonable family of fair size a capable woman can reduce the expense by buying large pieces and having them cut up to suit ber convenience; by substituting fish and ages when they are pleatiful, and may be had at reasonable prices; by purchasing some of eggs when they are plentiful, and may be had at reasonable prices; by purchasing some of the cheaper outs of mests and using them in soups, stews, braizes and the many other tempting things which can be made from such cuts when slowly cooked; by preparing little savory dishes of the remnants of cold cooked meats and fish, and by using a generous amount of cereals, regetables and fruits. If, however, as is the case of the correspondent, the family will cut only fresh meat, I see no way of economizing, except by providing more vegetables and cereals and simple desects. If you must have a large amount of fresh meat you must pay for it, and it seems fresh meat you must pay for it, and it seems to me that an average of eight cents a person for the meat consumed at each meal is very low, and the housekeeper who can manage to give her family fresh meat at this figure in an Eastern market cannot be charged with extravagance in that line.

LIVING BY THE OUNCE UNCOMFORTABLE

LIVING BY THE OUNCE UNCOMPORTABLE

THE amount one should pay per month for dry groceries depends wholly upon the manner of living. For example; the average estimate per week for butter in a family is one pound for each person. In my own household we average four people, and use about three pounds of butter a week. All my cooking, except deep frying, is done with butter, and there is no special effort to economize in this direction. The secret of the small amount used is that we make very little cake, and rarely any pastry. I am sure some folks would consider me extravagunt in my use of milk and cream, but each household has its would consider me extravagant in my use of milk and cream, but each household has its special extravagances and economics, and it would be impossible to give an accurate esti-mate without a knowledge of these. Many housekeepers can and do estimate to an ounce how much of exerciting to purchase for a week or mooth, and they make that do, no matter what comes up. Of coarse, in such cases there is no allowance made for the oc-casional or mescreeted must, thus shorting casional or unexpected guest, thus shutting out all real hospitality.

REFINEMENT MAKES A VAST DIFFERENCE

A NOTHER writer states that until the past two years she had always had abundant means; now she is compelled to do her own work, and has to dress two people, pay rent and living expenses for a family of three on seventy five dollars a month, and she wants to know if she can do this and have things for her table wholesome and dainty.

for her table wholesome and dainty.

Much, of course, depends upon the woman's taste, skill and strength. As she is doing her work herself, she ought to be able to give the table an attractive appearance. Refinement works wonders in such matters. But in order to keep within her income it will be necessary to exercise great care in the selection of such food as will yield the largest amount of nutrition at the least cust. Many excellent little dishes can be made out of some of the common things. Living in San Francisco, where means, vegetables and fruits are so much cheaper than at the East, this correspondent will not have to draw so share a line at these items as have to draw so shorp a line at these items as the Eastern woman does.

Salar Salar

NUTRITIOUS AND ECONOMICAL FOOD

NEW JERSEY woman writes: "My family consists of five grown people requiring two meals a day, as they all support themselves. It is a necessity, if possible, for me to keep my table on less than ten dollars per week. As you are so practical in your ways, I thought perhaps I might be one of the Journal sisters and receive the benefit of your instruction." struction."

Even with two dollars per week for each person the cost of each meal per person would be only about fourteen cents; not a large sum for a working man or woman. Nothing is said as to the third meal, which is probably taken near the place of employment. If this meal be a substantial one the supper can be light, but if, on the contrary, it be a light inneheon, then the breakfist and supper should be nutritious and substantial. Of course, should be natritious and substantial. Of course, with such small means the choicer cuts of fresh meats are out of the question, but the tougher and cheaper parts can be used braized, stewed, made into soups, or used in any of the savery dishes that only require long, slow cooking to make them tender and appetizing. Eggs, when the price is reasonable, are a most sufficiently and economical kind of food. When there is no objection to pork, on the score of creed or health, it can be used in combination with many kinds of fish, vegetable and cereals to give them saveriness and the element they to give them savoriness and the element they luck—fat. Macaroni, when cooked and served lack—fat. Macaroni, when cooked and served with a sauce, is nutritious, healthful and cheep. Peas, barley and beams, when made into stews, purses and soups, make highly nutritious and very cheep food; and beams are good and substantial when baked. Home-made bread is essential to healthful and cheap living. Chocolate and cocoa, made with milk, and served with good bread, are a nutritious and pleasing combination. Simple desects are economical combination. Simple deserts are economical and healthful. Stewed fruits, with good bread, are much to be preferred, both on the score of economy and health, to pastry, an article both unhealthful and expensive.

SIXTY DOLLARS A MONTH

CALIFORNIA woman writes: "Do you A CALIFORNIA woman writes: "To you asking me to live on sixty dollars a month? By 'living' I mean buying food for my husband, mother, myself, two servants and two children, the age of the oldest being two years and a half."

If that is all heads and two childrens are a control of the oldest being two years are a control of the oldest being two years.

If that is all her husband can afford to have If that is all her husband can afford to have spent on his table he is not unreasonable, provided he does not demand more than that amount of money can cover. With such favorable prices as are to be found in San Francisco, I think it possible to set a plain table for that sum. That this particular family care only for beef and lamb makes it a hard neatter to give variety, which is a desimble element in one's food. I think a great mistake is made in not using more vegetables, fruit and simple dessert. It is by making use of the "left-overs," in the form of simple and savory little dishes, that one's table can be provided with a variety and the expenses reduced. Try it in your own bousehold. duced. Try it in your own bousehold.

EQUIVALENTS IN WEIGHT FOR MEASURES

MANY requests have come for a table which would give a sure equivalent of small quantities by weight. Here is a list for the materials most commonly used in the kitchen. The spices are all ground;

Ginger -1 heaping tempoonful, ½ corce. Constron -1 heaping tempoonful, ½ corce. Albeide -1 heaping tempoonful, generous to un moensture, %

Contenuou—1 beaping teaspoonful, 32 conce.
Albebe—1 braging teaspoonful, generous measure, 32 conce.
Coves—1 teaspoonful, sügüniy beaped, 32 cunce.
Macs—1 braging teaspoonful, 32 cunce.
Macs—1 braging teaspoonful, 32 cunce.
Natures—5-equal 1 conce.
Peoper—1 heraping teaspoonful, 32 cunce.
Maks—1 braspoonful, 32 cunce.
Maks—1 braspoonful, 32 cunce.
Maks—1 braspoonful, 32 cunce.
Maks—1 braspoonful, 32 cunce.
Seds—1 touspoonful, 32 gibtly beaped, 32 cunce.
Beds—1 touspoonful, 32 gibtly beaped, 32 cunce.
Beds—1 touspoonful, 32 gibtly braspoonful, 32 cunce.
Granulated sugar—1 historyopenful, 32 cunce.
Granulated sugar—1 hasping tablespoonful, 32 cunce.
Braspoonful—1 rounding tablespoonful, 32 cunce.
From—2 scant braspoonful, 32 cunce.
Tous—3 scant braspoonful, 32 cunce.
Tous—3 scant braspoonful, 32 cunce.
Braspoonful, 32 cunce.
Braspoonful, 33 cunce.
English currants, cleaned—1 cupful, 5 cunces.
English currants, cleaned—1 cupful, 6 cunces.
English currants, cleaned—1 cupful, 8 cunces.
English currants cleaned—1 cupful, 8 cunces.
Pastry flour—1 cupful, 6 cunces.
Pastry flour—1 cupful of cellulary placed cupful, 8 cunces.
Pastry flour—1 cupful of cellulary placed cupful, 8 cunces.
Pastry flour—1 cupful of cellulary placed cupful, 8 cunces.
Pastry flour—1 cupful of cellulary placed cupful, 8 cunces.
Pastry flour—1 cupful of cellulary placed cupful, 8 cunces.
Pastry flour—1 cupful of cellulary placed cupful, 8 cunces.
Pastry flour—1 cupful of cellulary placed cupful of cellulary p

The cups used in these estimates hold half a pint, old measure. They are nonle of tin, and divided into quarters and thirds. Nearly all first-class kitchen furnishing stores keep them, and every housekeeper should have a

THE FURNISHING OF PARLORS

THE FURNISHING OF PARLORS

LACH month brings several letters asking about furnishing the house, particularly the parlor. It would be impossible to give full directions to anybody in regard to the fornishing of a house or any one room in the house without seeing the place and having some idea of one's means. But now for a general word as to the purior. The furnishing should be in harmony with the rest of the house. Do not have it so much finer that the contrast will be marked. In a country house the furnishing should be of a lighter and simpler kind than for a city house. Full parlor suites are neither so fashionable nor pleasing as odd pieces; but it must be remembered that these odd pieces must be in harmony.

People of moderate means might furnish a room of good size in this manner: Place diagonally in one corner of the room a sofa, upholstered either in plush, damask, brocade, tapestry or rugs. Have in other parts of the room two arm chairs, upholstered to match the sofa. Have also one or two intan chairs with plush cushions for backs and sens. Get several small wooden chairs, of handsome finish, and with the seats unboltau chairs with plush cushions for backs and scuts. Get several small wooden chairs, of handsome finish, and with the seats uphol-stered in silk tapestry or plush. Put a table at one side of the room. On this set a lamp at one side of the room, On this set a lamp brice-brac. Have one of the ration chairs near this table. A pedestal with a piece of statuary would be effective in one corner, and a calcingt in which to place drive brice-brace. statuary would be effective in one corner, and a cabinet, in which to place dainty brie à-brac, can be set in a corner or at one side of the room. If there be a piano, have also a music cubinet. A clock and a few ornaments should be placed on the mantel. Rugs and pictures all finish a room wonderfully. Even if you are rich, it will be better to buy these things a few at a time, studying the effects they give.

SURSTITUTES FOR STAINED GLASS

NFORMATION in regard to sesuething to In FORMATION in regard to something to take the place of stained glass is requested. I have knowledge of two articles, and there may be many others. One of these comes ready to be pasted on the plain glass, it being simply soaked in water for about a minute and then laid on in its proper place. This work has to be deae curefully. After the design has been applied to the window it is allowed to stand for a day, and then lead lines are put on. This gives a good imitation of stained glass. This substitute comes in almost endless varieties, and one can cut up the sheets to form any substitute comes in almost endless varieties, and one can cut up the sheets to form any combination required.

For half a dollar one cauget a pattern book, which gives in colors all the designs made, and also states the size and price of each. The book can be returned and the money will be refunded. This firm also offers to put any design selected from the book on panes of glass of the same size and shape as the customer's window, and send it safely packed, at the rate of one dollar per square foot. These panes of glass are to be placed over those in the window and fastened with a narrow beading of wood.

ing of wood.

The other stained glass substitute conses. The other stained glass substitute cones, like the first, in sheels, borders, corners, etc., and you can make your,own combination; or, you can send for the pattern book, select what you want and get estimates. The prices vary with different designs, but to give you some ides, here are a few of them: Corner piece, 9 x 9 inches, with one set of colors, thirty-nine cents. When brown is substituted for green, the price of the same piece is one dollar and a the price of the same piece is one dollar and a half. Another piece, 19x 15 inches, cut with one set of colors, forty-three cents, with another set, twenty-right cents—the colors used and the designs controlling the prices. used and the designs controlling the prices. This last substitute does not come prepared to be put on the glass. A cement is provided, which you must apply yourself. When the design is perfectly dry it must be varnished, if anybody is interested enough to send me an addressed and stamped envelope I will forward the names of the dealers in these goods.

TO KEEP REFRIGERATORS SWEET

THIS is one of the most important duties of the bousekeeper. No matter how many servants she may keep she should give this matter her personal supervision once a week. The refrigerator should be in perfect condition. If the bining he broken in any part, so that the water soaks into the wood attend to the religing at once; or, if the refrigerator be not worth that, discard it wholly. When possible, avoid having the drain pipe connected with the plumbing in the house. Have the refrigerator placed where it can be flooded with air and light whenever necessary, but, of course, in as cool a piace as possible. Once a week have everything removed from it. Take out the shelves and wash them in hot soap-stale; then pour boiling water over them. Place them in the sun; or, if that fails, by the range, that they may be perfectly dried. Now take out the ice rack and wash and scald in the HIS is one of the most important duties of that they may be perfectly direct. Now take out the ice rock and wash and scald in the same way, except that, as there are grooves or wires in this, the greatest care must be used to get out every particle of dirt that may have lodged there. Next wash out the ice compartment, running a flexible wire rod down the pipe, that nothing shall lodge there. Put two tablespoonfuls of washing-soda into a quart of boiling water and on the fire. When this of looling water and on the fire. When this boils, pour it into the ice compartment; follow this with a kettle full of boiling water, and wipe dry. Now wash the other parts of the refrigerator with hot soap-ands and wipe perfectly dry. Be careful to get the doors and ledges clean and dry. Leave the refrigerator open for an hour and then return the ice and fond to it.

I plan this work for a day when the ice man is due. The work is done immediately man is due, The work is done immediately after breakfast, so that the refrigerator is ready when the ice comes. Should you, after this care, still have trouble do not use the refrigerator. It will be far better to get along without the comfact it affords than to endanger health and life by using a contaminated article. Food should never be put in a refrigerator while warm, because it absorbs the theory of other food and also heats the refrigerator.

HIGHLAND A TABLE LUXURY.

Dusweetened and Sterilized (Refined)

A CULINARY ARTICLE,

AN INFANT'S FOOD.

A most natural, untritions, easily digested and safe food for infants. Highland Evaporated Cream is simply cows milk in an improved form, and is the ideal food for infants.

Sold by, Grocers and Druggists Everywhere Write for our lathant Food circular and Highland Evaporated Cream booklet entitled "A Faw Dark'ry

HELVETIA MILK CONDENSING CO. Sole Purreyors Highland, Ill.

"AN EGG" is better Buffalo Steam Egg Poacher" IS BEST

Mrs. Gen. Less Wallace supr ; Mrs. Gen. Law Walknes sup;

"Lifting the cover distinges the delicate mercel, the yelk glosuming in self beder through a feloud of transparent withomers. Have tready the hottpered breat, the rages glip each from the savet little cup eachly as from the parent, about a link in to act before a brig. Even to have a delicional butcheson with the aid of the begint when it which make cooking so easy, it seems to act with its upon intelleption. In the test of treather analysing the young hotsekuper publics are.

SOLE MANY'S SIDNEY SHEPARD & CO., Buffelo, N. Y.

Unlike the Dutch Process

No Alkalies Other Chemicals are used in the preparation of W. BAKER & CO.'S BreakfastCocoa which is absolutely pure and soluble.

It has more than there times the strength of Cocca mixed with Starch, Arrowroor or Sugar, and is far more consomical, costing feas then one cent a cap.

It is delicious, nonrishing, and EASLEY DECESTED.

Sold by Grorers everywhere. W. BAKER & CO., Dorchester, Mass.

"Royal Egg"

Macaroni-NEW MEW
Made from American wheat and east by American machinery. In riction form, untouched by band. More delicous and deliny than any other. That you may be convinced of like fact, hoy a point loss of year Greet, or send to come in stamps and we will mail FREE a SAMPLE BOX with book of original receipts.

BOTAL ESE MACABOSI WORES, Manageth, Mas.

GOOD NEWS TO LADIES

Greatest offer. Now's your time to get orders for our celebrated Teas, Coffees and Boking Powder, and secure a beautiful Gold Band or Mess Russ China

Tea Set, Linuar Set, Gold Rand Moss Hose Tolke Set, Watch, Brass Lamp, Castor or Webster's Birthemary. For particulars, address. THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA CO. P. O. Sox 28. It and S. Vesy Street, New York

PERFECTION Loose bottoms. Calors removed the control of the calors of th

DRESS MAKING BY EMMA M. HOOPER

MISS HOOPER invites, and will cheerfully answer any questions concerning home dressmak-ing which may be sent to her by the JOURNAL sisters. While she will answer by mail, if stamp is inclosed, she greatly prefers to be allowed to reply through the JOHNNAL, in order that her answers may be generally helpful. Address all letters to Miss. EMMA M. HOOPER, care of THE LADIES' HOME JOURNAL, Philadelphia, Pa.

LITTLE THINGS IN DRESSMAKING

seems trivial to talk of hav-

T seems trivial to talk of having a well-supplied work-basket, sharp scissors, etc., but all of this adds to the workwoman's comfort, and when she is comfortable her work is very apt to look better than when she is "cranky." Have an easy sewing chair, long needles for basting and those of medium length for sewing. Use finely-pointed pins for wool, and black, round-headed pins for silk or velvet materials, in which an ordinary pin-hole will show. Silk basting or fine cotton thread should be used on silk goods, and in ripping such threads cut them every few inches or they will leave a mark if "long drawn out,"

A FEW MORE DETAILS

SHEARS for cutting out should have long blades, large finger, boles and be of light weight. Ripping scissors must be finely pointed, and keep old scissors or a knife for cutting whalebone. There is now a machine for press-ing sleeve and other curved seams upon, that is remarkably convenient for use in the sewing is remarkably convenient for use in the sewing room. The French skirt having the lining sewed in with the outside material has the can vas fac-ing sewed in between the lining and outside, ing sewed in between the lining and outside, the seams separating for this purpose near the lower edge. The velveteen binding or facing is applied as usual. The protectors worn on the edge of skirts are both one, and three yards in length. A very nice skirt is beautifully lined with silk and finished with a hemmed or plaked ruffle of the silk as a balayease on the inside. Many cannot afford a silk lining, and while they are charming to wear they are by no means a necessity. The skirts continue long, though the rumor is gaining ground that the French men dressmakers are against the style, and will change it gradually. In the meantime the bell skirt sweeps on. A correspondent wonders why so many on. A correspondent wonders why so many bell skirts gap apart in the back. Simply be-cause the maker forgot to catch the placket opening half-way down with a buttonhole beneath the plaits and a flat button, which like the modest violet is too lowly to be no-ticed.

THE LATEST DESIGNS

A VERY pretty house dress is made of red crépon for a bell skirt, pointed basque back, corselet front and full sleeve uppers drooping over deep cuffs. The edges of the collar, wrists, corselet, basque back and bottom of the skirt are trimmed with black silk moss hands at twenty-five cents, headed with jet gimp at the same price. The crépon was one dollar, and lined with percaline at tifteen cents. Princess gowns have a voke, round or V-

Princess gowns have a yoke, round or V-shaped and a corselet of silk edged with a bend gimp. Slender figures wear these yokes in cross-wise tucks. Convenient "back" dresses are of serge, cheviot, homespun, etc., fishion-ed with a bell skirt; in fact, there is but one skirt, and that is both a belle and a bell. Jacket seams and a belt across the waist line, which passes through openings made in the side seams, and fastens in front over a loose blouse of wash, China or surah silk, which usually has a back of silesia and is entirely separate from the back of silesta and is entirely separate from the jacket waist. Small revers are worn again, and deep, close-fitting ouffsend at the top in a point up over the sleeve. The Russian blouse has be-come one of the fads of the season, but let short and stout figures flee from its shadow. Sleeves are broad and full to the elbow, close below, and many have a small cuff flared out instant the bond of the arms, others are broadjust at the bend of the arm; others are brace there with velvet or silk ribbon or a band of passementerie. Shirt sleeves ending in narrow wristbands are worn on outing gowns. Jaunty tennis gowns will have a bell skirt and Russian blouse, as well as the longer worn sailor and shirt waist. Striped flannel and "Outing" cloth still prevail for these pretty

FOR STOUT FIGURES

A WAIL goes up from all over the land regarding "bell" skirts, but the wailer is stout, and the present style of skirts is not kind to a prominent or stout figure. There is but one thing to do and that is to eschew such an unbecoming style and wear appropriate and becoming fashions, even if they are not the prevailing ones. The bell back is cor-rect and the plain, flat sides are not bad, but rect and the plain, flat sides are not bad, but the front must be draped by lengthwise folds running in each side of the belt, which extra cloth requires an extra length of about half a yard at the top, which must be draped on the wenter, as these flexible folds cannot be arranged by any set rule. For a moderately stout figure a pretty skirt has the sides meeting at the center front of the belt where they are lapped over, and then diverging so as to leave a reversed V in the center.

DRESS AIDS FOR MOTHERS

NEAT DESIGNS FOR MISSES

MOTHER writes me: " How

MOTHER writes me: "How shall I make my daughter small waisted?" which question opens a field of thought and gives ample room for the dress reformers. Growing girls are apt to be too stout or so tall and slender as to resemble a cornstalk, but if dressed according to the needs of their figure many of these blemishes, if nature can be a blemish, may be modified, if not hidden; for fashionable trimmings may be adapted for such opposite forms. The bretelle ruffies, commencing narrow and scanty near the center of the waist line and growing fuller and wider over the shoulders, where they end or continue down the back as in the front, were apparently invented for the stout girl, as they give her a longer and more slender waist, as does the pointed girdle now worn. For the slender girl, the bertha trimming of lace, embroidery, silk, etc., outlines a round yoke, falling fuller over the shoulders and giving breadth to the grit, the bertha trimming of face, embroidery, silk, etc., outlines a round yoke, falling fuller over the shoulders and giving breadth to the form and fullness to the flat chest. Both wear bell and gathered skirts and full sleeves. One may wear any material, but the other looks better in narrow stripes, small figures and solid colors. Girls of fourteen to sixteen years were the Passian blooms which has been dec wear the Russian blouse, which has been des-cribed many times, for their street and house wear the Russian blouse, which has been desdresses. Other pretty waists for them have a round back, where it buttons, and short, square jacket fronts opening over a plastron of China silk or surah. Neat challie frocks have the front shirred on cords from one armhole to the other, forming a yoke, with the fullness running into a pointed girdle made of sixinch ribbon, which is then folded narrowly around the waist and falls in two long ends at the back. A girl of fourteen wears a gathered skirt of crépon, three yards and a half wide, with a round waist gathered at the neck in shirred tucks to form a yoke. The sleeves are shirred at the wrists, and a corselet from the side seams is laced permanently in the front, as the frock fastens in the back. The corselet is well boned, straight on the upper edge, nine inches deep, and slightly pointed or round on the lower edge. White mull, thirty-two inches wide, and from thirty to forty-live cents, is greatly used with a trimming of point de Genes lace for dainty midsummer frocks.

FOR SMALLER GIRLS

FOR SMALLER GIRLS

THE all-wool and mixed challies in cream, pink and pale blue grounds are neatly fashioned with a full skirt, two yards and a half wide for a girl of eight years, round waist gathered around the neck to form an erect frill and at the waist line, back and front. Full sleeves shirred at the wrists to form a frill. sleeves shirred at the wrists to form a frill.

The only trimming is a piece of No. 12 ribbon set on the front of the waist as a V reaching to the waist line, then carried up under the armholes to between the shoulders at the back, where it forms a short Watteau bow with ends to the bottom of the frock. Girls of two or three years wear their skirts to escape the floor in the quaint Greenaway style or well above the feet; this is entirely a matter of taste on the part of mother, though it is well to remark the feet; this is entirely a matter of taste on the part of mother, though it is well to remark that the very long skirts are not as universally worn as they have been. Striped cottons like Madras, "Outing" cloth, cheviot and Bedford cord are trimmed with several rows of fancy braid on the bottom of the gathered or box-plaited skirt, the sailor collar and cuffs of the blouse. Cotton cords and piqué frocks have a gathered skirt, full sleeves and round waist, with a short yoke, collar, turned back cuffs and pointed girdle of plain colored goods edged with several rows of cotton braid or edged with several rows of cotton braid or passementeric, which is now made in fancy and plain designs. Plain and figured colored mults and lawns for the warmest summer days are made with a low "baby" waist, full sleeves and a gathered skirt sewed to the waist belt; a frill of the fabric trims the low neck, and a yoke of white nainsook completes a cool and not expensive freek. a cool and not expensive frock.

THE TINIEST OF BOYS

ET them wenr their dresses to the ankles when from one to two years of age, with the skirt gathered or box-plaited, the waist made in three pieces, buttoned in the back, the turn-over collar separated, back and front, and cont sleeves having turn-over culls. Em-broidery edging figures as a trimming on small boys gingham, Bedford cord and piqué dresses. The latter are made with very wide collars and cuffs edged with embroidery, kilt skirt in and cutts edged with embrodery, kit skirt in box plaits and round waist having a wide plait, back and front, with simulated hip pocket edged with embroidery on either side. At three years kilt skirts coming two inches below the knees are of serge, cheviot, plaids, checks and diagonal fabrics, as well as of cloth, with sort stricts that the product of the plaids. pinin and striped flannel.

DRESSMAKERS CORNER

Under this heading I will cheerfully answer each month any reasonable question on Home Dressmaking sent me by my readers.

EMMA M. HOOPER

M. A. C.—There is no reason why two friends should not dress alike.

MISS KATES.—A letter to you has been returned to me as "succalled for."

MARY R.—Am sorry, but we cannot promise to answer at any stated time.

Miss JENNIE T. L.-Letter sent to given address on March 15th has been returned.

Mas. Paul. D. M.—No address given in your letter of April 5th asking a reply " by return mail." C. R.—Consult a physician in regard to the moles. (2) up the fish net in diluted alcohol and dry without Wisconsex—You did not send any address, and if you wish to buy a stamping outfit address the Ladius' Home Journal.

Tipony Winks-Chalifes and white gowns were written of since your letter came. (2) Crépon, serge, China silk, buibse, etc.

Mas. W. H. W.—You can use tan with the pale green, an old rose thina silk or surah would prove more be-sming to a pale brunetts.

SARAH K.—Select gray and trim it with narrow jet grap. (2) The new designs written of in the May issue will have nested you ere this.

Mns. C. R.—I fear this is too late, but a mavy serge bell skirt and blazer, with shirt waist of percale, would be all you could have for the sum named.

Mizzan-Bell skirt, ruffle, high sieeves, corselet front, coat-tail back, vest of spring green bengaline or crèpe, changeable gimp of gold and green beads.

INQUIRER—With a clear, rosy skin you can fortunate by wear any color. (2) Poptin will dye. (3) I should call you only plump, but near stripes, as plaids are ADELINE—If you wear a loose, well-fitting corset there is no necessity for discarding them. (2) Wear dark reds, yellow browse, pavy blue, clear tais, yellow and dark green.

NEW SUBSCRIBER—Grenadine will be worn, and should be trimmed with jet gimp over a lining of satin or sorah. If you wish to brighten it, have a colored vest of crepe de chine.

Entrut—For the mult have a full skirt, gathered sleeves, deep cuffs, round waist, yoke and cuffs or cuffs and a bertia ruffle of point de tienes lace; belt of ris-bon or a girdle of the lace.

M. H. S. - You should have sent me your address, as your reply would be too long for this column, I am sorry it is too late to assist you. The number of gowns depends upon your means.

Mas, D. A. N.—Nall heads are quite out of date. (2) Trim the vests with cross bands of jet or silk gimp for one style nnd as a V and pointed girdle for the other, (3) Both shirt waists and guimpes.

Miss, Wm. J. W.—You neglected giving any address for a "personal reply." (2) I could not advise this color for a wrap. As your dress is now made I can only say be careful to write full address.

Let Y H.—Hell skirt, ruffle, high sleeves, pointed busque, V neck, siceves to elbows, ruffles of point do festes ince on neck and sleeves, morel ribbon on basque edge tied in a long bow at the back. For demi-dress, I judge.

ANXIOUS INQUIRER—I am sorry your letter remains so long unanswered, but, as I have said many times, you must allow three moetls for a reply through the JOURNAL. My space is small, and I have many corres-

GERTHUDE F.—The challe should have a rather full skirt with a raffle on the edge. Blound wabt, with high sleeves, and wear an olive ribbus belt, round or made as a pointed girdle. Deep cuffs and yoke of eera Irish BLOXDE-With a long wast and ordinary hips you can certainly wear light colors, as the floshy persons they are unbecoming to are those very short-wasted, dungy women, C2 Get a rather light gray and trim with jet gimp. Use flat and lengthwise trimmings.

Frances R.—Your mniecial is silk-and-wood gloria.
(2) Try benzine on a scrap of the dress and if it does not spot it the solid places on the skirt can be easily removed. If it does poot try powdered French chalk, raibbing it well on each spot, tetting it lie for a day and then brush it off.

OLD TEXAN—A refined woman will certainly prefer wearing a petitionat at all times. (2) Silicen petitionals are preferred by fishilomable women for all occasions— black or dark changeable silk for the street and light changeable ones for the bouse, though many still cling to muslin for the bouse, and always will.

N. H. READER—The present style of dress, with a bell skirr, flat border, lengthwise basque trimmings and a basque with a pointed front and deep coat-tail tark, will certainly make you took taller. Wear narrow stripes or plain goods in almost any color, yellow, pale green, yellow tan and pale gray being the trying colors

Brown Eves.—No such, and use a guimpe of white naineouk with the old rose and a ruffle of point de Germs lace on the low neck of the dress peager. (2) Black has not gone out entirely, but is rather passe. (3) Make the white with a guimpe of white or blue China silk and a ruffle of the same around the low "baby" neck of the dress waist.

LILLIAN B.—Evening cloak of one of the deep capes of gray, has, red, pale green or old rose ladies' cloth, with frilled collar of black or fern lace over the shoul-ders. (2) Lace dress has a bell liming of satis, sursh or tafficts with a roffle, pointed basque, high sleeves, no sums in lace of basque except shoulder and sinder arm. Trim with jet, moiré ribbon, colored silk or crèpe vest.

Must. E. W.—If your satis is good send it to a dyer to be renorvated, as it is one of the worst fabries to get the phalis pressed out of. (2) Five widths will make a bell skirt, and one a blas ruffle on the edge. Out of the re-maining width make new plain, pointed fronts, and have the back pointed, trimming the lower edge and wrists with narrow gimp. Finish the neck with a turn-ever frill of the same, and bring it down a little in the front.

Mas. M. H.—If you have not remodeled your silk, make it with the paints for the sides, the trimmed one for the front, leaving slashings if you misst use these places, belt back, new high sleeves, new hack to basque out in two long late, sixteen inches below the waist line, and smillar labs on side forms. Trim edges with a narrow passementerie, and have a full plastron to a corselet front. Corselet has been described; also this four tabbasque.

Paner-Your hair is a very handsome red. (2) Out the basque in a point, back and front and trim neroes the front with lare five inthes deep as a bertia mille, making it very full over the shoulders to give the high look, and each long it up there with bows of black mode ribbon. Trim edge of basque with the ribbon, tying it at the back, or finish writes, lower edge and colour with narrow jet gimp. (4) You will find girls dresses written of in this beau, and the braid can be used on the edges.

siges.

E. C. J.—Felt will dye very nicely. (2) Tuble scarf of Redhard lines embroidered with white, blue or red cottest, all of week colors, (3) Bip up the Norfolk jacket and reake a pointed basque, with pearl buttons, high skeeves and stitried basque, with pearl buttons, high skeeves and stitried edges; this will give you a longer look, (4) The half long skelt of garnet slik will make a double bell skirt, with edges trimmed as a flat border with simp jet. Basque pointed, back and front, so as to fit it for remodeling, but went the skirt over it to give a redied appearance and wear a best in pointed girlie style trimmed with gimp to imitate a Russian blurse. Add sleeve-capt in Excession style full over the shrathers and reaching to the bend of the elbour. The plate must be present out, which is a thankless task, even when the slik will admit of your puring a damp cloth on the wrong side and pressing until dry.

B. & B.

Why pay too much for your

DRY GOODS?

-when a request of our

Mail Order Department

for samples, would post you as to right prices and greatest values?

You'll find every trade made with us result to your profit.

Our Catalogue, too, will interest you. May we send it?

BOGGS & BUHL 115, 117, 119, 121 Federal Street ALLEGHENY, PA.

PRINTED

EMINENTLY SUITABLE FOR LADIES'& CHILDREN'S DRESSES AND LADIES' SHIRT WAISTS

GREAT VARIETY OF PATTERNS IN BLACK, PINK OR WHITE

Warranted Fast Colors

Are you aiming at

Perfection?

You intend to always buy the best, if the price is not too high? Probably so; every sensible person does; but has this determination extended to PISS? There is perfection even in pins; it has taken yours by the oblest and largest manufacturers or pins in the world to evolve this "acme of perfection." It is called the "Puritan," trade marked, that you mant be some always of getting what you want, find to-DAT for the sample card showing the pin and trade mark. Sent free. Dan't forget the name "Puritan" when you make your next purchase. Manufactured by

American Pin Company

Waterbury, Conn.

TWO WORN SPOTS

on the back of the spoon spoils it.

STERLING SILVER INLAID SPOONS and FORKS

will show no worn spots. Each piece is marked on the

"E STERLING INLAID HE"

If you cannot obtain these goods of your Jeweler, and for Catalogue.

The best brand of Sectional Flated Spoons and Focks a made by us and marked

"HOLMES & EDWARDS XIV" Read our Guarantee Certificat

THE HOLMES & EDWARDS SILVER CO. Bridgeport, Conn.

IF YOU ARE A LADY

send us your CORSET measure, 30 cents and a 2 cent stamp, and we will forward you, charges prepaid, an article of dress worm by every lady; as we do this merely to introduce the style, only one article will be sent to any family; others must gurchase in Dry Goods or Corsel Stores at regular retail prices. Address VALON MANUFACTURING CO.

Send for 12-page illustrated catalogue (free) of Rolling, Rectining and Carrying Chaire, Invalids' Comforts, etc., address Bargent Mfg. Co. 814 Broadway, New York or Muskegon, Mich. Mention Tax Larens' Home Joseph.

BANDY LEGS PREVENTED.

Sind for Catalogue of PATENT CORSET SHOES, recommended by Physicians and Surgeons for Children hearing to walk, and those troubled with work or agregated arbites. B. NATHAN, 821 6th Aven, New York.

BARLOW'S INDIGO BLUE

The Family Wash Blue, always giving satisfaction.
For sale by Grocers. Ask for E. B. S. Williags own Proprietor, 2B North Second Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

SEW LESS The invisible Mender. Mends any article of wearing apparel without seeing or showing a seam. D.cts. a package. Agents wanted, Send for Catalogue. MRS A GAIL, Statios W. Brooklyn, N.Y. Box 128

Lutter and Children's draw-cutting learned at home by the most effect varies stories. Big mercy to live agents. Generales See. Miss Anna Graves, Box 665, Chicago, Ills.

VERY SIMPLE AND PRETTY (Illus. No. 3)

SOME SUCCESTIONS ABOUT THE HAIR

By Isabel A. Mallon

EN in the world of fashion there can be no doubt that the influence of good taste overrules everything else. At one time some fapoos hair dresser, or some great beauty, approved of a certain method of dress-ing the bair and all the ing the hair, and all the world, that is, the world world, that is, the world of women, followed her example. It made no difference if one were a tall stender woman with classical features, the same mode of arranging the hair was adopted as that fancied by the piquant benuty with a short face and nose tip-tilted, and whose dimples were supposed to excuse her lack of height. This has been changed. And the "becoming" is triumphant. Margery, whose golden locks naturally fall in soft ensy ways and look best in a loose twisted knot, wears it that way, while Catherine, whose black, glossy hair seems of itself to roll away from her forehend and demand that it should be braided and carefully pinned to it should be braided and carefully pinned to show the shape of her head, selects the mode that is most proper. To be governed by fashion, whether it is becoming or not, is counted an evidence of vulgarity, yet if a fashion suits one's face and change is desired from the usual method of arranging the bair. from the usual method of arranging the bair, then it is at once proper and in good taste to make the fashion subservient to one seelf, and select for occasional use a pretty new style.

ABOUT THE CARE OF THE HAIR

BEAUTIFUL hair requires that never-ceasing care should be given it. It demands much brushing, some thought as to the kind of pins used to fasten it, and gentle consideration for it, so that when braided it is not pulled, and when one is asleep it is not allowed to be loose and so get matted. It sounds very pretty in a romance to read of the sleeping beauty with her hair floating about her like a clonk, but it would have taken the sleeping beauty many an hour in the morning to dis-entangle it, and she would have lost many a hair in this operation. At night the hair should be loosely braided, tied with a ribbon, and allowed to long so that an entire rest from pins may be given to it.

A GRACEIUL COSPIERE (Illus, No. 1)

and allowed to hang so that an entire rest from pins may be given to it.

A very coarse pin, one that is sharply point-ed, or a rough one, will in time ruin any hair no matter how beautiful it may be. The best pins for the hair are the small ones of tortoise shell or amber, but in many instances, espe-cially where the hair is fine and dry, they will not hold it me.

THE COLOR OF THE HAIR

IT almost goes without saying that a well-bred woman does not dye her hair. If in some moment of, I was going to say temporary insanity, she should be induced to do it, although it would be mortifying, and she will have to permit herself to look like a striped zebra for a short time, still it will be wisest to face the situation and allow her hair to grow back to its natural color. The famy for blonde hair, which has been credited to the fact that the heautiful Empress of the French possessed the beautiful Empress of the French possessed it, may really be traced as far back as history it, may really be fraced as far back as fastory goes. It is always said that Eve was a blonde, while the hair of Venas was, so it is told, a perfect golden. Lacretia Boegia, Lady Macbeth, Queen Elizabeth, Anne of Austria, Marie Antoinette were all light haired. However, this does not make less marvelous the beauty of dark hair, which from the jet black, which shines like ebony, to the dark brown, with its glints of gold, cannot be surpassed. The explanation as to the difference in the hair is told very famulty in an old book. It is said: "That heaven sent upon earth many women with very fannily in an old book. It is said: "That heaven sent upon earth many women with golden hair so that they might charm the other half of humanity. Seeing this, the devil, who bates men, sent cooks. These, with their sauces and ragouts, disordered the human liver and produced the desired result—dark skin and hair." However, the color most esteemed just now is an ashy blonde, a shade that no dye will produce, and which, as it must have a clear white complexion accompanying it, as well as black brows and lashes, is counted by artists at once the most peculiar panying it, as well us make troops and tables, is counted by artists at once the most peculiar and artistic contrast. All hair is beautiful that is well cared for, and if it be remembered that smooth crimps are best suited to dark hair and fluffy ones to light, not so many mistakes will be made in arranging the coiffure.

ABOUT CRIMPING THE HAIR

OF course, it is true that many beautiful suits of hair are ruined by careless crimping. This is done by hot from that burn it, and dirty from that discolor it, making the body worlding has been available.

locks anything but lovely. With care the haircan becrimped or curied, and not burt in the least, French hair dressers prefer the old method of turning the bair around in a circle, putting a soft tissue paper over it, and then pinching it, a method that is certain to preserve the hair, and which forms soft fluffy curls when combed out, The ordinary curling iron, however, will produce the same re-sult if a little care is used; the iron must not be allowed to get over bot, as this will over hot, as this will ruin the metal, and it must be absolutely cienn. A good hair dresser carefully whee off her iron, so that any smoke that may have gotten on it will not abide upon the bang. For crimping the back hair the large, flat iron made especially for this partnesse is given the perference over outthis purpose is given the preference over put-ting the halr in pins and pinching it, but the wielder of the iron must be careful that it does not get too bot.

A GRACEFUL COIFFURE

A GRACEFUL COIFFURE

In Illustration No. 1 is shown a preity arrangement of the hair, certain to be becoming to the woman who has rather a large head and who, therefore, does not want to make it look top-heavy. There is a very short bang, that is loosely curled and which lies decidedly close to the head. The front hair is then drawn back in a soft manner, although it is not waved, and it is turned over the fingers until a fluffy puff is achieved. This is fastened to place with lace hair-pins, forming a rather solid foundation for the puff which is just above it, and which is made of the back hair drawn up as shown in the illustration.

ANOTHER PRETTY COIFFURE

A VERY different mode of dressing the hair is abown in Illustration No. 2; this style being intended for one whose face permits of wearing the hair low, and whose hair is sufficiently light in color to stand its being crimped in a very loose manner. The front is cut so that when it is coried the bang looks slightly pointed, the center curl coming right down, as it should, in the middle of the forchead. The remainder of the front bair is, after being crimped on a large iron, drawn back very loosely, the ends being turned up in long soft knots as shown.

ABOUT BRAIDING THE HAIR

BRAIDING the hair is decidely in vogue, and women who like their hair to look nent and smooth prefer it to what is careed the fluffy style. The mistake usually made by the girl arranging her hair in braids for the first time, is that she begins her braid too low; first time, is that she begins her braid too low; as she wants to loop it or twist it she must brush it up from the nape of her neck and start to braid it mid-way of the back. Then it is easily turned around and fastened, if she wishes to wear it in that fashion, or if it is to be looped, she lets part of it belong where the plait began making the other curl around the top and tying the ribbon below that. By the by, no other color ribbon is worn but black, and one must bewere of having too wide a ribbon or too large a bow.

A VERY SIMPLE STYLE

PRETTY arrangement for the hair of a young girl is shown in Illustration No. The back bair is braided and tied with a black ribbon, the front having just a suggesblack ribbon, the front having just a sugges-tion of a bang, so that a soft framing is given to the face while the hair beyond is drawn up in Pompadour fashion, and the ends are curled and fastened on top with lace pins. This looks somewhat elaborate, but a careful study will show that it is very easily arranged, and the hair once trained in this way will soon fall naturally into the lines desired.

CRIMPED IN A LOOSE MANNER (Illus, No. 2)

THE MOST ARTISTIC STYLE

THERE are in this world a few women who, having their hair arranged in the most artistic style possible, can keep it that way, but the average woman finds that it has an inbet the average woman finds that it has an inclination to temble about and to grow untidy, so that she, after one or two trials, gives it up in despair. However, for the benefit for those who can keep their hair in perfect order Illustration No. 4 is pictured. The hair which is cut short all around the face is loosely curled, the bang not extending very far back; then the hair at the sides and on top is right from where it grows, crimped, drawn back and histened in loose curls that form in their outline a chate-their outline a chatelaine, or rather the chatelaine effect. Much care must be taken in arranging the hair in this way, for while it should be for while it should be firm by fastened to position, still the hair-pins must not show; and, while it is fluffy and loose looking, it must not have the air of unti-diness. For evening this mode is de-cidefly desirable, but I can scarcely commend it as an arrangement to be worn under hats of worn under hats of any sort. The effect would be entirely lost by any covering.

THE PARTING OF THE HAIR

VERY decided fancy has arisen for part A VERY decided fancy has arisen for parting the hair. It may be just in the center or slightly to one side, as is most becoming, but the part does not need to extend through the bang, so that the soft framing for the face is still retained. The hair on each side of the part, wherever it may be, is, however, brushed very smoothly, and made to look as glossy as possible, so that a decided contrast is offered to the fluffy part of the hair.
Parting the hair slightly on one side is a style commended to women whose faces are somewhat slender, and whose features are pronounced. The part immediately in the center of the head requires very regular features, ter of the head requires very regular leatures, and so is not altempted by very many women. By the by, this parting the hair on one side does not mean the arranging of it in such a way that a mascaline look is given to the face, but, instead, as the parting is slightly to one side of the center and does not extend entirely forward, it is maker coquettish than otherwise in its effect. Women who wear their hair very plainly part it in the back and turn it over like a French twist, drawing it up to the top ike a French twist, drawing it up to the top of the head in such a way that the perting

ONE OF THE MOST ARTISTIC STYLES (Illus, No. 4)

A FEW LAST WORDS

To brush and brush and still to brush is the best medicine for the hair, remembering always that it is the hair and not the scalp which is to receive this treatment. Upon the brush used depends a great deal. In the first place it must be immaculately clean, and one's brushes should be washed as religiously as it The comb that it will disentangle the hair if it is snarled, but if the bair is well brushed the comb really is of very little use. A fine comb is never advised. The brush should have long, soft bristles that go through the hair, taking with them every particle of dust and leaving behind them a glow that is beautiful.

Many women consider the attainment of some special arrangement of the hair a desirable something that they will retain all their lives. And after all I do not know but they are right. We think of somebody we love; think of her with soft sweet curls framing her forehead: think of her with beautiful hair drawn back smoothly; think of her with bair parted "Madonna-wise on either side her head," and it is a bit of a shock when one sees her after an absence to discover that she does not look quite the same and that somehow she seems a little older. My friends, it was a wise woman who said: "I began to arrange my hair in a certain fashion that was becommy hair in a certain fashion that was becom-ing to me when I was thirty-five years old, then it made me look forty-five; but as the years have gone on I have never changed it; now at fifty-five I look ten years younger and at sixty-five I am expecting to look twenty." You know the secret? It was that she never changed in anterproper changed in appearance.

You can't get AN IDEA of our stock Mantels, Grills and Fret Work unless you will write for our CATALOGUE which we will mail

FREE Address BRIGGS & LEIBIUS 311 Summit Street, Toledo, Ohlo

WHAT WOMAN

CAN DO

She can wash, rinse and dry to or too dishes at one time with a machine, without chipping or breaking a dish, and without using a dish mop or towel; she can save from two to three hours per day of disagreeable work, and prevent the destruction of her hands, by simply purchasing the lightrunning and noise-less Stevens Dish Washing Machine. You run no risk, as every machine is guaranteed to do its work perfectly or money refunded.

Send for illustrations, testimonials, and special oder. Agents wanted.

STEVENS DISH WASHING MACHINE CO. No. 37 Arcade, CLEVELAND, O.

Cash with order. Other Designs Equally Rensonable.

HOSK INS & SEWELL, 16 E. 15th St., N. Y. COMBINATION Wite. ABSOLUTE

SETTINGS

Only absolutely secure inter-rhangeable diamond mountings are the "John F. Motre Paient Automatic Lock." Can make any number of articles interchange-shie, siz-up, darable, and too simple to got out of order. Ob-tained only through your local jeweler of P. B. MORRIE & SON set. Chicago, Himola

SECURITY

100-104 State Street

FASHIONABLE HAIR.

JOHN MEDINA,

"PARTED BANG." neural CUBLY HAIR Church of the Season

S. C. BECK, Imparier and Manufacturer of HAIR GOODS. Sorth Eighth Street, Philadelphia, Fa.

INFANTS GERTRUDE PATTERNS, Bost INFAN 13 "days in three forbers, duties made up cheaper by this method than any other. Moterials for complete outil of 20 pieces, $10. Send 2 couls for samples and catalogue. H. J. Senasur & Co. Cheego.

DRESS MAKING BY EMMA M. HOOPER

Miss Hooper invites, and will cheerfully an-swer any questions concerning home dressmaking which may be sent to her by the JOHRNAL sisters. While she will answer by mail, if stamp is inclosed, she greatly prefers to be allowed to reply through the JOURNAL, in order that her answers may be generally helpful. Address all letters to Miss EMMA M. HOOPER, care of THE LADIES' HOME JOURNAL, Philadelphia, Pa.

LITTLE THINGS IN DRESSMAKING

seems trivial to talk of having a well-supplied work-basket, sharp scissors, etc., but all of this adds to the but all of this adds to the workwoman's comfort, and when she is comfortable her work is very apt to look better than when she is "cranky." Have an easy sewing chair, long needles for basting and those of medium length for sewing. Use finely-pointed pins for wood, and black round-headed pins for silk or velvet materials, in which an ordinary pin-hole will show. Silk hosting or fine cotton thread should be used on silk goods, and in ripping such threads out them every few inches or they will leave a mark it "long drawn out."

A FEW MORE DETAILS

HEARS for cutting out should have long blades, large finger holes and be of light weight. Ripping scissors must be finely pointed, and keep old scissors or a knife for cutting whalebone. There is now a machine for presering sleeve and other curved seams upon, that is remarkably convenient for use in the sewing room. The French skirt having the lining sewed in with the outside material has the curvas facing sewed in between the lining and outside. in with the outside material has the curvus fac-ing sewed in between the lining and outside, the seams separating for this purpose near the lower edge. The velveteen binding or facing is applied as usual. The protectors worn on the edge of skirts are both one, and three yards in length. A very nice skirt is beauti-fully lined with silk and finished with a hemmed or pinked ruffle of the silk as a bala-yeuse on the inside. Many cannot afford a silk lining, and while they are charming to wear they are by no means a necessity. The skirts continue long, though the rumor is gain-ing ground that the French men dressmakers are against the style, and will change it graduare against the style, and will change it gradu-ally. In the mountime the bell skirt aweeps on. A correspondent wonders why so many bell skirts gap apart in the back. Simply be-cause the maker forgot to catch the placket opening half-way down with a buttoniole beneath the plaits and a flat button, which like the modest violet is too lowly to be no-tical.

THE LATEST DESIGNS

A VERY pretty house dress is made of red crépon for a bell skirt, pointed busque back, corselet front and full sleeve uppers drooping over deep cuffs. The edges of the collar, wrists, corselet, busque back and bottom of the skirt are trimmed with black silk moss bands at twenty-five cents, beaded with jet gimp at the same price. The crépon was one dollar, and lined with percaline at lifteen cents.

Princess gowns have a voke, round or V-

Princess gowns have a yoke, round or V. shaped and a corselet of silk advention. Stender figure-ritended to be used cross-wise tupleforations on costs are of tan are of assurer, or kid, with a small medallion ethnite lace in the center of each. Both french and English dressmakers are putting these buttons on white or black cloth coats, The combination of tan, black and white is one much favored on the other side of the TURKEY red cotton is liked for frocks to be worn at the seaside. It is made up with a plain skirt and has a long coat trimmed with coarse frish lace. Very often an elaborate arrangement of red satiu ribbons forms the waistcoat. With this should be worn a small red hat trimmed with white lace and a black shaving-brush pompon, while the glaves, shoes and stockings should all be red. This custome, atterly impossible in the city, makes an attractive bit of color against "the sad sea

THE Empire belt or girdle is worn very ex-tensively with gowns having the Wat-tean back. Often it is a very wide ribbon, and again it is formed of folds of white silk. five in number, that make it much up and give the short-walsted effect that is considered desirthe stord-waisted effect that is ordered orest-note. Girls with very small waists are wearing nather broad belts fastened at one side with a really fat reserve. This is placed right on the belt itself, slightly to one side of the front. By the by, in arranging ribbon belts remember that the ends and hope can be tied in any place except at the back.

GENTLEWOMEN whose years are many, ** Whose brains are wise and whose hearts are young, keep themselves looking pretty and dainty by wearing little caps made of bits of real lace and upon which are placed coquettish. lows of pale rice, blue, or white ribbon. These little cars are nost becoming, and if some one edgests to un elderly lady wearing a ribbon. I can only answer as did another woman writer: "That it is the withered ook upon which the mistletor blooms."

DRESS AIDS FOR MOTHERS

NEAT DESIGNS FOR MISSES

MOTHER writes me; "How stail I make my daughter small waisted?" which question opens a field of thought and gives ample room for the dress re-former. Graving girls are formers. Growing girls are formers. Growing girls are apt to be too stout or so tall and slender as to resemble a cornstalk, but if dressed seconding to the needs of their figure many of these biemishes, if nature can be a blemish, may be modified, if not hidden; for fashkomable trimmings may be adapted for such opposite forms. The bretelle ruffles, commencing narrows and assum over the conter of the waist forms. The breteile ruffies, commencing nar-now and scanty near the center of the waist-line and growing fuller and wider over the shoulders, where they end or continue down the back as in the front, were apparently in-vented for the stout girl, as they give her a longer and more slender waist, as does the pointed girlle now worn. For the slender girl, the bertha trimming of lace, embroldery, silk etc. ontilines a round voke fullier fuller silk, etc., outlines a round yoke, falling fuller over the shoulders and giving breadth to the form and fullness to the flat chest. Both wear bell and gathered skirts and full sleeves. One may wear any material, but the other looks better in narrow stripes, small figures and solid colors. Girls of fourteen to sixteen years solid colors. Girls of fourteen to sixteen years wear the Russian blouse, which has been described many times, for their street and bouse dresses. Other pretty waists for them have a round back, where it buttons, and short, square jacket fronts opening over a plastron of China silk or surab. Neat chalife frocks have the front shirred on cords from one armhole to the other, forming a yoke, with the fullness running into a pointed girdle made of sixinch ribbon, which is then folded narrowly around the waist and falls in two long ends at the back. A girl of fourteen wears a gathered skirt of crépon, three yards and a half wide, with a round waist gathered at the neck in shirred tucks to form a yoke. The sleeves are shirred at the wrists, and a corselet from the side sents is laced permanently in the front, as the frock fastens in the back. The corselet is well boned, straight on the upper edge, nine inches deep, and alightly pointed or round inches deep, and slightly pointed or round on the lower edge. White mull, thirty-two inches wide, and from thirty to forty-five cents, is greatly used with a trimming of point de Genes lace for dainty midsummer frocks.

FOR SMALLER GIRLS

THE all-wool and mixed challe. I pink and pale blue was the square, sists of a narrow twist of velvet and a shaving-brush pompon at one side near the front.

ELABORATE necklaces are no longer in vogoe, a single string of gold or pearl beads fitting closely about the throat being counted all that is necessary.

VERY dainty slipper is of black velvet A and has its entire surface covered with facets of steel set in at regular intervals, that glitzer like so many diamonds against their black surface. I mentioned this in black velvet with steel upon it, because that is the most artistic, but similar slippers may be gotten in green or brown velvet, with gold facets upon them.

THE extra broad black satin tie such as goutlemen wear in the evening is much wenr with her pink, pale blue, or lavender shirt. These shirts, by the by, must have white collars and white culfs, or else they are not esteemed good form, and if this was said of her shirt the tailor-made girl would be made very wretched.

A VERY great many of my readers write asking how they can best clean white gloves. In all the large cities gloves are thoroughly well cleaned for ten cents, and when the cost of the material for cleaning them is considered, the amount of time taken and the chance for a bad result considered, it can be easily understood that there is economy in submitting one's gloves to a professional

THE fancy for white ribbon ties around the braided knot of bair still continues. The ribbon should be about an inch wide, of gros-grain with a corded edge.

Bow knot pins are now sold with a chate D laine attached: the chatelaine book may be removed if desired. These bow knots come in dull yellow, etroscan or bright polished gold, and also to silver, plain and filigree.

DRESSMAKERS CORNER

Under this heading I will cheerfully answer each month any reasonable question on Home Dressmaking sent me by my readers.

EMMA M. HOOPER

M. A. C.—There is no reason why two friends should not dress allke.

Mass Karu 8.—A letter to you has been returned to the as "uncalled for."

MARY B .- Am sorry, but we cannot promise to answer at any stated time.

MINN JENNER T. L. - Letter sent to given address on March 15th has been returned.

Mas, Pavi. D. M.—No address given in your letter of April 5th asking a reply "by return mail." C. R. - Consett a physician in regard to the motes. (2) Bip the fish set in diluted alcohol and dry without treating.

Wescossen—You did not send any address, and if you wish to buy a stamping outilt address the Lanus' Home JOURNAL.

Tible. Wises.—Challies and white gowns were written of since your letter came. (2) Crépon, sorge, China allie, butiste, etc.

Mas. W. H. W.—You can use tan with the pale green, or old rose think allk or surah would prove more be-oming to a pale brunctus.

SARAH K.—Select gray and trim it with narrow jet gimp. (2) The new designs written of in the May issue will have assisted you ere this.

Mas. C. R.—I fear this is too late, but a many segge belishirt and blazer, with shirt walst of percale, would be all you could have for the sum mands.

Mittram-Bell skirt, ruffle, high sleeves, corselet front, contrall back, vest of spring green bengaline or crepe, changeable gimp of gold and green bends,

Inquiren-With a clear, ney skin you can formate it wear any color, (2) Poplin will dye. (3) I should call you only places, but wear stripes, as plaids are passe.

ADRINSE-If you wear a loose, well-fitting corset there is no necessity for discarding those, ct2 Wear dark refs, yellow browns, navy bise, clear tan, yellow and dark grees.

New Sussemmen-Greendine will be worn and should be trimmed with jet gimp over a fining of satin or surah. If you wish to brighten it, have a referred yest of crips decline.

Enver—For the until have a full skirt, gathered steroe, deep cutte, round walet, yoke and cutte or cutte and a bertia ruttle of point de Genes ince; beit of ath-ion or a glotte of the lace.

M. H. S.—You should have sent me your address, as your reply would be too long for this column. I am sorry it is too late to assist you. The remoter of gravas depends upon your means.

Max, D. A. N.—Nail heads are quite out of date. (2) Trim the vests with cross bands of jet or size gimp for one style and sea  $\mathbf{v}$  and pointed girdle for the other, (3) Both shirt waists and guitness.

Mns. Ws. I. W.—You neglected giving any address for a "personal reply." (21 I quait not advise this color for a wray. As your dress is now made I can only say be careful to write full address.

Laty H.—Reil skirt, ruffle, bigh sieeres, pointed basque, V neck, sheves to elbows, ruffles of point de tienes late on neck and sheeves, more ribben on basque edge tied in a long bow at the back. For demi-dress, I judge.

ANXIOUS INQUERES.—I am surry your letter remains so long unanswered, but, as I have said many times, you must allow three months for a reply through the Joe exat.— My space is small, and I have many corres-positions. GRETRIDE F.—The challie should have a rather full skirt with a raffic on the edge. Round walst, with high sleetes, and wear an olive fibbon helt, round or made as a pointed girdle. Deep cuffs and yoke of ecru Irish noted lare.

BLOSDE-With a long walst and ordinary bigs you can certainly wear light colors, as the fleshy persons they are unbecoming to are those very short-walsted, dumpy women, (2) Get a raiher light gray and trim with jet gimp. Use flat and lengthwest irlminings.

B. & B.

Why pay too much for your

DRY GOODS?

-when a request of our

Mail Order Department

for samples, would post you as to right prices and greatest values?

You'll find every trade made with us result to your profit.

Our Catalogue, too, will interest you. May we send it?

BOGGS & BUHL 115, 117, 119, 121 Federal Street ALLEGHENY, PA.

PRINTED

EMINENTLY SUITABLE FOR LADIES'& CHILDREN'S DRESSES AND LADIES' SHIRT WAISTS

GREAT VARIETY OF PATTERNS IN BLACK, PINK OR WHITE

Warranted Fast Colors

Are you aiming at — Perfection ?

You littend to atways buy the best, if the price is not too high? Probably so: every semilide person does; but has this determination extended to PENE? does, that has the active members arises and to TINAS. There is periodical own in pins; it has taken years by the coldest and largest mean facturers of gamain the world to evolve this "acme of perfection." It is called the "Paritan." Stroke marked, that you may be some always of gesting what you want. Send vis-har for the sample card showing the pin and trade mark. Sent free. Don't farget the mane "Puritan" when you make your next purchase. Manufactured by

American Pin Company

Waterbury, Conn.

TWO WORN SPOTS

on the back of the spoon spoils it.

STERLING SILVER INLAID SPOONS and FORKS
will show no worn spots. - - on receipt

Phances R.—Your material is sik-and-wood gloria.

(2) Try benefits on a scrap of the dress and if k dose not spot it the stilled plans on the skir on the skir of the strength of the dress and if k dose removed. If it dose present the weis are kept in the "Corset, Ladies' Underwear then begin to perartments in many of the leading restall these to the leading restall the still the stil Departments in many of the leading retail stores in America. They will be kept in every store, if you and your friends will ask for them. If not in stock when you ask for them, they will be obtained for you. Mention the matter to the lady in charge of the Department, and if necessary show her this advertisement.

FASHIONABLE AND HEALTHFUL

THE GENUINE

Jackson Corset

Superb Form

Waist

Perfect

A perfect cornet and waist combined. Famous for its style, graceful symmetry, and healthful qualities. Take no other. See palent stamp on each Worst. Patented Feb. 23, per.

Made unity Jackson Corset Co., Jackson, Mich. IF YOUR DEALER HASN'T IT, WRITE TO US.

KODAKS

Send for Circulars

The Eastman Company ROCHESTER, N. Y.

Dragon Fast Black WITHOUT THIS

IN SHEER INCIA LINCKS COOK CEOON ACCORD ACCORD LAWNS & BATISTE PRINTED EFFECTS

#PROVED W45HIND

WARRANTED ADSOLUTELY FAST

Simpson, Crawford & Simpson Importers and Retailers of

· · DRY GOODS · ·

6th Avenue, 19 to 20th Street, New York HAVE ISSUED A

CATALOGUE OF SUMMER SPECIALTIES

Which will be Mailed Free on Application

Ladies, Send Stamp for Primer. I do shopping of all kinds. Nine years' experience; best reference. Manzonnik Mancir, 204 Spruce St., Philip.

COSTUMES FOR LAWN TENNIS

By Isabel A. Mallon

HE delicate, fragile girl has no longer, from a physical standpoint, any social posi-tion. She is looked at by all the other women with an nir of pity that is strongly akin to contempt. Of the justice of this not much can be said, for, after all, the woman who is not strong is probably who is not strong is probably handicapped from her birth, and much should be forgiven her because she suffers much.

However, as a nation we ought to welcome the healthy, hearty girl who can bent her brother in munaging a teems ball, in rowing a hoat, and very often in managing a frisky horse. The tennis girl belongs essentially to the summer time, for she wants verdure green upon which to have her court, and she longs for the way to ships belong a that the way to this belongs as for the sun to shine brightly so that she may warm up and her skin get that healthful glow which will make it so white and so pink dur-ing the coming winter.

THE MATERIALS FANCIED

JUST why stripes should attach themselves to lawn tennis costumes is not known, but a good tennis player would as soon think of playing with a strange racquet as she would of not achieving a striped effect in her castume. It is true that veritable stripes in flanned, showing blue and white, scarlet and white, brown and white and black and white, may constitute the skirt, while the blouse is of plain material. Occasionally, plain white flannel is used, and then it is trimmed with a colored flamed either as a striped bordering, or it may be appliqued on to make it appear like such stripes as the zebra uses for his everyday frock. A preference is given in fabrics to highst-weight flamels, and though they may be made up as picture-squely as possible, still they must not be elaborate, and sufficient room must be given for all parts of the body to have perfect freedom. Sometimes the biomes instead of being flamel is of soft silk, usually a cream in shade, and then for wear over this, if one should get over-heated, or if the day should be chilly, is an easy but well-fitting plain cloth blazer. Serge may be used for a tennis dress, but expert players count it as tennis dress, but expert players count it as rather heavy.

A STRIPED TENNIS SUIT (Illus. No. 2)

English girls have a great liking for the heavy striped cotton material which we call "awning fabric." This they use for the plain full skirt and then have a blouse of blue flannel or silk, as is most fancied. Some very coarse wool stuff is shown and commended for gowns for out-door went, but as it has a very wide mesh that would easily pull apart 1 cannot recommend it, believing that plain fennis flannel is after all, the most desirable of the fabrics commonly shown for gowns to be worn for out-door games.

THE DESIGNS FANCIED

FASHIONS do not change much in the tennis get-up. Having discovered that a moderately full skirt is required for swiftness in running, that an easily fitting bloose with full steroes permits one to be more at one's case than in a close-fitting basque, the tennis player, though she may modify does tennis player, though she may modify does not absolutely after the general style of her costume. She has found that a skirt too full will tend to fly forward as she rous and course her to trip, that a sleeve too full looks ridiculous, and that a blouse too loose is dowdy, up above everything else the tennis girl likes to look trig. The accordion-plaited skirts are still in favor, and as they are not made as wide as they were at one time, and as the plaits are caught here and there to position, they do not fly out and give the mushroomy they do not fly out and give the mushroomy look which was characteristic of them once.

Though a short skirt is required, it need not be one that is awkwardly short. Any little individuality may express itself about the blouse, where quaint sleeves, becoming collars and jaunty ties are possible. For belts, the plain leather one continues in favor, al-though the soft leather one, pointed and faced in front, is also fancied. When sashes are worn they are usually of soft silk, and pro-vided they flatten to place they may be as long as the wearer desires.

A TYPICAL TENNIS DRESS

A TYPICAL TENNIS DRESS

A VERY pretty tennis dress, more elaborate than any seem, is here shown. Illustration No. 1). It is of white flammel laid in accordian plaits; the skirt being, however, very well fitted to the figure. The blouse waist is of pale blue silk, the sheeves, which are slightly raised on the shoulder, being turned over at the elbow to show under sleeves of white flammel; the cuffs on the upper sleeves are of white flammel, those on the under part being of blue silk. The collar is of blue silk, and the long soft sash, which is simply knotted on one side, not tied in a bow and ends, is of the soft blue silk with its ends fringed out. The one side, not teed in a bow and code, is of the soft blue silk with its ends fringed out. The last is a white felt turned up from the face and having a cluster of pale blue ribbon loops as its decoration. The low shoes are of white ennyss, and are worn over pale blue stockings.
This soit could be duplicated in any colors faucied, but the combination of white and pule blue is so dainty looking and usually so becoming that it is oftener noted.

A STREET TENNIS SHIT

A STRIPED TENNIS SUIT

A STROPED TENNIS SUIT

A T Illustration No. 2 is shown a tennis superstation No. 2 is shown a tennis expert at the art of tossing a bull, or following its swift career. The plain skirt is made of red and white striped flannel, the red being a decidedly dark shade. The blouse waist, which is very loose fitting, has inserted in the front a plastron of white flannel lined across with red braid matching the stripe. The sleeves are raised on the shoulder a very little, are easy fitting and finished with the simplest of cuffs. The apron is made of heavy white linen, being turnel up at the bottom, as is usual, to form the pockets in which the bulls are held. The waist band is an ordinary one of white ribthe pockets in which the balls are held. The waist band is an ordinary one of white ribbon. The hat is a straw one that comes well over the face and shades the eyes, its decoration being red poppies. The shoes are the usual canvas ones, and the stockings are red. A gown like this could be developed in any of the materials fancied for out-door sports, and the design has much in its favor, for while it lacks the smart air of the first one shown, it has a devidedly business, like look and would has a decidedly business-like look, and would suggest that the glel who were it played tennis to win and not merely to look fashionable, or because it was pretty. The wearing of the apron is a matter of individual taste.

A BLOUSE THAT IS FANCIED

I LLUSTRATION No. 3. There is always L. some girl who has not a regular tennis get-up; who either does not care for it, or who, it is just possible, does not wish to spend her money on a gown that can only be used for money on a gown that can only be used for one purpose, so wisely enough she makes for berself a blouse like this, and wears it with some plain skirt. The material is white flanned, showing alternate stripes of scarlet, blue and brown. It is closed down the front with small dark-blue buttons and the fullness is gathered in at the waist by tapes in regular casings. The collar is of light brown silk, and the tie that comes is of light brown slik, and the tie that comes from under it, which is carelessly knotted, is of white silk. The sleeves have cuffs matching the collar. The belt is a pointed one of light brown leather laced down the front, and the can is front, and the cap is the regulation white one that seems dedi-cated alike to man or woman for rowing or ball playing or indeed any sport that is pos-sible under the sun. Plain white flannel bhouses look well when worn with skirts of worn with skirts of dark blue or black, but if an ordinary skirt is worn the striped blouse seems more in harmony with a dark skirt than does the all-white one; of course, the advantage of the alladvantage of the ali-white is that it can visit the lumndry, but if it is wished that it should look well it must go to a laundry where the workers are adepts in the art of making flaunds look as good as new. And certainly, when they are all criticled up, as is too often the case, you could not say this you could not say this about them. So, after all, unless you are very sure of your laumbry, a silk shirt is advised; though according to the doctors and all the health people, the flan-nel is given the prefer-ence. But be sure of your laundry.

THE TENNIS HAT

A FANCIED BLOUSE (Illus. No. 3)

simplest manner possible, so that it will not seem to fly out of place roch time that a sudden flight is necessary. In fact, while a tennia costume must be pretty and easy to wear, it must at the same time have the trig look that is possible even in an outing get-up. The only jewelry worn is the medal won at some tenns tournament, but the good taste of this even may be questioned. The good tennis even may be questioned. The good tenuis player gives no thought to how warm she is getting and consequently, too often, becomes the victim of her own carelessness, catches cold and loses her good looks, when, if after she has finished playing she were a little careful and would be rubbed with alcohol she would find that her skin would become remarkably white and soft, and that she berself would be in good health.

THE FEW LAST WORDS

I CANNOT say too much in encouragement of out-door sports for girls; they get their lungs full of good fresh air, their bodies are nell developed and the chances are that keeping well physically they are also in good health mentally. A sprightliness is apparent in the bearing of a girl who has been congirt with the services.

girl who has been confined in school or office a number of months after she has returned from a needed outing. But do not let yourself become so absorbed by the gentle game of ten-nis that nothing else nis that nothing else in life is of interest to you. Make your pleasures subscrivent to your duty, and you will find that you can more easily bear the burden that may be imposed upon you, and that you can more keenly enjoy the de-lights that conse to you. And do not be selfish about your pleasure; that is, because you play well do not allow yourself to make a jest of the girl who is not as much of an adept as nuch of an acept as you are. Instead, show that you are a conricces liesters, and a good friend by assisting her in every way possible so that she will not feel her ignor-noce. A hipt here and angestion there are a suggestion there given in a quiet off-handed manner will put her at once at her ease. That is the best of all games to learn, the art of making your visitors feel heavy and the art of making your visitors feel happy and at home, and it seems to me you would be counted a poor tennis player if you did not know how to manage your friends so well that when they called "love!" there would be more menning in it than is usually im-plied by the word.

For Lawn Tennis, Boating, Mountain and Seashore Wear and all out-door uses.

White Twilled Tennis Flannel

In cotton and wood, and all-wool. Cotton and wool, 27-inch, . . 30 to 43c. All-wook, 27 inch, . . . . 30 to 65c.

A Card with your name and address will being you samples of these Flanceis and a copy of our litestrated SPRING AND SUMMER CATA-LOGUE if you wish.

WOODWARD & LOTHROP WASHINGTON, D. C.

If you cannot get this glove from your dealer-notify JULIUS KAYSER. Manufacturers, New York.

Toile du Nord"

The great secret of its eauty is it doesn't wash beauty is it doesn't wash up rough, but keeps its dainty freehness as long as there is a piece of it.

Another thing is the colors, one at a time, or as you like it—rose and pale blue checks, tans with beby blue, browns, heliotrope, slates, navy, pink, pin checks, the new broken checks that pink, pin checks, the new broken checks that fashion says are "the newest," hair line stripes and other sorts; black and white, and more kinds than we have time to talk about.

You'll find them in every leading retail dry goods house in the country, or send for samples.

You'll say we didn't tell half the good hings about it. PARKHILL MFG. CO.

Special for July

$4.98 This stylish Blazer suit in fine black, navy or tan Imperial wool cloth, well made and perfect fitting or, will sell Blazer separate for $2.95. Send bust measure and skirt length. Finer suits, $6.50, $8.97 and $11.50. We will pay all express charges to your nearest station. Our Fashion Catalogue sent free on request.

Mahler Bros. 503 SIXTH AVENUE Importers and Retailers

PRINTED BATISTE.

36 Inches Wide. KING PHILIP MILLS.

Send two-cent stamp for samples of

Cambric, Lawns, Nainsook and Batiste,

MADE BY THE

KING PHILIP MILLS. 85 Worth Street, New York, N. Y.

COMBINING COMFORT AND GRACE illian No. 11

WOMEN'S CHANCES AS BREAD-WINNERS *XIII—WOMEN AS TELEGRAPHERS

MRS. M. E. RANDOLPH (An Expert Operator)

JOHN B. TALTAVALL (Editor "The Electric Age")

A WOMAN OPERATOR'S VIEW OF IT

LARGE field of labor is open to intelligent women as telegraphers," said a New York newspaper article dated 1867, and it added: "In this profession at least as good pay and as much independence is found as in any other employment. There are about thirty women engaged at this work in this city."

This was in 1867; to-day there are thousands of women engaged as telegraphers. In New York they occupy a room in common with the men, at 195 Broadway, and not only have entire charge of the city department, but with the men, at 195 Broadway, and not only have entire charge of the city department, but are found working the heavy "through" circuits and on duplex and quadruplex circuits in the various divisions. About 225 women are employed in the operating departments, and seventy-five check clerks in other departments. About 30,000 messages are daily handled by them.

The telegraph business has grown so heavy that the accounting is in charge of a bureau for that especial business, with a talented woman as wire-chief, and another clever woman as an assistant. The salaries are from $25 to $50 per month. These are the general limits; exceptions there are, but not many. The chiefs get from $00 to $00, or perhaps $100 per month. There are no women managers in New York or vicinity who receive more than this. The hours of service are from $ 10 5.30 o'clock, although exceptions are 8 to 5.30 o'clock, although exceptions are made, the same number of hours being given from 9 to 6.30, or otherwise, at the preference from 9 to 6.30, or otherwise, at the preference of the employé. So far as I have heard from managers and chiefs in the service, women have given the fullest possible satisfaction as manipulators of the electric key. And in a measure they are peculiarly adapted to the work. The accuracy of transmitting the Morse telegraphic alpha-bet relies entirely upon sound, and woman's touch is singularly adapted to it. It has often been said that women thus far have been given only minor places in the service. This seen said that women thus far have been given only minor places in the service. This is not so. Some of the most important "circuita" in the Western Union service, for example, are handled by women, who are paid precisely the same salaries as would be paid to men. And I have still to hear of one case where a woman was found inefficient from lack of application or skill where sie was given opportunity to show her capacity. On the contrary, she has universally given satis-faction in whatever position she has been placed.

The best indication of woman's progress in The best indication of woman's progress in telegraphy lies in the fact that more women are constantly being placed in charge of the branch offices throughout the country, and thus thrown, to a more or less extent, upon their own resources. Where ten years ago a woman would never be thought of in connec-tion with the management of a "sub" office, now she stands an equal chance with a man, I believe telegraphy is in every respect, not I believe telegraphy is, in every respect, not only a congenial occupation for women, but it is one which fits her in a great many respects; and her opportunities in the profession are, as is the case in all other walks of life, precisely what she chooses to make them. And there is plenty of more room for good workers at the "key."

The question is sometimes asked, why do not women study the science of electricity? My answer is, in all cases where their positions My answer is, in all cases where their positions have brought them in contact with the science of electricity, they have mastered all problems necessary to the practice of their profession, but telegraphy being a very nerve-exhausting profession, the hours—often nine and a half spent in constant service—leave them too exhausted for study and research. One is on her mettle as to speed the entire day. The joys and woes of thousands are all unmasked in the hands of telegraphers. With highly-wrought, sensitive natures, this is exhausting; add to it the dots and dashes and the pen strokes in one day's business, and you find one's nerves and bodily strength in great need of recuperation. Were the opportunity given, there is no doubt that women would be as successful in electrical science as they are in astronomy and other sciences.

astronomy and other sciences.

Do they give as good satisfaction as men?
Remove all jeniousies, let them be judged by an impartial tribunal, and I answer "Yes."

To become a telegrapher, the best course (unless one has influence at beadquarters and can get into the main office in some minor capacity, with the privilege of learning), is to learn at the famous Cooper Institute, in New York A really proficient operator will always find emplopment, but has usually to com-mence on a low salary and get more by application, $5 a month increase at a time, un-til the highest salary is reached.

How large the field of labor in the telegraph world is many be found by clausing at the sta-world is, may be found by glancing at the sta-tistics of the largest company in the United States; it controls over 715,591 miles of wire, and has over 21,000 offices. In 1891 its receipts were over $23,000,000. M. E. RANDOLPH

*This series of papers "Women's Chances as Bread-winners," was commenced with "How to BECOME A THAINED NUBSE" "How to Become a Thanker Nouse," January, Parl
"Wooden as Steinmarphens," February, "
"Wooden as Deesmarkers," March, "
"Wooden as Deesmarkers," April, "
"Wooden as Deesmarkers," July, "
"Wooden as Deetmarkers," July, "
"Wooden as Deetmarkers," July, "
"The Gibt, With Warts to Thach," September, "
"Wooden as Internet Becomments," September, "
"Wooden as Ant" Devember, "
"Wooden as Ant "
"Wooden as Aut "
"Wooden as Aut "
"Wooden as Aut "
"Wooden as Internet "

The back numbers can be obtained at ten cents each.

FROM A MAN'S STANDPOINT

HAT the telegraph service offers an attractive and remunerative field for woman's work is amply shown by the fact that the number of women who practice it from day to day probably exceed in number those who devote themselves to any of the other so-called "genteel" professions, and the number is all the time increasing. Telegraphy seems to have an irresistible charm for many other so-called "genteel" professions, and the number is all the time increasing. Telegraphy seems to have an irresistible charm for many young women, and for the matter of that many that are not young. The interest of the poodding student in her work is kept from flagging in anticipation of the day when she will be able to communicate with another operator hundreds and perhaps thousands of miles away with the same room. Even those to whom the question of money is but a consideration of secondary importance are sustained by the prospect of indulging in this unalloyed delight. It is just possible, when the young woman arrives at this stage in her experience, that her ardor will have become somewhat dampened, and she will have received a very forcible illustration of the truth of the saying that anticipation and realization are very different things, indeed. Very few professions are pleasant to learn, however valuable they may be when proficiency has been acquired, and I mention this as showing that the beginning.

been acquired, and I mention this as showing that telegraphy has its redeeming features, even at the beginning.

Women, as in nearly every other walk in life, are beginning to take a more important part in conducting the business of the telegraph. The number of women engaged in the various branches of the telegraph service has increased very largely within the past few years. Not many years ago it was an unusual, as well as an unwelcome sight to some, to see a woman working in an office where were many as twenty or thirty male overstors were to see a woman working in an office where as many as twenty or thirty male operators were employed; and even in the larger offices, where the employment of women was almost a necessity, they were secluded from the men, and worked in separate departments, sacred to themselves. Little by little the barriers were thrown down, until at the present time men and women work indiscriminately together in every department, and the relations existing between them are of the most cordial and pleasant character.

It would be safe to say that the number of pleasant character.

It would be safe to say that the number of women who carn a livelihood as operators in the telegraph service in this country is now fully thirty-seven thousand. This does not include women who are employed in other departments of the service. Of this number, New York and Brooklyn alone have nearly one thousand. They are employed in the main offices, in the hotels, railroad offices, on the famous big exchanges, and in brokers' offices, and in fact in every form of business activity in which the telegraph is called upon to play a part. Many industrious young women study stenography in their spare momenta and when they become proficient in both branches, good paying positions are nearly always ready for them.

Very few of the women telegraphers who

Very few of the women telegraphers who fill the highest positions are "college bred," a term sometimes applied to those who have learned the business outside a regular telegraph office in a school. The explanation of the large number of women telegraphers in New York City is secretimes attributed to the the large number of women telegraphers in New York City is sometimes attributed to the presence of these schools, but in reality the number of young women who attend them are rarely qualified for practical work. The Western Union Telegraph Company alone, in New York City, gives employment to several hundred small girls who perform office work in the operating and other departments. They are given an opportunity to learn the business, and in this way they soon become capable of taking charge of small branch offices. As they are brought up in a telegraphic atmosphere, are brought up in a telegraphic atmosphere, so to speak, they are familiar with all the details of the business, and are very naturally given the preference when vacancies occur. As they gain experience, they are transferred to more important offices, or busier wires, as the case may be, and receive higher salaries, until at last they return to the main office; not as poorly paid office girls, but as experienced and fairly paid operators.

But even now they have not reached the even now they have not reached the limit of possible success, for there is a more exalted position than that of operator, to which any woman may aspire. They are promoted to executive offices, or what are known as chiefs and traffic chiefs, who look after the movement of business and see that messages are subjected to no unnecessary delay. There are a few offices of considerable importance managed by women, but the number is not large. It has always appeared rather singular to me that, with the number of intelligent and well-educated women in the business, more of them do not interest themselves in the study of the science of electricity. Women rarely, if ever, interest themselves in the phenomena of electricity, and although they are brought into daily contact with its manifestations, they possess very little information re-garding it. The comparatively recent inven-tions, the duplex and quadruplex, used for sending a number of messages over the same wire simultaneously, are difficult of compre-hension, and very few women have mastered their intricacies. The men having this branch of the business in charge have undergone a special training for the work, and up to the present women have not entered into competition with them.

In the work of receiving and sending messages women do equally as good work as men. They may not be capable of such phenomenal bursts of speed as the male telegraphers, but at the same time extraordinary speed is not so much an element of success or necessity as accuracy and the ability to maintain a fair average rate. They perform really creditable work, and agreat point in their favor is their reliability. As yet women have not been very successful in the handling of press reports, Day, and night the Associated Press and the United Press send many thousands of words to the newspapers in all parts of the country. In the work of receiving and sending mesto the newspapers in all parts of the country, and the wires are almost exclusively in charge of men. The immense amount of matter to be bandled necessitates a very high rate of he handled necessitates a very high rate of speed, forty-eight words a minute being maintained for hours at a stretch. A woman's strength is hardly equal to such a task. Since the introduction of typewriters into telegraph offices, women have taken kindly to the machines, and in their use have become proficient. The typewriter reduces the labor very materially.

John B. Taltavall.

WHAT A BABY NEEDS

WHAT A BABT REEDS

"A BABT'S Requirements" is the title of a little book which has just been issued by the Editor of the Jocassat's "Mothers' Corner," Miss Elesaisers R. Scovit, in response to an almost countless number of inquirtes received from the mothers interested in that particular department. It gives practical advice as to the first wandrobe, the necessary toilet articles, the preparations needed for the mother's comfort, the food and general enre of a young baby. The second edition has already been disposed of. The third is now ready, and copies can be secured from the Fremium Department of the Jocassat for twenty-five cents each. This price brings a useful and valuable book within the reach of the most economical mother. **e*

Thayer & Jackson Stationery Co. 245-247 State Street, Chicago Invitations, Announcements, and Visiting Cards Wedding Epistolary

FINE STATIONERY

spie Book of Flar Stationery Malled Free on Application Engraving and Embossing

50 Cards and Plate, Engraved with Name, $1.00

Doctors say they are sanitary; housekeepers say they are always clean; builders say they are the most economical, because the most durable, and that, while the choice in price is great, the inside is always the same. They are found in all the best houses and leading hotels. Illustrated Catalogue free.

STANDARD M'F'G CO., Box 1028 J, Pittsburgh, Pa.

Palmer Cox's Brownie Stamps

LOTS OF FUN AND THIS COMPLETE OUTFIT FOR $1.00

16 Rubber Stamps of the very funniest BROWNIES (same size as above cuts), specially drawn and copyrighted (1892) by Mr. Cox; ink-pad; 200 pages paper—all securely packed in neat wooden box. If your dealer doesn't keep them, send us your name, address and $1.00.

THE BROWNIE CO., 154 Lake St., Chicago

WHITING'S SELECT STATIONERY

The variety of beautiful papers manufactured by the Whiting Paper Company, of Holyoke, is almost endless. The most critical can find among these papers one to suit their taste. Delicate tints, soft finishes, linens, anything you want. Have you ever tried them? Ask your dealer for Whiting's Papers; try them in the various kinds, and you will use no others. If your dealer does not have these papers, send to us for samples.

New York Offices and Factories, 148, 150 & 152 Duane St.

A MODERN BATH The Latest and Best Saley Folding Bath Tub Co. 176 S. Canal St., Chicago, UL

TO MAKE MONEY NOW, and to make in once an agency for "The Beview of Reviews," " liney Man's Magazine." The most popular mans-ever published. June number has latest picture of Blaine, $100 a year; five months $1. Send for a ple, terms to agents, etc. Mentics this Magazine. THE REVIEW OF MEVICOUS, IS Aster Place, New York, CHREWSBURY Tomatoketchup. "I AM giddy, expectation whirls me 'round; the imaginary relish is so sweet it enchants my sense," What will it be when the watery palate tastes Shrewsbury Tomatoketchup? E.C. Hazard & C. New York 9 970-

LAWN FETES Pleasant Summer ANTENTALEMENT BUREAT, Lock Box 900, Chings

THE REVIVAL OF TATTING

By Alice S. Luka

EEP a thing seven years, and you will find a use for it," says the old for it," says the old proverb, and those care-ful women who, when the fashion of tatting declined laid their shuttles aside for un-earthing in that future which gives all things their rotation, will find that the time is now at that the time is now at

This is the era of the revival of tatting, and the fashionable occupation of a decade ago is the fashionable occupation of to-day, To paraphrase an ancient poet of dignified fame, tatting is popular because, "Her hand alone her work can do, And she can tat and tattle, too."

DIRECTIONS FOR TATTING

TATTING seems difficult to beginners, but a little practice will enable the worker to make the stitch without trying knots. All that is required is a tatting shuttle and a spool of thread. Use coarse thread to practice with, First insert the thread in the hole at the center First insert the thread in the bole at the center of the shuttle and tie it around the part of the shuttle in which the hole is made. Wind the thread around this part until it is filled. Hold the shuttle in the right hand; take the end of the thread between the thumb and foreinger of the left hand. Pass the thread around all the fingers of the left hand, extending them so as to form a large hoop, and cross it over the end which is held between the thumb and first finger, securing them both firmly with the finger, securing them both firmly with the thumb. You are now ready to begin the first single or half stitch. Now throw the thread loosely over the left hand, and slip the shuttle under the loop around the fingers between the second and third fingers, drawing the thread from the shuttle.

second and third his from the shuttle tightly, and allowing the thread around the fingers to form a loop on this thread. If it is right you can pull the shuttle thread back and forth through it, but if not made rightly if not made rightly the two thrends will be in a knot so that neither can be slipped. Always re-member that the left hand must be pas-sive, with fingers partly closed, until the shuttle has been slipped through the loop, and the shuttle thread is drawn tight, then the fingers of the left hand are extended, causing the stitch to be pulled up, when it is held under the

it is held under the thumb and forefinger while the second stitch, or last half of the double stitch, is made. For the second loop the shoutle thread is passed in front of the fingers and the shuttle is slipped between it and the thread at the back of the fingers. The shuttle thread is then drawn tightly, the thread back of the fingers forming a loop on it; this loop, together with the one already made, forms one stitch. When both parts of this double stitch are learned the rest of the work may be mastered rasily. The thread must always be thrown over the knuckles first, then over the palm of the hand, to form a double stitch. A picot is formed by to form a double stitch. A picot is formed by leaving a space of one-fourth to one-half an inch, according to size desired, between the double stitches. This space, when the knots are brought close together, forms the picot loop. Some tatting patterns need two shuttles to work with. In such cases tie the two threads together, pass the thread from one around the fingers of the left hand, and work with the other shuttle exactly as if you were with the other shuttle exactly as if you were working with but one.

A CLUSTER OF CIRCLES

CLUSTER OF CIRCLES

CLUSTER OF CIRCLES

Begin in the center with one shuttle.

2 d; a picot, 3 d; a picot, 3 d; a picot; repeat 3 d between each picot; there are 9 picots in number. 2d round—finiten thread in 1st picot. Make 9 d; a picot, 9 d; draw the loop up, pull the thread through the same picot started from, begin the next loop in the same manner. At end of round tie thread and cut off, the take thread and the in picot of last round. Take the second shuttle and tie in the same picot. Make 3 d; a picot, 3 d; a picot, 3 d; a picot, 3 d; a picot; repeat all around. Connect circles three times when joining one to the other.

STAR FOR HANDKERCHIEF CORNER

THESE stars are very pretty, and easily made. Two shuttles are used. One square over-inps the other, as shown in the design. The center of the star is filled in when finished with lace stitches. The the two shuttles together. Make 18 d: then use one shuttle alone for the three-leaved clover; * 4 d; a long picot, 3 d; a long picot, 3 d; a long picot, 4 d; make two more loops in the same manner, then use the two shuttles as before, 18 d: repeat the clover leaf from *; repent twice more; four times by turns three clover leaves. Make the upper square in the same manner, but connect the clover leaves.

STAR FOR MANDKERCHIEF

HANDKERCHIEF LACE

SQUARE FOR HANDKERCHIEF CORNER

O'NE shuttle to be used in this design, as the previous one, connecting twice by turns to the loop before. For the points, make as fol-lows: 1st loop—5 d;

lows: 1st loop—3 d;
a picot, 6 d; eatch in SQUARE FOR CORNER long picot: 6 d; a picot, 5 3. 2d loop—
5 d; connect to picot of last loop; 3 d; connect to 1st picot next to long picot: 2 d; connect to next picot: 2 d; catch in between the loops:
2 d; connect to next picot: 2 d; connect to next picet: 2 d; canch in between the soops; 2 d; connect to next picet; 3 d; connect to next picet: 5 d; a picet, 5 d. 3d loop—5 d; connect to picet of the fast loop; 6 d; catch in next long picet; 6 d; a picet, 5 d. 4th loop— This is called the picet loop. There are nine picets, each separated by 2 d. All the remain-ing points are made in the same manner.

A PRETTY PAIRY ROSETTE

A PRETTY FAIRY ROSETTE

THIS rosette is very pretty when made in a pattern design of three for trimming dresses. Silk is then used, Brainerd & Armstrong No. Two shuttles are used in making this resette.

strong No. 500. Two shuttles are used in making this resette.

Begin the center with 1 d; a picet, 2 d; a picet, 1 d; draw the loop up and pull the silk through the first of the six picets, put the shuttle through the silk drawn in picet and fasten, then take the second shuttle and tie silk in the same picet.

2d round—Make 2d; a picet, 2d; a picet, 2 d; a picet, it is specially adapted for articles that are in

SOMETHING ABOUT WHITE SHOES

BY ADA CHESTER BOND

LIGHT evening toilette is not complete without white shoes or slippers; and a white shoe that is soiled is execuble. There are many popular failacies in this world; one is that raw eggs are not good to eat, and another that white shoes are perishable. Perishable, indeed! My white not good to eat, and another that white shoes are perishuble. Perishable, indeed! My white shoes have lasted me longer than any shoes I have ever had, and with nothing more than a little "elbow grease" to preserve them. Any druggist will sell you ten cents worth of pipe clay. And who does not possess an old tooth brush? With these two articles there is no excuse for the dustiness of your white shoes. Use the pipe clay dry, taking care always to rub the way of the grain, so as not to roughen the suddo. Do not be afraid to brush hard, or to get too much of the clay on the shoe. You cannot get too much of the clay on the shoe. You cannot get too much of on, and unless you are an athlete, with an arm of iron, I do not believe you can brush too hard. Pipe clay, used in the same way, will also clean trimmings of white cloth if they are excessively solled. Use the clay wet; it will make them look badly at first, but if brushed carefully with a clean brush and fresh water, it will dry off in a most satisfactory manner. I have kept a little white broadcloth waist-coat, collar and cuffs clean in this way for two years. White undressed kid gloves may also be cleaned in this way. It is with pipe clay that the men in the British army keep their white gloves and the white in their uniforms so immaculately clean.

JAPANESE HAIR-PINS

By W. P. POND

THE chief distinction between the appearance of the male and female Japanese lies in the hair. The men shave nearly the whole of the head, while the women allow it to grow, and even add to it by art, when required. It is then twisted and coiled into elaborate and fantastic patterns which few eastern hairdressers could imitate or equal. The hairpins used are not so much for confining the locks in their places as for actual adorment, and are very fashionable. They are of enormous size, seven or eight inches in length, and half an inch wide, and are made of various substances, tortoise shell, carved wood and ivory, many of them being composed of earved figures adroitly pivoted so as to appear to dance at every breath drawn by the weaver, Others are made of glass, and are bollow, and nearly filled with some bright colored liquid, so that at every movement of the head an air bubble runs from one end of the pin to the other, producing a most curious effect in a strong light. Sometimes an extra fashionable woman will wear a dozen or more of these pins in her hair, so that at a little distance her head looks as if a bandle of firewood had been loosely stack into it. The higher in rank the Jananese woman the more elaborate her coiffure is likely to be. THE chief distinction between the appear-

AN ECONOMICAL SKIRT FORM

BY ADELAIDE F. COOPER

I WONDER if some woman who likes to after her dresses when they are a little out of fashion, and who cannot afford a wire frame upon which to drape them, would like to know how I made one which I like better thun the wire forms, and which cost me absolutely nothing? I found in the attic a hard wood stick about the size of a bed slar, a little known rechars. On this I don not have been as the contractions. absolutely nothing? I found in the attic a hard wood stick about the size of a bed slat, a little longer, perhaps. On this I cut notches corresponding with my shoulders, waist and neck. I then beguiled my cousin into fashioning a board about a foot square for a base, with two braces about a foot long to steady it. He then nailed a narrow strip of wood across the shoulder notch, making it the width of my shoulders, and another scross the upright just below the waist, on a line with my hips, making it a little shorter than my hips are wide, this comprising all the carpenter's work necessary. Now for the getting into shape. Two small pillows would have answered, but I happened to have a half-filled belsier, which I threw over the top of the upright. Around this I put a pair of corsets, over which I placed a fresh corset cover, with the farther addition of a white skirt, and behold, an excellent duplicate of myself, minus hend and across. My young lady is always at hand. She never gets tired of standing, no matter how much I may draps, and pull, and measure in trying one effect after another. By seeing a gown on her, I can see exactly how one will look on myself. I find her a most valuable adjunct in the work of dressmaking, and I think you will, too, if you will only try her. This form is especially adapted for skirt draping—not for the fitting of the waist. the fitting of the waist.

LADIES' AND CHILDREN'S BOOTS AND SHOES

Accurated Aightest honors at Philadelphia . 1976 Methourne . Beelin 1977 Frankfurt . Paris . 1970 Ansterdam And tohervoor star exhibited.

56 Designs for Dwellings are shown, ranging in confront 60 to $5000. Many cheng ones. More and better ideas on suredal and economical helding on he etelander from this sole than from mything yet published. Sent puspaid for $1.

FRANK P. ALLEN, ARCHITECT. 61-62 Old Houseman Bik., GRAND RAPIDS, MICH.

PANSY FRIEZE FREE

Lugalls' Home and Art Magueise is a TEXT BOSK on Parent would, Farettise, Art and Bosesse sents prematings, Lida and M. J. Charleson, Editors, Each number contains Magueisreson or a Colored Sindy. Study copier, 30 routs, Editors sport. We give the Paussy Frieze Free with a Village strangerov-TOS.

This small illustration gives but a faint state or as-bampes of this Punsy Priogre. It is an exact ordi-tic reproduction of the derighted Oil Painting, injurcement full size, a vany tools, in all in Beauti-ful Colors. Price Bill bend $4.00 for a very subscription to Impulle' Magazzine, and got the Painty subscription to the Painty runsing for the factor.

J. F. INGALLS, LYNN, MASS.

NORMANDIE PLUSHES

Direct from the Mills

Por HAT and DRESS TRIMMINGS SPECIAL MERIT for Palarton, Embordery, and all find his pool where from the first pool of the first po

RESS CUTTING

BY THE TAILOR METHOD,
WAIST, SLEEVE AND SEIRT CUTTER.
Simplest and most practical ever made. Any lady can become a practical lives Cutter in half as boor.
By Baif price to introduce it. Seed for circular.
B. M. KUHN, Investor, BLOOMINGTON, ILL.

OLD RAGS
TRON" Dyes will make beautiful carpets and rugs and are guaranteed not to paper we will send a package such of "PERFECTION" Turkey-Red, Green, Wine. Medium-Browns. Rose and Orange violen byes, with new sample cards and catalogue, for ed. with the carrier of the carrier single package, ID cents.

W. CUSHING & CO., FOXUBOTT, MAISE.

SILK SATIN and PLUNH REMNANTS for SILK Crazy Patch. A large pite, pretty places, associated colors, 10c.; 3 plage, 25c. A large plag, all culture, Emboudery, Sug. 3a, Sat. Sheet of Crazy Stoches and 23a Out of Fancy Work with every order. LADIES' A HT CO. Bay 846,85. Lonia, Mo.

Stamping Patterns

Any one who wants Stamping Patterns can have them sent to select from on agreement to pay for what they keep and return the rist. Address HENRY MITCHELL, North Reading, Mass.

POCKETBOOK Worth Secents, and made of imitation Seal; also Elegant Since Catalogue, seal; also Elegant Since Catalogue, seal; also Elegant Since Catalogue, in Precipe of 30 cities postage FREE! to LAPILA MS, PALMER HOUSE SHOE STORE, Chicago, DL

MATS. We will send you 3 city-ony Lines Table Mats, sik nowork them, also Isoanis' E-pt. Hinstrated Catalog, all for 8 two-cent stamps (18 cts.) Address J. F. Ingalls, LINN, Mass. Box J TABLE

NICKEL PLATED TIDY HOLDER. Sent 15c. for a Will sent the form of Aprels' Torne. Will sen scratch the chair. GUSTAVE STANGER, Southerne Falls, Nam.

SYMPATHIZE WITH THE CHILDREN

HERE are some people who come into our lives like a gleam of sunshine. We feel unaccountably rested and cheered and refreshed after meeting them. If we go to them in trouble they have time to sit down and listen to the stery of our worries and anxieties without fubriture to get away to consthine else.

out fidgeting to get away to something else. They enter into our cares as if they were their own, and in some inexplicable way our bar-den grows lighter as we tell how heavy it is, and we are comforted. They have the power of substituting "the garment of praise for the spirit of heaviness;" they have the blessed will of suppositive. gift of sympathy.

THE dictionary tells us that the word comes THE dictionary tells us that the word comes from the Greek respective, meaning conformity of feeling, that being derived from sun, together, and pathor, suffering. Perhaps it is because the griefs of life do rather overbalance its joys that we most often need some one to suffer with us, and so we find the origin of the common application of the word when we trace it back to its source. Yet in moments of great happiness we want some one to rejecte with us as truly as in times of moments of great happiness we want some once to rejoice with us as truly as in times of woe we feel the necessity of some one to weep with as. There are heart-felt joys with which rib stranger, and not even the most intimate friend, intermeddles, but there are many which we must recount to a sympathizing our before we can fully realize our own most forbefore we can fully realize our own good for tune. Our pleasure is doubled in the telling, and our friend's unselfish delight at our grantication makes it infinitely sweeter.

REALIZING as we do the comfort of sympathy for ourselves, it is strange that we are not more ready to bestow it upon children. Their sorrows seem so trivial to us we forget that they are very real to them. They have no past to compare the present with. When the cloud overshadows them they cannot remember, as we can, a hundred summer tenspests from which we emerged unburt and not the worse for the temporary wetting. It seems to them that the sun will never shine again. Each less is irremediable, each disancement. again. Each loss is irremediable, each disap-pointment overwhelming, each childish dis-grace an indelible stain. They cannot look forward into the future and see there compensation. They need some one to enter into their feelings and to help them to bear the af-dictions which compared to their feeble powers of endurance are anything but light.

THE mother, absorbed in her own trials, is not always ready to give it. A broken-nosed doll seems to her a small cause for a pas-sion of tears, and yet the same chord is touched that moves her to despondency when her household idols are shattered, or her heart's dearest possessions taken away. A success at school, or a triumph in the playground, perschool, or a triumph in the playground, per-haps touches her more easily, and yet she does not always give that full measure of intelli-gent appreciation which is so dear even to a child. Children are quick to detect a false ring in any sentiment. If interest is only simulated they will find it out as certainly as an older person and more rapidly. Who does not know that chilly sense of repulsion, of being thrown back upon one's self, that comes when the friend upon whom we have relied when the friend upon whom we have relied for sympathy and comprehension fails to give it to us? The unsympathizing glance, which says in effect: "Go away, I am too busy with my own affairs to be troubled with yours!" turns our bearts to lead. Who that has ever experienced it would willingly inflict it upon anyone else?

DOES not the little child feel something of Data when the mother is too hurried to listen to its tiny troubles, or to rejoice in its trifling pleasures? Is not the young girl de-terred from turning to her mother for sympa-thy and counsel because she knows that the thy and course because she knows that the problems and events which seem so important to her will awaken only a balf-hearted interest and be thought unworthy of being treated seriously. When a boy can say to himself: "Mother understands, she always knows what I mean, she'll want to hear all about it," he will not healtest to m to hear all about it," he will not hesitate to go to her if he is in difficulties.

ET us be very tender with the joys and sorrows of these immature minds. riper experience must help them to bear them well, to learn the lessons which each is meant well, to searn the lessons which each is meant to teach. They do not seem important, and yet they are, for in the plastic character of childhood each touch leaves an indelible impress. Let our sympathy be unstinted, so that they may always feel that nowhere is it as warm and rendy as in their own home.

Expression Bourseas Source. ELISABETH ROBINSON SCOVIL

DURING THE LONG VACATION HOW SHALL WE AMUSE AND BUSY OUR CHILDREN? BY HELEN MARSHALL NORTH

ALF of the mothers in the land, and two-thirds of the other half, are just now asking the question, Wintshall be done with the girls and be done with the good boys during the long vaca-tion? Private schools which close their doors enrly in a recover them until the last

June and do not reopen them until the last of September, leave a large gap in the child's existence which must be bridged over in some nanner. The public schools retain their hold upon their charges a little longer, but, in either case, thousands of children all over the country are released from stendy occupation and conlinement for four or five hours a day and try are released from steady occupation and confinement for four or five hours a day and thrown upon their own resources or those of their guardians, for occupation, for ten or twelve weeks of the most trying weather in our climate. No wooder the question arises, What shall we do with them? They are all in the growing period, full of life, eager, restless, interested in new things. No one head could supply suggestions for interesting such a great family of young people of widely different tastes and babits, but a few hints in this direction may not come amiss.

The difference between an occupation and an avocation is, of course, that the former refers to the principal business of one's life, the other—the avocation—to a minor interest, something calling one aside from his principal business. Going to school is an occupation for the boy or girl; fortunate is the child who has been taught an avocation. A young boy of my acquaintance finds his avocation in amateur photography. During the school months of the year, he has very little time to devote to his favorite amusement. There are taugh problems to solve, long Latin lessons to learn, compositions to write or declamations to learn, beside a debating society, a reading club and other diversions which spring naturally out of school companionships. But from the middle of June he is quite free to consult his own inclination as to the spending of his time. He has taught bis next younger brother to assist him in taking pictures, and so has time. He has taught his next younger brother to assist him in taking pictures, and so has always an agreeable companion in his pleas-ure. Last year, when they were at the farm-house where the family spends the summers, Tom found an old tumble-fown sugar-house which had been left to itself for a long time. With a few boards and some nails, and a little With a rey boards and some thats, and a lattice help from the bired man, the old sugar-house was transformed into a snug little den in which Tom keeps all his implements for taking pictures, and does most of the necessary work of finishing. This year be will have a small corner cut off for a "dark-room," and he has made some nice little cuphoards out of ne has made some into tithe capounds out of old packing boxes, finished them with finex-pensive portières, and they are already in the freight car, on their way to the farm.

The region abounds in picturesque views, and the boys will have glorious days tramping over the hills and by the brooksides. For my-self, I think it is much more manly employment than dragging fishes out of their river homes with sharp hooks, or sending swift bullets crashing into the tender bodies of birds. Then too, every member of the farmer's household, including the bired man, enjoy "sitting" for pictures, and before the season is over, they will all be done up in blue prints, at least. The walls of the "den" are decounted with the products of Tom's toll, and with sketches and pictures taken from illustrated papers and magazines which Tom has the privilege of cutting up. He generally selects the illustrations and little Ben does the cutting and pasting. There are also a few Japanese fans and umbrellas honging about the walls of the "den," and at the front door some Chinese lanteress. Tom has transplanted a half dozen wild elematis plants around the ment than dragging fishes out of their river some Chinese lanteres. From his transplantes, a half dozen wild clematis plants around the building, and in a year or so it will be covered with a mass of the pretty summery vines. Great branching ferms grow in what the boys are all and all continue the "don." call their door-yard, and altogether the "den" is a source of infinite amusement and considis a source of infinite amusement and considerable benefit to the children.

Another family of children, most of whom are girls, living in the same region, inspired by the hoys' success, have adopted a similar plan; but their small play-house is more elaborately decorated. They are interested in pretty much everything in this world, but dolls still hold a warm place in their hearts, and to their little house they carry all the small families and their wardcobes, furniture and games. They have taken a number of useful lessons in housekeeping, invidentally, and ready for visitors, to whom their mamma is quite groud to show the ingenious devices of her little daughters. But they do not play here alone, which reminds me of a source enjoyment which children are apt to overlook.

Making collections of things, from buttons to base-balls, always furnishes interesting employment for a bright child. Did you ever make a collection of leaves? Of course not in the city, where every flower and leaf is bought over the florist's counter or of a street vender. But out in the woods and fields there are countless forms of leaves, big and lists, light-green and dark, veined with white or delicately shaded, no two of them exactly or delicately shaded, no two of them exactly alike in shape, size, or color. If you have no book prepared to receive them, you can easily make one of wrapping paper which will serve to hold them in place until you can find some-thing better. Take a long tramp in the woods or over the bills some morning, and bring back a leaf of every different sort that you have seen. Perhaps I should not have said take a long tramp because if you allegant to have seen. Perhaps I should not have said take a long tramp, because if you attempt to bring a leaf of every sort that grows by the way, you may not be able to get so very far away from home. There are all sorts of trees to look for, beech, birch, maple, oak, pine, willow, and dog-wood, besides the ordinary orehard trees, apple, penr, cherry, peach and plum, and several varieties of many of these.

BABY LANGUAGE

HAVE enjoyed the blessed boon of metharhood for twenty years, and the sweetest marks I have heard has been furnished by eight hables, who have learned to talk in one home during that thue. Each buby had a historiagn of its own; each had a surprising originally, an individually in his expressions that was very dear to me, and I could not bear the thought of forgetting. So it, adopted a very happy plan. I kept a record of each child's butty talk, apetical and sentenced just as it wounded, and these records have been a spiter of infinite pleasure and atmissment to the enter family. Talk published may be pleasant for other mothers so obtaining may be pleasant for other mothers as obtained out that all bubbes do not talk arms.

A MAN OF TO-MODROOM.

A MAN OF TO-MORROW

I AM an antisting reader of This Labous' Hosen JocusMat. and for the post few meether a reader of the Mat. and for the post few meether a reader of the Mothers' Corner." My haby weighed 12% posseds at birth. He cut a took at ten weeks old, and at six mentils had right. He has been very breakly. When the reader turned cold I made him two flavored dresses, which he ware time about, and torsied his white dresses into agrees. By doing that way he has worn white all his lift, and has been no trouble to keep dean and warm. Can suppose tell me where I can get patterns for beby shoes that I can make out of lett? M. B. C.

AN ECONOMICAL WARDROBE

AN ECONOMICAL WARDROBE

I READ with interest the "Mothers' Corner," as well in all of Title Lantas' House Journal 1. I notice "Am Economical Wardrobe" in the March sumber, and I think there is something left out of it. I see no provision for night-dresses, onless the unting flanned crappers are considered as such, and I do not think they would take the place of somen or name slips for wear night and day, at first, and afterward, when he long dress is assumed, at about three months, I use the slips as night-dresses. And I don't see how a halve can be kept sweet and clean with only two petitions if they are worn hight and day. I think three or four escability has now the seed that the same of the seed of th

SAFETY STRAPS FOR INFANTS

SAFETY STRAPS FOR INFANTS

I HAVE received so much help from this page, I should like to tell other mothers a contrivance for my buly. When he was about alx months old he would not set still in his carriage when in the house, but was continually trying to least over the ables so for that he was in constant danger of failing. So my bindand planned a little harmses considing of three pleets of non-elastic webting, with a buckle on the end of each planned a little harmses condeling of three pleets of non-elastic webting, with a buckle on the end of each side. Two of the pieces are three-frontiers of an inchwide and long enough to buckle around the haby's body under the arms.

The narrow straps are buckled through the walet strap should be buckled monfortably light, the substrap should be buckled monfortably light, the substrap should be backled monfortably light, the substrap should be backled monfortably light, the substrap should be seen enough so that he can move about freely and get to either side but no over the side. As this simple contrivance has savest me many moments of weary while boxy about my work, I thought it might be equally useful to others.

HELPFUL SUGGESTIONS

HELPFUL SUGGESTIONS

DABY will sleep very constrainty upon a bed made upon two chairs pinced baside mether's lack. The little one can be easily handled by mother when accessive during the night, and both will rest much better. Have haby sleep in varietis places in your bosse in the day dine, then when you go showhere he will not take east so easily. Don't be too regular and exact in ble cars, for when change is accessary it will come that much harder on him and cause greater commetten. I have been greatly helped by "Mothers' Council," and hope to be helpful in return. An Ouro Manna.

REMEDY FOR STOOPING

WHAT can I do with a little girl who is growing very fast, and whose shoulder blades are teconing very prominent, emoting her in look and to be stooped and roundedcooldered. She also turns her toen in its walking; this last habit she comes naturally by, nevertheless I would very much like to be note to broke they for the awkward habit.

ANXIOUS MOTERIA.

 Stand, feet together, weight over the center of each foot, hands at side. Raise arms sidewise to level with shoulders, taking a deep breath at same time; lower arms slowly, exhaling.

2. Raise arms sidewise over head, inhaling:

lower arms, exhaling. See that neither the head nor the abdomen be pushed forward.

3. Bend arms at elbows, hands in front of shoulders, brought us far sidewise as possible, elbows close to side; extend upward, palms in, arms carried back and stretching up as far as possible. Avoid tendency mentioned in coud exercise.
4. Same as in 3. Extend hands straight out at side, fingers lending.

5. Same as in 3. Extend bands downward and back of the laips.

7. Bend arms at elbows, lift sidewise to horizontal, elbows drawn well backward, palms down, forcarro and hand on a straight line; fling forearms out and back till on a line with the upper arm. Keep clost well ex-panded. This throws the chest out, presses the shoulder blades down, and corrects the tendency to round shoulders.

velop the noiscles designed by nature to hold the body in an erect position. Repeat each exercise several times.

A word of caution: Don't tell the children to throw their shoulders back, nor make them self-conscions by repeatedly calling attention to their stooping. And above all, don't allow them to place a book upon the table and lean over it. William S. Barus.

THE BABY'S BLANKET

THE BABY'S BLANKET

I AM always much interested in the "Mothew' Council," and thought I would add my mite of experience. I invented something in the line of baby biassists that I have found to be very satisfactory. I had blocks out for an outlinequalt, and one-half of them ableads worked in red; so I set them touceder, and then worked interested them to the blocks in yellow and several them together, not them fast the very flower white contentation and theed cacle, flaishing the edges all around with torchom been, and gying how or dibbon to make the working in each corner. As long as buby needed to be wrapped in something I found those very nice. They were sell, within, and could be easily kept clean. They were sell, within, and could be easily kept clean. They were sell, within, and could be easily kept clean. They were sell, within, and could be easily kept clean.

They were also dainly and pretty. Now he sleeps in our I pin in the back and that keeps in little hands owered at right.

Denners Tope, we Nothers Recommend.

RUBBER TOPS TO NURSING BOTTLES

RUBBER tops to mursing bottles can be boiled from time to time without injury. This keeps them perfectly sweet in the hottest

Babies Given Away

Not real babies, but a book telling all about them, called "The Baby," which we will send to any mother in America asking for it. This carefully written and daintily illustrated story of Baby life is filled from cover to cover with matter of interest to mothers. It has something to say about Nestlé's Milk Food-but more about other things.

The New York Independent says:

"The description of the Baby's bath in the chapter on Cradle Bays is a pin picture which will delight all mothers."

Write in, mentioning this magazine, and a copy of "The Baby" will be sent you by return post. Thus, Lenning & Co., 72 Warren St., New York,

Sole Agents Nestlé's Food

Tooth-Food

This medicine for babies prevents and cures pains of teething and resulting diseases, not by putting children to sleep with an opiate, for it contains no harmfil drugs, but by supplying the teeth form ing ingredients which are lacking in most mothers' milk and all artificial foods. It is sweet and babies like it. $1,00 a bottle at all druggists. Send for pamphlet "Teething Made Easy.

THE REYNOLDS MFG. CO.

CINCINNATI, O.

'MIZPAH" VALVE NIPPLES WILL NOT COLLAPSE.

Make jursing easy, and prevent much cule, because they admit sit into the bestle as the milk is drawn out, and prevents a carrier help formed. Somple free by mail upon request, with valuable information for cleaning and keeping nipples excet and healthy.

WALTER F. WARE, to S. Teire St., Phila., Pa.

BABY WARDROBE PATTERNS

Complete outlit, to improved patterns for infants' clothes. Also 25 of short clothes. Distort set the full directions for making, amount and kind of material, by mail, scaled, 56 cmis. Patterns absolutely refusion. HINTS TO EXPRITANT MOTHERS, a book by a trained maye, five atth rach set of patterns, Mrs. J. BEEBE, P. O. Bex 2003, New York.

DON'T RUIN YOUR BABY'S FEET

Mothers, you are responsible if your child's feet are injured. Sent your address and get description of my improved haly shee. W. H. BIXLER, Hagerstown, Md.

B of every gar- A means re- B quired. New tending Y means for the pal., Sec.; short cholme, 25 pet., Sec.; kind, an's, mal'r'i required, valuation by glowle information by professional turner, and portfolio of babbes, from life, first, with each. See England Pattern Ca., En 5, Feeling, St.

Pith Edition, postpaid, for Se, for stamps.)

THE HUMAN HAIR,

Why it Patts Off. Turns usey and the Remedy,

Ry Prof. HABLEY PARKER, F. R. A. S.

A. T. LOSU & Co., 1813 Arch St., Philada., Pa.

BABY'S REALTH WARDROBE. Complete outfit Small Spaces of the Country of the of t

HIRES' ROOT BEER is a family affair —an affair that should be in every family.

The time is rapidly approaching when this will be the case.

The sales in 1891 were one million, nine hundred forty-one thousand, three hundred nineteen (1,941,319) packages.

This amount equals nearly one gallon for every family in the country.

It would fill 25,000 miles of 1 1/4 inch hose —enough to reach entirely around the earth.

The sales so far this year have been double those of last.

Has your family had its share of this thirstquenching, health-giving drink? Children love it, and thrive on it—looking back in after years with great pleasure to "the Hires' Root Beer that mother made."

Counterfeit money is a loss to every one but the counterfeiter himself. The same is true as to the counterfeits of Hires' Root Beer.

Get the genuine HIRES'. It is the best that nature can produce, that skill can combine, and that money can buy.

Sold everywhere. A 25 cent package makes 5 gallons.

Try it in your family, and write us how you like it.

The Charles E. Hires Co., Sole Manufacturers, 117 and 119 Arch St., Philadelphia.

answering any question regarding flowers and floriculture which may be sent to him by the JOURNAL readers. MR. REXFORD asks that, as far as possible, correspondents will allow him to answer their questions through his JOURNAL Department. Where specially desired, however, he will answer them by mail if stamp is inclosed. Address all letters direct to EBEN E. REXFORD, Shiocton, Wisconsin.

NE of the finest plants of recent introduction is a new variety of elematis, called Davidiana. It is from Japan, and claimed to be en-tirely hardy. It came through last winter well. It is a shrubby It is a shrubby, upright plant, unlike all other clematises, which are vines, It grows from two to three feet high, and has a mass of rich green foliage, above which it throws its many flower stalks, on which small leaves are borne in whorls. The flowers are produced in clusters at each whorl of leaves. They are bright lavender in color and very fragrant. If this variety proves to be as hardy as claimed, it will be a great addition to our somewhat limited list of desirable plants for border use. The perennial poppy, Firebrand, is a charming plant for massing, because of its intensely bright color. Its flowers are very large and of the most glowing scarlet, with a black center. It is a wonderfully free bloomer, and nothing else with which I am familiar among border plants can equal it in striking effect. To secure the best results from it, plant it where it will have a background of evergreens, or some other plant with dark foliage, to show off its great, flaming blossoms against. Platycodon grandiflors, introduced a year or two ago, has proved to be perfectly hardy with me, and is an acquisition of great merit. It grows to a height of about three feet, and all summer long it bears a great abundance of star-shaped flowers, three inches across. There are two varieties, blue and white. As an effective flower, it is at once graceful and striking.

THE CARE OF HELIOTROPES unlike all other clematises, which are vines,

THE CARE OF HELIOTROPES

THE CARE OF HELIOTROPES

I HAVE been experimenting with the hellotrope, and I find that it can be made to assume a drooping form very easily, and with satisfactory results. If several stems are sent out near the base of the plant they will, if not given some support, be pretty sure to fall over the pot. Draw these down by weighting them as described in the article on the fuchsia. Do not let the plants bloom until you have all the branches you want. Give a rich, light, sandy soil, and be very sure to give water enough. Scores of complaints come in about the leaves of the heliotrope turning black and falling off. In most cases I am convinced that this is due to insufficient moisture in the soil. This plant has very fine roots, but a great mass of them, and they take up water very rapidly. You may give a heliotrope—and not a very large plant—as much water as you give a geranium and think you are giving all that is required. Your plant will fail to make a vigorous and healthy growth, because it is not moist enough at the roots. Examine it, and you will find that the tiny roots have extracted the moisture almost wholly. If not given more water at once, some of the young and delicate roots are injured, and the plant takes on a diseased condition from which it often never recovers. Do not get the idea from what I have said that the soil in which heliotropes are grown ought to be kept wet. Not at all. But because it requires more moisture than many plants—because it extracts it more rapidly from the soil — water should be given oftener to keep the soil in the proper condition. A good specimen of the heliotrope is a beautiful sight. A poor one calls for your pity.

A FEW SEASONABLE SUGGESTIONS

A FEW SEASONABLE SUGGESTIONS

TF you want good dahlias during the fall I room has be sure to give your plants all the water they require. Unless you do this you will have few blossoms, and these will be inferior.

Sweet peas require a good deal of water. in a moderately dry season, in order to keep them blooming well. It is imperatively nec-essary that all seed-pods should be removed as soon as formed. If you allow them to re-main on the plants, you will very soon find a decrease in the supply of blossoms.

If you have chrysanthenoums planted out in the beds, see that they do not suffer for moisture at the roots. It is well to apply liquid manure at least once a week, as at this season they will be making growth, and strong plants with a vigorous development of branches is what should be aimed at. This growth must be secured before the plants begin to bud, as after that all the energies of the plants go to the perfecting of the flowers.

you have a choice petunia among the seedlings in your bed of summer-blooming plants, makecuttings from it for use in winter. Stick these cuttings in the soil near the parent plant, and they will soon take root, and be in fine condition to pot by the time cold weather

GROWING THE POPULAR CINERARIA

GROWING THE POPULAR CINERARIA

We would have few more popular summer flowering plants than the cineraria if it were not for the fact that no flower is more subject to the attack of the green fly. If there is one about the place you will find it on these plants, and in a short time you will find them covered with these pests. Soon, if not attended to, the plant will begin to show yellow leaves, and in a short time your plants will be spoiled. I have tried insect powder and tobacco dust on them, but I find nothing so effective as therough funnigation with tobacco leaves. It is something of a bother to funnigate plants, and the operation is far from being an agreeable one, but still, if you love flowers, you will be willing to put yourself to some trouble for them. If you are not you ought not to have any; that which costs us nothing we do not appreciate. See a well-grown asseriment of the cineraria in fall ought not to have any; that which costs us nothing we do not appreciate. See a well-grown specimen of the cineraria in full bloom, and you will come to the conclusion that to own such a plant is worth a good deal of trouble. It is better to buy young plants than to try to grow them from seed; those that you buy in spring will come into bloom by June, and a group of them will give a most gorgeous show of color. They range through all shades of purple and blue to pink and red, and some will show such brilliant contrasts of color in the same flower that you will conclude that few flowers are better adapted to brighten a window. There are both single and double kinds; both are beautiful. The first leaves of the plant are very tiful. The first leaves of the plant are very large and quite cover the pot, but as the flow-er stalks are sent up the foliage decreases in size, so that the flowers seem borne on almost leafless stems above a mass of foliage sent out from the base of the plant. Give a soil of loam, well enriched, and shift from time to time till you have them in seven and eight-inch A QUEEN AMONG FERNS

NE of the most beautiful of ferns for the Summer decoration of the greenhouse is the adiantum farleyease. It is a strong grower, but at the same time one of the most delicate and graceful of the adiantum family. Its fronds are quite large, and the folinge heavy in one sense, and in another not so. While set so close along the stems that it gives a more mas-sive appearance than that common to most sive appearance than that common to most adiantums—though massive is not just the word to use to convey the menning I have in mind, but nearer it than any word I can think of just at present—it never loses its graceful and airy look. There seems something more substantial about it than there is about such varieties as A. gracillimum and A. cunentum. Still, it is quite as beautiful, indeed, it is a better variety than either of the others mentioned for the amateur, as it is a stirdier grower, and succeeds where they often fail, and a well-grown specimen is sure to attract more attenand succeeds where they often fail, and a wellgrown specimen is sure to attract more attention from all save those who admire the extremely delicate and fragile members of this most lovely family of plants more than they do the more vigorous ones. It does well in a soil composed of leaf mold and turfy matter, half and half, with sharp sand worked in liberally. Drain the pots well, and then water doily; keep in shade, shower at evening unless you keep the air of the greenhouse moist at all times, in which case it will not be necesanry to apply water to the plant.

THE STARRY JASMINE

ONE of the sweetest of flowering plants is is simile revolution; it bears small clusters of starry flowers of a rich yellow, and these are full of a very rich, heavy fragrance of the kind peculiar to the cape jasmine and the tuberose. Its foliage is a dark, shining green, and furnishes a pleasing background for the flowers. To grow it well, give a loamy soil in which there is sand enough to make it soil in which there is said enough to make it light, and make it quite rich. Water freely; while growing and blooming it likes plenty of sunshine. It can be trained about the window, or to the rafters of a greenhouse, where it is most effective. If grown with jas-mine grandillorum, which is much like it in all respects save that of color, the latter being white, a fine effect is produced-an effect worth striving for.

THE YELLOW DAY LILY

 $\Gamma^{ ext{HIS}}$  hardy plant, given in the catalogues as hermocallis flava, is to be found in some old gardens, but it is comparatively rare. It deserves general cultivation. The flowers are borne very freely, and flowering is con-tinued for a long period. The flowers are of a clear canary yellow. Its foliage is very luxuriant, and on this account alone it would be well worth growing. It should be disturbed as little as possible. Propagation is effected by division of the roots. There is no difficulty gryssion of the reeds. There is no difficulty attending the cultivation of this most pleasing old border plant. Give it a rich soil and keep it free from weeds. To this plant age has brought only added value and beauty.

FLORAL HINTS

E. F.-The "regular pond flly" and the water fily are the same.

Max. O. G. K.—Do not continue pinching back, with this plant after August. Pot in September.

EMMA H.—I will devote a special article to this sob-ject, as several others have asked questions similar to yours.

M. W. N.—If you had written me personally, I could are given you information desired; but this column amout be used in advertising anything.

AN OLD SCHEERINGE-I know of no method of drying flowers by which their narrani color can be re-tained. I do not think there is any such process.

Mrs. D.—Both closus discolor and begonia rabra can be grown from cuttings inserted in sand kept wet and warm. They do best if bottom heat can be given,

STELLA E. Coorcus—You can keep the bulbs in paper sacks, in a cool, dry roots, until you get ready to plant them out again. But don't disturb until they have fully riperted off.

Paner—If seed is sown in spring, you will have blooming plants for fall. Give a taif study location, if possible. No watering will be required, unless the senson is very dry. Any good self will grow them well, though they seem to like foam best.

S. R. F.—This correspondent has a large bed of hya-cinths. She would like to see it for annuals, or annuar flowering plants. Must she remove the bulks? No: plant the summer blooming plants among the bulks. They will not interfere with each other.

Miss. W. S.—Your failure with this plant no doubt comes from your carting it back in the fail, before put-ling in the cellur. You cut off the fature flower supply, as the bods are already formed; the time to prune is immediately after blooming, and before the season's growth takes pince.

EFFIE PEARITE-I think your failure with roses comes from a kind of milders, from what you say about the appearance of the leaves and their failing off. This almost always comes from too low a temperature, or too match exposure of tender growth to a draft. Hoses do not require great beat.

Mis. Waive—There are several blue flowers for ordinary stitling-room culture. Perbase the best, all things considered, is plannings capiends, and lavender blue, very florifecous, and an almost constant bloomer. Becomilia ciata is a berighter blue, and very pretty. The veronicas number several blues in their lise.

E. M. II.—The white worms in the soil of pot plants imust always come from manner. The flux are acheed irom larvan in the soil. To rid plants of worms use lime water, but several correspondents advise ticking matches in the soil. I use Food for Plowers as fertilizer. It is safe, effective, easily applied, and rooks to warms.

Miss M. H. G.—An apple geranium requires precisely the same treatment as that given others of its class. If your orange is lactined to rest, withhold water for a time. Do not left get positively dry, but do not give enough water to encourage much growth. When it shows signs of starting, increase the supply. If the surface of the soil in a pot looks dry, and the plants in a condi-tion of growth, you can safely give more water.

tion of growth, you can safety give more water.

MAMIE R.—Try helichore powder on the worms. Let all builts remain undisturbed until they have completed their amount growth, and "ripered off." You can tell about this by the foliage turning yellow. Then take up. They can be kept est of ground until September of Cotober, or re-planted at once. I like the plan of allowing hyacinths and other tuble hardy enough to stand the winter out of doors, to remain undescribed year after year, until it seems advisable to separate the plants.

L. A. E.—If you apply beliebore to your rose bushes early in the season, I think you can prevent rayages from warms. Don't wait until they come. Take it for granted that they will be there and head them off-grathe stars of them. Be sure to get the heliebore on the under side of the leaves. If applied as a previous use a beliews to puff it among the foliage. If in influsion, apply with a syriage, which will throw it up against the leaves. When applied in powder, be sure to have the fishings molet, so that 2 will adhere.

Miss Hoddens.—For your bay window I would advise cobes scanders. It is a very rapid grower, and a good specimen would seen cover all the surface you were willing to give it. It has prefty foliage, and bears large, beli-shaped Bowers of purple, shading to green, give it a large pot or box to grow in, and plenty of water if the not is fieldy rapposed to light. If shaded, give less. It is very easily grown. There is a green and white kind, il. scanders variegats, that is fine for the house, but it is backly as vigorous a grower as it, scanders.

PLANTAIN IN LAWN—"Our lawn is overron with plantain. What shall be done with it? The lawn-mover slips over it without harming it, and we cas't pull it." I would advise using a broad clase. Fit a handle to it of a sefficient length to make it possible to use the implement easily, without stooping march. With this chief cut off the crown of each plant. In this way you can kill the weed. The same is true of dandellors. But he sure to let neither plant ripes seed. If you do, the grass will be full of young plants next season.

C. E. P. G.—If, in your opinion, now earth baneeded, you can re-pot the amazylik as soon as it is done blooming; but if the soil does not seem exhausted. I would advise removing only that portions of it which can be taken out of the pot without disturbing the roots of the bulbs. You can leave the prosag bulbs, or remove them, as you think best. I prefer three or four is the same pot, giving a larger pet than is needed for single bulbs. A good compact for this plant is made up of fount, burly safety of your family, but the same of and rotten cow manner, and sand. Drain the pots well.

Miss R. G.—Transplant lily of the vniley after its foliage times yellow. This correspondent writes that she has an amarylilis Johnson'll having four large builts, from which she has thirty-two blossoms at a time, and she prefers to not separate the plants because of the fine show they make when kept growing together. It was for exactly this reason that I advised C. E. P. G. to allow several builts to grow in the same pot. Miss R. G. libricks, however, that her plant must need something done to it, as its roots are appearing above the soil. It would shift to a pot of ingrer size, discorbing the soil about the plant as little as possible.

Mas, V. McF, O.—I would not advise the use of an old buth-tub as a window box, for all the plants used to such a box or tub would have to be treated affice as to watering, and this might not soit them. Some kinds like a good deal, others little. I would use pots. In this way you have each plant under control. Window boxes, in which a large variety of plants are grown, are successes out of dears, but in the house conditions are very different. If vines are wanded use cobes sounders, strong grower, with purple, hell-shaped flowers; Madeira vine, thus follage and weet, white flowers in fail. For flowering plants use geraniums and begonlas in variety, abullious and petunias.

For Sawering places are germinate and organise in variety, abuillous and petunias.

Miss. R. F.—To grow lilles successfully in the house it is accessary to keep in mind that they are plants find of cool and shady localitors. They will not do writ if subjected to a high temperature tedare blooming. The best white kind, excepting it, Harrisis and L. toragillouin is L. speciesom album. L. auratum often does well in pot culture. These should be potted in fall, any for tober. An excellent soil is made by using equal parts of bonn, hesf model and old row manure. Mix these together well. Use an eight or ten-inch pot. Put in about an inch of drainage. Then fall is soil to about a make to one-tired the depth of the pet. Set the both in, and then add compost enough to fall the pot. Water well, and then put the pot in the cellar. Its not allow the soil to get day, but do not keep it scaked. Alan to have it simply mists. Keep the point cost, When you see the stem pathing through the soil, being the pot up and place it where it can have sampline and moderate warmth. When bods appear, keep it in the shade. Supply Equid measure once a week. After blooming set the pot set of doors, and let the plant typen of slowly. It is not customary to grow these likes in pots, because they bloom so satisfactorily in the open ground, but I have repeatedly flowered L. auratum in the house. It makes a grand consument for the greenhouse during the early spring months.

WHAT 10 cts. WILL BUY.

t pkt. Pansy Seed, for winter blooming, and a THREE MONTHS' TRIAL SUBSCRIPTION to the MAYFLOWER, a st page Horticoltentil paper, each issue containing to e large Elegant Colored Plates of some new Lower, all by mail postpaid for men issue containing i or a large Elegant Colored Platus of some new flower, all by mail postpaid for only to cents.

The FREESIA is an improved atrain of that tovely sower, bearing large spikes of beautiful, fragrant, white and yellow blossoms, unsurpassed for winter blooming. The PANSY is a strain expecially recommended for winter blooming in pots, all colors mixed. The MAYFLOWER is well known as the best publication on Flowers, Fruits, Gardening and Horns Adomment in general. It has over 100,000 subscribers, and goes all over the world. Each issue cuntains as or 13 pages, elegantly libestrased and bound with a handsome cover, and ONE OR TWO LARGE, ELEGANT COLORED PLATES. It is edited by John Lewis Childs, assisted by many of the best known writers and califorates the world over-among whom are Wm. Falconer, Ibert E. Reaford, W. N. Piles, E. S. Rand, Mrs. Henry Ward Beecher, etc. It has correspondents in all parts of the world, and its articles are the most interesting, instructive and valuable to be had. We send it for 3 months, together with the Parisy and Freesia for only soc, that you may become acquainted with its merits.

Get two of your friends to accept this after with you and we will send you free a bath of the BERMUDA EASTER LILY for your trouble. For 3 trial subscribers at 10s. each we will send Two Lillies and Two Pilliesons, and for so we will send the Charming Plants. All by mail postpaid. Remember that each subscriber gets for suc. the Mayflower for 3 months (with 4 or 5 large colored plates), and a bulb of Freesia and packet of winter-blooming Plants. Get. with directions for culture. Write at once, this offer will not appear again. Address.

JOHN LEWIS CHILDS, Floral Park, N. Y.

JOHN LEWIS CHILDS, Floral Park, N. Y.

FLOWERS Two canningnes: Rathe and Spring

Longfellow

wrote of Evangeline, the heroine of one of his most charming*poems:

"Sweet was her breath as the breath of kine that feed in the meadows."

Why?

Because he knew very well that it implied cleanliness, purity and intelligent womanliness.

No one can have a sweet breath without possessing clean, white teeth.

Rubifoam

keeps the breath sweet (like Evangeline's), the teeth white as pearls and the gums healthy. Then, too, it prevents decay.

All Druggists.
Large bottles. 25 cts.
Sample vial five.
E. W. Horr & Co.,
Lewell, Mass.

BREAST SUPPORT FORM.

BREAST SUIT URL TURM.

By its use the weight of the breasts is removed from the dress waist to the shoulders, giving ventilation and a perfect shape bust, free and easy movement of the body. ALL DEFICIENCY OF DEVELOPMENT SUPPLIED. When ordering send bust measure.

Price, free by mail $1.00.
Agents Tamied

Mos. C. D. MEWELL

Mrs. C. D. NEWELL, 244 Dickey Ave., CHICAGO.

ACME A complete garment, were under the cover of flustella, prosecting the clothing from perspiration. Compare than them shields, one pair dotted the work of six. Cover of the cover of th

NANTAHALA

Eare chance to make meney. We want the young won and ladde of America to invest and help table a MARRLE CITY. Pros-perty-with beautiful second of Natabala free. A. J. McBRIDE, 10 Gate City Bank, Atlanta, Ga.,

The

The Best in the Market.

Simple of manipulation. The shutter is always set. Plates or films are used. Covered with leather.

Size 4 x 5.

Price, $18.00.

Send for catalogue and copy of Modern Photography.

Rochester Optical Company, 21 S. Water St., Rochester, N. Y.

KEEP COOL

THE BEST ELECTRIC FAN OUTFIT

For Ventilation in Sick Room, Study, Office, or Dining Room

A PERFECT MOTOR for running a SEWING MACHINE, Attached to any machine in five

ONE-HALF ORDINARY PRICE.
Strictly High Grade in Every Particular.
No Better Machines Made at Any Price.
BATTERIES for running MOTORS in places
there is no electrical current.
Send for particulars.

minutes.

THE ROBINSON MOTOR and BATTERY CO. John Hancock Building, Boston, Mass.

MOTH PROOF BAG.

No paste or gine necessary. Gurmants can be removed and replaced instantly, and have no had odor when taken out to use.

Air-tight and perfectly proof against Moth and Dust.

Durable, and can be used year after year.

SIZES: 24x48 in. when closed, price, 50 ets. each. 30x45 in. when closed, price, 60 cts. each.

(PATENTED.)

RGLD BY DRY GOODS DEALERS.

pressed to any address on receipt of price. When ordering d Funtal Sute or Registered Letter. TRADE SUPPLISH. DETROIT PAPER BAG CO. Betreit, Miel.

THE DAY'S POCKET CORK SCREW No more bother about uncorking bottles! A child can open any bottle with this cork scraw. It is adjustable, and fits all sizes. The sharp point exist he wire, and the most stubborn cork is easily forced out by simply lifting the handle. Combines pocket knife, wire cutter and levercork serew; a perfect pocket piece that every where. Nanofactured by DAVIS CORK SCREW CO. Detroit, Mich.

ORNAMENTAL HARDWOOD FLOORS

WRITE FOR BOOK OF DISHONS.
WALLS, BORDERS, WAINSCOTTINES, CEILLINGS, of fined grades. Foreign and densestic hardwoods.
The Interior Hardwood Co., Indianapolis, Ind.

Consists of two hand out, finely tempered, adjustable butcher's steels
Any woman can sharpen her own knives and SHEARS on it Will last a litetime
75 ota to any address

BICYCLES ON EASY-PAYMENT PLAN

ON EASY-PAYMENT FLACE
All leading standard makes, Old wheels taken in eachange. Catalogue, lest of second-tund whisele, and seary terms of payment, maled free. Condition and Preematic three applied to old wheels at modernic cost.
Beyele mits, 87 to 815; caps, 70c. to 81.50; long seedings, 80c. to 81.50; Catalogue and Arthete Journal free. PECK & SNYDER, 126 Nassau St., N. Y.

FLORAL HEEPS AND HINTS

H. E. N.—Try the kerosene emulsion for both white and green files on fitchesas.

Max. P. McG.—Give the plant a soll of loam instead of a sandy one, and a good deal of water.

Mas. H. V. K.—Set lily of the valley plants in fall, say from middle of september to last of October. Popples will not bloom through the entire summer. The moon flower is too tender to stand a northern winter out of doors.

ANTS AND SPIDERS—A correspondent asks how to drive units and spiders away from flower beds. Last summer my paneses were almost destroyed by them. I shook quite a large quantity of dalmatics powder over and among the plants with the bappest results.

Miss. S. G. HAYDEN.

Woman as Pors—I find the old remedy of sticking natches in the soil to kill white worms a good one. The oil in some puts seemed almost alive with them, but a remarkes killed every worm in a week's time, and I ave seem no signs of more since then. I have never ad a plant injured by neing matches. I put about light in such six-inch pot.

Bersy Hanww.

A GOOD BASE ST PLAST—Most plants grown in hanging basiness are failures because they don't get water snough. The best plant I have ever tried is othorns.
It has succeiven follage, and plants of this class get along with less water than any other kind. It is presty and a great bloomer: It files the sumshine. Its yellow flowers are as cheerful as danderlon blosseum are. Try it, and you will be delighted with it.

E. S. Fales.

It, and you will be delighted with it. E. S. FALSS.

READER OF THE JOURNAL.—Ficus does very well in a simply place, but quite as well in a shady one. It likes a rather strong loam and a good dearlof water while growing. Given plenty of root room and a rich soil while making growth, it will soon become a fine specimen. It should be shifted from time to time, as the roots fill the old pot. Do not suffer it to get root-bound and remain so long, as this induces decay of some of the younger and more delicate roots which are in contact with the sides of the pos.

A. E. Davis.—This correspondent says that her white chrysanthenoms turn brown just before getting ready to open. She would like to know why. I think it must be that the variety she has is one that requires peculiar treatment. As none of her colored ones are troubled in this way it must be so. I would take up the plants enrigh in the season, if planted out during summer, and give considerable quantities of liquid manure after the plants become established in their pots. As she says nothing about insects, I can only infer that the trouble is peculiar to the variety she grows.

Sursequence. Milwackee—This correspondent says is peculiar to the variety site grows.

Sumschames, Militarskee—This correspondent says she has falled, two years in succession, in getting balls to form roots when planted in pois. Why? I don't know. She gave them proper treatment, and as also obtained builts from different dealers, it would hardly seem as if the fallers could be due to poor or interfor builts. Once in a while I find a hyazinsh refusing to root, but it almost shways comes about from a diseased condition of the built. Possibly she kept the soil too wet while in the cellar. I can think of no other reusion. She does not say anything about this, and I can only "guess" a possible reason.

"guess" a possible reason.

Miss, E. R. W.—This correspondent writes that she has some ever-blooming roses which have grown tall. She wants to know how to make them branch, also low to take care of them. I presume she means hybrid perpetuals, hardy, out-door kinds. To induce branching, out-off at least one-half of the stalks. Keep the ground about them mellow and rich, using old cow manure or chip dirt. After a crose of flowers has been produced, out back each branch about half. Soon new branches will be sent out, and these will produce a few branches will be sent out, and these will produce a five dowers for produced, not beck each branch about half. Soon new branches will be sent out, and these will produce a five dowers for produced. The "ever-bloomers" are tander sorts, belonging to the tea. Chinese, noisette and Bengal branches of the family.

Becaw, Shoows—Out back the farbala in May, and Chinese, noiseste and Bengal branches of the family.

Bixrey Brown—Out back the factala to May, and keep subser day until the middle of sommer. There report, and give more water. Have the soft rich with leaf moid: a strong growth will result. Out off from one-third to one-bail of the old growth in spring. I always advise throwing near bulks that have been forced into forecting; while they may give a second crop of flowers, they can never be depended on to do so. Instead of throwing them away, they can be planted out in the garden, and after a time they may give a few flowers. Toberous begonize for winter use must be kept in a cook dry place until July, or until they limits on growing in fact. When they refuse to longer remain dormout, put them and let them grow.

Bong Parproxy. I would article the predication of mant, pot them and let them grow.

Rose Patrices—I would advise the application of kerosene emulsion. I think it will drive off or kill the worms which induct rose bushes. In fact, I consider it one of the best insecticides we have, and I use it for all plants indexed with insects, and find it very effective. If care is taken not to have it stronger than advised in directions given for its preparation and application, it will not injure the most delicate plant. If an application the strength advised does not bring about the desired result, make a second application, and let it be somewhat stronger. If there are webs on the index side of the leaves of your roses, they indicate the presence of redispider. To drive away this peak apply water daily and in liberal quantities, taking pains to have it reach the moler side of the fediage.

reach the under side of the foliage.

SCARIONA IN THE HOUSE.—For the benefit of your readers who, like myself, desire to select for use in a bay window in winder a few plants that will bloom well, thus repeying one for care and attention given, I desire to give a little of my own experience. As my husband and myself were taking up plants from the border last September, I suggested the trial of a scabiosa, or "motioning bride," as at that time the plants were covered with buds. The result has not only been surpeising to me, but highly substantially. At no time, from that to this, has the plant been without flowers. The color of the flowers is richer in winter than the summer. No insect desirable for my late in constantly appearing. I feel well paid for my labor in careing for this pretty plant. Next year I want overen planes for the window.

Miss. A SHITH.

ing for this pretty plant. Next year I want several plants for the window.

Mins. B. Bestitu.

Distributing the window.

Mins. B. Bestitu.

Distributing the window.

Mins. B. Bestitu.

Distributing the window of these performance of the pretty of the pretty of the window of the contrage, and give it for the benefit of luquirers: "A piece of ground, prepared for lobarce, was partly set to plants, when it was discovered that the cut-worm was killing them. A trial was made of different kinds of leaves to see what the worms preferred. It was from that they were not very particular, but perhaps showed some preference for the tender follage of the chestiant. A quantity of these were seased in a mixture of parts green and water, a braspoonfist of the poison being used to such gallon of water. The leaves were placed here and there, each one toing held to its pince by a small stone, or a little soil. In the morning we went out to see the result of our experiment, and the sight did us good. Scores of worms lay under and about every leaf. Some were dead, others in a slupid and apparently dying constillion. Be sure they never chewed again; They had setten the observate leaves fall of holes. We staished setting out the field to tebacca, and had so more fresults from cut-worms." I would advise correspondents to try this plan. It is easy, and if effectual, just what many want to timke use of.

FOSTER RAZOR CO.
Fulton, N. V.

BICYCLES

ASY-PAYMENT PLAN
standard makes. Old wheels taken in fallogue, list of second-hand wheels, and payment, maked free, Cursion and applied to eld wheels taken in fallogue, list of second-hand wheels, and payment, maked free, Cursion and applied to eld wheels at molerale cost. 23 o 815; caps, 7c. to 82.50; bour seeks. Some states in the imperature drops low at highly. It is not fatal to the plants at the times to me. The results is milder. This provails in some localities much the imperature drops low at highly. It is not fatal to the plants at that time, because the weed is the times. SNYDER, 126 Nassau St., N. V.

Almond Meal, the original, whiteen and nourishes the skie, femove Fimples, Exema, Blackheeds, Wrinkles, Shiny Skie, Mech. Tan, Freckles, Liver Spotes and all skin blem is a baseling preventive of C. but provise moves Fimples, Exema, Blackheeds, Wrinkles, Shiny Skie, Mech. Tan, Freckles, Liver Spotes and all skin blem is a baseling preventive of C. but provise in the first preventive of the plants in blem are not required by it as the element surface are more susceptible to it than others. The strong, vigorias growers are not begined by it as the element surface are more susceptible to it than others. The strong vigorias kinds. Also, in pruning its such a man rate to make to ward it off by draining the sold well, high manuring and the selection of the plants in blem are not populative of the plants i

" ALL THE BEAUTY OF THE WORL'D 'TIS BUT SKIN DEEP." - Venning

Is a delicate and refined preparation that the most fastidious ladies do not hesitate to use. It is a necessity of the refined toilet in this country.

- It is fragrant and refreshing, and is never unpleasantly noticeable. It has steadily gained in popularity for over Thirty years. Try it.

FOR SHIE EVERYWHERE

OVER 500 LESSONS IN BUSINESS

- A Complete Legal Adviser.
- A Complete Business Letter Writer.
- A Complete Compendium of Plain and Ornamental Penmanship.
- Complete Lightning Cal-culator and Farmer's Ready Reckoner.
- A Complete Exposition of the Great Swindling Schemes.
- A Complete Set of Interest Tables, Lumber Tubles and Grain Tables. Complete Business Dic-
- In one volume. Cloth. Over 250 Illustrations. Price, 95 Cents.

A BOOK FOR MEN AND WOMEN.

A great revolution in Methods. It is a complete Rusiness Education brought to the home of every purchaser, simple, practical and complete. A series of Self-Help Lessons. It is for all classes. Over a million Facts and Figures. Send 56 cents for a Sample Copy; if not satisfactory, the money will be promptly refunded, postage at our expenses. Circulars and Terms to Agents—Free.

500 Agents wanted at once. From $5 to $10 a day guaranteed.

"The Business Guide, or Safe Methods of Business." (Agents have convassed all day and sold a copy to every person convassed. It is a book that never disappoints a purchaser.) By Prof. J. L. Nichols, A. M., Frincipal of North-Western Business College, Naperville, III. Mention this Journalan, and address, NORTH-WESTERN BUSINESS COLLEGE, Naperville, III.

A Beautiful New Monthly

By subscription, $5.00 per year, all bright, popular and convright Classical and Standard Melodies.

"OUR MONTHLY MUSICAL GEM,"

The hardsomest Musical Monthly ever issued in America. Contains 8 remonestions call copyright; 4 instrumental and 4 vocal, with plano accompaniments: 25 pages of music on execution paper, with engraved little cover, lithographed in colors and embellished by crayon likeness of Adelina Pauli in vignotic.

Enclose is cents for a specimen copy. Liberal terms to Accome.

Address Benj. W. Hitchcock

FT. EDWARD COLLEGIATE INSTITUTE

Bith year Sept. 18, $270; Superb modern buildings and appointments) steam heat; rooms for 90 young women and for 17 professors and buchters; 6 gradualing courses and preparatory; incellinged care of health, morals and manners; conspicuously thorough departments of Art, Music, Elocution and Languages. See Illus, catalogue. Jrs. E. King, D. D., Ft. Edward, N. Y.

GOLD-SILVER-NICKEL PLATING. A trade easily learned; costs little to start. I will fire sh outfits and give work in part payment. Circular-pp. Address F. LOWET, 252 Serges St., Ecockips, N. Y.

BUSINESS EDUCATION

The great business training school is the CHICAGO BUSINESS COLLEGE 15 to 49 Rundolph Street, Chicago, III. advand Catalogue Free. GONDRING & VIRDEN, Principals

AMERICAN HOME SCHOOL

BERLIN, GERMANY.

offers to young ladies whiching to study should the best markers in German. French and Made with home care, training and chaperongs, worthful regard to health, granustics, rec. Yessalan trips to Research, the North Cape and different parts of Germany.

The Principal, Nrs. Mary S. Willard, priper by premission to Meas Geover Clereland, New York, and the Heavenide Was, Walter Philips, U. S. Missiover to Germany. Riss Ruby L. Gilbert, Woman's Temple, Chicago.

M ISS ANABLES ENGLISH, FRENCH, and GERMAN Boarding and Jay School, 46th year, 1330 Pine Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

CULINARY HELPS AND HINTS

A Page of Helpful Suggestions from Experienced Minds

SOME SUMMER DISHES

DELICIOUS TO MAKE AND DELICIOUS TO EAT

CONTRIBUTED BY VARIOUS HOUSEKEEPERS

throughout the country, and which have been prepared with a special view to simplicity in preparation during the beated mouths.

TO MAKE ALMOND BISQUE

ONE pound sugar, twelve ounces almonds.

Blanch the almonds and dry them. Put the sugar in a kettle on the fire without water, and melt it so that it has the color of molasses, then put in the almoods, mixing gently; put the candy on a platter; when cold, poundquite flue, pat in three pints of milk, set on the fire and when it boils add the beaten yolks of ten eggs. Strain the burnt almond custard thus made into a freezer and freeze.

A DELICIOUS GRAPE ICE

ONE cupful of ripe Concord grapes, one pound of sugar, one quart of water, four whites of eggs. Mash the raw grapes and sugar together, add juice of one lemon, strain into a freezer at once.

A GOOD BISQUE OF LOBSTER

CHOP one pound of lobster meat very fine, melt two ounces of butter, adding three tablespoonfuls of sifted floar; when smooth add one pint of rich stock or soup; when boiled up add the lobster ment, one tablespoonful of fresh butter, one pint cream, salt, pepper and mace to taste.

A PALATABLE ITALIENNE SAUCE

BROWN two medium size onions in one ounce of butter, add a cupful of minced ham, a few minced mushrooms, one plat of good beef stock, pepper and salt to taste, Boil for ten minutes; strain.

A FOUNDATION FOR SAUCES

A FOUNDATION FOR SAUCES

A GOOD foundation for sauces may be made as follows: Heat in a saucepan one onnee of butter, two carrots one onion, one sprig of thyme, a bay lenf, six whole peppers, three cloves, two pieces of celery, and one of parsley. Boll fifteen minutes, Add one pint of some stock, then strain. Melt two ounces of chicken fat, add four ounces of browned flour, stir smooth, then add the strained liquid of the vegetables, two more quarts of soup stock, simmer and reduce to half; strain. A good base for many sauces.

STRAWBERRY SHERBET

O'NE quart of strawberries, three pints O water, juice of one lemon, one table-spoonful orange flower water, three-quarters of a pound of white sugar. Crush to a smooth paste the berries, add all of the ingredients except the sugar, and let stand for three hours. Strain it over the sugar and stir until the sugar is dissolved; strain again, and set in ice for three hours before using.

A DELICIOUS CHERRY TART

A DELICIOUS CHERRY TART

INE the pie dish with rich paste, sprinkle over it about a level tablespoonful of sifted flour and a little sweet butter. Pour into it the fresh cherries stemmed and seeded, and sprinkle over it one-half a cup granulated sugar. When baked take from the oven and cover with a thin meringue made of the white of one egg beaten to a still froth, with a large spoonful of pulverized sugar. Return to the oven long enough to lake the icing firm.

LOBSTER CUTLETS

MINCE the meat of the lobsters fine, senson with salt and spice, melt a piece of butter in a saucepan, mix with it one tablespoonful of flour, add the lobster and a little finely chopped parsley, add a little stock also, and let it come to a boil; remove from the fire and stir into into it the yolks of two eggs, spread this mixture in a shallow pan; when cold cut into cutlet shapes, dip carefully in beaten egg, then in cracker crunds and fry to a rich brown color in hot lard. a rich brown color in hot lard.

IMPERIAL PUDDING

BOIL one quart of milk, quarter pound of butter, quarter pound of sugar and the yolks of twelve eggs. Beat the eggs and sugar together, then blend the butter and flour to gether and add to the eggs and sugar; then put in the hot milk and add last the whites of fourteen eggs beaten to a stiff froth; place the dish in a pan of hot water while cooking, and bake one hour in a moderate oven. Sause for pudding: two cups of sugar, one tablespoonful of butter and one quart of strawberries. Beat the butter and sugar to a cream, mash and add the strawberries

NESSELRODE PUDDING

BEAT up yolk of four eggs, one-half pound sugar, and one onnce powdered sweet almonds, and add to it a quart of milk and cream mixed; boil until thick. Remove from the fire, and when cold, freeze. When frozen, remove dasher and stir in one onnce cherries. one onnce currants and one pound preserved peaches. Mix well and let stand for two hours.

BLANC MANGE

THE most delicious blane nunge is made of calf's foot jelly. Take one quart of stiff stock and melt it; then add to it one pint of rich, sweet cream, eight onness of white sugar, a tenspoonful of vanilla extract, and half a gill of bitter almonds heaten to a froth. Six well and your into morable to get cold. Stir well and pour into moulds to get cold.

PREPARING STEWED FISH

By M. MYERS

AKE any rich fish, such as shad, whitefish, sulmon or halibut. For a small shad take two large onions, peel, slice very thin and put on to boil in water until quite tender. Whilethey are cooking prepare your lish. Split right down the back, take out the backbone with a sharp knife and cut the fish into suitable sizes for single portions. The fish into sintable sizes for single portions. As soon as the onions are done drain off the water they were cooked in, lay your fish in a broad, shallow stewpan with sufficient water to cover, sprinkle the onions on top and season with sait, pepper, ginger and a pinch of powdered mace. Season rather highly to allow for liquid you are about to add. While your fish is cooking, beat two eggs thoroughly, add gradually the juice of two femous, beating onickly to prevent curdling, and some chornest gradually the juice of two lemons, beating quickly to prevent cardling, and some chopped parsley. If you can get some Spanish saffron it will improve greatly both the appearance and flavor of your fish. None but Spanish saffron will do. It must be thoroughly dried in a warm, not hot, oven and powdered very finely. Put enough in the egg and lemon to color a rich, deep yellow, but not sufficient to impart a bitter taste. When your fish is thoroughly done, dip off all but about half a pint of the liquid, but do not throw away. As soon as the remainder boils tip the pan toward you so that you get the water all in one corner, throw in your mixture, and to prevent cardling, nix quickly and thoroughly with a large spoon by throwing it over and over the fish. Remove from the fire and lift each piece carefully with a pancake turner on to your platter, Remove from the fire and lift each piece carefully with a pancake turner on to your platter, upon which should be laid a mapkin. Pour a little liquor over your fish, reserving the rest until just before it goes to the table. The liquor should be thick and rich; if too much so add some of the water taken off beforeshe eggs were added; if too poor, too much water was left on. If the lemons are sweet or very small a third may be required. Experience will teach just how much sensoning is required. Garnish with parsley. This dish is enten cold and is simply delicious. Chicken, veal and beef, or veal and calves' feet cooked in the same way, minus the onious, and eaten hot same way, minus the onions, and eaten but are equally good.

COOKING CANNED SALMON

EASY RECEIPTS WHICH ENSURE GOOD SUMMER DISHES

CAN of fresh canned salmon is a luxury in more than one respect, as it lends itself scensily to differ-ent uses. In the summer it is one of the most convenient things to keep in the house, its preparation into different dishes being so readily and easily accomplished. Below we give five different receipts for using it:

BAKED SALMON

ONE can of salmon, two eggs, one tablespoonful melted butter, one cup bread crumbs, pepper, salt and minced cucumber pickle. Drain the liquor from the fish and set aside for the sauce. Pick the fish to pieces, then work in the melted butter, seasoning, eggs and crumbs. Put in a buttered bowl, cover tightly and set in a jun of boiling water.
Cook in a hot oven one hour, then stand the bowl in cold water for a moment to loosen the pudding, and turn out on a hot dish.

pudding, and turn out on a hot dish.

For the same make a cup of drawn butter, to which add the liquor from the can, a beaten erg, pepper, salt, a chopped pickle, and some mineed parsley. Boil up and pour over the fish or serve in a gravy tureen.

SALMON AU GRATIN

SALMON AU GRATIN

TAKE a collec cup of salmon free from the liquor, and flake it, mix with it a balf cup of cold drawn butter, pepper and salt. Fill a small baking dish with the mixture, cover with fine bread crumbs, and brown in the oven. A little mashed potato and half a cup of cream form a nice addition to this dish. It should be served hot and garnished with a little fried parsley. This quantity will serve four people. serve four people.

SALMON ON TOAST

FLAKE the lish, senson with I salt, and heat it with a little milk or cream. Have some hot milk in a flat pan. Toast several slices of bread, which dip quickly into the hot milk, place on a hot dish, spread with butter and pour over it the beated fish.

SALMON CROQUETTES

ONE can of salmon, one egg, well beaten, O<sup>NE</sup> can of salmon, one egg, well leaten, one-half cup of fine bread crumbs, salt, envenue popper, nutmeg, juice of half a lemon. It is off the liquor and mince the fish. Melt and work in the butter, season and if necessary moisten with a little of the liquor; add the crumbs. Form the parts into rolls, which flour thickly, and stand them in a cold place for an hour. Fry in hot fat and serve on a hot platter, garnished with fresh parsley.

SALMON SALAD

O NE cup of cold salmon mineed and mixed with an equal quantity of chopped cel-ery. Line a dish with lettuce leaves, turn into it the mixed salmon and relety, and overall pour a dressing made of two tablespoonfals of oil, three table-psenfuls of vinegar, salt and repper. A mayounnise dressing may be used, but with salmon the plain dressing is to be preferred.

MAKING DAINTY SANDWICHES

BY ANNA ALEXANDER CAMERON

HERE are three essentials in making sandwiches. Very nice light bread, home-cured ham, and a very sharp knife. The bread should be cut into paper slices and the ham into the thinnest shavings. After the crust is cut from the end of the loaf spread the slices with nice fresh butter upon cutting. Have the ham already shaved and as you cut each slice of bread divide it in half, sprinkle one-half well with ham on the battered side, and place on it evenly the other half of the slice, buttered side down; press lightly together and by on a plate. Continue until you have made all that you want. If the ham, bread, butter and knife are what they should be, you had better make a great many.

The slices of bread may be squared after cutting off the crusts and then divided from corner to corner, making triangles, or the whole slice sprinkled with hum may be rolled up and tied with little ribbons. This makes a pretty variety in serving sandwishes at an afternoon ten.

pretty variety in serving sandwiches at an afternoon tea.

A GLACE CHERRY PUDDING

NE-HALF cup of butter, one cup of sugar, one-half cups of flour, one teaspoonful of baking powder, one teaspoonful of vanilla flavoring. Bake in the round lids of baking powder time. While these are baking, boil two tablespoonfuls of sugar, three-fourths of a cup of milk, one large tablespoonful of corn starch and the beaten white of one egg. Flavor with one-half teaspoonful of vanilla extract. When the puddings are baked, and while this mixture is still hot, sprend one large teaspoonful smoothly over baked, and while this mixture is still hot, sprend one large tenspoonful smoothly over the top of each pudding.

Have white glace cherries cut into halves. Place about six of these pieces around the top of each pudding. For the sance, boil three-fourths of a cup of sagar, one and one-half cups of milk, two tablespoonfuls of butter, one tablespoonful of corn starch, the yolks of three eggs, and one teaspoonful of vanilla extract. Pour the same around each little nudtract. Four the sauce around each little pud-ding. Serve hot. These quantities are suf-licient for twelve persons.

FOR WARMING HOMES AND GREENHOUSES DETROIT HEATING AND LIGHTING CO. 250 Wight Street, Detroit, Mich.

three points most exposed to wear. NOLD BY PIRST-CLASS DEALERS.

AMERICAN Club-House Cheese

For the household, clubs, pienics, inveling, hout-ing, fishing, and yachting this soft, rich rhoese is unrivalled. Put up in hermetically scaled glass jars and sold by leading grovers.

etag is believing. A minimum par the site of the illustration will be evan to any address on cipt of fourteen crain in stamps.

THE CHANDLER & RUDD CO., Cleveland, O.

COOKING MADE EASY!

THE WONDERFUL

Process" Vapor Stove

Safe, economical, clean, quick, efficient; no soot, no smoke, no ashen;

LIGHTS LIKE GAS; kitchen always comfortable. Ask the stove dealers for it, or write for "Primer" to

THE STANDARD LIGHTING CO. 200 to 220 Perkins Avenue, Cleveland, Ohio

COWDREYCOWDREYCOWDREYCOWDREY

C-0-W-D-R-E-Y-'-S

Deviled Ham

C-O-W-D-R-E-Y-'-S

Send postage stamp for Tidbit Receipts

E. T. COWDREY CO., Beston

COWDREYCOWDREYCOWDREYCOWDREY

CHRISTY KNIVES" THOSE WONDERFUL

BREAD, CAKE, AND PARING.

THE WONDERFOL CHRISTY BREAD KNIFE FINEST OF STEEL Read what

Wes. EMMA P. EWING. Int. Professor of Demestic Economy in the Paus Agricultural College, Iown, and in Particular University. Indiana, and now in charge of the School of Coolery at Chindrapan, S. F., uraker:

"Those Wonderful Christy Knives do the work for which they were designed, in an admirable manner, and should have a place in every well-ordered family. I take pleasure in recommending them to housekeepers everywhere.

Dec. 1, 1931.

EMMA P. EWING."

WANTED A LIVE AGENT IN EVERY TOWN,—Our Agents are coining money.

WANTED A LIVE AGENT IN EVERY TOWN,—Our Agents are coining money. Wille U. THE CHRISTY KNIFE CO., Fremont, Ohio.

ILLSBURY'S BEST" FLOUR

Makes More Bread Makes Whiter Bread Makes Better Bread

THAN ANY OTHER FLOUR MANUFACTURED.

For Sale by all First-class Grocers.

" Cap'en Cuttle $ Knows a good thing, I tell ye; and when He hails a better Drink than VAN HOUTEN'S COROA Hill make a mote On it."

PERFECTLY PURE.

VAN HOUTEN'S PATENT PROCESS nerouses by 50 year cury, the solubility of the lesh-forming elements, making of the cross

Sech-forming clausents, making of the cocon bann an ensity digested, delicious, nourish-ing and ritumisating drink, resulty assissifated even by the much delicate.

Ask your protect for Van Hantran's and taken no sidestitute.

Berlf set obtained a factor of the color of the col

The Standard Cocoa of the World. § annessanassanassanassanassanas SLA

Full Dress Suits

TO ORDER From $25 to $40

Equal in labels, style, workman-tlep. In and flends, to $95 and $100 Suits of leading houses. Why this is possible: Why this is possible:
We are the only Tailoring beams in the U. S. making a specialty of Full Dress Comments and have every facility for producing at lowest possible cost. It is well known that Tailors regard the Dress Suit a more incident in their haspess and accordingly—have raises greatly only of produced to the cost of the c charge prices greatly out of sec-portion to prices charged under brisk competition for business The Dress Suit is to-day an Absolute Necessity

an Absolute Necessity to gentlemen alterding Wedings, Receptains, Parties etc. It is not only the Cornet Dress on such occisives his often other forms are photolutely problished
Every positions should own a Dress Suit.
Comparatively few cloths are speciable for Dress Gaments.
Samples of these we mail from on application with samples of minmings, and complete instructions for self incassivered. No one for self measurement. No one for user system is very simple.

Our Court Our Gustomers Risk Nothing.

Gaments may be returned to us for any cause and when so returned, we obligate outselves to pay all Express charges. We are general tribor and can furnish by shall samples and any style of goods desired. For particulars and samples address (enclosing 6 ets. for postage)

KAHN TAILORING CO., 14 E. Washington St., BOX T , INDIANAPOLIS, IND.

BUTTON-HOLE SCISSORS FREE!

The Ladder' World in a Paper Steeland distributed paper for Indies, devoted to Foncy World, Blanchold, Falking, waterinities Libratizery, steel Tristenson that the Company of the Company The Ludles World

WAVY HAIR SWITCHES, All long, convent Hair, from $5.00 up. $10,00 elsewhere

COCOANUT BALM.

The coly Complexion Beautifier endorsed by entirent physicians, Makes the skin as fair and soft as a children price, $2.00 per text. All Twiter Preparations of the 'electrical PARFUMERIE MONTE CHRISTO, HARL STAR DES, A SPECIALTY, Send for free paraphies." How to be Scautifit.

54 West Fourteenth St., New York.

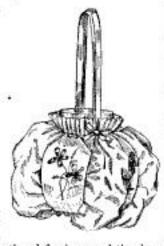

HEALTH SUPPLIES CO., 710 BROADWAY, N.Y.

ARTISTIC MATCH RECEIVER

BY LENA J. RENGNERED

MATERIALS—A piece of China silk eight-een inches long by eight inches wide, and one and a half yards No. I satin ribbon, a small, round Japanese basket and a tumbler.

Get the turnglass to fit the basket, say about two and one-half inches in height, leaving onehalf inch to project at the top. Make your slik into a hag, sewing together at the end, and gathering it together at the bottom. Turn down the top for a frill, put it over the bas-

over the basket, drawing the gathering thread firmly around the glass.
Cut four pieces of celluloid like the design, painting whatever flower may be pretty with the color used in the silk. Punch holes at the points of each piece, and fasten together with a rosette of the ribbon, then draw a ribbon through the holes at the top of the pieces, and tie. Use two ribbons by which to hang the receiver, and place a bow on each side to complete it. Water colors paint best on the rough side of celluloid.

A GRACEFUL HANGING POCKET

BY LAURA WRITTEN

NOW that ladies' dresses are made so that N OW that ladies' dresses are made so that a pocket is almost an impossibility, a banging pocket, made of a shade of sitk to correspond with the dress, is very pretty and stylish. Crochet over thirty-five brass rings with knitting silk the desired shade and color, and sew them together, making a square five wide and five long; then across the bottom of this square sew four, three, two, one, making the rings terminate in a point. Around the point the in a fringe three inches long. Now make a square pocket of silk or cloth to match the silk, the size of the square of twenty-five rings, and fasten on the back. In this way you have a double pocket, as a fancy handkerchief shows off prettily through the rings, and the back pocket may be used for loose change or smaller pocket belongings. At the two upper corer pocket belongings. At the two upper cor-ners sew one-built yard of No. 4 or 5 rib-bon. This should be attached to the skirt band under the basque, at the left side. These pockets make very acceptable gifts,

A PRETTY GREENAWAY PANEL

By ALICE C. TILDEN

A VERY pretty panel, which is a charming ornament for the children's room, is made from transparent tracing linen, which can be bought at almost may store where artists' materials are kept. It has a smooth, glossy finish from which the dust can easily be wiped. Take a narrow strip of the linen forty inches in length and ten inches in width; on this trace as meany Greeneway pictures as forty inches in length and ten inches in width; on this trace as many Greenaway pictures as can be prettily arranged. This is done by placing the pictures under the linen and tracing on the right side with pen and link; then with oil paints fill in these outlines on the wrong side of the linen, copying the colors of the Greenaway pictures, or altering to suit the fancy. The colors will show through the transparent linen, giving a very smooth and beautiful effect. When the paints are thoroughly dried, stitch a band of red, or any pretty colored satin three inches wide across pretty colored satin three inches wide across the top and bottom of the panel; turn under the top and bottom of the panel; turn under all the edges a little more than an eighth of an inch, and line the whole panel with white silesia. Baste the lining and outside very firmly tegether, and stitch around on the nuclsine, as near the edge as possible. Finish the bottom of the panel with four or five pretty plush ornaments, and hong it by a plush, or brass rad, This popel is easily made and very pretty

This purel is easily made and very pretty when finished; besides being an ornament for the room, it is a great source of an assessent to the children, who never tire of looking at the bright pictures, and when bed-time comes, or the little ones are tired, or suffering from some childish ailment, manana or murse ran easily invent a different story for each picture.

FIVE HELPFUL HINTS

PURE beeswax and clenn, unsalted butter make an excellent substitute for creams and balms,

Sage-ten, or out-ment graet, sweetened with honey, are good for chapped hands or any sort of roughness,

A slice of apple or tonato rubbed over the hands will remove ink or berry staits.

Ingrowing nails, if serious, should receive the ductor's aftention. In the first stage they can be helped by raising the edge and slipping a bit of raw cotton under the nail. Some-times a drop of tallow, scalding hot, will effect

Whenever a nail gets broken into the ouick wear a leather stall over it until nature heals the breach.

HUSBAND OF Yours

your brother-somebody's else brother—your son—too much business—hard office work—don't eat well, sleep well, feel well—unnatural tiredness—general -feel-badly-all-over—Too much indoors—too little outdoors—Drugs to the dogs-men are not pharmaceutical repositories-Nature smiles remedy-all outdoors is open—the balsam of the open air is theirs—Walking is tiresome— horseback riding is expensive—buggy driving as prosaic as riding on a rail— no activity—no exhibitration in them—If all the world knew how easy it is to bicycle—that three half hours teach anyone —how healthful, how joyful, how sensible, how fascinating, how popular, how economical it is, all the world would bicycle—business brains be renovated—good appetites—good feeling everywhere—men would do in six hours what they don't now do in twelve everywhere—men would do in six hours what they don't now do in twelve—Ladies, teach the Gospel of Outdoors to those you love—teach it to yourself—outdoors is yours as well as theirs—delicate women are unfashionable—Nature moulded the female figure in perfection of loveliness—women of to-day are seeking health and strength—The open summer breathes breezy welcome to all creation—Free at all Columbia bicycle agencies—there are a thousand of them—or send two two-cent stamps to Pope Mig. Co., 221 Columbia Ave., Boston, to receive a few ounces of information about cycles and cycling, worth a hundred dollars an ounce to you and yours—Not a word about Columbias—enough for the day to offer health and happiness—to-morrow you and yours will buy a bicycle—a Columbia—we have no fear—folks make no mistake in buying Columbias. we have no fear-folks make no mistake in buying Columbias.

Jack and Jill

wouldn't have had to carry so much water if they had used

Gold Dust Washing Powder,

and their work would have been sooner done, for nothing else

Cleans So Well. So Quickly, or Costs So Little has been discovered.

N. K. FAIRBANK & CO., Sole Manufacturers, chicago, st. Louis, New York, Philadelphia, Boston, BALTIMORE, NEW ORLEANS, SAN FRANCISCO, PORTLAND, ME., PORTLAND, ORE, PITTSBURGH AND MILWAUKEE.

Dr. Lyon's Perfect Tooth Powder

which they have given us

Thoroughly cleanses the teeth and purifies the breath. Used by people of refinement for over a quarter of a century. Sold Everywhere.

"ROYAL POLISH." THREE BEE" BLACKING & Use these goods in your family and you may SECURE, POSTPAID, one or both of the next paper-covered books, "BIXBY'S HOME SONGS.

These books contain words and music, and are designed as Sorree-nies to constituers of our goods in all parts of the world, and an acknowl-redgment of the investment.

MESONGS MESONGS Oldinee of ope in Reg SCULAR SONGS FAMILY HOME

OUR PLAN.

WE PROPOSE, during the year HIR IN MAIL, POSTPAID, ONE of THESE BOOKS to any person in the United States or Canada sending us 2 TWO-CENT STAMPS, PROVIDED they are companied by FIVE COLORED LABELS taken from the upper side of the lids of boxes containing BIXBY'S "THREE BEE" Blacking, for men's shoes, or from BIXBY'S"ROYAL POLISH.

We require this as an evidence that the tooks go direct to consumers of our goods. The labels may be readily removed by submerging the lide or battles in water ever night. State which book (No. 1 or No. 2) is desired. These who wish to secure both books may do so by sending us Teo Couts in Postage Stamps, accompanied by the Pive Labels as stated above. When our patrons abroad send for the books the labels should be accompanied by stamps of their country double the value of U.S. A. stamps.

BIXBY'S "THREE BEE" BLACKING and "ROYAL POLISH" are pepular goods and sold everywhere at popular prices. If you have not tried these articles, it will pay you to buy the quantity from which you can remove the labels and secure one of these books. Address

S. M. BIXBY & CO., 194 & 196 HESTER STREET, NEW YORK, U.S. A.

BUFFALO LITHIA WATER

For the Babies

HUNTER MCGUIRE, M. D., LL. D., late Professor of Surgery, Medical College of Virginia, Richmond

For some time I have been using Buffalo Lithia Water in the preparation of ARTIFICIAL FOOD FOR INFANTS. Cow's milk is the substitute usually resorted to when the mother is not able to suckle her child and to want the motiver is not able to better the control and it is impossible to get a wet nurse. One serious objec-tion along seith runny others, to cone's milk, is its Actorry. Human milk is always alkaline, but cow's milk, except when the animal is fed entirely upon grass. is almost always acid. This is the principal reason why the milk of cows disagrees with many babies, and lime water is often added to this milk to correct the addity.

I believe the long-continued use of time under is hartful to digration, and last summer when I was feeding two of my own children on cow's milk, and found the nurse adding lime water to prevent colic and intestinal de-rangament, which the food otherwise produced, I directed her to use No. 2 Buffield Lithin Water in preparing the food, with immediate and continued good regults. The water was added until the milk lost its eddity and was neutral or alkaline."

Water in cases of one dozen half-gallon bettles, 85, f. o. b., here, or at all Druggists.

THOMAS F. GOODE, Proprietor

Buffalo Lithia Springs, Va.

32-Page Illustrated Pamphlet sent Free.

Hotel Now Open.

A FLAT-IRON

CLEANER THAT CLEANS

and at the same time waxes the Iron with Bessewax. Removes every particle of Rust, Starch, Dirt, or Resigness, reduces the labor of irreing greatly, and is worth to any family ten times its cost.

Price 25c. by Mail

AGENTS WANTED SHERWOOD MFG. CO., Mansfield, Ohio

"COMMON SENSE" TRUNK

agic Trunk, before it can be opened must be paided from the a present breaking the planter; he paiding it forward yes tear a and possibly strain reserved. Why not use "Common Stear", that can be opened while backed clearly to wall, and that a cond as descript new well? It is guaranteed more darable convenient than any other make and cents as more. Made in the set of the part of the part of the transition are topic and for all purposes. While transiting are topic or a measure. Just both at your Santone, trush think a set, and if your dealer has not "Paletta ERSPIRENS, Sarine, Wel-

A DELICIOUS PERFUME.

DELICATE BUT WONDER-FULLY IMPERISHABLE. Ask your druggist for it, or send us 25 cents in stamps for 1/4 oz. sample. C. B. WOODWORTH & SONS Rochester, N. Y.

SELL MUSIC

Woodward's Musical Monthly Want you to introduce it either at home or travel-ing. Liberal salary. Send four cents for sample copy with five complete pieces of intest vocal and instrumental music to Woodward's Musical Monthly, Dep't B. 82 Broselway, New York. Subsorigation, 81 per year. Sixty cents, six months. Postpaid.

and perfect health: no arbos or pains upon rising. Com nilmens and durability. Requires no springs. Embora-vicinus. Write for consistentials and price list. RETROPOLITAN AIR 60008 CO. 2 Temple Place, Best

ARTISTIC WOOD MANTELS And the celebrated sentance ALDINE FIREPLACE

Before buying Grates and Mantels get our prices.
Aldine Manufacturing Co., Grand Rapids, Mich.

JAPANESE Water Lity Income, Hand Sets a box, Agents Wanted, Migamoto, Saratoga, N. Y.

WHILE YOU CURL YOUR HAIR

BY EMMA V. SHERIDAN

OME of us are slaves to the curling-iron. This, too, not always from vanity. For instance, the locks shorn at the doctor's orders, and vanity. For instance, the locks shorn at the doctor's orders, and now grown to a shoulder length, straight, and with ends bristling stubbornly, can be subjected to the hair-pin only if they are first subjected to the hair-pin only if they are first subjected to the curling-iron. And oh, how long it takes to curl a shoulder-length of bair. Quite an hour and a half if the hair be straight as from washing. Which of us can spare so much time? Besides, it is so tiresome standing, and who ever heard of a woman curling her hair while seated! We try to hurry, that is, we do not clean the iron carefully, and our hair is smudged; or we half heat it, or we take too big a lock, or we do not hold the lock long enough, in either of which cases the hair is only half curled, and has to be done over two or three times. Or we heat the iron too hot and hurn our tresses, and spoil our temper, and give a singed smell to our hair. This is one of the times when "doing two things at once" is good policy. Comb out your hair carefully, take just the right thickness of lock, heat and clean the iron properly, turn the lock upon it carefully, and, holding the iron in place with the left hand, go about other things. A trip to the closet for the dress and hat to be worn gives the lock just nice time to curl thoroughly. While a shoe is being buttoned the next lock curls; gloves, well and sunshade are collected, card-case refilled, list of calls looked up, etc., and meanwhile the hair is done. Dear me, what a lot can be seen to! The room can be "tidied," the bookcase rearranged, the clean clothes laid away, the wash counted, the mending laid out; all this and many another thing can be accomplished, a little awkwardly, perhaps, but still accomplished, and the hair curled nicely and cleanly, and "both at once." You can even write a letter or so. I, for instance, have written and cogied this article, and now that my hair is curled I close.

HOW A HYMN WAS WRITTEN

By REV. J. H. GILMORE, D. D.

By Ray, J. H. Gilmork, D. D.

NE evening in the spring of 1862 I was speaking at the Wednesday meeting of the First Baptist Clearch, in Philadelphia, the subject being the twenty-third Psalm. I had been dwelling with especial emphasis upon the blessedness of being under God's leadership, entirely apart from the way in which He leads us, or what He leads us to: and when, at the close of the service, we adjourned to the home of one of the deacons, Thomas Watson, where I was staying, the same thought was still occupying all our hearts and minds.

During the conversation, in which others beside Mr. Watson and his wife took part, the blessedness of God's leadership so completely possessed me, and so grew upon me, that I took out my pencil, and then and there wrote the hymn, "He Leadeth Me," just as it stands to-day. I thought no more of it, but my wife, to whom I had handed it, sent it, without my knowledge, to "The Watchman and Reflector," where it was printed for the first time. Three years later, while conducting worship in the Second Raptist Church of Rochester, New York, I picked up a hymn-book with the thought, "I wonder what they sing," when, to my surprise the book opened to "He Leadeth Me." This was my first intimation that the hymn had found a place in any collection of the songs of the church.

How little the fact of authorship impressed me is shown by my declaration, when I first told the story, that the refrain had been added by another land than mine. But afterward, the original copy of the hymn, found among my wife's papers, proved that I had actually written the refrain myself.

SOME THINGS WORTH KNOWING

There are 7,500,000 young men in the United

The negro lives longer in the South than he does in the North.

Wine clarifiers in France use more than 80,000,000 eggs a year.

The large parlor cars weigh from 65,000 to 75,000 pounds apiece.

The white man lives longer in the North than he does in the South,

The value of floral establishments in the United States is $38,355,722.

Life is shorter in the valleys and lowlands than among the hills and mountains.

An ordinary day coach weighs about 50,000 pounds; Pullman sleepers weigh about 75,000

The limited express, with its two engines and several Pullman cars, weighs nearly 750,-

The value of fur-seal skins shipped from Alaska since the territory came into the pos-session of the United States is given at $33,000,-

The number of pieces of postal matter of all kinds which pass through the mails of the United States annually is estimated at 3,900,-

THE FOWLER IMPROVED KEYLESS FLY FAN

A CREAT Home Comfort

It drives all flies away by the shadow and morement of the

In hot, saltry weath

The cost is a trifle compared to the bene-fit durined from its use. cannot buy from your ers, write to MATTHAI, INGRAM & CO., Baltimore, Md.

POINTER!

pickeritty is has not occurred to our readers that the LUBIES MFG, CO., 221, 122 and 125 Aerik Expits By, Filia, we one of the largest manufacturers of Heycles, Children's Carriages and Berigeraters in the United States. A tour through their immense Factory is positive peopl. In their magnificent adversaries you will find a very legalize mosts of Cycle Sandries and Hayde Bailes. The carriage department presents a grand appearance with assental hundred Concluse handsomely appearanced and tribuned. The Glateir Heritgeraters with their seven walls be levelation, and the celly practical Heritgeraters made. We also notice a givant variety of Sactising Chairs, Sailer Top Decks, handle Chairs, etc. Name people desired, and a catalogue fully desarthing each article will be setz.

R. H. INGERSOLL & BRO. 65 CortlandtSt. N. Y. City

How to Make a Fortune

WANTED—Silesmen; who can easily make twenty-five to seventy-five dollars per week, selling the Gelebrated. Finless Clothes Line, or the Famous "Macomber Fountain Ink Emser"—Patients recently issued. Sold ONLY by salesmen, to whom we give Exclusive Territory. The Pinless Clothes Line is the only line ever invented that holds clothes without plas—a perfect success. The Macomber Fountain Ink Emser is entirely new; util crase ink instantly, and is king of all. On receipt of 50c, will mail you sample of either, or sample of both for $1, with circulars, price-distand terms. Secure your ferritory at once. Address THE PINLESS CLOTHES LINE CO., No. 120 Hermon St., Worcester, Mass.

30 days on trini. Rood's Magic Scale, the popular Ladies' Talloring System. Hibstrated circular free. Hoop Manic SCALE Co., Chicago, Ill.

FILL YOUR OWN TREETH with Crystaline. Stop Circular free, T. F.TRUMAN, M. D., Wells Bridge, N. V.

$25 PER WEEK is fair; we pay more to skillful fundred Years of American History," by Dr. John Lord and Prof. Pation. Try it in spere hours. FORDS, HOWARD & HULBERT, New York

EYES tested free by mail. New method: Send stamp for test card. KEENE OPT. CO., 120t Washington St., Boston, Mass.

......

[63535553] [63536355]

ALMA Canadian College For YOUNG WOMEN

60-pp. illus, estalogue Address Principal AUSTIN, B. A., St. Thomas, Ont.

STAMMERING

"Speech Defects, Their Causes and Cor-Refer to Ray, William R. Clark, D. D., Lyen, E. J. E. THORPE, Newton Centre, Mass.

8 Per Cent. Investment

A limited amount of Preferred Treasury Stock in a reliable manufacturing company for sale in small lots, Further details and refs., Lock Box 238, Boston, Mass.

CHICAGO ATHENÆUM—PEOPLE'S COLLEGE

Unitarious American Laboratoria Laboratoria Della variable del laboratoria Della Variable del laboratoria del

THE Minnesote Saving Fund & Investment Co., of Minnespolis, Minn., is a safe place to de-posit or invest money in any amount. Write.

MAKE YOUR OWN SODA WATER. COSTS BUT ONE CENT A GLASS.

On receipt of $0.00 we will mail you receipe for making most delictous soda water. (No buttling or beiling re-quired.) Easily made in a few minutes. Any flavor desired.

Equal to Ice Cream Sodas. Full directions sent. ACME SODA CO., 48 East 9th St., N. Y.

Allcock's The best, surest, cleanest and cheapest Corn and remedy for corns Bunion Shields Shields Bunion

ple of the Bunion

SHIELDS sent, prepaid, on receipt of 10 cents. The Corn Shields are made large and small. In releving, state size wanted. PORDUS PLASTER CO., 274 Canal Street, New York.

PILLOW-INHALER

The applies curative air directly to the affected parts of the nose, threat and langs, at L. Nsuirr, whilst skeeping as usual; for Catarrin, Broschitts, Ashlima, and Hay Ferver.

Mr. 8. T. Rover, 1637 Chestlerst St., Phindia, nutberess of "Mrs. Rover's Cook frevummend it to those who wish to get rid of cutarrin."

Mr. B. P. Unin, Cachiler, Bank Haymond, fixymond, Ill., says; "Pillaow-INHALER entirely cured me of sustains."

ma.

Ellis Clisbe, 261 Pifth Avenue, New York, says of Pittow-Innatus cured me of catarrini deaf

Mrs. James M. White, of W. Main St., Lexington, y., says: "The Pillow-INHALER cured me of lay Send for pumphlet and testimonials, or call and see it.

PILLOW-INHALER CO. 1217 Filbert St., Philadelphia, Pa.

A BOON TO THE DEAF!

Excluse two-cont stamp for information and terms, exclosed filters, cor. 7th St. & Brondway, Oakland, Cad.

HEMARVEL TO-DAY THECOLUMBIAN FOR T

The Columbian No. 19000

with the people; and we make this worderful offir knowing we can sell every one of the first 5,000 COLUMBIANS

Payment Plans to suit all pockets, direct from factory at wholesale prices DUD'T DAY AN AGROUT OF DEALER $100 OF $300. MANUFACTURED IN THE WORLD, FROM $

Put it in your pocket. If you will write for our catalogue, we can prove our statements and give you facts that will astonish you. Visit our immense factories and make your own selection. All purchaser's expenses paid Note what you have to do and DO AT ONCE. Delays are dangerous.

Send for our Catalogues Mention than You get them free. Reference, First National Bank this City. Address the Manufacturers at once. Time is short. The rush is great.

CORNISH & CO. Washington, New Jersey.

A SPLENDID FISHING OUTFIT FOR THE BOYS

Often as a Premium for a Club of 4 Yearly Subscribers at $1.00 each; or, for $ Subscribers and 50 cents additional. Price, $1.10. Postage and packing, 30 cents extra, whether secured as a Premium or purchased. (See remarks below regarding ordering by Express.)

How many of the boys, who, throughout the summer spend their Saturdays sented with pole and line on the banks of near-by brooks and ponds, realize that by a very little exertion after school hours, or on some Saturday afternoon, they can secure an Outfit for trout and bass fishing of which any boy may feel justly proud

The equipment we furnish includes a Rod of genuine Calcutta Bamboo, 12½ feet long, in three joints, with double Brass Ferrules. The balance of the Outfit consists of 1 Brass Balance Reel, with screw handle and raised pillars. Braided liste-thread Line, 25 yards long: 34 dozen long-shank Carlisle Hooks, for Trout, and 1/4 dozen Bass Hooks on double-twisted gut; one varnished Quill-top Float, and an assortment of Artificial Trout Flies. We put these Outfits up here in our own workrooms, and will recommend and guarantee them in every particular. The Rod is made of the material used in manufacturing the enormously expensive rods used by expert and scientific fly-casters -Burnt Calcutta Bamboo. The Reel is a perfect Price, $1.40, postpaid. A similar Outfit cannot be purchased for the same money at any retail store in this country.

LONGER POLES

Poles by mail will measure only eleven or twelve feet long. For $1.10 (or, 4 Yearly Subscribers) we will send the Outfit by Express, charges to be paid by the receiver, with longer and heavier poles. Packages over four feet long cannot be mailed

All goods by mail go at the owner's risk. For a triffing sum we will insure all mail packages, and will then duplicate any lost goods.

To insure to $5.00, send us 5 cents, and request Mail

Insurance.
To insure to $10.00, send us to cents, and request Mail Insurance.
To insure to $25.00, send us 15 cents, and request Mail

THREE COMPLETE OUTFITS FOR PHOTOGRAPHY

Outfit No. 1

Given as a Premium for a Club of 15 Yearly Subscribers at $1.00 each; or, for 11 Subscribers and $1.00 additional; or, for 7 Subscribers and $2.00 additional. Price, $5.00. Best only by Express, charges to be paid by the receiver.

wood. handsomely polished, for plate size 354x454 inches, with Leatherette Bellows; handsomely finished, quick-setting, brass-mounted Lens ; a hinged ground-glass, double Plate-Holder. improved Tripod Carrying Case.

The Chemical Outfit for Developing and Printing contains Ruby Lamp, one-half dozen Dry Plates, 2

Japanned Iron Trays, 2 Bottles Developer, 1 Box Hyposulphite Soda, 12 sheets silvered Albumen Paper, Printing Frame, one bottle Toning Solution, I dozen Bevel edge Card Mounts.

Send us 4 cents in postage stamps, and we will mail you a photograph taken with one of these Cameras.

Price, $5.00. Sent by Express, charges to be paid by the receiver. Outfit No. 2

Given as a Premium for a Club of 7 Yearly Subscribers at $1.00 each; or, for 3 Subscribers and $1.00 additional. Price, $2.23. Must be sent by Express, charges to be paid by the receiver.

In this Outfit, No. 2, we ofter something that will do good work with less professional skill and fewer chances of failure than any other outfit at four times the price. It includes a Camera with a fine Lens and a Finder; Folding Tripod; Carrying Satchel, with Shoulder Straps: Package of Plates; materials for making a ruby lamp, and all the necessary chemicals for developing and printing. We send with each a 32-page Instruction Book, the best of its kind published.

We can especially recommend this Outfit as most desirable for an amateur. It is light, strong, compact, easy of comprehension, and readily manipulated.

The best low-priced Outfit offered. Do not confound the two Cameras we ofter with worthless "Pin-hole" Cameras.

The effectiveness of an outfit really depends upon the lens. We guarantee the work done with either of ours will prove their excel-We have seen pictures taken with our Camera No. 2 onlarged to 10 x 12 inches. The result was equal to the best work of a fifty-dollar Dahlmeyer lens.

Send us four cents in postage stamps for a Sample Photograph taken with this Camera and Leus.

Price, $2.25. Sent by Express, charges to be paid by the receiver.

Outfit No. 3 SNAP-SHOT" CAMERA

"TO CATCH THE POSTER, YOU TOUCH THE TRIGGER"

Given as a Premium or a Club of th Yearly Subscribers at $1.00 each ; or, for 7 Subscribers and $2.00 addiffusal. Price, $5.00. Scat only by Express, charges to be paid by the

This is a Magazine Camera for either Instantaneous or Time Exposure work It is not a toy, but a low-priced, penctiral, everyday, Snap-Shot Camera. It is an instrument capable of doing the best kind of work, simple enough to be understood, and successfully operated by any one. It is 6 inches square, 314 Inches deep, covered with imitation Seal, nickeled handle and trimmings. With each Camera we send a Complete Outfit, comprising Dey Plates, Chemicals, and Dark Room

Price, $6.00. Scot by Express, charges to be paid by the receiver.

SANS SOUCI" HAMMOCK No. 2

Given as a Premium for a Club of 4 Yearly Subscribers at $1.00 each ; or, for 2 Subscribers and 50 cents additional. Price, $1.15. Hent by Express, charges to be paid by the receiver, whether purchased or secured as a Premium.

This is our new Hammock, and we find it to be preferable to the one we formerly used. The Weave is new and better. The Stripes, running length wise, not only add strength to the bed of the Hammock but, being tinged with Colored Yarn, give the Hammock a very attractive appearance. The end cords are strong and attached to the bed by a peculiar method, which gives additional strength. It is larger-extreme length, 11 feet; bed measures 76 x 38 inches. It is much superior to, and more comfortable than, the old Mexican Hammock; it is very elastic, and conforms to every motion of the body, and will not pull builtons from the clothing.

Price, $1.15. Sent by Express, charges to be paid by the receiver.

"SANS SOUCI" HAMMOCK No. 4

We have a larger size than the above. Same Hammock in all respects but size. Extreme length, 13 feet. Bed measures 96 x 68 This we send as a Premium for a Club of 9 Yearly Subscribers at $1.00 each; or, for 5 Subscribers and $1.00 additional.

Price, $1.70. Sent by Express, charges to be paid by the receiver, whether purchased or secured as a Premium.

THE HAMMOCK-CHAIR

Given as a Premium for a Club of 2 Yearly Subscribers at $1.60 each. Postage and packing, 20 cents extra. Price, 70 centr, postpaid.

This Hammock-Chair combines the features of a Hammock and of a Swing. As we send it out, it is complete and in perfect readiness for hanging up. Ropes, hooks and slips are sent with it. It can be packed in a very small and compact bundle, and is just the thing in which to spend a hot summer's afternoon on a cool porch, or under a shady tree. Price, 50 cents. Postage and packing, 20 cents extra.

BREECH-LOADING SPRING GUN

Given as a Premium for a Club of 3 Yearly Subscribers, and 10 cents additional. Price, $1.30. Forwarding charges, 70 cents extra, whether secured as a Premium or purchased.

Chesp ammunition, no report, no explosion. This gun is as sufe to its owner as it is possible for a gun to be. Steel barrels, sighted front and back. Maple cross-bar bolled to a poplar stock. The springs are made of the best English oil-tempered steel.

The ammunition is placed in the barrel from the breech, so there is no liability of bruised fingers or the loss of an eve consequent upon a premature discharge. Will kill any small game.

Price, $1.80, forwarding charges prepaid.

THREE-DRAW, 12-LINE ACHROMATIC TELESCOPE

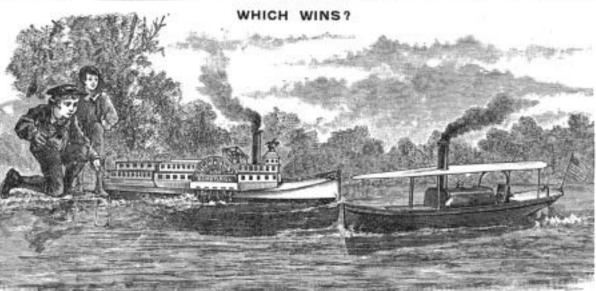

Given as a Premium for a Club of 7 Yearly Subteribers at $1.00 each; or, for 3 Subscribers and $1.00 additional. Price, $2.50. Postage and packing, 15 cents extra, whether purchased or se eured as a Premium.

In describing many Telescopes offered for sale, the term "Achromatic" is very freely used in reference to glasses which have but two plain lenses-one at each end. The instrument we offer is fitted with an Achromatic lens, and is guaranteed to be perfect and satisfactory in every respect. It has four lenses of a high grade of excellence. Our cut (for want of space) represents it as nearly closed. It is a 3-Draw Telescope, and its actual length when open is 16 inches; closed, 6 inches; diameter, 1% inches. The tubes are of brass, lacquered and polished, and the body is covered with French moroeco. It has strong brass caps, which protect the lenses when not in use, Each instrument is packed in a neat, strong and well-fitting carrying case.

Objects seen through this glass will appear clear and well-defined, and we warrant every one we send out to give the utmost satisfaction.

It is a most handy companion for a stay at the seashore, or a trip on the water or to the mountains. Price, $2.65, postpaid.

These boys are trying to decide this question to their mutual satisfaction, and are using two of the most popular of all the Premiums we have ever offered the boys. In the larger of the boats the graceful form of the well-known Side-Wheel Steamer has been adopted, and great pains have been taken to retain the proper proportions of all the parts, and at the same time to construct a Boat which will not only work properly, but will present a fine appearance when steaming in a tank of water or on a still pond. Measures from stem to stern, 12 inches; 356 inches beam; 5 inches high; runs one-half hour at each firing. Every Steamer is thoroughly tested and fully warranted.

We will give the Side-Wheel Steamboat as a Premium for a Club of 7 Yearly Schweribers at $1.00 each; or, for 5 Subscribers and 50 ecuts additional; or, for 5 Subscribers and $1.00 additional. Price, $7.00. Send 50 ecuts extra to prepay postage and packing, whether you secure it as a Premium or a purchase; or, we will send it by Express, the receiver to pay the charges.

The other liest is a Screw Propellier 11 inches long, and is a perfect model of a small Steam Launch. It has sharp bows and is a fast saller. The boiler is brees and is perfectly safe. It is handsomely painted and covered with an ornamental canvas awaing This Servic-Boat we send, postpaid, as a Premium for a Club of 5 Yearly Subscribers at $1.00 each; or, for 5 Subscribers and 10 cents additional. Price, $1.50, postpaid. Provided with these boats, two boys can have no end of fun. All sorts of races and trials of speed can be arranged for Saturday after They can be used as "Mail Steamers." Notes can be sent across the pend and the boat turned around on the other side for a return trip with the answer. The possibilities for sport, which will suggest themselves to any live boy, are unlimited.

TO ALL CORRESPONDENTS:—Any question from our readers of help or interest in nomen will be thereigning asservered in this Department. But write gener questions plaining and briefly. Do not use any innecessary scords. The right to stanger or reject any question is received by the Estiler, distances counted to promise for any special issue. They will be given as quickin after receipt as possible. All correspondence should be accompanied by Juli must and additions, not for publication, but for rejectance.

ELIZA-" Six and four are ten," is correct.

ANY-"Beauty Sleep" is the sleep that one gets before midnight.

ANNA-The fifth workling anniversary is called the "wooden wedding."

MARGE-The organoment ring is worn upon the third flurer of the left hand.

M.—"Chiffons" is a French word, the literal trans-lation of which is "rags."

Canonank-Chirago has an area of one handred and seventy-four square miles.

J. C. B.—The length of the Presidential term in Finner is nominally seven years.

MIRLAN-North and South Dakota were admitted into the Union in November, 1981.

GRACK-Yellowstone Park is a Government reserva-tion, and comprises 5578 square unites.

M. S. D.—In writing to the scomman principal of a college, address her se "My Dear Madass."

Lana - The next Presidential election will take place on Tuesday, November 8th, of this year.

West Lineary - What to wear at an evening wed-ding depends entirely upon your circumstances. LITTLE MOTHER—A porcelain-lined kettle, broad and not very deep, is the best for a preserving kettle.

Do L.—"Man proposes and God disposes" you will find in Thomas A' Kempis's "Imitation of Christ."

JOSTINAL READER - Cogains is prenounced as though spelled ko-ka-in, with the accent on the first syllable.

WARRICK - Bayal Worrester chitch has been so called since 178; the title but, of course, a commercial value,

A. A.—The Paris Expedition of 1899 was held in com-memoration of the estatemial of the French revolu-tion.

Crimors—Mrs. Bussell B. Harrison is vice-president at-large of the Board of Lady Managers of the World's Fair.

Sally-Inst De Castro, second wife of Pedro, prince, and afterward king of Portugal, was crowned to ber god a coffin.

L. Mr. W.—The cereus of 1800 gives New York city a population of L412,501; Chicago, L00,144; Philadelphia, 190,242.

MATTIK-There is no provision in the Constitution respecting the observance, or non-observance, of legal holidays.

S. E. P.—Gentlemen usually prefer to wear gloves while dancing; there is no fixed rule upon this point, BERKAYED ONE -We think that you may with perfect propriety retain the westing gifts which have been sent you.

Darsy — Women are as eligible to appointments under the civil service rules of the United States Government agreement.

S. A. S.—When making a call you should leave one of your own and two of your husband's visiting rards, one of his being for the hely, and the other for the gentle-sman of the house.

ENTERPRISE tieneral Sheridan married Miss Buck or, daughter of tieneral Duniel E. Bucker, of the United States Army.

ANXIOUS RELOCE-The copyright law secures settors, or their assigns, the exclusive right to ira late or dramatize their own works.

I Squares.—The Rev. Samuel Francis Smith, D. D., is the author of the famous hysis, "America." Mr. Smith resides at Newton Centre, Mass.

NANESETTE Bobert Louis Stevenson, the author of the story, "Dr. Jekyl and Mr. Hyde," is authority for the statement that Jekyl is pronounced "Jeckill."

K. B. – The sender of a book through the mail may write an inscription or name upon the little page, and still class the package as "transient" mail matter.

M. S.—The Liberty Cap was first used as a device by se Phrygian conquerors of Asia Minor, who adopted it distinguish themselves from the people whom they Bosoca All communications regarding prospects should be addressed to the Department of State, Washington, B. C. The fee is one dollar. A paraport is good only for two years.

H. E. R. Authorities differ as to whether the knife and fork should be held in the band, or laid upon one side of the plate, when it is passed for a second helping. We incline to the latter rule.

Calouse Mourning is usually worn about six months for a bruther or deter; patrents wear mourning for their children as long as they pirese. A widow should wear mourning for at least two years.

Research — If you always address the gentleman by his thristian mame there can be so impropriety is your writing to him as "My Dear Fred." but we should ad-vise you to begin your note "My Dear Mr. —."

Ellia Baring Brothers & Cu., London, England, did not fail. All their creditors were paid promptly. A syndicals, headed by the Basis of England, advanced upon the collateral of the firm all the money needed.

N. P. M. The superstition regarding "thirteen at the" is said to have had its origin from the Last Suppor-t the Saviour, at which that number sat down. This speciation is not so general in America as it is in En-ces. L. A. H.-The Post Office Department has no way of knowing how many colored persons are employ the expactly of letter-carriers, as in the selection for appearaments no distinction is made on account of EPOKUATER—"Mrs. Partington" was II. P. Shilla-ber, a printer and an editor, who may born in Ports-month, New Hampshire, in 1811, and died in Undest, Macaschusetts, in 180. He did most of his humorous work for the "Boston Post," Myru There really was a person named "Calamit Jane;" her mine was Jano Sieers. She carried not lary despatches for General Coster in the Big Hor country, wearing seen's colobes and fearing nothing After Custer was killed she went to the Black Hills.

LAYETTE. We should advise you to usk your old friends the store of their sudden change of manner bound you and your brother; perhaps some slight misunderstanding may be the cases of the treath. Plain cooks, plainly spoken, can never do any harm.

FLORENCE, "The United States government may pre-vent an extraction use of perision money in any case by retaining a sufficient amount, until in their opinion the danger of waste has passed; any bulance due a pen-sioner at the time of his death will be paid to his heirs.

ANNA L.—To "name a club after some virtue and then five up to ft," was natives we more read somewhere. Take, for example, the "Progressive Fint," "The Straightfuruard (Juh." "The Hossi Will Club." "The Proce Club," "The Merry Club," "The Harmoniess Club."

E. A. H.—The dellar of 860 is the most war und the most valuable of all United States cares. This is said to be owing to the fact that a vessel having on barried abunct he sather mintage of ions was now. It is not disast there are not more than while of three dellars

Retrie—At a leap-year party the girls are supposed to wait upon the men, ask them to dance, fan them, take them down to supper, etc. The mon should behave as nearly as possible as girls do in ordinary years. A party of this sert may be very supprable if the girls behave prettily, naturally and modesity.

Mas. L. E. C.—The sympathy felt in the United States for Russia must, in a given measure, be attributed to the attitude of the Russian tore removate ward the North charing the Civil War. Bussia was strongly in favor of the North, and openip expressed its sympathy. If was the only European power to do so.

Mus. L. W.—Washington was burn in 1782, before the colonies had adopted the directors calendar. In 1712, when the calendar was adopted by Great Britain and her colonies, eleven days was added to the dute of Washington's hirthday, and February 18th became February 2M, which is "the day we celebrate."

S. G.—Strawberries that are served unbuiled may be taken in the fingers separately and dubrilly, and dipped in poordered sugar before being conveyed to the month; hulled strawberries are enter with a spoon. The flexion of eating oranges at present is to cut them in half across the grain, and eat the juice and fine pulp with an orange space.

BKKKKK, ey-Cards announcing a baby's birth are of plain white cardboard, and in size about two and three-rightts by three and one-sixteenth inches. Engraved upon them in time script is the haby's, name, the dute of its birth, and sometimes its weight. These tiny cards are cardesed with the cards of both parents, in a plain white envelope, and sent by mail to the friends of both families.

Vassar Girat.—The term "Bise Stocking" was oracle nally used in Venice about the year 130, to designate literary classes by colors. In Mills "Biseasy of Chicalry," we are told that members of the various academies were distinguished by the color of their stockings, thus being the prevailing color. The application of the term to women originated in Miss Hannah Moste's description of a "Bine Stocking Club" in her "Bas Bieu."

B. B. H. —The belief that the upd is unlocky is escentially modern. In ancient times this stone, precessing as it does, the colors of all the precious stones, was supposed to possess all their virtues. One verse of an old thyme runs:

October's child is born for moe And life's necessities must know; But lay an opal on her breast And hope will hill those wors to rest."

READER—The question of productation is always a subject for discussion, and we cannot enter into anything of that seet. We answer our correspondents actually to the best of our ability, always referring to the most reliable text banks for authority, and always referring to the most reliable text banks for authority, and always referring to the correct. We cannot count ourseives in error because our promunctation of certain words does not agree with yours; authorities differ as well as individuals.

Lineary — A lady should precede a gentleman going lule a house, and follow him to going out; she should follow him into a church or theather, so that he may reach the sent and see that it is ready for her. As he reaches the sent he should stand aside and allow her to precede him. When with a resum a man always plares himself where he can best protect and serve her; and as he can greenally care for her better when she precedes him, she is usually given precedence.

Senior Valley - Cards for an afternoon tes should be of plain white enrilloard, a little larger in size than a laties' visiting card. Engraved upon them, in whatever script may be fachionable, should be the name, as for instance:

Singer: Mass. Resurnatio Wheth.
Weshnesday, March sixth.
From five until several closek. 212 Forth Avisson.
The billings are usually closed and the lamps lighted at affernoon ies.

Exer On a son.—It is not altogether good form to ring a dismer bell at all; the maid usually amnounces dismer by saying to the mistrees, "dinner is served." Of course, if the custom of the bouse is to ring a bell, it had better be done at the appointed time, even though it may savor a little of rudessees to any visitors who may be present. Pensible people will appreciate the fact that in well-regulated families much are served at stated hours, and will not be amonged; and people who are not sensible are never satisfied about any thing, so they need not be considered in this connection.

(According to many Time denote by New York come.)

not be considered in this connection.

Constrant Randon.—The church in New York papellarly known as "The Littlet thurch Around the Cornet," is not Twenty shifth Street, each of Fifth A venue. Its real name is the Church of the Transliguration. It is said that on the death of a prominent arter in New York much embarrassment was ransed by the refusal of the paster of a certain church to the admission of the remains to his church, where is was proposed to held the flueral services. His refusal was said to have been supplemented with the information that there was a "Hither church around the resence where this thing might be done," Since that time the "little church," has become dear to the theatrical profession, and in it most of the services of the profession are held.

of the services of the profession are heat.

Wasywansum. Dr. Tulmage belongs to the Preshyberian Church. 12: A devision of Judge Sanyer in the United States Circuit Court of Culifornia prevents the Chinese from being multralized. The naturalization has reads; "The previsions of this title shall apply to allows heing free unite persons, and to allers of African sullvity and to persons of African desevent." Judge Sawyer held that a Chicaman was neither a free white person nor of African analyty nor deserted, and his decision has been uplaced. (2) According to the law person to a African analyty nor deserted, and his decision has been uplaced. (3) According to the law person to a transition of Congress, and approved by Preddeut Arthurin test, and amended in 1884, Chinese laborers were forbidden to come to the United States for a period of ten years, or until May, 1884.

MANY CORRESPONDENTS. We have been flooded with letters optimizally from stamp collectors) with reference to the reduction of a million canceled pos-tage stamps. But we have not, as yet, found the place age stamps, but we have not, as yet, found the place where a large-samed memory will be given for them. Asia New York collector writes that he will pay five defines to one bundeed thousand of them; but unless he will advertise in the Joc ex at we cannot undertake in pub-lish his mame, nor to send it to the many people who seem to be useding valuable time in the collection of a million canceled stamps. We have refuctantly contri-to the conclusion that we must know the stamp que-tion for the future, unless it shall happen that some valuable information shall come to us, in which case we shall most rectainly communicate it to our corres-pondents.

Access—The meal served at a morning or an after-ment worlding is usually called a welding berukfast. (2) realists, less, calles, crajurelys, first sepain, bened inriver, fruits, jedles, salted almonde and ben-bens, with coffee and wines, if desired, may be served. Welding almosticement cards are sent out after the welding into internet cards are sent out after the welding to the friends of the families of both hide-and groom; with the amouncement rards are usually crackes of "at-home" cards. As styles in the matter of hiritations, cards, etc., are correlately changing. It is well in consult a reliable stationer upon the subject. (2) It is always endomary for the groom to give the bride a welding present; it usually consists of something whether the consuments of the welding day. It The illustrates a subject to the welling day. It The illustrates a subject to the constraint of the subject the custom of leaving a visition grow where the control of leaving a visition grow the last was where the custom of leaving a visition group cross whom where the custom of leaving a visition grow to the first well as at bane constraint, but the raise of direct for the tasks as the constraint of the called serve as a silent remarker of some rule, and that was are no leaver in death for a cult to that brows. It we extend to the chara-tion every effort doubt be made to appertunct to char-arity of the running man who may be examined to char-led the character of the brance. If might be well in writes to the energymon of the character in meth a wheet would be sure to meet with a prompt and each statement would be sure to meet with a prompt and each statement would be sure to meet with a prompt and each statement.

Mothers take more pride in the garments of the baby than in those of any other member of the household; dresses of sheer India linen, soft flannels, dainty woolen socks, cashmere shawls, afghans in bright colors, all are the most expensive that the family purse can afford. It is not necessary that they should be renewed frequently, as almost the only wear is in the Ordinary soaps and washing powders should never be used; they will weaken the fibre of light materials, causing them to tear easily or to wear

Professor Cornwall, of Princeton, says of the Ivory Soap: "It will not injure the most delicate fabrics."

COPYRIGHT 1890, BY THE PROCTER & GAMBLE CO.

Canada is famous for its excellent educational standards.

HELLMUTH

LONDON, ONTARIO, CANADA.

Young Ladies and Girls. Pall Academia Course, Conservatory of Music, School of Art, Elocation, etc., Reportful House, Educares, Passenger elevator, Elding School, On through route between East and West-dirach Trunk, Canadian Pacific and Michigan Central Rallways. Students from 25 Provinces and States. For illustrated catalogue, address Rev. E. N. ENGLISH, M. A., Principal,

Well-Attested Merit

Mrs. Henry Ward Beecher writes:

"Historican, N. V., Primary H. 1800.
"I have used Allamen's Point's Planting the 1800. years for myself and family, and, as far as able, for the many sufferers who come to us for mediatorical and have many sufferers who come to us for notistance, and have found them a grounde relief for most of the aches and paths which flock is heir to. I have used ALLCOVES POROUS PLASTERS for all kinds of lameness and acute pain, and by frequent experiments fluid that they can control many cases not noticed in your circulars. "The above is the only testimony I have ever given in flavor of any plaster, and if my name has been used to recommend any other it is without my authority or sanction."

Russell Sage, the well-known financier, writes:

writes:

"New Yong Cryv, December 20, 1890.

"For the last twenty years I have been using Arrange's Ponor's Placetens. They have repeatedly cured me of rheamatic pairs and pains in my side and back, and, whenever I have a cold, one on my back specific reflect me.

"My family are never without them."

Marion Harland, on page 103 of her popular work, "Common Sense for Maid, Wife and Mother," says:

ror the acting back Alacouse's Ponor's Playeren is an excellent comforter, combining the semanton of the sustained presenter of a strong, warm hand with evenin tonic qualities developed in the wearing. It should be kept over the sent of the incresions for several days in obstinate cases, for perhaps a fort-night." "For the aching back Altrock's Ponors Plaster

The Rev. Mark Guy Pearse writes:

"BEDFORD PLACE, RUSSELL SQUARE.
"LANDON, December 10, 1888.
"I think it only right that I should tell you of how much use I find ALLOUGE'S Point'S PLASTERS in my family and amongst those to whom I have recommended them. I find them a very breasuplate against cold and coughs."

W. J. Arkell, publisher of Judge and Founk Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper, writes:

"Trace Remeater Assistance, whiles;

"Out Figure Ave. and Sixterextus Sterest,

"New York, January Is, 18st.

"About three weeks since, while suffering from a severe cold which had settled on my chest, I applied an Attorice's Ponous Practice, and in a short time obtained relief.

"In my opinion, these photors should be in every household, for use in case of coughs, coids, sprains, bruises or pains of any kind. I know that in my case the results have been entirely satisfactory and beneficial."

Hon. James W. Husted says:

"When suffering from a severe cough, which threat-ened polinousry difficulties, which I was recommended to go to Florida to refleve. I determined to test ALL-one's Promos Processes. I applied them to my closes and between the shoulder-blades, and in less than a fortnight was entirely cared.

Henry A. Mott, Jr., Ph. D., F. C. S., late Government chemist, certifies:

"My investigation of Allerenc's Ponors Plaseres, shows it to contain variable and essential ingredients not found in any other plaster, and I find it superior to and more efficient than any other plaster."

The Saving and Sensible Architectural Bureau 307-312 Arcade, A. Cleveland, Ohio

Digitized by Google

85.50

1892, Book No. 2 NOW READY Offering

$3,000 in Prizes for Needlework. For sale by small ware dealers, or sent by mail upon receiptof to ets. by

THE BARBOUR BROTHERS COMPANY

218 Church St., New York.
67 Lincoin St., Boston.
108 and 110 Franklin St., Chicago.
ashington Ave., St. Louis.
617 and 619 Market St., San Francisco.

Three-cord 200-yard spools for Lace Making, Linen Ball Thread for Knitting and Crocheting, Linen Floss (all colors and sizes) for Embroidery.

ASK FOR BARBOUR'S

CARDS

- MAGIC -CORN SALVE

Price, 15 and 25c.

Credenda Bicycles, $90 $ A high grade machine at a popular price. A. G. SPALDING & BROS. NEW YORK, CHICASO, PHIL'A. Catalogue Free, FRED PEATS Wall Paper and you his guide "How To PAPER"

Address 136-138 W. Madison St., CHICAGO, ILL

MASID DITECTION CO., SEL Breadway, New York.

SELF. Sent to may part of Basylon. UNITED STATES the Grang POR | CENTS

SATISFACTION GUARANTEED.

SUN STANFING CO., 408 P Street, KALAMAZOO, MICH.

Thickens the growth and restores the youthful color to Gray Hair. Prevents Baldness, cures Dandruff, Humors, and all Scalp Diseases. A fine hair dressing.

~~~~~~

Buckingham's Dye for the Whiskers

The most complete Brown or Black Dye ever discovered. The gentlemen's favorite.

R. P. HALL & Co., Proprietors, Nashua, N.H. Sold by all Druggists.

The man who makes this soap knows SKIN and what it needs to keep it at its best. He is a dermatologist, and has the largest institute in the world. It all began from a cake of soap-a beautifying soap that does what it says. maker of this soap has been treating skin diseases for twenty years, and knows what he is about.

The first thing this soap does is to purify the skin by getting rid of all imperfections. It next acts like a tonic, and a fine, firm, smooth complexion, with the glow of health, is soon apparent.

For washing the hair and scalp, and for shaving, this is the best soap to be had. It is a toilet soap, for all bathing purposes the best in the world, and costs 50 cents a cake.

> A book on beauty and dermatology, with special chapters on facial development, treatment of the eyebrows and lashes, red noses, wrinkles, and all skin and scalp imperfections, with a sample cake of Woodbury's Facial Soap, sent sealed for 10 cents. This book should be on every dressing table.

JOHN H. WOODBURY, Dermatological Institute 125 West 42d Street, New York City

Consultation free at office or by letter

Dress Reform

SPRING GOODS REDUCED IN PRICE.

Sanitary Balbriggan, Sanitary Liste Thread, Sanitary MERINO, SILK and Sanitary Balbriggan, Silk and Costonere mixed For SPRING and | The ONLY Sanitary Underwear, and SUMMER WEAR. | Endorsed by the leading medical profession.

Send for new Catalogue, Samples, and revised Price List. If your dealer can-not supply them, they can be obtained of the manufacturers.

DON'T BE DECEIVED. See that each garment is stamped with our Trade Mark -

"Ypsilanti Health Underwear." HAY & TODD MFG. CO., Ypsilanti, Mich.

4c. A DAY PER ROOM HEAT YOUR HOUSE WILL Either with HOT WATER or STEAM as preferred.

are building a New Home, or want to make the old one Comsort-will pay you FURMAN BOILER and System of Heating stignto Of it. FURMAN BOILER 150 page 11.tternavisib to on House Heating and Ventilation sent free. Address. HERENDEEN MFG. CO., 10 CLARK STREET, GENEVA, N. Y.

See Name "EVER READY" on Back of Each Stay.

Ontin Percha on bath sides of steel. Warranted water-proof. Reware of Imitations. Manufactured by the YPSILANTI DRESS STAY MFG. CO., Ypsilanti, Mich.

To open a Tallet. Partner at Imme, wholen was not direction, and observations for the distance and observation of the distance and the control interests the Agenta, the desired were to no over washerin New Art. FACE WASSAGE. The term of WASSAGES, the grander, original (French) preparation to the miner. Registered and posterior to U.S. and ferring in Partician system. Do effect to marvelous. President and chronic process. Indianars will be presented.

Sale Proprietors, SYLVAN TOILET CO., Pt. Haron, Mich.

3.000 JOB LOT BICYCLES And lowest precess on all 92 makes a 22 bd. Ang pagescate. We self-every where, to done half $60 in $1.7 loop of the half $1.5 loop of the $1.7 loop of the $1.

YOUR NAME OR

A CENT SENT BENT.

81000 PIANO or 8300 ORGAN FREE

CROWN PIANOS & ORGANS. GEO.P. BENT. MFR. CHICAGOILL

WALL PAPER for 100 the samples.

Bender, canogic for a harder come. Large samples.

paner has sere See. Address R. W. F. On, 181-7 W. 6th. Chestaurit.0.

WRINKLES I With Almond Not Cream, the Common of the Common

LEAVES A DELICATE AND LASTING ODOR. An Ideal Complexion Soap

Porsaichy all Drug and Fancy Goods Denices, or if unable to procure this Wonderful Soap send 25 cents to stamps and receive a cake by return mail.

JAS. S. KIRK & CO., Chicago SPEC(AL, Shardon Bells Waltz (the popular society Waltz) sent. FR EE to anyone sending us three wrappers of Shandon Bells Soap.

MME. CELIA CONKLIN'S CURLING CREAM

Prion 50 cents.

Enclose 2-cent slamp for fine card case to P. B. Reys. 25 State St. Chicago, 111.

· 製品質用養用養用養用養用養料要用

and you can secure some of the best of the inside of it for $40 down; ten dollars a month afterwards. Send for "Pullman; With a Moral "; free,

J. H. VanVLISSINGEN & BRO., Chicago, Ill.

PECK & SNYDER, 126 Nassau Street, N. Y.

RIPPLES, Ladies and girla or ozercine, buy a Fairy Triest foot of BICYCLES. Address Bickens for all. FAY MFG. CO., Elysla, OHIO.

THE "GEM" NELLY STAMP 25 Eagle Stamp Works, New Haven, Conn.

$1000 PRIZES COMPETETION No. 1.
FOR Price neuroid to HARLEY DEENE, for COMPETETION TO A great story in every respect.

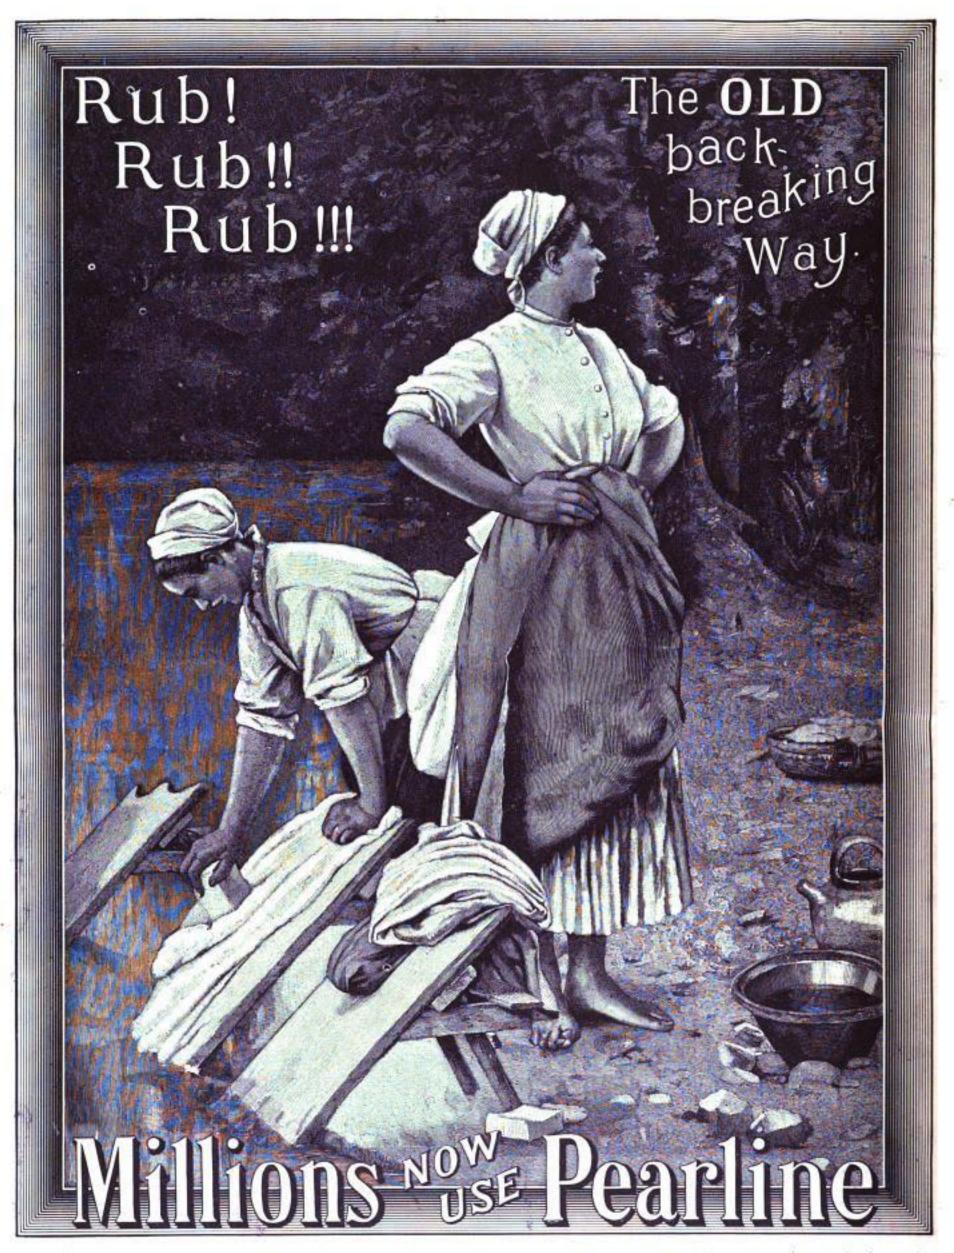

A great story in every respect.

AMERICAN Intil September 90th, 1992.

AMERICAN Far rules and conditions NOVELS Apply to LAND, & Ext., Publishers, Chicago, 311.

A SALE OF BABY CARRIAGES Prom. Factory to Consumer.

Delivered Free of Charge in the U.S.
Prices and technic the board. Descriptive cataloner PRES. CHAS. RAISKR, Mr., et al. Character Ave., Chilango, Lil.

Why?

Ask some of the millions who use it. They'll tell you that with Pearline you can do the washing and cleaning with little or none of the rub! rub!!!—so necessary in "the old way," and so productive of that "tired feeling." They'll tell you they have used it for years—have found it always the same—always absolutely harmless—have failed to find anything to compare with it for easy, quick and satisfactory work. Just think of the saving at every point by avoiding this rubbing. Your most delicate laces and linens are washed without being torn to pieces, and wherever soap has been used, you'll find Pearline better in every way. A luxury in the bath. Hundreds of millions of packages used, and the consumption increasing; what better proof can we offer—only one: Get a package (every grocer has it) and try it according to the directions; without soap—without rubbing—with no help save clean water (hard or soft, hot or cold, it matters not) and you'll be convinced. You'll use Pearline until something better is discovered; there's nothing now known to equal it.

Beware of the imitations which peddlers and some unscrupulous grocers claim to be the "same as" or "as good as"

Pearline they are not.

Pearline is manufactured only by James Pyle, New York.

THE LADIES' HOME JOURNAL

ONE DOLLAR A YEAR

PHILADELPHIA, AUGUST, 1892

TEN CENTS A COPY

CASH OLL

|                                                                             |        | LONG THE STATE OF | 9         | PAGE |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------|--------|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----------|------|
| In August-Poem                                                              | 23000  | . May Lennox                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                  | 0         | Cove |
| A Live Ember PARTS I-III                                                    |        | . Julia Magruder                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                              |           | 1    |
| Love Over All-Poem                                                          | 444    | . Mary Ainge De Vere                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                          | 1.4       | 3    |
| Unknown Wives of Well-knownXX-MRS. WILLIAM M. EVARTS .With Potrait: | Men    | . Lilian Wright                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                               |           |      |
| In Hidden Ways-Poem                                                         | 11.4   | . C. H. Crandall                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                              |           | 3    |
| Literary Women in Their Homes II—MARY ELEANOR WILKINS                       |        | . Kate Upson Clark .                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                          |           |      |
| How We Entertained the Editor                                               | andi.  | Ella Higginson                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                | 1 4       | 4    |
| Are Women All Alike?                                                        | -      | Junius Henri Browne                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                           | iDone | 4    |
| Flowers in London Windows                                                   | 450    | . Rose Wilder                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                 |           | 4    |
| An Every-day Girl-PART III                                                  |        | . Sarah Orne Jewett                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                           |           | 5    |
| How Time Is Regulated                                                       | -1101  | . Clifford Howard                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                             |           | 6    |
|                                                                             |        | . Belle C. Greene                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                             |           | 7    |
|                                                                             | - 1    | . Virginia Robie                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                              |           | 8    |
| Women Behind the Counter                                                    | OHOC   | . Ida Van Etten                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                               | 100       | 8    |
| Mr. Beecher as I Knew Him-Co                                                | nclusi | on Mrs. Henry Ward Bee                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                        | cher      | 9    |
| Life at a Convent School                                                    |        | . Ethel Ingalls                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                               | 1. 1      | 10   |
| The Brownies Through the Year-                                              | -XI    | . Palmer Cox                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                  | • •       | 11   |

TOEPARTMENTS

|   | DELAKTMENTS                                     |    |
|---|-------------------------------------------------|----|
|   | At Home with the Editor                         | 12 |
|   | Across a Crystal Path T. De Witt Talmage, D. D. | 13 |
|   | The King's Daughters                            | 14 |
|   | From a New Inkstand Robert J. Burdette          | 15 |
|   | Side Talks with Girls                           | 16 |
|   | Side Talks with Boys Foster Coates              | 17 |
|   | Art for Art Workers                             | 18 |
|   | Knitting and Crocheting                         | 19 |
|   | Hints on Home Dressmaking Emma M. Hooper        | 20 |
|   | Seashore and Mountain Frocks                    | 21 |
|   | The Small Belongings of Dress Isabel A. Mallon  | 22 |
|   | The Complexion and Its Care                     | 23 |
| ı | Just Among Ourselves                            | 24 |
|   | Everything About the House Maria Parloa         | 25 |
|   | Mothers' Corner Elisabeth Robinson Scovil       | 26 |
|   | To Sterilize Milk at Home Kenyon West           | 26 |
|   | All About Flowers                               | 27 |
|   |                                                 | 28 |
|   |                                                 |    |

IN AUGUST

THE echo of a whispered word,
A fleeting cadence low and sweet,
Fresh as the songs the streams repeat,
Faint as the croon of nesting bird.

A deeper azure in the sky, Fields gleaming gay with green and gold, Closed wings that droning half unfold, As summer passes slowly by.

A breath of sadness scarcely caught, A minor note to swell the strain, A blossom bowed by falling rain, Gold strands with silver subtly wrought.

O, rare unfathomed August days, Rich with the glories of the past, What will you bring us forth at last? What lurks beneath your hovering haze?

MAY LENNOX.

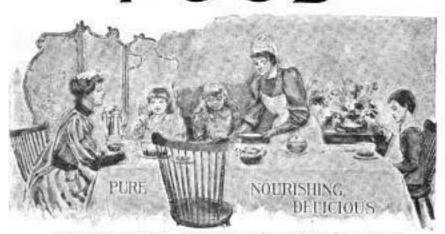

· (VRTIS · PUBLISHING · (OMPANY · PHILADELPHIA

"SUPERIOR NUTRITION-THE LIFE"

TUNES TO THE THE CONTRACTOR TO THE CONTRACTOR TO

THE CREAT MEDICINAL

BRINGS HEALTH AND HAPPINESS TO THE HOME

THIS WORLD RENOWNED DIETETIC PREPARATION is a solid extract derived from most superior growths of wheat—nothing more.

It combines the greatest quantity of nourishment with the least amount of labor necessary for its digestion and stands to-day unrivalled in the room of the sick or convalescent.

PURE. SOOTHING AND STRENGTHENING, its value in fevers, in inantition, and in all gastric and enterio diseases—especially in Cholera-Infantum, Cholera-Morbus, Diarrhoea and Dysentery has been incontestably proven;—OFTEN BEINGTHE ONLY FOOD the stomach will tolerate WHIN LIPE SEEMS DEPENDING ON ITS RETENTION.

ALWAYS UNIPORM AND RELIABLE, it is the safest POOD for Nursing Mothers. Infants and Children; an incomparable aliment for dyspeptio, delicate, infirm and aged persons; a most delicious and wholesome article of diet for the strong as well as the weak.

UNIVERSALLY RECOMMENDED by physicians, pharmacists, the public and the press, its sales and popularity are constantly increasing; and IT WILL HAVE SATISPACTORY RESULTS in nutrition PAR INTO THE PUTURE because it is based on MERIT and proven SUCCESS IN THE PAST.

SOLD BY DRUGGISTS.

JOHN CARLE & SONS, New York

BETTER THAN A SAVINGS BANK

HELBERG'S addition to GRIFFITH is the Cream of the Town. High and Dry Lots, wooded. Is 35 feet above the Calumet River. Good Well Water at a depth of 20 feet. These advantages make our lots desirable for residence purposes. RESIDENCE LOTS from $175 to $450

RESIDENCE LOTS from $175 to $450 BUSINESS LOTS from $450 to $800

Monthly Payments; discounts for cash. Terms and Plat sent free to anyone sending their address to

> GEO. H. HELBERG Room 6, 80 Dearborn Street, Chicago

Banking with National Bank of Illinois. $5.00 secures as option on any Lot unsold, with 30 days to negotiate for payment of purchase money. If you follow the Crows to GRIFFITH and buy our LOTS, you will MAKE MONEY.

CHICAGO GRIFFITH

Grand Trunk R. R. Main Line Chicago & Eric R. R. " " Michigan Central R. R. Branch The Elgin, Joliet and Eastern R. R. BELT LINE

The best of all, connecting with all roads into Chicago, and giving Griffith Chicago rates of freight to all points.

2 OIL PIPE LINES Furnishing the cheapest and best fuel for manufacturing purposes.

These advantages secure the Factories for Griffith:

No other point has both these advantages Griffith is in its infancy, but growing. Now is the time to invest.

As Factories locate, prices Rise, BUY NOW BEFORE THEY RISE. Rising prices make fortunes.

Make your own on the rise.

ANY LOT IS A BARGAIN NOW,

Don't Wait and Pay More.

Send a DEPOSIT OF $5 per lot and we will locate you on the best lots unsold at any price you specify; after you get plat or visit the property, you can exchange for any unsold lot within 30 days. Address, for further particulars,

GEO. H. HELBERG Room 6, 80 Dearborn Street, Chicago

THESE Summer winds leave their mark on beauty's face, and the hot weather makes a refreshing powder a necessary protection from sunburn and perspiration. Our grandmothers used Pozzoni's, and it has remained the standard powder ever since. For sale everywhere at 50 cts.

A BEAUTIFUL LITHOGRAPH

"MAMMA'S DARLINGS"

A STUDY OF BEAUTIFUL
CHILDREN'S FACES

will be presented FREE to all sending two a-cent stamps to pay for postage and mailing

Address J. A. POZZONI & CO., St. Louis, Mo.

TIRED OUT HOUSECLEANERS

Playing at house cleaning is tiresome, but real house cleaning is more so.

Gold Dust Washing Powder

does the work so well, and makes it so much easier, that half the terrors of house cleaning are removed by its use. 4 lb. package 25 cents. At your grocers. Try it.

N. K. FAIRBANK & CO., Sole Manufacturers, CHICAGO, ST. LOUIS, NEW YORK, PHILADELPHIA, BOSTON, BALTIMORE, NEW ORLEANS, SAN FRANCISCO, PORTLAND, ME., PORTLAND, ORE., PITTSBURGH AND MILWAUKEE.

One Pair of the

Lewis Celebrated Underwear

with the Lewis Tension Yoke;—Extrafashioned and Tailor-trimmed—will convince you of the superiority of this make over all others. It is the original Sanitary Underwear is Glove-Fitting and gives real comfort and satisfaction. It is the original Derby Ribbod Dress Reform Underwear and the only Underwear containing the Lewis Tension Yoke (patented), without which ribbed underwear is so unsatisfactory. Try one pair.

Sold by the representative trade everywhere. Fall weights now ready. Send for Illustrated Catalogue.

LEWIS KNITTING CO., Janesville, Wis.

THE LADIES' HOME JOURNAL

Vol. IX, No. 9

PHILADELPHIA, AUGUST, 1892

"Higher and sweeter and finer swell the violin notes"

A LIVE EMBER

By Julia Magruder

CHAPTER 1

was a dark November day. The rain was falling in a line, The rain was falling in a fine, cold mist from a dense sky, that showed, through the bare boughs up above, and far away, across the drenched and sodden autumn fields, an unbroken surface of hard, expressionless gray. The few detached leaves which still clung to the swirting branches had had all their colors washed out, and were disfigured by unsightly specks and blotches,

MISS MAGRUDER

They looked lonesome and apologetic, as if detained against their will, and aware that it would be more seemly if they gave up trying to draw life from the congealed fount of the tree trunk and went to join their myrind sisters, where they lay in great soaked and flattened masses on the cold, soft ground. The raw and chilling wind that tossed the tree branches made a dismal, pittless sound, and the scrap-ing of the little twigs against the window panes seemed almost to demand entrance for all this dreariness into the room where Kate Carew sat.

No dreariness or coldness existed here, as

No dreariness or coldness existed here, as No direntiness or coldness existed here, as far as the eye could see, at least. The floor was covered with a soft, rich-toned carpet, the windows and doors were draped with bright, warm hangings, the walls were hang with de-lightful pictures, and the furniture was quaint, old-fashioned, and altogether charming. Tempting-booking volumes, new and old, were liberally scattered about on the tables, with coesty writing materials, and rolls of new pretty writing materials, and rolls of new music and fresh magazines. A work basket, with skeins of gay silks in it, was set ready for immediate use and a dark-colored, fascinating-looking old violin had been taken from its case and laid on top of the books and papers on the table, its bow across it, with one end thrust among the bright silks in the basket. Over all these charming objects the flames of a bright wood fire flickered, and over still another object in harmony with them. A young girl was stretched at ease in a low, deep-padded chair, a gown of soft, rich texture clothing loosely her long body; her hands, escaping from frills of light, full-gathered lace, were thrown up above her lead and clasped on the chair's high back, and her slippered feet were stretched out to the blaze. Her face was lovely, but just now very sad. pretty writing materials, and rolls of new Her face was lovely, but just now very sad, with eyes as still and steady and absorbed as if they looked upon a vision, as in truth they did. And this was what they saw:

did. And this was what they saw:

A girl is standing before a slight music stand, with an open page upon it, a violin under her chin. Her right arm sways and bends with the how; and sweet and clear and thrilling rise and fall the notes, until the agitated throbbing of her heart sends the warm color bounding to her checks, and the dark eyes sparkle back of their deep fringes. A door opens and is closed again very softly. Some one silently draws near, a man in even-ing dress, who glides to the piano stool at the Some one silently draws near, a man in evening dress, who glides to the piano stool at the girl's elbow, and strikes some deep chords with which the violin song mingles as soul with soul. Higher and sweeter and finer swell the violin notes; deeper and richer and stronger sound the piano chords. The girl's rapt face grows pole with this keen, sweet feeling that is closing her in like an atmosphere, and her eyes are half blurred with tears. The strong hands striking the piano keys begin to tremble, the quick short breaths the man is breathing break in like whispered sobs upon the music. His hands fall from the keys, and, at the same moment, the hands holding the violin and how drop to the girl's sides; and, turning each toward each, their full eyes meet. For an instant they rest so, while the music dies away in faint reverberations; and then, slowly rising, as if in a trance, he draws the girlish form toward him, and their lips meet in a kiss.

A long moment, still and sweet and full, and then the discord of approaching steps is heard. They move apart, and the girl lifts berviolin and bow, while the man sits down and raises his hands to the keys. Fortunately, the two ladies who enter are talking too volubly to notice that it is confused discord and not harmony which they apologize for interrupt-to notice that it is confused discord and not harmony which they apologize for interrupt-ing. In the midst of the conversation which follows the young girl manages to escape to her own quiet room, where, all night long, she lies in waking or sleeping dreams of joy, which the morrow dims and shadows, and the days that come after put out in darkness. Such was the vision that Kate Carew saw in the fire as she sat alone in her pretty room while the gloton of the November day deep-ened outside. She had looked so often on that vision that it had become a sort of habit that vision that it had become a sort of habit of sight, and every quiet moment was fatally apt to end it up before her. She wanted much to banish it; she resolutely determined to banish it. It had been with this aim and object that she had returned to her old coun-try home with her grandparents, and reinsed to go abroad with her must, who had ander-taken the grandparents ber, now that she was old enough to go out into the world. was old enough to go out into the world, But, so far, it had refused to be banished, except for a while, when she could force her mind and hands to occupy themselves with present things. There had to be times allotted mind and hands to occupy themselves with present things. There had to be times allotted to rest and sleep, but these were often haunted hours. Many were the tens that had been shed in that silest room—many, many, many? She was eighteen years old, but she quite believed that life was cover for her as far, at heat, as joy in life was concerned. She had had one sip from the full cup; and when it had been santched from her, and shattered before her eyes, she never doubted that that was the very end. She had tried to be brave, had resolved to face the blank life before her firntly, and had said she could do without love. Her burt pride aerved her up to that, and generally it was support enough; but sometimes it failed her utterly, and this evening was one of those times. All day long she had been fighting the approach of a moosl she drender. Now she had censed to fight, and it was gaining on her hard. It was in obedience to this moosl that she had taken from its case the violin she had not touched since she had been back in Virginia, and had craefully tuned it; then she had laid it by, last frightened by the influence its mere soond and touch had had upon her, and had thrown berself back in her chair before the lire, and that oft-recurring vision had come to her again. There were times when she struggled hard to banish when she struggied hard to bandshit, but now she gave herself up to it absolutely, feigning to herself every sound and sight and touch that composed it, and ending by reaching out for the violin and drawing the bow across it in a long, low minor wail. That ended the struggle; the claim of the past had asserted itself. She rose to her feet and nested the little instrument made, her claim of which instrument under her chin, which dropped forward upon it familiarly. Then she began to play softly; the sight of a dear face rose before her; the sound of a dear voice was in her ears, blent with the violin's strains; the touch of lips was upon her mouth. Tears rose thick in her eyes and fell Tears rose thick in her eyes and fell non her cheeks as the violin wailed and plended. Faster and faster they came; her throat ached, and her breast rose and fell with stifled sols, until she could bear it no longer; and throwing the violin and bow upon the lounge near by she dropped on her knees and buried her face in a chair and fell to sobbing violently. The sound of her crying was piteous and lonely in the quiet room. Poor and lonely in the quiet room. Poor girl! The love she thirsted for second more impossible to do without than it ever had before. She tried to prny, but love was the only thing she could ardently ask for; and she begged God to give her that, and she begging for the life of some one dear. All the prayers she had said for patience and endurance and submission of her will seemed to her now but idle words, and her will seemed to her now but side words, and she begged God to deny her every other gift, and only to give her love, even if He took it away again; even if she had to suffer more than this to pay for it. Outside, the twitight had deepened into cold and gloomy right, and within, the fire had burned low, and the room grew dark and chilly. Worn out with her subbing, Kate sat upright on the rug, and became suddenly aware that some one was knocking at the ware that some one was knocking at the

"Is it you, Maria?" she said, clearing her throat and steadying her voice. Maria was the colored maid, a poor, ignorant creature who adored her. She came in now with almost noiseless steps and a cloud on her honest face. for her loving ear had already perceived, from the sound of her mistress' voice, that some-thing was amiss. She understood her well enough to know that there was some trouble on the young girl's mind; but with an intuitive delicacy often found in her race she had sever introded so far as even to seem sympathetic. Now, as she came in, she said gently:

"Lor', Miss Kate, you done let yo' fire go mos' plants out. Hit's nigh outer suppertime, en yo' ain' dressed, nor nuthin'."

She knell before the fire and threw on wood, and as the blaze lenged up and she turned and looked at the young girl, the sight of her tear-stained, troubled face smote the negro's kind heart, and a look of sympathy came over tear-stained, troubled face snaote the negro's kind heart, and a look of sympathy came over her honest black face.

"O, Maria, I'm very wretched!" said Kate impulsively. "I wish it wisn't wrong to want to die, for I do. Maria, were you ever so unhappy as that?"

"Lor, no, Miss Kate, I din' never warn'die. I bin right miser bul myself, but I skurred to warn that. What nek you feel so bad, Miss Kate? Pears like you mought be happy,"

"O, Maria, I'm not! I'm wretched, wretched. wetched! Do get a shawl and wrap me up, w reched! Do get a shawl and wrap use up, I feel so cold; and put some more wood on the fire, and don't leave me yet. I can't go down to len; I don't want any. Make some excuse but you come."

excuse to grandmamma for me, but don't let anyone but you come."

"Lor, child, yo' gran'ma 'bleeged ter come look arter ye, you mought know dut; but I'll try ter let yer ress sweet arter supper. Here, honey, lemme wrap yer up in dis yer."

She held the great shawl to the fire until it was located through, and then wrapped her mistress in it tenderly. Then she warmed a cushion and put it behind the girl's back in the clouir. Then she made up a roaring fire, and swept the bearth, and smaightened out the rug; and then stole softly from the room. In a few minutes she came back with a cup of smoking ten and a light supper on a tray, and Kate, to show her grutitude, took the cup and tried to drink a little. But the effort was too much for her. Her throat began to ache, and the tears sprang up again.

effort was too much for her. Her throat began to ache, and the tears sprang up again.
"I can't do it," she said. "Take it away, Maria, and come back and stay with me." And when the tray had been removed, and the poor black creature, with her humble, lov-ing eyes had come back and stood again be-side her on the rug, poor Kate, who was starved for sympathy, and had nowhere in the world to turn for it, reached un her two white world to turn for it, reached up her two white hands for Maria's black ones, and drawing her down into a chair put her head against the loving creature's knees, and said half sobingly:

"Hold my hands tight, Maria. It is good
"Hold my hands tight, cares whether Hose my mines ugit, suran. It is good to feel some one near me that cares whether I'm unhappy or not. O, you don't know! I can't tell you what it is. All I can tell you is that my heart is just breaking!"

"The influences of this summer night were exquisite."

CHAPTER II

In a room that seemed, by visible evidence, to be the library of a student, the laboratory of a man of science, and the workshop of a mechanic all in one, a man was sitting on the same evening of the scene just described, with a lighted lamp on the table beside him, a cigar between his lips, and the bester firm, a cigar between his tips, and the unread evening paper folded across his knee. He wore a rather shabby brown velvet coat which had evidently seen much service, and that was worn in place of the more correct garment that hung over a chair near by. There was a sort of specialness in this mun's approximate account of the service was a sort of specialness. pearance, accounted for in part, though only in part, by the fact that although he could not in part, by the fact that although he could not have been much beyond thirty his dark hair was liberally sprinkled with gray where the curly locks parted on top, and on each side, near the temples, there were patches almost snow white. It had a decidedly old effect in connection with the youthful tone of his rather pule complexion, and his dark eyes and asoustache. He had had a hard day's work, and it had been to little purpose. The results he had wished for he could not get, and he knew the reason had been chiefly the preoccupation of his mind, which would not permit him to do any really good and serviceable thinking. His mind, in fact, was possessed, as it had been for weeks past, by a tormenting regret that would not be altogether stilled. He had been betrayed, in the most astounding manner, into the commission of stilled. He had been betrayed, in the most astounding manner, into the commission of an act which, in another man, and previous to that moment, he would have pronounced definitely and absolutely unperdonable, and yet in his own case, and with the resollection of that moment, he could not fluid himself wholly without excuse. He tried to bring his conscience to bear upon it, and to listen honestly to its decision. Many a time in the post had its rulings been clear against him; but now, by the strongest light he could hold up, with the memory of Kato Carew's young face before him, like the very image of truth, he could not feel he had been either false or cruel, because of that moment's self-forgetfulness, or because of the course he had followed afterward. And his justification was that he ness, or because of the course he had followed afterward. And his justification was that he loved her. It had come all in a moment, and had taken him completely unawares. He had known the girl almost from a child, and had seen her for years familiarly at the house where they were both relatives, who came and went on equal terms of intimacy. He had been one of the first to perceive the promise of beauty, since realized, and it had always been a delight to blue to come on her when she was practicing her violin, and to play accompaniments for her, and see how it pleased and helped her. It was true that, of late, he had found her more attractive every time he saw her, and that their chance inter-views and doets lingered more and more pleasantly in his mind, but he looked upon Kate as almost a child still, and had to re-mind himself that she had left school, and mind bimself that she had left school, and that he would have to meet her in society next season. Certainly, nothing could have actorished him more than to find himself subdenly, and without the least prescience, in love with this girl. That moment of strange sympathy had revealed him to himself, and showed him this fact as beyond question. At first, outside the joy of leving there was no feeling but wondering surprise; but that was followed by two feelings, strong, significant and insistent. One was that he did not want to marry at present. The other was that, being poor, he did not want to reagry a rich girl. Then, too, he had work to do to which mar-Then, too, he had work to do to which mar-riage would be a hindrance. There came, also, another feeling, suggested by the thought that, if everything else were smooth and propitious, it would be equally wrong and unwise for a man twelve years her senior to ask the hand of a girl who had seen absolutely nothing of life, and of men whom she could contrast and compare with him.

compare with him.

On all three points he felt strongly, and it was, therefore, impossible for him to follow up that night's rush impulsiveness by a definite proposal of marriage. This was absolutely clear to him; and though the thought of renouncing her was intolerable pain while the memory of that kiss was such an exquisite reality to him, he would have been equal to the strundle appointed for him would have site reality to him, he would have been equal to the struggle appointed for him, would latve found the renunciation a possible, obvious thing, but for one significant thought, which, do as he would, was more joy than pain to him, the thought that Kate loved him, too, as he loved her; suddenly, strongly, unexperiedly, yet for all that, completely, satisfyingly, Could this possibly be? Her willing yielding to his kies seemed to justify the thought; but, on the other hand, might not that were willing. on the other hand, might not that very willingness imply a childish trust and innocence to which he had perhaps, been traitor?

He had spent a sleepless night after the strange scene. They were actually beneath the same roof, these two excited watchers, and by morning's dawn, when Kate had dropped into a happy sleep, the perplexities that dis-turbed the mind of Talbot were so far from a solution that he made a business errand out of town, and was on his way before the fam-ily had assembled for breakfast. When he ily had assembled for breakfast. When he got back, in three days' time, he had decided nothing except to see Kate and to be guided by his observation of her manner and treatment of him. If he decided from that that her feelings were really involved, that she cared for him, he would ask her to marry him at once; in spite of everything he would. on the other hand, her manner showed her to have been untouched, well, then, he would somehow overcome himself; and always then was the future, with Kate often mear him, and all the possibilities of joy in view.

When he got home at last Kate met him with the frankness of a child, it chilled his heart to see how lightly she returned his greeting, and how vain it was to look for any hidden meaning in her civil words. What dreams had be been fostering that this should hurt him so? The first time be was alone with her he looked her in the eyes, and said :

"It is very good of you, Miss Kate, to overlook my impertinence the other night, when the music so fuddled my head that I forgot you were no longer a dear little child, and treated you like one,

And if I treated you like a dear old gentleman, I think we may call it even," she answered lightly, "for, at your age, I suppose it is as natural to want to take from one's years as it is at mine to want to add to them. No, indeed! I bear you no malice, and had, as you see, almost forgotten it."

And she gave a gay little laugh and turned CHAPTER III

MRS. OWEN'S summer home at the sea-shore was always filled with guests during the gay season; and this year the com-pany assembled was more than ordinarily at-tractive. The two daughters of the house, Clara and Grace, had returned from Europe immensely refreshed as to their toilets; and Clara, the older, was engaged to be married, to the satisfaction of all the parties concerned. her mother in particular. Altogether, life was going with more than its usual zest and liveliness when Kate Carew arrived at her aunt's after her six-mouths' stay with her grandparents in Virginia. The two girls assured her that she looked very countrified, but added that the clothes she had commissioned added that the clothes she had commissioned her aint to get for her would soon remedy that defect; and, altogether, they were more affectionate than usual, and seemed glad to see her. Grace, who was indolently amiable by nature, had always been fond of Kate in her way, and Clara, who had heretofore seemed to tolerate rather than to enjoy her as an addi-tion to the family similar treated her now that descension which Kate found very amusing.

Mrs. Owen, who was a woman of great selfreliance and conscientionsness, if only most-erate warmth of heart, gave her the sincere and gracious welcome that she always had rendy for her only sister's only child, and showed herself prepared to do her best by her in every way that opportunity offered. Now that Clara was so well disposed of, she felt herself the more at leisure to look after the interests of Kate.

tion to the family circle, treated her, now that she was herself engaged, with an affable con-

interests of Kate. "Kate is immensely pretty," she said candidly to Clara, who, in her new state of importance, was treated already with almost the amount of deference due to a matron, "and when she plays the violin she's fascinating.
With nine men out of ten Grace would have not the ghost of a chance beside her, but the tenth man would infinitely prefer a safe and easy girl like timee to an uncertain one like Kale, who is capable of giving you the most disconcerting surprises, as a clever man would quickly discover. The same sort of men would never admire the two girls, and men would never admire the two pris, and there is no necessity for the slightest clashing between them. Kate's figure will show off her new clothes superbly, and with her beauty and good style, her money, her charming music, and the good chance I am going to give her, she ought to make an excellent match."

These sentiments were not, of course, ex-pressed in the presence of their object, but Kate was entirely aware of her annuts view and expectations concerning her, and realiz-ing how her own antagonized them, she felt really sorry for the disappointment in store for her somewhat imperious relative, who was so accustomed to having things go as she wished. Kate's own determination was never to morry at all, but, of course, she did not say so, It would have sounded stily, and, besides, there were reasons why she would prefer not to have it known, even to her nearest friends. The French dresses did set her off to remark-able advantage, and Mrs. Owen was not disappointed. She was noticed and admired quite to the measure of that lady's by no quite to the measure of that haly's by no means himble expectations, and when she would consent to play for people her music awakened positive embusiasm. But she was less conformable than her must would have had her, in that she much more often refused than agreed to play, when she was asked, say-ing it was no use, she could not do it when she did not feel like it, and giving to the words such an expression of finglity that there was really no appeal from them.

As the season advanced toward its largest

As the season advanced toward its logists the popularity of Miss Carew advanced with it, and Mrs. Owen had the satisfaction of hears, it, and Mrs. Owen had the satisfaction of heaving her talked of among the beauties, and seeing her the object of as much masculine admiration as any young lady present. Grace showed a little inclolent jeatousy, but was promptly snubbed for it by her mother, who called upon her to examine into her own possibilities of being a belle among such girls as were here this senson, and learn in tensequence to be about that here consequence to be glad that her own cousin should fill a place which could, under no circumstances have belonged to her. Grace did s her mother advised, and the effect seemed to be salutary. Kate was really quite fond of her, and never neglected or forgot her, and, on the whole she fared much better for invitations and partners with Kate, than she could poshave done without her.

All this sort of thing was unpleasant in the extreme to Kate-the comparing and calculating and envying that she saw about her on every side. She felt it to be both tiresome and vulgar. The world of fash-ion had already inspired her with contempt, and even the dull life at Rodney, where she had her time to herself, and unlimited music and reading, seemed better and higher than this. At least it had served its purpose, and given her strength to go forward, just us the life here, also, served its purpose, and con-tributed to the furtherance of an end.

"I thought John Talbot was coming this said Clara Owen, one day, when the family, together with the female portion of its guests, were assembled in the morning room, with their funcy work, novels and portfolios.

So be is nor rather so be style to is, "nospended Mrs. Owen, "He's been putting it off, from ring to time, in his usual way. It's frightfully but in the city now, but he seems to have something to absorb his attention there—business of some sort he writes me." "What does he do? I never quite under-stood," said a young girl, who was painting some flowers on a fair.

"I don't quite understand myself," said Mrs. Owen, laughing, "I don't think it's exactly un-derstandable. He seems to do a variety of things. For one thing, he is always dabbling in scientific experiments. He's awfully clever, you know, in a scientific way, and I wish be could turn it to some account, I'm sure. Then he tinkers with all sorts of metallic things, and experiments in electricity and na-chinery and all sorts of things like that. He knows a lot of scientific men, and has got no end of scients, and, of course, he rends and studies a great deal—but I don't see what he has ever necountished in his corr necountished. has ever accomplished in his work, except to keep himself immensely interested, and that's a good deal. He has enough to live on, you know, and I never hear of him making any money, but I suppose his pursuits, whatever they are, serve their purpose if they keep him t of mischief."
"Ab, but do they?" said an old lady, who was sented in a wicker chair near the window.

was sented in a wicker chair near the window.

"Do they keep him out of mischief? I fancy be gets into mischief a plenty with those meaning eyes of his, and those fascinating white love-locks that young ladies find so benutiful."

"O, he amuses himself, no doubt," said another lady, an attractive widow, who, though no longer young was still an object of admiration to the other sex wherever she went, "And what is more, he amuses other people. I don't know a more satisfying man to stend an evenknow a more satisfying man to spend an even-ing with than John Talbut. He is simply never dull, or if he is, he must shut himself in with it, out of sight, for he never comes where

"I agree without enlivening the scene."

"I agree with you in that enadid opinion, Mrs. Torrence," said the old lady who had spoken before, "1-bon't know a young man I like better. I didn't mean, by what I said just now, to accuse him of trifling in any sense. I know him, perhaps, better than next people, and I'm very fond of him. He's any-thing but a trifler, I can tell you. See him thoroughly interested once, and you'll find whether he is an earnest man or not."

whether he is an earnest man or not."

"But is he ever thoroughly interested in anything except these schemes or pursuits of his he's always dabbling at?" said Mrs. Torrence. "I confest I have not found him so. I don't complain of it, however, for I fancy him much more amusing as he is."

"Yes, he's thoroughly interested in more things than you think," said Mrs. Owen, speaking with authority, "but he's a man in reality rather hors ligns, for all he seems so conventional, and the things he is interested in are not the ones that usually come in our way. He's the most cornest man I know."

At this point Clara put in a word of com-

He's the most curnest man I know."

At this point Clara put in a word of commendation for her cousin, which was warm beyond her wont, but which plainly set forth the fact that her praise of him was comparative only, as an engaged girl's should be. Grace, too, added her quota by saying laughingly that she thought everybody knew how awfully nice John Talbot was, looking up from her novel in some wonder at the fact of there being any discussion on that subject. there being any discussion on that subject. Kate Carew alone remained silent. Her silence was observed by the young girl pointing the fan, who asked her rather suddenly if she knew Mr. Talbot.

knew Mr. Talbot.

"O yes; from my childhood up," answered Kate. "You know, Mr. Owen was his uncle, and Mrs. Owen being my aunt, we've been the niere and nephen of the establishment."

"Really?" said the young girl, with sudden animation. "Then you know him very well indeed! And is he really as charming as he seems? I only know him a little."

"He's very nies! I think" said Kate, in a seems? I only know him a little,"

"He's very nice, I think," said Kate, in a mutter-of-fact tone, "but you see he's so much older than I am that he looks upon me as quite a child."

"Really?" said the girl again, "and yet he isn't old! just a nice age, I think. Don't you?
"Second place than a very name man,"

So much nicer than a very young man."

"You think so?" said Kate. "He seems to me quite an old gentleman, with his vast worldly wisdom and venerable white locks. I told him so the last time I saw him."

It was perfectly well known to Kate Carew that her saint desired her to make a brilliant marriage, and there was a sense in which she desired it herself. She would never marry any man who was disagreeable to her, but More was at least one man here who, so far from being that, was extremely pleasant to her as A companion. He was, moreover, well born good looking and rich, and she knew her aunt wigald be gratified at her marrying him more than she could be gratified by any other result of first summer campaign, unless, indeed, Grace could have enployated Edgar Morrison, a thing soon seen to be impossible. From the baginning of the season young

From the beginning of the season young Morrison had plaid Kate especial attention, and the girl, peasionallely desiring to crowd out of her heart a feeling that it galled her to be aware of, determined to please and he pleased by him. He was the least aggressive of suitors, and she found it much pleasanter to be with him than with anyone else, and was conforting herself in the belief that, if he asked her to marry him, as she knew he would, she would find it simple and easy to say yes. And yet this possibility never suggested itself that she did not feel a straige touch of impulse to shut her eyes and stage her cars to the sights shut her eyes and stup her cars to the sights and sounds of both past and future. She was determined not to remember the past, and terrified if she looked into the future, the thing only could she bear to look forward to the prospect of meeting Mr. To but as Mrs. Morrison, and giving bim ber hand with a real, autroubled smile. When she thought of the calso triumph of that answerst she left she

One evening there had been guests to dimestand Mr. Morrison and secreted Kate. He was a delightfully agreeable companion, and she compared him, with much in a set satisfaction, to the other menut the table. He was far the most acceptable to her of all the large party, and she felt herself very fortunate to be on the brink of an engagement to a man who would please and interest her, without making that compelling demand upon her feelings that shook her nature to its very center, and was capable of giving her such pain as even now to think of turned her sick,

Certainty Kate was lovely that evening, with a simple clurm all her own. She was wonderfully natural and candid, and it undoubtedly gave her a stamp of unworldliness that made her distinguished. Her companion was no less unobtrusive and quiet than usual, was no less unobtrusive and quiet than usual, but he could not keep a deeper admiration than usual out of his eyes. Kate did not mind this. It was of a piece with what she read in the eyes of all who looked at her tonight, and she felt the interest and pleasure she was exciting stimulating and agreeable. Oil, undoubtedly, she said to herself, she would marry this pleasant, handsome man, and think herself a happy woman to have exemped such fierce experience in love as she had once had sight of. had once had sight of.

After the dinner was over, and the men after a short interval had joined the ladies in the drawing-room, Katr; with Mr. Morrison, had strayed into a buy window and seated herself in the low seat, from which she half leaned out into the moonlight. The sound of the ocean was in her ears; the smell of flowers filled the air. The influences of this summer night the air. The influences of this summer night were exquisite, and her companion seemed not out of harmony with it. He had stepped through the low window and was standing on the grass outside looking at her. She felt his eyes fixed on her face, but her quiet heart remained unstirred. She was enough at home with him not to feel bound to talk, and she looked beyond him into the moonlight, while both of them were silent.

Souldenly a suell scened laid moon her. As

Suddenly a spell seemed laid upon her. As the gazed upon those bands of light and shadow, thrown by the tall trees across the grassy lawn, and as she listened to the wash of the waves beyond it, and smelt the fragrance of that summer night, a stirring in her heart. which had long been stilled, began to trouble her. Its throbs came faster, and a broken, nuconscious sigh escaped her. The old long-ing for love rose up imperiously, and she reached and yearned toward it as the one thing that she craved.

A moment's stillness followed that deep sigh,

and then a low voice very near her said:
"I love you."

She could not answer. It was what she had just been longing for—and yet! O why was it that she seemed to wait and listen for something beyond?
"I love you. I went you for my wife. I

"I love you. I want you for my wife. I love you beyond words and thought. If you will say you will marry me-"

The voice broke off, choked with feeling, and out of the darkness and stillness a band reached forward and touched hers.

She felt through soul and body an intenso She left through soul and body an intenso recoil. She sprang to her feet, and drew away, clasping her hands behind her. In a moment the young man, with a swift soft movement, had stepped through the window, and was at bad stepped through the window, and was asher side,

"Tell me," he said quickly, "have I startled you? Is it too sudden? Oh, forgive me if it is.
I can wait a long time. Only tell me that someday you can give me something of the feeling I have for you. When, oh when, can you put your hand in mine willingly and promise to be my wife?"
"Nover—never—never!" she said "Oh give

"Never—never—never!" she said "Oh give it up, I implore you! Don't be unhappy. Don't let me make you suffer. It is so terrible. But give that iden up at once now—forever. I can hever narry anyone. I cannot even bear to have it mentioned. Go away, and try not to suffer about it. I don't want to make you unhappy—but I'm miserable myself—more miserable than you can dream."

He stood a moment, breathlessly amazed. Then the absolute certainty that her words were true was borne in upon him. He saw that she was shaken and agitated. He thought of her wore than of himself and so after a of her more than of himself, and so, after a of her more than of himself, and so, after a few seconds, said gently:

"You will want to get away to your room. Come through this window, and go in by the side door. In that way you can do it. I will go back then, so that no one may be surprised. Come—let me manage it for you—I love you enough to put your wishes above my own. Don't you believe it? Indeed you may."

Then she put her hand in his unfearingly and trusted him to earry out his thoughtful, tender plan for her. She remembered hurriedly kissing that kind hand as she let it go, but every other thought was shortly mergel into the abandonment to misery and despair which overtook her, when once she was alone, locked overtook her, when once she was alone, locked in her own room.

Leaving her rich evening dress a tumbled mass upon the floor she threw herself upon the bed and sobbed until her body shook. Oh the cruelty of it! the persistent, cutting cruelty of a haunting agony like that! How she had struggled! How she had fought and overcome, and held up her head before the world, and how miserably useless it was to pretend that she had forgotten! That spark of fire within her smouldered and smoked and would not die, and it seemed to be burning into the very fiber of her beart.

Poor Kate! One thing at least was plain, rough all. John Talbot was the man who through all. had it in him to command her love, and no other man in the world had even a chance of winning it, though he might sue and plead for years. It was plain and certain to her now, and she could never make a mistake again. She knew also that the man who had avowed his love for her to night understood her. She felt she would see him no more, and she was grateful for it, but over and over the words occurred to her "And be who shuts out love shall be in turn shut out from love himself. She felt herself despentely guilty, but hope She could here helpless and desolately alone. She could keep her secret, also know that, but what was o be the outcome of such a dreary life as hers?.

(Continued in the next 300RNAL)

LOVE OVER ALL BY MARY AINGE DE VERE

RICHES are naught. A jewel crown May be undone, and gold will melt, But an ended pain is long, long felt.

Kisses are sweet, but prayers are best; Only the lips to a kiss are given, While the soul goes, with its prayer, to Heaven.

Dreams are shadows, yet sometimes come Like blessed curtains that drop upon The scorching light of a noonday sun.

Hopes betray us, but Faith is sure, Nor asks for an answer. She smiles and waits, A patient child at the heavenly gate.

Love over all! A jewel crown, A pain that stays, and a prayer, a kiss, Dreams, hope, faith, patience, are met in this.

XX—MRS. WILLIAM M. EVARTS

BY LILIAN WRIGHT

T would be impossible to be

T would be impossible to be long in the presence of Mrs. William Maxwell Evarts without feeling that the many excellent qualities and charming characteristics which her friends ascribe to her are deserved. Helen Minerva Wardner, which was the full maiden name of Mrs. Evarts, was the eldest daughter of Allen Wardner, a prominent banker of Windsar, Vermont, in which historic town Mrs. Evarts was born about historic town Mrs. Evarts was born about

Mrs. Evarts was concated in the schools of Windsor and Burlington. While she was yet a young girl her mother died, leaving her to take her place at the head of the household, and to become, as far as possible, a mother to her sister and three younger brothers.

The grave responsi-bilities of such a try-ing position were bravely borne, al-though involving the sacrifice of many pleasures, and, without doubt, this ex-perience better quali-fied her for the duties of after life. Nevertheless she found time to devote to music and drawing, beside attaining the more practical accomplishments of good house-keeping. Born and reared amid bruithful scenes, in a society free from sham and pretence, a society that believed in "Honest work for to-day, honest hope for to-morrow," all that was best in her character was very strongly developed.

After graduating from Yale, in 1829, William M. Evarts, of Cambridge, Mass., went to Windsor to study law and teach, and the to Windsor to study law and teach, and the acquaintance between the grave, learned law student and the pleasant, practical young girl which began then, culminated in their marriage, August 30th, 1843, Rev. W. D. Wilson, rector of St. Paul's Episcopal Church, Windsor, being the officiating elergyman, Mr. Evarts had in the meantime established a good law practice in New York. In every respect the marriage has been a most felicitous one; Mrs. Evarts laving unbounded confidence in her bushand's ability, as well as a pardonable pride in his achievements, has been content to let him do his own work in his own way, while she has had the entire management of household affairs. No sound from the domestic machinery has ever been allowed to distract his mind from graver matters. Each very wisely recognized the fitness of the other for his and her special line of work; consequently combined results have been mutually satisfactory.

Since her marriage Mrs. Evarts' life has been so interwoven, her individuality so completely involved in that of her family, that it is nmost impossible to speak of her apart from it. Mrs. Evarts' good health, even disposition, absence of nervousness under trying circumstances, have made her an inestimable belo-

* In this series of pin-partraits of "Unknown Wives of Well-Known Mes." commenced in the January, 1891, Journal, the following, each accompanied with portrait, have been primer:

Mos. Thomas A. Edusos January 1884
Mos. P. T. BARKUR Petroner Petroner:

Mos. P. T. BARKUR Petroner April Mos. T. De Wett Talk one Mos. Charles Mos. May "Lany Machosalo January May "January Machosalo January January January Machosalo January January Angelet "Angelet Angelet "Angelet LAIV MAN CHASHLER HARRING LABY TENNYMIN MRS. WILL CARLETTEN MRS. WILL CARLETTEN MRS. WILLIAM MCKINGEY MRS. MAN OFFICE MRS. ANA MAN LABOR THE PRINTERS HARRING MRS. LEALAN STANFORD MRS. KENGER H. SPITHLION MRS. KENGER FIELD MRS. KENGER FIELD MRS. KONGER FIELD MRS. K Angust " September " Groder " November "
January 1802
February |
March |
August |

Any of these back mambers can each by writing to the JOURNAL.

meet for an astate lawyer and active politician, as well as a judicious mother to their ten living children. Mr. Evarts' business has been in New York, where they have a winter home; but "Runnymede," a beautiful estate of twelve hundred acres, is at Windsor, where they spend their summers. Formerly Mrs. Evarts remained there the greater part of the year in order to keep her children in the country. She has always been very cureful of her children's health, believing no expenditure of time and money too great to becure to them strong and healthy bodies. Like the women of her generation Mrs. Evarts is a good needle-coman. There was always so much to be done for actual use, as she assisted in cutting and making her older children's clothes, that she had time for but little fancy work.

The eldest son, Charles B., died hat December. The eldest daughter, Hattie, wife of C. C. Beaman, Mr. Evarts' law partner, has a delightful summer home, "Blow-me-down Farm," about two miles from "Runnyneede," and with her four children is almost a part of the Evarts bousehold. Mary, the next daughter, has of late years relieved her mother from meet for an astute lawver and active politi-

the Evarts household. Mary, the next daugh-ter, has of late years relieved her mother from ter, has of late years relieved her mother from the management of their always large house-hold, taking entire charge of servants and purchases. Minnie, the third daughter, is now Mrs. Weed, of New York, and has three chil-dren. Betty is married to Edward C. Per-kins, of Boston, also a lawyer, and has four children, while Louise, wife of Dr. Scudder, of New York, has but one child. Allan E, is in New York; Prescott and Sherman are twins the former is an Eviscott and Sherman in New the former is an Episcopal elergeman in New York and has two children, while Sherman is a lawyer and in partnership with his father. The youngest, William Maxwell, also a lawr, has devoted himself to the interests of Runnymede.

"Runnymede."

Mrs. Evarts very heartily enters into whatever interests her family, and her children always found her ready to supplement all their pastimes. If the private theatricals, which were so delightful to them, meant hard work for her in preparing the costumes, scenery, and the repast which invariably followed, the little folks never knew it, and both Mr. and Mrs. Evarts constituted a delighted and appreciative and lence—finding something to constitute the second constituted and appreciative and lence—finding something to consurs. Evaris constituted a deligition and appre-ciative audience—finding something to com-mend in the work of each child. The family are all very fond of the opera and the theater, and are regular "first-nighters," though none are specially proficient in music, nor have ever sought histrionic homors since childhood days. The daughters all sing and play well; during their earlier years they had a governess, and were given edu-cations which fitted them for netice, use-ful lives; the sons all graduated from Yule, and are well settled in 65. in life.

Mrs. Evarts always Mrs. Evarts always drosses in very quiet taste, sensibly and well, black, brown and gray being ber favorite colors. Her gowns are well made in simple though prevailing styles. Her daughters have the same quiet tastes in dress. The "Mansion," as Mrs. Evarts' summer house arts' summer house is called, is the largest of the six houses on the estate, and is de-lightfully situated; screened from view by trees and shrub-bery and surround-ed by acres of beauti-ful gardens filled with Mrs. Evarts' favorite flowers, in which she takes great

MRS. EVARTS

The yellow exterior of the "Mansion" is an introduction to the brightness within; sun-light, flowers, paintings, books and periodicals are adjuncts to this well-furnished house, but are adjuncts to this well-furnished house, but the home atmosphere is derived from the in-mates themselves. During the summer all the children come to Windsor, and a grand family remion is held. The family also entertain largely, many of their New York friends es-pecially making long visits. During Henry Ward Beecher's life he and Mrs. Beecher used to spend weeks at a time at "Runnymede," Senator George F. Hoar, of Massachusetts, President Hayes and family, General W. T. Sherman and daughter, and President Har-rison and suite have been among their dis-tinguished gue-ts. Mrs. Evarts possesses the secret of successful entertaining; the happy tinguished gue-ts. Airs. Evaris possesses the secret of successful entertaining; the happy faculty of making her guests feel at bome. Since the accident to Mr. Evarts his wife has felt great solicitude for his health, and devotes berself most assiduously to his happi-ness and comfort, spending much time with him in conversation, reading aloud, driving or visiting some of their children domiciled near. They have traveled extensively both in this country and Europe, and have been much in Washington and New York society, but Mrs. Everts finds her chief happiness in her home and family, and is happier in these than in her abundant worldly possessions. Mrs. Everts does a great deal in a quiet way for the sick and unfortunate, ber daughter assisting her in her work among the poor, and both taking special interest in the welfare of former ser-vants. Mrs. Evarts is very much interested in the Episcopal church, and does much to sup-port it and its charities. Her summers are spent very quietly at "Runnymede," gaining health and strength for the more wearing city life, and all social obligations are taid aside, only occasional informal calls on a few very old friends being paid. Unknown she may be as a leader in fushion or art, for her life work has been wholly domestic, and her sole aim and purpose to be a devoted, self-sacrificing wife and mother, receiving the loving homage of these who constitute woman's kingdom, her husband and children.

BY C. H. CRANDALL

STRANGE is it that the sweetest thing Forever is the shyest; The sweeter song, the swifter wing, Ere thou the singer spyest.

The more the fragrance in the rose, The more it hides a-blushing; And when with love a maiden glows, The more her face is flushing

In depths of night, in gloomy mine. In wildwood streams—in stories Of lowly lives, unsung—there shine The world's divinest glories.

As low arbutus blossoms rest In modesty unbidden, So man and nature hide their best, And God himself is hidden.

II—MARY ELEANOR WILKINS

BY KATE UPSON CLARK

BOUT nine years ago, Miss Mary Elemor Wilkins, then quite young, took a prize offered by a Boston weekly for the best short story. This was a fortunate thing for the public. The young girl had always longed to write stories, but had been too diffident to show her efforts in this direction outside of her own family circle. The winning of this prize encouraged ber so much that she resolved to devote herself thenceforth to this work.

Her first literary attempts were almost entirely for children, but at the urgent sedicitation of friends she soon began to take up a deeper kind of work. BOUT nine years ago, Miss Mary deeper kind of work, and sent her first story for older read-ers to Miss Mary L. Booth, then editor of "Harper's Bazar." Miss Booth thought that such cramped and unformed handwriting promised lit-tle, and that she was the victim of some ambitious but "un-available" child. With her usual conscientionsness, how-ever, she looked the little piece carefully over. It was Miss Booth's habit, when attracted by a story, to read it through three times, on dif-ferent days, and in different moods, be-fore accepting it. She foreaccepting it. She poid this compliment to "Two Old Lovers," the contribution which Miss Wilkins had submitted to her. Two days later the "ambitious child" received a handsome check for it. From this time handsome check for

it. From this time forth, Miss Booth befriended the young writer in every way, and Miss Wilkins, who is almost morbidly appreciative of kindness, and as true to her friends as one of her own intexible New England characters, rewarded Miss Booth's thoughtfulness by giving to her, as long as she lived, the first choice of her stories. The career of this young woman thus disproves two favorite theories among the cynics of the present day, nanoely: that editors do not read

two favorite theories among the cynics of the present day, namely: that editors do not read the contributions of unknown writers, and that women do not help each other.

There are few writers who have been the recipients of such unreserved and spontaneous tributes of appreciation from famous men and women as the modest subject of this sketch. Dr. Phillips Brooks pronounced her "Humble Romance" "the best short story that was ever written."

Two volumes of Miss Wilkins' stories have been collected. The first, called "A Humble Romance," was brought out three years ago.

Romance, was brought out three years ago. It has had a large sale, and has been translated into several languages. The second, "A New England Nun. is enjoying an even wider popularity than its predecessor, while her first novel is now reaching its conclusion in "Har-per's Magazine," It must not be inagined by those who long the skill and the fame of this fortunate writer that she has won her place without a struggle. She has toiled faithfully and incesstruggle. She has toiled faithfully and inces-sently, often discouraged, but never giving up. The remarkable evenness of her work is due to her "capacity for taking pains." She thinks her stories out until they are perfectly thinks her stories out until they are perfectly clear, before putting her pen to paper.

The difficulties against which she contends are largely physical. Though her constitution is apparently sound, she is small, being only five feet tall, and is very slight. She possesses the condition of the content of the sensitive organization which accompanies a large intellectual development in such a frame. Her transparent skin, her changing eyes, sometimes seeming blue, sometimes hazel, her beary braids of golden hair, her delicately moulded features, all proclaim a singularly high-strong and nervous tempera-

*This series of glimpses of the bone life of famous literary crosses was commerced in the June Jorney at-with a sketch and partraft of Mrs. Augusta Evance Wise s.m. The object of the series is to present those literary coveres, whose home life has escaped excessive por-trainers.

Miss Wilkins has known much of sorrow.

Miss Wilkins has known much of sorrow. The pathos which she infuses into her stories could not be so genuine unless she herself had suffered. One after another, during the first years of her writing, her father, mother and only sister died. She lived with them in the beautiful village of Brattlebors, Vermont, but she has resided since their death in Randolph, Massachusetts, with friends, whose love and devotion could scarcely be greater if they were connected with her by ties of blood.

Her two pretty mones in the simple white house in which she lives in Randolph are full of her own quaint personality. The first is furnished in terra cotta. The second, in which is a wide, old-fashioned hearth before an open fire, is in old blue. Near the hearth stands a desk in colonial style, with brass hinges and locks; also a couch with a Bagdad rug thrown over it. A Madagascar rug forms the portifice between the two apartments. Old decanters, candlesticks, pewter plates and other menomabilin of "ye olden time," nearly all of which have come down to Miss Wilkins by inheritance, abound on every side. In the term cotta room stands a pretty desk of bog-cok, surrounded by Hindoo relics. There are fur rugs on the floor, and all the furniture is antique, having belonged to the owner's grandmather.

"I suppose," wrete Miss Wilkins to a friend mother,
"I suppose," wrote Miss Wilkins to a friend

"I suppose," wrote Miss Wilkins to a friend when she was just-settled in hernew home, "that my blue room is one of the queerest-looking places that you ever saw. You should see the people when they come to call. They look doubtful in the front room, but say it is 'pretty'; when they get out here they say the rooms look 'just like me,' and I don't know when I shall ever find out if that is a com-pliment." pliment

Miss Wilkins is thought by many to bear a striking resemblance to Mrs. Frances Hodgson Burnett, though her features are smaller. She looks best in children's hats, and her clothes are most becoming when made after children's patterns.

She has no bump of what is called "locality.

is not true except in the broadest sense. She has a wonderful she has a womering faculty for generaliz-ing from types, which belongs with her ex-traordinary imagin-ation, and this she utilizes in the highest degree. She has redegree. She has re-cently devoted much of her time to the drama. One of her plays, a marcelously realistic production, called "Giles Corey,

Yeoman," was read before the Summer School of History and Romance, at Decr-tield, Massachusetts, Miss Wilkins thinks out the details of her stories much more completely than most writers before putting pen to paper. Like all skillful reconfeurs, she apprecintes the value of the opening and closing portions, and these are often the first parts of the work that she does. The last sentence she the work that she does. The last sentence she considers more important than any other. Once at her desk, with her matter well in mind, she composes ensily and seldom recopies, unless an odd page here and there. She calls one thousand words per day her "stent," though she often goes a week or more without writing a line, while she sometimes writes three or four thousand words between breakfast and sunset. Evening work she seldom undertakes unless pressed for time.

Environment affects her strongly. She

Environment affects her strongly. She finds it difficult, sometimes impossible, to conpose anything when away from home. In this respect she resembles many, if not most, of our great novelists, one of whom has testi-fied, in speaking of this subject, "We are the slaves of chiects around us." slaves of objects around us

Mes Wilkins is a standing reproach to the sensationalists. Nothing could be more interesting than are some of her simple sketches, and yet they are almost destitute of plot, and depend upon their absolute fidelity to life for their success, while she is incapable of a mo-tive that is not uplifting. The "erotic school" may well sit abashed and confounded before her bewitching, yet absolutely pure, creations. She forms a force in our literature which, without being either "preachy" or didactic, makes always for righteousness, because her ideals are noble.

She is so strongly sympathetic that she has been advised not to study modern writers, but to confine her reading mostly to classic models. To this wise counsel, which she has conscientionsly followed, may be largely attributed that charming originality which she has preserved intact, though occupying a field which has already been, it would have seemed, exhaustively traversed.

Miss Wilkins is wont to say that she has "no accomplishments." She does, however, write musical verse, which is worth all the stranming of wordless lyres in the world. Her poetry is finished, and is full of captivating comerits.

MISS WILKINS

HOW WE ENTERTAINED THE EDITOR

By Ella Higginson

ELL and I were orphans and lived with our brother Tom. To m was an orphan, too, of course, but then male orphans are never the recipients of sympathy and motherly advice from every dear old buty in the neighborhood, so that by and by they really forget that they are orphans,

Tom was twenty, and he kept a stationery shop, and we lived in four small rooms in the rear of the shop. This was in one of the new towns that spring up in a night on Puget Sound, and although the town itself was rough, bustling and noisy, we were very happy there, for our rooms were within a lundred yards of the opaline waters, and the shore sloped to them, green as emeralds the whole winter through.

Nell assisted Tom in the shop, and 1, besides being housekepper, contributed to several magazines, which helped wonderfully in the way of new gowns, gloves, burnets, and all the dainty things which delighted our souls. We were quite the noisiest and most haram-

We were quite the noisiest and most harum-scarum household you can imagine. As I have said, we had only four rooms. In one of these Tom slumbered the dreamy hours away nightly, and it was "the meanest, darkest, smotheriest room in the whole shebang." Tom was given to declaring each time he entered it on slum-ber bent. Then there was a room wherein Nell and I slept, and from whose window we could see at them door, white Mount Baker tow-cing into the primarge sky. Then the kitchen ering into the primrose sky. Then the kitchen, and lastly the parlor, which Nell called the drawing-room, and which also served as dining room. Between the parlor and the sloop was a tiny cubby-hole of a room, about six feet square and dark as a dangeon, in which Tom kept surplus stock, and in which we likewise snonggled away sundry bags from the greengrocer's, trusting to the friendly darkness to onesal them from the inquisitive eyes of our

Our parlor was a thing, having once been seen, to be remembered. It was eleven feet wide and sixteen feet long, and in it were one stove, one organ, one sewing-machine (we made our own gowns), one three-ply carpet, one big, black dog (by the name of Jeff, who was a fixture and the object of our devoted affections), and distinct any analysis of the state o tions), one dictionary and stand, one walnut table, four chairs (more or less broken), one trunk (deceptively cretonned and cushioned up to allure unsuspecting guests into the rashness of sitting upon it), one bookcase, some pictures, and, alas! that I must chronicle it of a parlor! a bureau! "A really and truly bureau in a parlor," as a little girl said once, to the hysterical mirth of ourseives and the specchless mortification of her mother, who had brought her to call. However, the size—or lack of size—of our bed-chamber forbade the introduction of a bureau, so anto the parlor it. introduction of a bureau, so into the parlor it

One autumn evening Tom was in the shop, and Nell and I were making ourselves very comfortable in the parlor, tipped back in our rocking chairs, with cups of chocolate in our hands, and our feet on the low nickel rod that encompassed the stove. We had been sewing, and the room was in the wildest disorder. The machine was in the center of the floor, its box was upside down, the bureau was littered with yards and yards of embroidery, spools, scissors, tape-lines and buttons; there were piles on piles of muslin uncut, and dozens of muslin garments in various degrees of "cut, basted and sewed" all over the floor, chairs,

We'll have our chocolate," Nell had said,

"and then we'll have a cl'ar'n up spell."
But suddenly we heard the shop door open, and then a gentleman's voice—the kind of core we slid not hear frequently in that rough to vis. It was low, quiet, conseens. In another moment he had introduced bimself to Tom as "Mr. Everett, of the 'South African Review," I waited to hear no more. I leased to my feet, overturning the footstood and the dog with a dreadful racket; the smile and the chocolate fraze on my lips; my beart jumped into my throat, and thumped there so fast I could scarcely breathe.

I had contributed regularly for some time to the "South African Review," and my correspondence with the editor had grown very friendly, indeed, but never, never, in my wildset imaginings had I forescen such a catastropic, Nell suggested afterward, as this, I east a glance of frenzied, but speechless, appent at Nell. She modded, pale as a ghost, She had beard too.

She had beard, too.
"Cl'ar up," she whispered briefly, and then she began to laugh, noiselessly and hysteri-celly. I thought this downright mean of her, cally. I thought this downright mean of her, but I didn't have time to remonstrate. I beard Tom tell our guest in a very load tone —for our benefit—that he would show him in just as soon as he had finished a little matter then claiming his attention in the shop. This was to give us time, God bless him! we improved it. The way we did set The way we did set chairs we improved it. The way we did set chairs to their right-abouts and jam things into those bursan drawers? Nell got hold of the muslin and struggled to get it into the trunk, but there was too much of it.

"Put it behind the trunk," I gasped, and as she obeyed, Ladded: "There's one composition. He can't bear us, because he's as deaf as any-thing; he told me himself."

"Well, that is bliss," responded Nell lups-ing into slang in her agitation. We had burely begun to get things to rights, it seemed however, when we heard them coming, and with hopeless glances into the mirror we sunk into our chairs.

Tom poshed aside the portière and walked in, followed by a tall and fine-looking gentleman. With a terrible "Boo-woo-woo!" in the voice of a lion, Jeff lenged from his own individual corner and made a rush at our guest, and as the latter was just in the act of taking a step, the dog, more astonished than any of us, went straight between the South African ankles and floundered against the wall. As the gentleman recovered his equilibrium and his self-pos-ession, Tom lamely introduced bim.

"Speak bonder, Tom," said I, convenling the "Speak bonder, Tom," said I, convenling the motion of my lips behind my kerchief. "He is awfully deaf; he told me himself." "Is that se?" said Tom; and then he fairly shouted the introduction.

Nell came forward looking as cool and sweet as a life and gave him her hand, telling him how really glad she was to welcome him.

"O fudge!" said Tom, making a wry face at her over Mr. Everett's shoulder; "if he's deaf that's all Greek to him. Speak up, my

For one dreadful moment I thought Nell was going into one of her convulsions of laughter, but she pulled herself together and presented me.
"So this is our little contributor," said he.

taking my hand and looking at me with kind but amused eyes. I shouted out "yes," but as that sounded rather flat, and hearing Tom giggle in the background, I limply subsided. "Have a chair?" cried Nell, her voice rising to a little squeak as she proffered the best and really safest chair in the house. To our con-sternation, however, he showed a preference for a guileless looking chair that was at heart was the safe of the saf for a guideless looking chair that was at heartone base deception.

"Great gams!" ejaculated Tom, in a tone of exaggerated enotion, while we all stoodshivering in agonized suspense. "It's the chair with the broken leg!"

Before our guest could seat himself, however, Nell had a happy inspiration.

"Do, do take off your overcoat!" she cried, and then in a rapid aside to me, "And Kate, do substitute another chair while I'm talking sweet to him! Tom, take his cout."

weet to him? Tom, take his cont."

For one instant I thought a flash of uncontrollable mirth swept across Mr. Everett's face, almost as if he had heard. But a second glance assured me of my mistake, for his expression was Sphinx-like.

"Now, that I have his coat," put in Tom, with cold irony, while I deftly changed the chairs, "what shall I do with it? Toss it on the trunk?"

"Heavens! No!" said I, sternly. "Put it

"Cubby-hole," suggested Nell, giving as a brief, innocent glance, and then adroitly continuing her conversation with Mr. Everett, "Sure enough," said Tom, giggling as he went out, "I'll put it on the bag of potatoes. He'll think we have a hundred-dollar hat-rack concented in the darkness."

Tom, I may say right here, was in his ele-Tom, I may say right here, was in his ele-ment. A guest who was deaf, and two sisters who had been caught in a dreadful plight! What more could the imp ask? He took the tide at the flood, too. He came back and seated himself in the shadow so be could fire funny remarks at us without the motion of his lips being observed by Mr. Everett. Nell behaved like an angel. She sat quite close to our guest, and curried on with him no animated conversation in a clear, high, flute-animated conversation in a clear, high, flute-like tone which seemed to carry every word to him distinctly, as he did not hesitate once in

Suddenly my alert ear heard something dropping, or, to be more accurate, running,

Nell gave me a startled, mystified glance,
"My guns!" ejaculated Tons, in a tone of fairly diabolical mirth, "You hid your chocolate cup on the organ, didn't you?
Well, Miss Brilliancy, it's upset, and it's meandering down right into his silk hat!"
We would have been name than human

We would have been more than human ould we have kept our horrified eyes away from the fatal spot. I even thought poor Mr. Everett gave a startled glance toward the floor, but, of course, I must have been mistaken. The unfortunate man had deposited his hat, with sublime trust in its safety worthy a nobler object, behind him. The chocolate was really running, not into it, but so close to it that we knew it would be dreadfully spattered.

Nell was in the middle of a sentence, but Nell was in the middle of a sentence, but she broke down flatly with, "So, that—a—"
Here her eye wandered again to the hat,
"So—that—a—" she repeated absently,
"So—that—a—" mimicked Tom, at which I laughed, weakly and helphessly. Nell gave-him—both of us, in fact—a furious glance, and returned to her charge.

All this time Mr. Everett had behaved adminably. He must have observed our hysterial necessaries but I examine he attributed is al nervousness, but I presume be attributed it to the dire confusion and disorder of our surroundings.

When he finally arose to take his departure, Nell put her kerchief to her lips with a shame-less pretense at coughing—she, who had the strongest lungs in the family—and said rapidly For heaven's sake, Kate, pick up his hat and wige the chocolate off before he sees it!" Then londer: "I'm so sorry we did not know you were coming, so we could have made your visit plensanter."

"By jingo," said Tom, making a dash for the cubby-hole. "That reminds me I'd better be getting his rout before he investigates and finds it between the potatoes and the coal-oil can! My!" he ejuculated, smilling exag-ceratedly, as he returned with it, "It smells of conflorit; "By the way," said Mr. Everett, turning to me, kindly, "here is a letter for you from my brother, which I should have given you before. I shall tell him how greatly I enjoyed my "here is a letter for you from my And as he bowed himself out there dawned upon his face a slow smile of such intense and uncontrollable amusement that it mude me feel as if an icy hand was clutching my heart. We all stood transfixed until we heard the door close behind him. Then— "His brother!" exclaimed Nell, in a low, terrible tone, "Wretelasd girl! Who is his

"I don't know," I faltered, almost in tears, tearing open the letter.

"Ten to one," said Tom, strutting around with his thumbs in his button-holes, "it's a with his thannes in his button-noise, he sa proposal of marriage."

"Or a hundred dollar check for that hist story," said Nell, langhing nervously.

They came belind use and looked over my shoulder, all rending together. It was not a proposal of marriage, but it was a check—an effectual one-to our spirits.

My DEAR Most ORSE: We have long desired MY DEAR MISS ORDE: We have long assured to make your acquaintance, and as one of us must go to your town on business I shall be my brother have that pleasure, denying my-self because I am so deaf—as I have told you that you would find conversation with embarnssing. My brother is so fortunate as to enjoy perfect bearing. I am sure you will like him, although I believe I have never mentioned him to you. He is associate editor of the "Review." I am

Yours very sincerely, Hoon A. Evenerr.

For a moment that seemed a year there was deadly silence. Then I began to sob child-ishly, and Nell-I regret to be compelled to tell it—Nell went into regular hysteries of noirth, and laughed and cried alternately. Nor did she entirely recover for weeks, but would go into convulsions of merriment at the mere remembrance of that evening. Tom neither laughed nor cried. He just sat down on the edge of the organ stool and twisted his faint presentness of a numbrable and swing faint presentment of a mustache and swung his long legs to and fro and reflected. When his thoughts had had time to travel down to the bag of potatoes and the coal-off can, I imagine be concluded that he could reflect magne he concluded that he could reach more clearly if alone, for he mose silently and stole into the store, nor did so much as a nur-mur emerge from him during the remainder of the evening. It was the first and last time in my life that I ever saw Tom completely squeiched.

ARE WOMEN ALL ALIKE?

By JUNIUS HENRI BROWNE

NE of the constitutional opinions of the average man is that women are all alike. It emps out his speech perpetually, sometimes in the way of kindness and synapathy, oftener in the way of de-rision and contempt. When a wife has forgiven

some great wrong done her by her husband, when a mother has sorificed herself for her children, we hear: "It is just like a woman." We hear the same thing if she has deceived her lover, or involved her father in debt. This dissent is due to the fact that some men are sentimentalists, and that more men are cynics. The former are always praising woman, the latter are gener-ally sneering at or decrying her; but both think that she has only one nature. The sentimentalist believes her to be good, gentle, boyal, trothful under every circumstance; the cynic pronounces her bad, harsh, incon-stant, hereceitied as bestead. the cynic pronounces her lad, harsh, inconstant, hypocritical on Instinct. Neither is wholly right nor wholly wrong. She is good and bad, gentle and bursh, loyal and inconstant, truthful and hypocritical. Her qualifies depend largely on the individual, and the individual varies with mood and environment. She is not cut out of the ideal, nor is she drawn from delineement. She is primarily human, as man is, a compound of leatin and body, of strength and weakness, of generosity and selfishness, of charity and prejudice, of altruism and egotism, of affection and aversion. Some women are far better, some women sion. Some women are far better, some womon are far worse than the mass; but better or worse, they are fundamentally unlike one an-other, and often unlike themselves.

Poets and novelists may, to a great degree be responsible for the average man's opinion of women. The poets have ordinarily used her as a vehicle of possion and romance; as a source of light to set off the darkness of men's sins. She has been portrayed as their better angel, as turning them from vicious courses, as comforting them in illness and affliction, a recompensing and blessing them after all their trials with her unalterable love. This she frequently does, though she frequently does the apposite; but the apposite is rarely de-scribed in verse. Poets so idealize women that they are upt to think it suspectic, a violation of their art, to show that she may at times be so cruel as almost to drive a man to despair and destruction, through his faith in and worship of her. When they present a and worship of her. really wicked woman, they so over paint her, so deprive her of common humanity, that she appears unreal and impossible. They do not know how, at least they seldom try, to delineate a woman in whom good and evil are struggling for the mastery, or a woman full of kindly, noble impulses, whose destiny is decided by the perverse, malign influence of her surroundings novelists err in the same manner, and their effect on the render is more direct, and more unfortunate because they assume to point life as it is, while the poets necessarily point the ideal. Thockeray, who owns the reputation of a close student of life, has but two kinds of women, the ambible but insight, and the elever but victors, indicative that goodss is incongruens with force and intellect Even Balzac, who, many think, has sounded every depth of the feminine heart, and whom Thackerny took as his no del, has in his no merous gallery of portraits charming saints in one new and hideous sinners in the other.

The two do not change places, do not melt into one another, until saint is sometimes lost in sinner, and sinner in saint. The senti-mentalists accept the pleasant personages as true; the cynics, rejecting those, accept the un-pleasant as true, and thus the opinion is strengthened that all women are alike, whether good or bad. Nature is immensurably in ad-rance of art, and always must be, and she makes a totally different revolution.

The individuality of warmer should be as

The individuality of women should be as clear as the moon in an unclouded sky. The in-dividuality of women exceeds the individuality of men, whom no one, except an incurable misanthrope, has ever charged with uniformity. It is a question if any one is properly qualified to generalize about women, as so many of us are in the habit of doing. Who can possibly make intimate acquaintances with a sufficient number of women to warrant a generalization? Who of us has ever really known more than two or three women, much less a hundred or a thousand, which still would not be enough for the purpose? Who has ever unraveled the profound mystery of one woman, even of his own wife? Husbands are often more ignorant of their wives than a stranger might be. Fundilarity may duil the sight, as prejudice blunts perception.

Men of a marked character are apt to be

Men of a marked character are apt to be drawn to women of a marked character—those of the same or a similar order. But the men, unmindful of the cosmic law that like seeks like, imagine that their feminine friends rep-resent the full range of their sex. Hence their broad deduction of the close resemblance between women, of their substantial identity under different forms and different names. They are concinced that they have gone to the root of the matter; that they have, so to speak, interviewed nature, and received her that answer, when they have merely been in tinal answer, when they have merely been in alliance with a few congenial persons.

Men deplorably ignorant, remarkably limit-ed by their organization and encompassment, are the most addicted to reporting what wom-en are or are not. If they know nothing else, they at least know women, and are free to say so. No wonder that women resent such as-surance from such a source. The idea of a born blockhead pretending to supreme wis-dom on a subject about which the best in-formed would hardly hazard a guess! No wonder that women object to classification under one head; that they would rather be re-garded in part as extremely selfish, deceifful, garded in part as extremely selfish, deceifful, mercenary, heartless, than be goody-goodied to a point of musea. They must be tired out with the iterations of cheap sentiment and fulsome flattery such as abounds in toasts at fulsome flattery such as abounds in tousts at masculine dinners, and in common masculine palacer they now insist that they want to stand for themselves, and for what they actually are, not for the silly, innter, spiritless creatures that the ages have handed down.

There are commonplace women as there are commonplace men; but fewer of those than of these. It is not to be doubted, indeed, if women as resulty results than other.

than of these. It is not to be doubted, indeed, if women so readily resign themselves to the conventional, hundram, vegetative round into which men so continually sink. While they are more helpless, more bound by custom and circumstances than men, they are more enger for light, for change, for betterment. The irrepressible individuality of women is denoted by its surrival of the enrity routine and hamperment to which she has been subjected. How witch in the case of several size jected. How often in the case of several sis-ters, who have been educated and trained in the same way, who have necessarily the same inheritance of blood, they are as dissimilar in taste, mind, character and temperament as if they had been born at opposite poles. The women in one section of this republic are widely different from those of another section. as in one State and one county they are differas in one State and one county they are different from women in another State and county. The process of differentiation goes steadily on, especially in the New World, to which the future points, and which the recompense of time awaits. The individuality of women is ever increasing in the direct line of the evolution. tion of humanity; and it naturally finds here its fullest and most significant exemplification.

FLOWERS IN LONDON WINDOWS

BY ROSE WILDER

T seems to be part of a Londoner's creed to cultivate flowers in window boxes; for in every dwelling, whether mansion, cottage, or tenement house, are plants of some sort, and they blossom and bloom as though it were a delight. In the drawing-room windows of a great house on Grosvenor Place (the Fifth Avenue of London) last summer were boxes of daisies. In one the large white daisy with yellow center, and in the other the beautiful yellow "ox-eye."
In the window of an adjoining house was a box of sweet alvesum and forest-me-nots responded to the care evidently bestowed on there, showing dainty foliage and millions of tiny blossoms, white and blue. The moist atmosphere of England induces wonderful results in this or any sort of gardening.

An English woman of my acquaintance in America attributes her remarkable success with house plants to her constant effort to provide moisture for the part of the plant above ground. She occasionally drenches the soil, and daily sprinkles the plants with cool water, and every fourth or fifth day refreshes every leaf or branch by dipping a sponge into a pail of cool water in which is dissolved a little custile scap and an atom of animonia, squeezing it over them. This she does so dexterously and quickly that it is no trouble, but as she declares, a great pleasure.

Her plant stands, one in the breakfast room where the rising sun glorifies every leaf and blossom, and another in her own "snuggery," dividing bonors with a small bookense of favorite authors, a desk, a sewing machine, and a couch with a dozen downy pillows, and adding a charm to all, are placed on squares of oil-cloth, so that all traces of the "sprinkling" can be easily removed.

"She suddenly looked surprised, and listened intently to a long message."

AN EVERY-DAY GIRL

Br Sarab Orne Jewett

PART THIRD

HERE were very few lidle hours when the month of August canoe in. The great house was as full as it could be, and all great house was as full as it could be, and all the girls were long early and late. Mrs. Preston, the housekeeper, often looked pale and tired, but she was never impatient with those young helpers who tried hard to do their work and had some conscience about it, even if they did make mistakes, or get a little behindhand. There were some girls who did vex her every slay, and who could not be trusted, and tried to take advantage. The little world of the guests knew almost nothing of the little world of those who served them, of its trials, or its hopes and ambitions. Mary Fleming had found some very kind friends among the guests in her corridor, and it even surprised her sometimes to find how anxious she was to please them and make them comfortable. She had learned to take good care of the pretty dresses as if they were her own, to hang them up carefully and protect them from the dust. Mrs. Freston had spoken to all the girls about this one day, and shown them exactly how to do certain little things that often came in their way, but some one had smartly said that she was not hired to be everybody's actly how to do certain fittle things that often came in their way, but some one had smartly said that she was not hired to be everybody's waiting maid, and many of the girls had given themselves as little trouble as possible on these grounds. Mrs. Preston was always say-ing that the people who came were guests of the house, and that one's duty to one's guest was usually plain. Politeness is a habit of doing the kindest thing in the kindest way, and sometimes it is the rudest person who needs one's kindness most. Mary Arley liked Mrs. Preston, but she was fond of her fun with the other girls, and a gay frolic was desirer to her heart than anything else. So it came about in time that Mary Fleming knew and loved Mrs. Preston the best of the two, not that she did not take her share of much of the fun that was always going on, but she had much that was grave and serious to think of about her home affairs and her own future, and then there was the new joy about John. She could not say anything yet about John.

things to anybody, but she felt sure of the sympathy of a wise, sweet, elderly woman like the housekeeper, who had known so much of the joys and sorrows of life.

The two Marys had a little room together next Mrs. Preston's own. They used to talk a good deal late at night about people and things, as girls will, and sometimes Mrs. Preston had to tell them to be quiet and to go to sleep. They grow very well used to her quick rap on the wall.

One night when Mary Arley was in the middle of an entertaining account of a battle between the colored head waiter and one of the porters, both being persons of great size and dignity, the familiar rap sounded, and then while they were still whispering and laughing softly they heard it again and again. "She wants something; I'll get up," said Mary Fleming, but Mary Arley said no, that she was only hushing them. "We weren't making noise enough for her to hear," in-sisted Mary Fleming listening; then she got up and hurried to the housekeeper's room. I've Mrs. Preston was really ill; there was an anxious moment or two before they per-suided her to let them go and wake the doctor.

smoded her to let them go and wake the dector.

"I always say that this hotel is just the same as a town. All sorts of people live in it," said our Mary, dressing as fast as she could. It was the middle of the night and the great house was still; before they could get back with the doctor Mrs. Preston was even more ill than before. "I'll take care of her," Mary Fleming told her friend, "If you can manage part of my work for me in the morning. Go to bed, Mary; that's a good girl, and I'll stay here."

The doctor was an elderly man who had been staying in the house all summer, and he looked at our friend earnestly as he came he looked at our friend earnestly as he came back to the room with some medicine. "Can you keep awake?" he asked. "Can I trust you to do just what I say, so that this good friend of ours may be a great deal bet-ter in the morning?"

ter in the morning?"

"Yes, you can trust Mary Fleming," said Mrs. Preston energy. "I will answer for her," and the doctor went on mixing his doses and giving the directions. After he went away Mary sat by the window. It was a lovely night; the waning moon was just rising behind the grent hills, and one by one their shadowy shapes stood out clear in the dim light. It was only a little after twelve o'clock, and for a girl who had been on her feet, quick and busy all day, the time until daylight seemed long. It was lucky that there was a good deal to do for Mrs. Preston at first, and then after awhile when she was better it was very hard to keep awake. She did not like to walk about the room or even to move for fear of waking the patient. Suddenly she noticed that the sky had a strange light in it that was not moonlight, down toward the south. Mary wondered idly what it could be; not north era lights, not moonlight: fires in the woods perhaps; but at that moment the strange red glow grew higher and spread wider. It was a great fire, and it was in the direction of her own bome! At that moment her own father and mother might be in danger. She leaned far out of the window and strained leaned far out of the window and strained her eyes to look and watch, and fairly shook with excitement and worry. There was no large village between the hotel and home. The great hotel and all its buildings scened as sound askeep on the long hill-slope as anybody under their roofs. The stillness was profound out of doors, and the sick woman slept quietly, free from pain at last, in her narrow bed at the other side of last, in her narrow hed at the other side of the room. The light was turned very low, and an open closet door shaded the room. At last Mary could not bear to look at the great red light any longer; she was afraid that she should forget and scream or cry aloud. She left the window and crept softly over to the bed and sat down on the floor by the foot and leaned her head against the edge. The tears stole down her cheeks; she could not help crying. Oh, if she could only fly to her mother! She covered herface and turned away from the light. It was still three or four hours before morning. She thought of all the troubles of their household at home, and could not see what she could do to help them. She must go on working for the small wages that she was only fit to earn, and give her father and mother what she could. Oh, if her father could get away from Dolton; he could not get well there and so he could not work, he had no money and there were too neary houses in Dolton already. There was no hope of either letting or selling theirs, and the weight of the mortgage would rouble them more and more. She never could let John Abbott weigh himself down with the burden of such failure and poverty. She had not known what to say to him when he talked on in his lighthearted way, making plans about what they were going to do together by and by.

In the gray dawn Mrs. Preston stirred and awoke. "Why, Mary dear!" she said, puzzled at first and then remembering. "Were you so frightened, child; have you been awake all night? Don't mind, I'm all right and an open closet door shaded the room. At last Mary could not bear to look at the zled at first and then remembering. "Were you so frightened, child; have you been awake all night? Don't mind, I'm all right now. I suppose that the doctor frightened you a little, but in a day or two I shall be quite myself again. Why, Mary deur, I'm very serry; come, creep into bed and go to sleep for a little while." But Mary was nirendy at the table measuring one of the small doses that the doctor had left.

She nelled the contains down. She felt stiff.

She pulled the curtains down. She felt stiff and lame; it was a great comfort to have something to do instead of sitting and think-ing of all the awful things that might or must have happened.

Early, before anyone else was stirring in the house, Mary beard the doctor coming along the corridor. He was a lame man and she knew the sound of his limping step, and went out to the sound of his limping step, and went out to meet him.

"You did not send the night watchman after me?" he said. "I am glad to hope that everything has gone well."

"Why, yes!" he said cheerfully a moment later. "You do your young nurse great credit!" and Mrs. Preston smiled.

"And my doctor, too." she said.

"You have done just as I told you," said the doctor to Mary, looking at the neclicine and a slip of paper. "Mrs. Preston was a very sick woman last night. I was very nauch worried after I went down stairs, and feared that I ought to have got somebody else to come and watch, but I thought that I could trust you and I was afraid of the bad effect of coming back and disturbing you."

trust you and I was afraid of the bad effect of coming back and disturbing you."

The housekeeper smiled. "Yes, you can always trust Mary," she said,

It was daylight now, the sun was fast com-ing up. Mary Flening's young heart was full of excitement, Thank God she was good for something in this world, but oh, her mother, and the great horrible light of the fire! She could not wait longer; she stepped out of the room and flew down stairs and knocked at the telegraph girl's little bedroom door in one of the lower corridors. "Oh, come, come of the lower corridors. "Oh, come, come quick, Nelly," she implored. "Ask what happened at Dolton last night; there was an an ful fire."

"What's the matter with you?" asked the sleepy girl, "You are as gray as ashes; have you been up all night?"

"Yes, yes! Don't talk. Come quick."

"But the office there won't be open yet." said Nelly Perrin, looking a little rueful at the loss of her morning map. Nevertheless, she hurried into her clothes, and starting off bravely, soon reached her desk at the office. Seating herself at her instrument, she said, impatiently: "You needn't drive me to pieces;" but after a few brief clickings she suddenly looked surprised and listened intently to a long message.

"The office in Dolton was burnt," she said gravely. "There was a great fire last night. I get word by way of Harrisville. Almost the whole town was swept by flames—the shoe factories and churches and business section. Oh, I'm real sorry, Miss Fleuning. I hope nothing happened to your house!"

But Mary had already gone, racing up stairs to tell Mary Arley the bad news, and the two poor children criest together and began their day's work with heavy hearts. Toward noon Mrs. Preston was so much better that they dared to tell her, and to ask if there was no possible way to manage so that they could go home.

Mrs. Preston's face looked pinched and pale home.

Mrs. Preston's fare looked pinched and pale on the pillow. "No, no, don't think about it," said Mary Fleming affectionately. "I know all about the people who are going to-day and the new ones coming to take their places. Mother would send me word if she or father were hart or anything. We'll see to our pitchers just the same as ever, won't we, Mary Arley? Your house is far enough out of the village not to be in much danger. Don't you worry, and I won't."

"I'm sure to be about the house to-morrow," said Mrs. Preston; "the doctor has been here worry, and I won't."

"I'm sure to be about the house to-morrow," said Mrs. Preston; "the doctor has been here again and says so. And Mr. Dennis sent me word to let you, Mary Fleming, do the best you can in my place to-day, and to send for him any minute you want him."

Mary Fleming's checks grew crimson. What would her mother say if she knew that she was useful enough already in this great establishment to be put into Mrs. Preston's responsible place even for a single day.

"I don't care who says she is young!" Mr. Dennis had said. "She's the most able and conscientious girl in the house. Not so quick as some, but if I could have twenty such girls I should take a long breath and think that it was a happy day for the hotel business."

Mary Fleming felt all that day as if she were made of something curiously light, and flew about as if she never needed to stop. The fatigue and excitement stimulated her wits and her energies. Even the worry about the fire was indistinct and unreal in her mind, with the hurry and responsibility of the great inflow of near guests to the hotel. She went with winged feet from room to room, directing two or three girls here and doing something herself as it ought to be done there, and now finding a few minutes to ask Mrs. Preston for advice and orders. There were only a few people in the botel who knew much of Dolton, and they could learn nothing more than the first news in the morning. Toward supper time, when her cares were over, she put on a fresh cool gingham dress, it is always the best way to begin to rest to take off one's "tired clothes," and then she went out to watch for John Abbott. It was his day to come over from the farm.

"They kissed and kissed each other."

Next morning early there came a short mes-Next morning early there came a short massage to Mary Fieming from Mr. Dennis that if she liked to go home to Dolton for the day there would be no objection, provided she could arrange for her work among the other girls. She felt tired enough as sile got up and went to see Mrs. Presson, who was already up and equal to some part of her cares. She kissed poor sleepy, anxious Mary, and told her by all menns to go at once, and to ask the clerk to have her sent down to the railway station in time for the first train. She must not think about the work, either; it should all be managed, and she must not come back until early morning. The new people in the confridors were welcome guests, very quiet and considerate, apparently, except one or two. So corridors were welcome guests, very quiet and considerate, apparently, except one or two. So off flew our triend, and an bour or two afterward Mary Fleming, feeling bewildered enough, was finding her way across the open smoking space where the Dolton House had stood, and all the Dolton shops and churches. She had heard on the way down that her father's house was saved—the fire came almost to the next door; but when she walked up the little street, littered still with cinders and miscellameous heaps of household furniture, and then caught sight of the house, and of the two green pear trees that stood by it, and bad unlatched the gute and walked up the little side path, opened the kitchen door and saw her mother, she was the most delighted, conher mother, she was the most delighted, con-tented girl in the world:

They had never been separated so long be-fore. They kissed and kissed each other, for-getting to be restrained and undemonstrative.

getting to be restrained and undemonstrative.

"How womanly and wise you look to me!"
said Mrs. Fleming, impulsively. "You aren't my same old going to-school Mary at all!"

"I've been in a good school up there," said Mary, smiling. "You don't know how good Mrs. Preston is; I feel as if I were going to be learning of her all the time. Oh, there are so many things I've been keeping to tell you!
But tell me how father is and I want to know But tell me how father is, and i want to know all about the fire,"

"Have you been keeping something to tell the about John Abbott, I wonder?" asked

Mary's mother,
"I suppose so," answered Mary, much confused. "Why, has he said anything to anybody yet?"
"He has," said Mrs. Fleming.

behaved like a man. I suppose neither of you will ever think of anylody else. But there's plenty of time ahead to think of get-ting married."

ting married."

"Yes, of course," Mary spoke dutifully. But to be just past nineteen herself, and to have John within a week of his twentieth birthday, seemed old enough to ratisfy the most exacting. They had great plans for making themselves useful and for making money upart before the time should come for being married; but Mary no longer thought that a crowded country village was the only place in which to live. She had learned in these few weeks to feel at home among the green fields and the hills, and John's plans for getting a and the hills and John's plans for getting a farm of his own just as soon as he could

It was an exciting day in Dolton, or in what was left of the poor little town; and Mary and her mother went out and tried to find and to console some of their homeless neighbors The Fleming house was crowded with such people already, and Mr. Fleming was so busy that he could hardly find time to speak to Mary, though he welcomed her with delight.

Mary, though he welcomed her with delight.

That evening, after she had refreshed herself with a long sleep in the late afternoon, and had had a quiet supper of bread and milk in her old childesh fashion, she joined her father and mother, who were sitting on the door-steps. The green grapes hung in heavy clusters on the old vine, and the pears were beginning to look brown and shiny on the two pear trees. She loved them in a new and two pear trees. She loved them in a new and unexpected way because they reminded her of the country. She could not help remember-ing how at a loss she was that day in early summer when school had finished, and she did not know of anything to do with her in-competent self, and feared that she was going to be a failure in life. How busy and how happy she had really been, and how fair the future looked now,
"Yes," her father was saying, "I've done pretty well with picking up old jobs of car-pentering, and with your belp that you sent us home; and, you know, we're had some boarders that strayed along; but now that's all past, and I'm going to do what your mother has niged me, go back up country again; 'twid be better for my health and your ragain; twitt be better for my health and your mother's, too. I may's well tell you that Farley, of our old shoe firm, has offered to buy me out on this place. They were well insured, and are going to rebuild, but it's going to be hard work scratching along in Dollon for a man like me, and I want to go back up country where your mother and I were born and used to know everybody. John Abbott's a good boy; I nin't got one thing to say against John. Only the week before last he was down here and stopped over a train, and was triging me to move up near where he is: there's a good small farm that he's got his eye on, and he said he'd put something he's saved with mine. I was short with him that day, for what I owned here was only a burders. But now, if Farley gives me now price, why I'll pay off the mortgage and I'll go up and see that little place and I ake it."

Mary listened eagerly; it seemed strange to have her father so interested and pleased, telling her his plans, and making a new life for himself. She thought, with great happiness, of John's guariness and heliofulness to her discounged father. Perlines, by and by, she and her mother could take some people to board for the summer. She would learn everything she could, and do her best for her guests, strangers and foreigners though they neight be, if ever this plan came true. It was a lovely and rewarding thing to make people a home in strange places, to make them like the place, and like you, and be contented and happy themselves.

"Father," said Mary, suddenly, "are these pear trees too large to move?"

year trees too large to move?"

"Yes; I suppose they are," answered Mr. Flensing, turning to look at her with a smile.
"You ought to know enough to know that."

"Perhaps we could have a graft or something," said Mary, "and a piece of the grape vine to carry away; there are some things that I like about this bouse, if it is in the village! I was so sorry when I thought it was burnet. When did any of you see Aunt Hannah? I was just thinking of that day when she came along last spring and I cleared up she came along last spring and I cleared up the yard."

"That was the day you first began to take hold, wasn't it?" said her father, reflectively.

"I seemed to be lettin' everything go myself, but now I'm goin' to begin all over again. I took to this plan o' John Abbott's from the first. No; we haven't seen Aunt Hammh since."

she came along last spring and I cleared up

The next morning early Mary was all ready to begin her work at the hotel again. It seemed so beautiful to look out of the car windows and see the broad, quiet landscape winows and see the broad, quiet landscape after a day spent in the desolated village with its excited, disturbed people, its slow trails of smoke, and whiffs of acrid ashes that blew about with every breeze. And John Abbott, boyish and enger, with all his manly strength and soberness, John Abbott came over to see her after dark, and they talked about their hance future together.

her after dark, and they talked about their happy future together.

"It seems as if nothing ever happened to me until this summer, and then everything happened at once," said Mary Fleming, "New, what do you think that Mrs. Preston told me to-day? She has been with Mr. Dennis two winters in that splendid New York hotel, and he thinks everything of her; and he wants her to have no neighbout housekeeper and she her to have an assistant housekeeper, and she says that I may have the chance. What do you think the salary is from the first of No-vember until we come tack here in the sumweighter until we come tack here in the sum-mer?" and she told him.

"Dear me?" said John Abbott. "Why, that's amazing! but I can't have you going off to New York; how can I?"

"Oh, yes, John," said Mary. "It would give us such a start; it would help us out splendidly. Now, let's be good, John! It's all Mrs. Preston's gift, too. She has helped me and taught me everything. I'm only an every-day girl, but I have my work, and I smevery-day girl, but I love my work, and I sup-pose a good many girls don't."

"But when we have our own house, John," she said shyly, booking at him with a dear smile, "one person is always going to have a corner whenever she wants it, and that's Auna somer whenever she wants it, and that's Auna Hannah. I was just as cross and miscrable as I could be that day has spring, and I didn't see my way one step ahead. I suppose it's just so with lots of girls beside me. She just taked to me a little while, and told me what I've often said since, that it isn't what you do, but how you do it, that builds your reputation. She said that we could be famous for doing the commonest things, and talked to me that way as nobody ever had before; and something struck a light for me that I've gone by and lived by ever since. I shall be grateful to Aunt Hannah as long as I live. Don't you remember that day last spring when you came down to Dohon and I was trying to tie up the grape vine and you beloed me?

came down to Dolton and I was trying to be up the grape vine and you helped me?"

"I do," said John Abbott. "And we went to waik and stood on the little bridge."

"Don't go yet," said Mary. "I want to tell you something more. I never used to like father, and now I begin to think everything of him. I used to be cranky myself, and then when he was cranky I hadn't a bit of patience. I've learned one thing in this houseful of girls this smoomer, and that is if one comes down this summer, and that is if one comes down cross in the morning she can set all the rest of us by the ears. I used to think 'twas other people's fault if I was cross; but I have found out long ago that sometimes it's my fault if All those things are so," replied John Abbutt scherly, "Come, Mary, who do you think is stopping over at the farm this minute?"

"Why, I don't know," said Mary, ing.

It's Aunt Hannah," said John, "Mrs.

Haines has always known ber; she happened along last night, and she says she wasn't very for from here, and she had heard about the new hotel."

"Why, the dear old thing! Oh, John, why, the dear old thing? Oh, John, do bring her over, and Mrs. Haines, too, and I'll show them round. Oh, Aunt Hannah likes pretty things so much she'll have a beautiful time. I'll take her to see my lovely Mrs. Duncan in the east corner rooms. I told Mrs. Duncan about her one day, and all her pretty old-fashioned ways, and how she goes about the esuntry, and her good sayings and all her funny stories; she said she wished she could

"I dure say I can come," said John prompt-"Twould be such a treat for both of them. All the women folks think the hotel is a kind of a palace." course it is," exclaimed Mary, "and I'll tell you one thing, John; the people out of cities think just as much in their turn of knowing country people and seeing how they do things. It makes 'em have a great deal better time up here to know somebody on the farms, and be asked in and taken notice of; it really does. You know Aunt Hannah always says that there ain't but a few kinds of people in the world, but they're put in all sorts of different places. Ob, I do think it's really beautiful to be here; and I lest all that time when I was growing up just because I hadn't found out how to enjoy myself. I thought for ever so long that an every-day girl hadn't a hit of a chance, and now I think that nobody's chance in the world is half so happy as mine. There is something won-terful that comes and helps us the minute we really try to help our-

COURTSHIP AT THE CHURN

BY S. K. BOURNE

HE-O leave that hateful churning ! For your company I'm yearning! How reluctantly I'm turning To the woods and fields away 1

-Pray do not stand and tease, sir! Go as quickly as you please, sir! Do not wait at all for me, sir, I must stay and churn to-day. Hark! I have begun already, And the cream says "Flap a-tap," And my arm is strong and steady, "Flap a-tap, a-tap, a-tap."

HE-Will it take you all the day, dear? Can I help you if I stay, dear? Come and welcome back the May, dear, Welcome back the lovely spring!

SHE-Oh, I fear 'twill be too late, sir, And too long for you to wait, sir, Better seek some other mate, sir. I've no time to laugh and sing! See! how rapidly I'm turning! And the cream says " Flop a-top; On, I love the work of churning! "Flop a-top, a-top, a-top!"

Ht-Dear, you know how I adore you; How my heart is longing for you, Since the time when first I saw you Full of girlsh life and joy !

Do not speak of trifles now, sir; Say good-bye, and make your bow, sir. Sentiment I can't allow, sir, Work must all my mind employ. Hark 1 I do believe I hear it! For the cream says "Flump a-tump," And the butter sure is near it! "Flump a-tump, a-tump, a-tump!"

Ht-Your indifference is killing! And your answers, hard and chilling, Show too well a heart unwilling; I will leave you to your churn!

SHE-Really now, 'twas all in fun, dear; See, my work is almost done, dear ; And my heart is fairly won, dear, Take it for your own! Yes, my heart is in a flutter! For the cream says "Swish a-wish!" And-Hurra! there comes the butter! " Swish a-wish, a-wish, a-wish ! "

HOW TIME IS REGULATED

BY CLIFFORD HOWARD

WAY out at the west-ern end of the city of Washington is a wooded hill overlook-ing the Potonne, and forming part of a large government reserva-tion or park, which reaches down to the river's edge. On the top of this hill, remote from all the other public buildings in Wash-ington, stands the United States Naval Obrvatory.

This branch of the Navy Department is of great service to the government, and plays a very important part in the daily affairs of the country; for it is here that standard govern-ment time is reckoned for the use of the departments, and for the primary purpose of testing and rating the chronometers used on testing and rating the chromometers used on the United States war vessels, and it is from this observatory that standard time is regu-lated all over the country.

Precisely at moon each day it sends out an electric signal to the various government offices and buildings throughout the District of Columbia, and, by means of the telegraph, this same signal is flushed over the United States at the same instant.

In order that this signal may be sent out at

In order that this signal may be sent out at the right time, it is necessary that the officers in charge of the government time service at the observatory should know at just what instant the sun crosses the seventy-lifth meri-dian, or is directly above the meridian seventy-five degrees west longitude, which, as you have learned, is one of a number of imaginary lines stretching from pole to pole across the earth's surface, and reckoned ac-cording to their distance east or west from Green wich. Now, this seventy-fifth meridian has been chosen as the standard for regulating time, so that when the sun gets exactly over that line it is twelve o'clock at Washington, eleven o'clock at Chicago, ten o'clock at Denver and nine o'clock at San Francisco; for, as you perhaps know, according to this system of standard or "railroad" time (it being originally adopted for the convenience of the railroads) the country is divided into four sections—Eastern, Central, Mountain and Pacitic—each just one hour in advance of the other, and time at all places in the same section is the same. Accordingly, when it is noon at Washington it is also noon at Philadelphia, New York, Boston and every other place included within the eastern section This, of course, is not strictly correct, for it is really moon at only such places through which the seventy-fifth meridian happens to pass, as the true mounday of a place is when the sun is directly overhead. Washington, for example, is on the seventy-seventh meridian, or two degrees farther west, and, consequently, according to its local time it is only eight minutes of twelve, while the true time of Boston, which is four degrees to the east, is sixteen minutes in advance. But if every city were to use its own time it would, in many cases, give rise to a good deal of confu-

was give rise to a good steat of continuous and inconvenience; and it was for the very purpose of avoiding this that the present system of standard time was adopted.

As we have seen, the time for sending out the moon signal from Washington is the instant the sun crosses the seventy-fifth meritian. This however is not the sun which dian. This, however, is not the sun which gives us light and heat, but an invisible imagipersons inguitance, but an invision many mary one; because, for certain reasons, the true sun does not cross the meridian at the same moment every day, but during one part of the year he gets over it a little more ahead of time such day, and during the other part he is correspondingly behind time; and so this fictitious sun is used, because its apparent that have much the costs brines it exactly over path around the earth brings it exactly over the same line at the same moment every day. Now at just what instant this sun crosses the meridian is determined by means of the stars; for time at the observatory is not reckoned by the sun, but by the stars.

Every clear night an astronomer at the ob-servatory looks through a large telescope for certain stars which he knows must cross a certain line at certain times, and by the use of an electrical machine he makes a record of the time each star passes, as shown by a clock which keeps sidereal or star time. He then consults a printed table, which shows him at just what time each star must have passed. and by as much as this time differs from that recorded by the clock the latter is wrong, and in that way the sidercal clock is regulated. This star time is then reduced to sun time, which requires some calculation, as there is a difference between the two of about four minutes each day, a sidereal year consisting of just one day more than a solar year.

These two clocks—the one keeping star time, and the other sun time—are of very fine quality, and are as now perfection as possible.

time, and the other sun times—are of very fine quality, and are as near perfection as possible. Although they enunot help being affected by changes of temperature and different conditions of the atmosphere, they very rarely are more than a fructional part of a second out of the way. No attempt is ever made to correct such errors, but they are carefully noted and allowed for in making calculations.

For the purpose of distributing time a third clock, known as a transmitter, is used. This is set to keep time by the seventy-lifth meridian, and is regulated by the standard clock before mentioned. It is, in all respects, similar to the other clocks, except that it has attached to it an ingenious device by which an electric circuit may be alternately opened and closed with each beat of the pendulum. This clock controls two such circuits, one of them being used for dropping the Washington time-ball, and the other one connecting with the several telegraph instruments, known as measures which stand on a community be the several telegraph instruments, known as repeaters, which stand on a case near by. Toese instruments in turn connect with the telegraph company's offices at Washington and New York, and control the Washington fire-nlarm circuit and the observatory clock line. By means of the former the alarm bells in all of the fire-engine houses in the city are struck, the horses unhitched and the doors thrown open, all by a single spark of elec-tricity, just as is done when an alarm of fire is sent in; for the moon signal to the engine houses is used for the additional purpose of the first is used for the additional purpose of striking the alarm for the daily practice of the fire department. The observatory clock-line connects with the several hundred clocks in the government offices and buildings, in-cluding the White House and the Capitol, and sets them to correct time at moon by means of a singular mechanical device in such clock sets them to correct time it noon by means of a simple nechanical device in each clock, operated by electricity; so that, whether a clock loses or gains during the twenty-four hours, its hour and minute hands spring to twelve, and its second hand to sixty.

A few minutes before noon the transmitter is compared with the standard clock, and if it is not found to be exactly eight minutes, twelve seconds and nine one hundredths of a second ahead of the standard clock (that being the exact difference between Washington and standard time) it is set right by making it gain or lose, as the case may require, by quick-ening or retarding the pendulum with a gentle touch of the finger.

At lifty-six minutes and forty-five seconds after eleven, everything being in readiness, a switch is turned on, and the next instant the beats of the pendulum begin to tick the seconds on the telegraph instruments in the Washington and New York telegraph offices. At this signal all work on the telegraph lines is at once suspended, and connections made from one office to another, from town to town, and from State to State, until the tick, tick of the clock at Washington is heard in the telegraph office of every railroad station, town and city in the United States.

Every twenty-ninth tick is omitted, because there is no signal goes out at the twenty-ninth second: so that a name of a second that the next click of the instrument will mark half a minute, or thirty seconds, and the first click, after a pause of five seconds, in-dicates the beginning of a minute, as the ticks corresponding to the fifty-fifth, fifty-sixth, fifty-seventh, fifty-eighth and fifty-ninth seconds are omitted. In order to distinguish the last minute, and afford time for making connections with time-balls, clocks, etc., the sig-nals stop at the fiftieth second, or ten seconds before twelve

Then, precisely at noon, the instant the sun rosses the seventy-fifth meridian, the signal is flashed over the wires, there is a single throb from one end of the land to the other, the telegraph instruments from Maine to California give a final click, the time-ball on the building of the State, War and Navy Depart-ments drops, and, simultaneously with it time-balls drop at Havana, Cuba, and at all the prominent scaports from Boston to New Orbenns, those on the Pacific coast being op-erated by a branch observatory in California, the hands of every government clock point to twelve, while the fire-alarm bells through-out the city of Washington sound forth their changerous announcements of poon, and the whole nation is informed of the correct

"What should a little Shaker maiden know of love?"

A CHILD OF EARTH

By Belle C. Greene

GH up among the hills, as if desirous of getting literally near to beaven, is perched the Shaker settlement where the scene of our story is haid. It is yet early morn-ing, but the thrifty Com-munity is all astir, and the sounds of labor in mill and workshop can already be heard.

already be beard.

At an open window of one of the buildings known as the cromen's dormitories stands lit-tle Sister Janet. She is very young, not more than sixteen years of age, and her close lace cap and severely simple dress only render more conspicuous the fresh, radiant beauty of her face, and the remarkable grace of her figure Lenning far out of the window she inhale the morning air fuxuriously and looks off upon the familiar landscape of pine-clod hills and green valleys that stretch away to the great city and the life beyond. A wistful look croeps into her eyes, and she drops her head upon her hatel and falls to dreaming. But not for long. The voice of an elder Sister pass-ing her door breaks the spell, and she hasters to complete her task of putting the room to rights before going down to breakfast.

This room of Janet's is a picture. Bare, securely simple, it yet has a quaint esthetic beauty of its own. The wood-work is stained a peculiar yellowish tint, the dark their is posished like glass, and brightened with home-water ways. polished like glass, and brightened with home-made rugs. The curtains are a marvel, and deserve special mention. They are of white-linen, starched very stiffly and in-med in plaits from top to bottom. They are fastened by brass rings upon a rod, and are allowed to hang straight down, or the plaits are gathered in a mass and hooped high up on the side of the casement, over a fixture resembling a alsephend's crook. These are the regulation curtains throughout the house, and are as much a matter of pride to the Sisters as their raps or shoulder capes. raps or shoulder capes.

A dainty white bed in one corner, a modest toilet table and chest of drawers to match complete the furnishing; no, we must not forget the stove, a little cast from affair, about the size and shape of an ordinary family lost of bread, in which, however, no fire is allowed, even in winter, except in case of illness,

Her room in order at last, Janet hastens down the polished stairway and outers the great dining room, where she seats herself be-side the Sisters, opposite a long row of Brothers.

They breakfast in silence, not a word being spoken, except to the Sisters in mailing, who stand behind the chairs mute, but alert to

When the meal is finished all go about their respective duties, for there are no drones in a Shaker community, Sister Janet is a teacher in the school, but this morning when she rose from the table Eldress Rachael laid a hand on her arm to "Sister Janet," she said, "one of your friends from the world has come to call upon you. We will go to the sitting room and see him."

The sitting room sloor was wide open, and the young man who stood by the window did not bear the light footfalls of the two wom-

Janet never forgot how Robert Kilton looked that first moment when she saw him standing there, his magnificent blond head and handsome face glorified in the morning sun that streamed in upon him. In truth, he seemed a very different sort of man to the good bretbren with whose appearance she was so families.

familiar.

Mother Rachnel cleared her throat suggestively, and their visitor turned toward them, introducing himself with the ready fact of a man of the world.

"You have forcetten me, I see," he said to Janet, smiling. "Perhaps I do not deserve to be remembered, being only a cousin far removed, and not having seen you since you were a very little girl; but I was traceling through the place and could not pass without calling upon

You."

The eyes that smiled at him from under the little close cap spoke a narmer welcome than any words could have done, and the two were soon the best of friends. Eldress Rachoel berself, be it said, was scarrely behind her younger sister in yielding to the charm of their visitor's presence and conversation: visitor's presence and conversation; so that when an hour had passed, and he finally took his leave, both felt that a bright bit of the catside world had come into their lives, and gone all too quickly.

Janet stood for a morount by the window natching him as he went away down the hill, and suddenly, as if councious that her eyes were following him, he trenest, doffed his har any waves to create which but and waved a graceful adies. Then lanet blushing, trembling, she knew not why, drew back hastily and ded to the school room, where her scholars came swarming around ber as usual, claiming her full at Old looking children these scholars were. The girls had little, old, plain faces, and were long-sleeved called appears and frocks down to their locals. The large were still more quantifactive if possible, with their hair cut square across the fore-head, and reuring conts and trousers like their elders. They seemed in truth, both boys and girls, only grotesque raricatures of their grown-np brettern and sisters. But such as they were, Janet had always loved them, or, pechaps the feeling had been only a deep and tender pity, for to her heart she knew that these children were deprived of the real birthright of childhood. She had a far-away but quite distinct recollec-tion of a bonse life altogether dif-ferent, which appeared to her new like a heaven of delight; a bonse where she had been a per and a phything. Visions of early and dainty dresses, of curis and ornaments, of merry coupling games and fascinating toys new part and purcel of larself, often cause to her even now in her dreams. She rememher even now in her dreams. She remem-bered also, with an exquisite thrill of bliss, being ki-sed and wept over, and clung to, as if she were some precious thing that must be relinquished—and then her life here begin, the life which had thus far been not unhappy, only empty and dull.

But to-day it had been suddenly filled and brightened. Her short interview with Robert Kilton had changed all things. The thought of him, of his words, his smalle, filled her with joyens excitement. She left that she should never be dull any more; just to re-member him was happiness enough. In her innocence she little dreamed that this was but the beginning of a great unrest. What should a little Shoker woulden know of hom? the beginning of a great unrest. What s a little Stuker maiden know of love?

The next day at noon, when Janet was going from school to the women's workshop to look after some of her scholars' clothes that had been left there for requir, she suddenly came upon Robert Kilton, whom she had supposed to be miles away by this time.

She started consciously at sight of him, for he had been so much in her thoughts that she felt almost as if he assessed now at her felt almost as if he appeared now at her summous, "No doubt you are surprised that I am still

"No doubt you are surprised that I am sombere," he began impetuously, stopping in the road before her, "but I could not go till I had seen you again. Tell me where and when cm I see you — alone?"

"Alone!" she repeated, drawing herself up with a pretty assumption of dignity. "That with a pretty assumption of dignity. "That would not be permitted here; it is contrary to our customs."

"But I must. I have that to say to you which concerns the life and happiness of as both!" he argued.
"How can that be?" she asked, wondering-ly, but she hastened to add: "I cannot stand here with you; if you indeed wish to see me again, come to the house as you did before. I — we — have no secrets —"

"No secrets! Ah, have we not?" he repeat-ed, his dark eyes seeming to pierce and read her yery soul.

ed, his dark eyes seeming to pierce and read her very soul.

She looked up at the old clock in the tower. One moment and it would toll the dinner hour and the "whole Community would see them together, if they had not already.

"Do not detain me longer, I beg," she en-treated, "I really cannot, must not stay!"

"Go, go then! But tell me first, will you be glad to have me come — tell me — one word!"

"Yen, yes! I shall be glad!" she mur-mured. "But oh, I fear me I ought not to say so!" And she sped away.

so!" And she sped away.

Robert Kilton stayed on in the little village at the foot of the hill, managing upon one pretext or another to visit the Shaker com-munity often, and to see Janet. One day his errand was to order socks and mittens made for his winter wear (the humor of the idea arousing him exceedingly); at another the idea amusing him exceedingly); at another time it was to procure a remedy of their man-nfacture of whose rare virtue he had heard; ufacture of whose rare virtue he had heard; and finally, at his wits' end for expedients, and having by this time won the confidence and good will of the simple-minded guardians of the house, he begged permission to bring his camern and photograph bits of the interior— the halls with their tiny paned windows and quaint furnishings of high-backed setters and huge desks; the beautifully carreed stair-cases each having a tall old clock standing cases, each having a tall old clock standing guard at its head; the dining room with its long white tables, over each of which depend-ed strange balloon-like ornaments cut in paper by the Sisters, and named mysteriously, "air

These visits, though affording occasional never came here to weep beside their buried loves. But in the spring of the year in which our story opens a little girl had died; she was one of Sister Janet's brightest scholars and a favorite with all the Community. Her grave Janet by special permission had undertaken to make beautiful. She had covered it with sods of grass, which she had kept fresh and green by watering. She had also transplanted several of the choicest plants from her own garden, so that the spot was now her own garden, so that the spot was now bright and fragrant, a striking contrast to the other graves around. Here Robert Kilton other graves around. Here Robert Kilton found her one afternoon, coming upon her by chance as he was returning from a tramp up the mountain several miles to the north.

He stood some moments leaning on the wall watching her, before she was aware of his presence. When he drew nearer and spoke her name, "Janet, cousin Janet!" she turned quickly, a flush of unmistakable joy in her face. in her face.

She had a watering-pot in her hand, and her little bounct hung by its strings down ber back. Her golden hair lay in fascinating disorderly rings upon her moist forchead, and her face was as radiant and rosy as that of a floral goldess. The young man thought be had never seen anything half so lovely.

"What! you here?" she said, smiling, "I thought perhaps you had left the town "—

"Oh!" he interrupted, reproachfully, you knew I could not go without seeing—without speaking to you of what is in my heart! and fate is kind at last!"

She looked embarrassed, and began hastily gathering up her belongings. had a watering-pot in her hand, and gathering up her belongings.

"It is nearly sunset; I must return," she

He took off his hat, and threw himself down under a tree.

"Oh! but I am tired and thirsty!" be ex-claimed. "I would give a good deal for a drink of water," looking askunce at the empty drink of water," looking askance at the empty watering-pot.

"Thirsty?" she cried, impulsively, "How glad I am that I can relieve you! Wait a moment, and I will bring you some water?"

She ran swiftly to a little spring that hy hidden away among the busics a few raddistant, and as swiftly returned with her watering-pot full of pure, cool water.

"I wish I had a cup to offer you," she said, apologetically, "but I made this as clean as possible, and it is new and bright."

He took it gratefully, and drank a long.

He took it gratefully, and drank a long, deep draught,
"That is good," be said, "but sit down a moment and rest; you must be tired."

moment and rest; you must be fired,"

"Oh, no! I am not tired, and I must be going," sht answered.

He rose up and stood leaning against the tree,

"Well," he said, as if acquiescing, though reluctantly, "but tell me first, have you thought of me a little since you last saw me?"

His eyes, half hunghing, half tender, looked straight into her own, and she answered;

"Yea, I have thought of you," then dropped her eyes, and setting the watering-pot on the ground she began nervously arranging her bonner strings.

Her manner, and the sweet admission of her words gave him bope.

"Janet!" he cried, eagerly, "I must speak out now, and you must listen. I love you: I have loved you since the first moment I saw you. Oh, Janet, try to understand!"

"You forget how we are taught to look upon marriage here!"

opportunities for cultivating the acquaintance of his new-found distint cousin, were far from satisfactory, but they served to deepen the im-pression she had made, and render him more determined to win her for his wife,

The old burying-ground was a deserted spot The neglected graves were overgrown with weeds and taugled vines. Among the Shakers hend-tones only occasionally mark the resting places of the dead, sometimes not even a mound is raised. Dust once given to dust rests in undisturbed repose. The Stokers

He stood still and waited, watching ber-face. She turned pale and trembled visibly. These were such strange words; and yet were they so strange, after all? Had she not al-ready heard and responded to something of their meaning in her forbidden dreams?

He seemed to read her thoughts.

"Have you never longed for a closer, denrer friendship than these Brothers and Sisters can give you?" he maked. "Have you never dramed of love, of what it would be? Oh, Jamet?" as she averted her flushing face, "do you not know what love is?"

He ventured to take her bonds and draw

He ventured to take her names and oran-her nearer, his eyes socking hers.

At the touch of his hand, the first man's hand that had thus clasped hers, the door of Janet's soul flew open, and love no longer knocked without. She knew love. Unconsciously she leaned against him, faint and dizzy from ecstacy—or was it pain? "Love!" she marmared. "Oh, I ought not to think of it, much less speak of it!" Then wrenching herself away, a look of hor-

Then wrenching herself away, a look of her-ror on her face, "Let me go! Oh, I must go!"

But he detained her with gentle force. "I cannot let you go—I will not—till you tell me what I must know. Tell me, I implore you, Jamet, and think well before you speak. Godd you ever love me commb to give yourself to you ever love me enough to give yourself to me - to be my wife?" To his surprise she drew herself up and answered with something like composure:

"You forget how we are taught to look upon marriage here. Virgin, not wife, is our ideal woman. To propose marriage to a Shakeress is almost to insult her."

He smiled gravely, and shook his head. "That is what you have been taught," he said, "but you do not believe it. You do not feel the offer of my love to be an insult; your heart tells you, and tells you truly, that love such as mine for you is the crown and glory of woman's life. of woman's life.

Not that I have a word to say against the faith in which you have been reared," he con-tinued, "but can it be that the Shakers alone, tioned, "but can it be that the Shakers alone, of all the world, think and live rightly? They are but a handful; is the great world wrong? But let the Shakers rest; they are suited in their religion and in their social life—we will hope they are content. You, Janet, are not content; you are no Shakerss at heart, certainly not in appearance. Why, here you are like some fragrant flower among a parden of weeds. Youth, beauty, an impossioned nature are yours. You are eminently fitted to enjoy life and love in their fullest, highest sense."

She only looked at him dumbly, she dared not speak. It was all so new, so hewlidering,
"Forgive me, I seem cruel," he plended,
"but I assure you if I did not think it to be for your highest happiness I would never

You say too much about happiness!" she burst out impatiently. "What is my happi-ness, what is yours, what are both together compared to the great object of life!"

"Very well, let us be uniscrable then," be said, seriously, "only let us be together."
She saw that he was laughing at her, and,

She saw that he was laughing at her, and, like the child she was resented it.

"You can join the Shakers, I suppose," she remarked demurely, "then I shall love you, we shall love each other. I love Elder Jonas and Brother Sanders and all the rest, and they love me, Join na." She repeated.

"I join the Shakers!" He threw back his head and laughed upreariously.

"I beg ten thousand purdons!" he gasped at last, hobbing on to his sides as he met Janet's half angry glanes, "but in all honesty and full respect to Brother Sanders and the rest, do you think I would make a good Shaker?"

She frowned severely and shook her head.

She frowned severely and shook her head.
"Nay, nay, I do not," she said.
"No, and why?" he asked, a little piqued

by her manner.
She eyed him critically from the top of his handsome head to the toe of his fashionable boot, and laughed alond.

Oh!" he said, with an air of chagrin, "am I to infer that you disapprove my—my personal appearance? You profer Brother Adoniram, perhaps?"

She clasped her little hands in an eestacy of enjoyment.

Oh, oh!" she cried by sterically, " you have "Oh, oh!" she cried hysterically, "you have seen him then! You know Brother Adonizant! Is he not droll? Why, I can never even look at him without haughing; and Mother Rachael says it is a shame and sin for me, homase he is so good. But I cannot help it, I cannot!" going off into another uncontrollable fit of laughter.

"But, now, how is this?" he asked, whimsically, "you laugh at me because I would not make a good Shaker, and you laugh at Brother make a good Shaker, and you lough at Bruther Admirium, who is, you say, an excellent Shaker. Tell me, are you not inconsistent?" "Yen, I am. I am indeed!" she agreed, nod-ding her bright head merrily.

She had forgotten everything in her mo-mentary happiness, and he would gladly have prolonged it, but he began to realize that it was growing late, and he must not detain her much longer "Jamet," he said, with sudden seriousness, pointing to the sinking sun, "I fear we must part—for to-day—and I ask you once more can you, will you, love me and be my wife?" The revulsion of feeling was painful. She turned upon him in a sort of desperation. "I do not know what to answer," she cried, her eyes dark with misery. "I only know that if you leave me the remainder of my life will be but a memory—of this hour with you. I—I—ob, what shall I do!"

She leaved against the tree and closed her

"Jamet," he said, softly, "you love me.
This is love. You spoke of my leaving you," he continued, "but those who love each other so should never part. Come with me to my mother; she will receive you and love you as a daughter."

The words "mother," "daughter," seemed to break the spell and recall Janet's senses. She snatched away the hand he had taken.

She snatched away the hand he had macen, "Oh! how could I for one moment forget!" she greaned, remorsefully. "Speak not to me of another mother! I have Mother Rachael me of another mother? I have Mother Rachael—and I should break her heart. Nay, nay? I will not go? I will do nothing without her consent, and I know she would never let noe leave her to go with you—a—a stranger.

"Forgive me that word," she mbled, grouby, "it sounds so ungrateful after the—the kindness you have shown me; but I have been very worked, very foolish. It only remains for its to part, forget this day and each other."

"Forget you, after you have confessed that you love me! Ah, Janet, you little know men. You are mine, and I shall hold you. Sooner or later you must yield to me."

But for the time the spell was broken.
Janet lifted her bend and said with spirit:
"I must? Nay, but I will not. Rather, I must school my wayward heart to rest content where duty keeps me. Let me explain : No ordinary love and duty bind me here. I am Mother Rachael's dearest, best beloved of all the Sisters. I am her child. When I am ill she watches over me with a mother's tenderness; in trouble she carries me on her heart; her sweetness and strength have been my hapher sweetness and strength have been my hap-piness and support always. Oh, you cannot know what a grand woman she is! And shall I forsake her for the friend of a day? Nay, nay! go, and let me try to forget you." She turned from him with a gesture of furewell. "I see that I have been rash," he said, sadly, "I should have given you time—I will give you time, not to lorget me, but rather to learn what bore is and how progretiess we are to pe-what love is, and how powerless we are to re-sist it. And now, since you desire it, I will beave you."

He uncovered his head as he spoke, bowed low before her, and with one adoring glance left her standing there, white and motionless, in the shadow of the great tree, her bright young head drooping forward on her breast.

And Janet went back again to the old life, but she was changed. A strange feeling of restlessness and discontent seemed to have come upon her, and she could not throw it off, struggle as she might.

The simple duties and pleasures of the little Community had suddenly become trisome and altogether unsatisfactory. New desires, new instincts took possession of her being and termented her. No longer content with reading the books allowed her in the library, she scarched in out of the way places for stray new-papers and books that told of the world, of society and love, seek-ing thus to satisfy the craving that was nontering her.

One day Eldress Rachael entering Jamet's room suddenly found her reading an old news-paper that had been brought from the village ture wrapped around some parcel of goods. She had that moment finished a rather sensational story of two lovers, their unhappy love, and tragic death in each others' arms. Its effect upon her had been wonderful, and her face, as she turned toward her visitor, wore an expression of exaltation for surpassing any of religious emotion she had ever seen

Without a word Janet handed the paper to the Eldress, who hastily scanned its contents, and laying it down looked at her with a great pang of dread and fear at her heart.

Then Janet, weeping, threw herself at her friend's feet, crying out passionately.

"Oh! mother, Mother Rachnel! I am so miscrable! what shall shall I do; tell me what

And the woman who, for a score of years had chosen to know not love, save in its higher, spiritual sense, took this child of earth in her arms and listened to all her story.

Janet told her of the interview with Robert Kilton in the burying ground, and of the change that had been going on in her nature change that had been going on in her nature since first she saw him.

"And oh!" she said in conclusion, "if you knew how I have fought against may fate, how I have tried to keep on in the old, culm ways, you would not judge me harshly! And I to blanne? I did not go out to seek love, it came to me here. Who shall say but that fied binaself sent it! He made me as I am, a woman, not a saint, like you and the other Sisters. Your hearts are in Heaven, I know; mine, alas! is here!" Clasping her hands over her throbbing bosom: "And since I am made so, how can it be wicked for me to love?"

"If not wicked, is it not unwise, child?" said Mother Rachael, saily. "Tell me, has!" may be such you thus for more poin than said Mother Rachael, saidly. "Tell me, has it not brought you thus far more pain than happaness?" She looked into the young girl's face, her own strangely agitated, moved, perhaps, by some haunting memory of her own heart's stropple.

heart's struggle.

"More pain than happiness?" repeated Jaiset, drearily. "Nay, I cannot say; only this I know, that when he was with me I was happy, and now I suffer, suffer! Oh!" she continued, with a searching book of appeal into the elder woman's face. "Oh, you yourself must have felt—you surely understand"—"Nay, ray," interrupted Mother Rachard coldly. "You said aright a moment ago; my heart is I trust in heaven. I have little some beart is, I trust, in heaven. I have little sym-pathy with this weakness of yours. But it is not litting to prolong such converse. I will make your case the subject of my prayers, and pray yourself, child, pray!" she added earnessly, as she rose to go.

earnestly, as size rose to go.

But Janet seized her hand, "Stay! dear mother!" she pleaded, "I must tell you more. It is not love alone that has changed me. I have often felt of late that I am not first for this dear this life. this place, this life.

"You will remember a year ago I went to the city with you to sell our work and buy supplies. Being pressed for time, you sent me alone to deliver some sucks at a house not for from the store where you were trading. As I approached that house I heard sounds of music and dancing, and from where I stood waiting on the steps I could look within. It was a home. All was beautiful, warm, and light, and the music stirred my soul. Two young girls and two young men were dancing. One of the girls had hair like mine, I noticed, and she were a white dress with a great branch of red roses in her bosons. I noticed, too, that her feet were small and her shoes pretty.

"My first ring was not beard through all the music and the laughter, so I had plenty of time for observation. The two young non-were very handsome, and they certainly did not look wicked, but oh, so happy and my, and I thought, "why are our young people never so? Only the cattle in our pastures are allowed to be frisky and gay," and I wished that it were different.

"When I came away from that house I was a different girl, and I began to be curious about many things to which I had never given a thought before. I have often felt disturbled thought before. I have obten test disturbled and restless, I have had strange dreams and yearnings, but believe me, I loved you always, always! and for your sake I strove to put them all away. Then he came and woke my soul to all away. Then he came and woke my soul to love, and these vague thoughts and impulses took on more definite shape. Ok! Mother Rachael, I find I am no saint, only a woman, and all my struggling is in vain. Though my loody lingers here with you my spirit rows far away to the great world outside. Mother Rachael, let me go! Let me go! "she repeated, "let me follow my heart and soul down and away; neross the valleys and over the hills, out into the world beyond."

For one moment the Eldress bowed her head in silent anguish, perlangs she prayed.

For one moment the Eddress sower her bear in silent anguish, perhaps she prayed.
"Child," she said at length, tremulously, "child, it may be the will of God that you go. We will see. Meanwhile, pray! pray as you never prayed that He will give you hight."
She took Janet for one moment in her arms, and then held here user layet, who arange and then left her; poor Janet, who scarce knew whether to weep or rejoice.

Two weary mosths dragged by, and at last one morning Mother Rachael came to Janet and said: "Child, Robert Kilton is here. He Janet started up with a cry of delight and walked toward the door, then turned and fell on her knees before Mother Rachaei.

"Forgive me, my mother, my more than nother!" she cried remorsefully. "I am not ungrateful, oh believe me! I do love you-better than all the world-except him!"

The Eidres stooped and gathered her to ber My child, my dear one!" she murnoured brokenly, "you say well; I am indeed your more than mother, for lot have I not strug-gled with throes of more than mortal agony to bring you forth into the beavenly light. Yes, you are none, my own, my best beloved one! Would to tied I could keep you—but Itis holy will be done!"

"Say no more! I will never heave you!"

sobbed Janet possionately. "Come! let us go quickly and tell him so!"

"Hush, child! you know not what you say," returned the Eldress with an effort at comporetirined the Eldress with an effort at compos-ure, "and do not weep so. Doubtless I shall find comfort. Imbeed," with a tender smile, "to know that you are happy will be no in-sufficient return for my sacrifice." Janet never forgot that glimpse into the beart of for Shaker mother, that beart at ource so strong and loving, and so unselfish.

The meeting between the two lovers was a quiet, almost a soleron one. After exchang-ing greetings they renained standing before the Eldress, who bowed her head a moment in silent prayer, then turning to Robert Kilton addressed him in these words:

"Young man, since receiving your letters in reference to Sister Janet, expressing the desire to unite yourself with her in marriage sire to unite yourself with her in marriage ofter the manner of the world, we have endeavored to find out the will of God in the matter; also, we have made it our duty to inquire into your life and character. We find nothing amiss in you. That you are not a Shaker may be the fault of circumstances," she added with a grim smile, "all are not among the elect."
Then with a tender gasee she placed Janet's hand in his and said; "In this Community hand in his and said: "In this Community we neither marry nor are given in marriage: but as it seems to be the will of God 1 give this girl, this child of my heart, into your care and keeping, and as you fulfill the trust, so be it unto you.

raised her hand in silent benediction above the two bowed heads, and thus their love was sanctioned.

THE CARE OF AUTOGRAPHS

BY VINGINIA ROBIE

the autograph collector always

O the autograph collector always comes the question: How shall I preserve my autographs? Shall they be pasted in an album or placed in a portfolio? To the first, no, most emphatically, for one must arrange and rearrange from time to time. The best of paste cracks or "cockles," and in the case of letters and documents pasting becomes at once impracticable. On the other hand, a portfolio is not the safest of repositories, and the autographs are liable to become deficed by handling. defacts) by hamdling.
A sample and effective way is the following:

Arrange poets, painters, musiciaus, authors, etc., in separate groups, and have for each a Next choose a quotation for each en-

The one containing poets, might have: "God's prophets of the beautiful, These poets were,"
ELIZABETH RESONNESS.

The musicians: "Their instruments were various In their kind,"

The authors:

arthors : "An author! '08 a venerable name." You so. The painters:

The master's hand, which to the life can trace. The appetations may be written or painted in old English or German letters. If parehment be the chosen paper, singly a broad pen and black ink may be used with good effect. Then if one wishes to decorate a little, a bar of notice might be added to the nonscious' en-velope; a polette and brush to the painters', a scroll and quill to the authors', and so on as fancy may dictate.

One large cuvelope made to order at any stationer's will hold the smaller ones, and when finished with its quotation, the auto-graphs are in a peat, compact form, ready to show to other collectors,

WOMEN BEHIND THE COUNTER

BY IDA M. VAN ETTEN

ST OF THE WORKING WOMEN'S SOCIETY!

HOUSANDS of girls of the better class, who have bad good school facilities, and many who havegone through normal colleges expecting to teach, and failed to obtain positions, turn to the stores for employment. They consider working in a store a higher grade of employment than working in a factory. They forget that it is harder work, and that the pay is less. A few women in every store are paid good wages, and some are exceptionally well paid. But take an entire store through, the average pay is less than that in a factory. It is difficult to average the wages of girls in shops, for the reason that different places pay different rates, and the pay varies in the same place. Hundreds of eash girls sell notions and fancy articles while they are still paid as cash girls, and get only from $2.50 to $3.00 a week. These may be employed several years before their pay is increased to $4.00 a week. After they become good sales women they are paid $6.00, and even more in some establishments. A fortunate few are paid $25.00 a week; but they are women who are thoroughly familiar with the business, having worked up from much lower positions, and are possessed of exceptional ability. They are given charge of a department, or are buyers, or hold some equally responsible position. The wages paid to these exceptions should not be an incentive to others looking for situations, as there is room for but a few in these important positions. It is safe to say that women of corre-sponding ability make more money in almost any other employment than they do in this. Even when they are heads of departments, or buyers for the big retail stones, women are pool much lower salaries than men who oc-empy similar positions. In some cases they re-ceive one-third less. In many cases they get only half of what is paid to men. It is difficuli to learn just what women in shops are paid, as they are not organized, and are at the pand, as they are not organized, and are at the metry of their employers, and when asked what they receive, bed ashamed of their low pay and are inclined to exaggerate the sum. Employment in stores is an unbealthy occu-pation. The standing and the poor ventilation make it that. In only a few of the better class of shops is the air good. This and the long hours make the existence behind counters especially unhealthy. Ordinary hours are from eight o'clock in the morning until six o'clock at night, through the week, and until len o'clock on Saturday night. The stores are supposed to close at ten o'clock, but it is considerably later than this before the employes get their work finished, and it is nearly midnight before they reach their bonnes. This would be bad enough on any day of the week, but it is particularly so on Saturday. The girls lie in bed until moon on Sunday to get rested, and the only holiday in the week is spoiled. It is cruel to keep girls standing from rested, and the only normal in the week as spoiled. It is cruel to keep girls standing from eight o'clock in the morning until ten o'clock at night, as is done in the large stores every Saturday, and for two or three weeks before Christmas every day in the week.

The long hours that are exacted of saleswomen on Saturdays and at holiday times are not accompanied by any extra compensation. Some stores have saleswomen in the basement where the poor ventilation and the heat, caused by keeping the gas lighted all day, combine to produce a most unhealthy atmosphere. Girls who are required to stand and sell goods all day in these places are often overcome, and are carried out in a fainting condition. The rules of many establishments are arbitrary and un-The girls are fined for lateness, which is not so bad as the other fines for talking, laugh ing, singing, or failure to put away their agrous when the work of the day is ended. Often at the end of the week a girl who is careless finds that marry all of her wages is used up in fines. In factories, the law compels employers to give an hour for dinner, but in stores the girls are obliged to wait their turn before wints to the hunds are to the law to the before going to the lunch room. In the busy season only a few are allowed to go at a time. and it is often four or live o'clock before some of the girls get a chance to eat their mid-day meal. Eating in the store is forbidden at all times. It is no wonder that the girls faint, when they are compelled to stand all day without eating. Some of the better class of stores are more considerate, and even give one or two weeks' vacation with pay to the girls in the summer.

If the normal schools taught girls book-reping, many of them could become clerks and book-keepers instead of trying to get places as teachers, and when they find no place open to them turning to the stores and overcrowding them. Girls have few opporovercrowding them. Girls have lew oppor-tunities to prepare for positions that are re-munerative. The two or three occupations which are considered genteel for women are overcrowded, while there is often a demand for girls as feather workers for example. If trades such as the making of jewelry, sur-cival instruments, and similar reconfictures gical instruments, and similar manufactures, were taught here in technical and industrial schools like those of Paris, girls would receive better wages than they do now. Even now girls of equal ability make more money in factories than in stores, excepting the few who have positions of trust. Occupations like feather making are not overcrowded. The only trouble is in the dull season, when there is lack of employment, but the wages when there is work are sufficient to enable a girl to get along even if she is idle a part of the time. Many provide for this by learning two or three. trades. On the whole, the employment of women in mercantile pursuits is undesirable; it is proofly paid; it is not regulated by law as it should be; and while it is considered more genteel than at the light trades, it is less re-

Mr. Beecher As I Knew Him

By Mrs. Henry Ward Beecher

IN TEN PAPERS

CONCLUDING PAPER

[All rights protected and reserved]

T seemed to me fitting that the last year of Mr. Beecher's trium-phant life should occupy an entire and separate chapter of these reminiscent papers, and bring to a dose this meagre sto-ry of his home or pri-rate life. This closing chapter is now reached, and with its parration I leave those who have so patiently read these written words. For the in-numerable messages of en-couragement which have come to me from so many of the millions of readers of THE LABRES' HOME JOURNAL during the publication of these papers, I shall never crase to be grateful. If I have by these simple words of his life brought Mr. Beecher closer to any one, my task of love shall not have been in vain.

THE LAST TRIP TO EUROPE

THE LAST TRIP TO EUROPE

It was with pleasure that I hailed the first suggestion of an European journey for Mr. Beecher early in 1886. He needed rest and an entire change, and a sojourn in Europe would afford both. I cannot go into details of that blessed last vacation with him, the respect accorded him, the honors paid and the enthusiasm which greeted him on every hand. I had never been abroad, and everything was, of course, new to me. As Mr. Beecher could not take me out of the route pre-arranged for him, he was anxious to put me in the hands of a courier, or some friends, for a trip through France and Italy. But I declined, preferring to remain with Mr. Beecher, and now how thankful I am that not a day in all those four months was I absent from his side.

On the 24th of October, 1886, we contacted the honey which me weeked.

months was I absent from his side.

On the 24th of October, 1886, we embarked for home, which we reached on the morning of Sunday, the 31st. The trip had vastly benefited Mr. Beecher. Although speaking every evening, except Saturday, and preaching nearly every Sunday, traveling almost incessantly, he seemed rejuvenated by it and at no time did he show. ing nearly every Sunday, traveling almost incessantly, he seemed rejuvenated by it, and at no time did he show the slightest trace of fatigue. The trip seemed to renew his youth, he often said. And so upon his return he was in perfect health, and rendy at once to resume his labors with renewed zeal and interest. We arrived at the dock on Sunday morning too late to preach, or I think he would have been in his pulpit. After dinner be went directly over to Sunday School. Nine persons out of ten, after seven days of continued spa-sickness—for Mr. Beecher was not a good sailor—would have required rest, but not he! If he was too late for church, he said, he would be early for Sunday School.

Upon Friday after our return, at the regular prayer meeting, he spoke to his people for the first time. With deep feelings he referred to the marks of affection and homor that had been shown him, and said the cordinlity extended on every hand had made him young again. He confessed that before leaving home he had been depressed and had felt that his usefulness was on the wane, but he had discarded all such fancies, and with a stronger faith in his Father's wisdom he felt there might yet be years before him to work in his Muster's vineyard.

WERE THESE PREMONITIONS?

I N December arrangements had been made for a fair, from the proceeds of which we hoped to enlarge and refurnish the church parlors. But I was suddenly taken seriously II, and the fair was postponed. For weeks Mr. Beecher allowed no one to watch over me and nurse me but himself. Always cheerful and keeping me so, even when suffering and and keeping me so, even when silhering and most sererely, by no look or wood did heshow his alarm at my illness. After his break-fast be would carry me down stairs to his study in his arms—I was too ill to take one step—so that he might have the care of me all the time he could remain in the house. When taken ill I did not think I should recover. Nor should I but for Mr. Beecher's unceasing care He declined all engagements, and left the house only for his regular church services and im-portant duties connected with his church and people; always most kind and thoughtal when any one was sick, but never before did be attempt to nurse and take the whole charge of me in sickness. And why did be Was it through any unrecognized in-

As soon as I recovered, the work of the fair was hastened forward. In the object which it was hoped could be accomplished by this fair Mr. Beecher was greatly interested, and the carpet and furniture. In this work he was very happy and efficient. But the aid he thus gave did not interrupt his regular duties or prevent his beginning once more to work on the second volume of "The Life of Christ,"

Mr. Beecher never liked the confinement of writing. His pen could not keep pace with his thoughts at first, and he shrank from returning to work so long interrupted. But at last, when impediments had been removed, inspiration to finish came to him. He soon began to work hopefully and enthusiastically, much helped, he often said, by running away from his study for an hour to see how vigorously the work at the church was being pushed forward, and his presence and eagerness to have it hastened was always like an inspiration. When I returned at night from this work his first remark was often: "Well, how is the work progressing? How soon will the fair be opened?"

fair be opened?"
Once I said to him: "Only a few days now, but what makes you so an xious?"

"I don't know," he said, "I never was in such a hurry. I feel rendy to take hold and push."
"But the ladies are working as fast as they can," I said.

"Yes, I know that, but I don't know what Tes, I know that, but I don't know what has come over me to be so eager to have the fair over and learn what will be the result. Perhaps my anxiety to get you off South before you get sick again."

Was that the reason? Or was it foreshadowing the end of all his cares and labors? Yet how perfectly well he seemed—never better—and often remarked, when urged to give up

With that strangely intent look still on his face be remained silent looking so far off for a few moments; then, rising, throwing back his head and straightening himself as all who knew him have so often seen when roused out of intense thought, he drew a deep heavy breath, and wheeling his chair to his desk be-can to write. gan to write.

The strangeness of this short scene, particularly the expression of his face, unlike any I ever saw before, startled me—and—oh! if I could know what revelation was made to him Nothing ever struck me with such solemnity.

LAST DAY IN THE OUTER WORLD

PON the afternoon that the dear church parlor was elegant with the so much needed enlargement, and the carpet, which Mr. Beecher had selected, on the floor, and new furniture all in, nothing seemed wanted but a mantel over the simulated fireplace, which I was commissioned to select. I greatly desired Mr. Beecher's help in doing this, but his work on "The Life of Christ" was now progressing so fairly that I disliked to ask him to go with me, as I knew before we would be suited it so fairly that I distinct to ask him to go with me, as I knew before we would be suited it might occupy a large portion of the day. But in the evening he inquired how much more of the work on the parlors I should expect to do. I told him, adding "If your work did not need all your time I should ask your aid in selecting the mantel." He made no reply. That was sufficient, and I understood that he could not en with me.

was sufficient, and I understood that he could not go with me.

But the next morning at breakfast he gravely asked: "Have you ordered the coupe?"

"For what?" I asked.

"Didn't you order me to go with you to select that numtel, and did I ever disober your orders?" And to my relief he went with me.

On this, his last-day in the outer world, we spent most of the time looking through furniture stores, and were successful in our search.

ture stores, and were successful in our search, In this last blessed ride together I never knew him so inclined to talk when riding, or

And was not that what he did do? How his face shone upon me as he turned and drew me close to him. Twice during that ride he me close to him. Twice during that ride he repeated this, using almost the same words, but with even more earmestness. How his face lighted up! How his eyes kindled! And ob, how blind I was! Why did I not understand that heaven was just opening for him and drawing him away from me—from all who so loved him? I simply watched him as if it was one of those inspired moments I had often seen, though never so wonderfully it. often seen, though never so wonderfully il-luminated, when his soul shone out from his face. Did he feel that his Saviour was calling face. Did he feel that his Saviour was calling to him, "Come up hither?"

All through that ride he talked constantly of almost everybody we had known—everything we had experienced together. He was very earnest in urging me to do all I could to keep up the social life in the church, as he thought it one of the best means to keep the church united, and in that way the greatest help to the paster of the church. help to the pastor of the church.

THE BEGINNING OF THE END

THE BEGINNING OF THE END

WE returned from this precious ride in time for dinner. He had a short nap, and awoke very cheerful and happy. In the evening he had some engagement from which he did not expect to return before ten, and handing me several letters, requesting me to answer some of the most important, which he had marked, before his return, and then went out. But he came back, not long after eight, to my surprise, and said that remembering I was to go South the following week, he had excused himself to come back and be with me.

At about nine o'clock he said he was tired to my surprise, and said that remembering I was to go South the following week, he had excused himself to come back and be with me. At about nine o'clock he said he was tired and would go to bed.

"Why, Heary! are you sick?" I asked.

"No, indeed! only tired," he replied.

"Well, then, I will come right up and do this writing in the back room," I said. I simply set back the chair, took my parcel of letters, turned out the gas and followed him. It could not have been five minutes after. I expected to find him not half ready for bed. When I entered, the room was dark. Turning on the gas I found him in bed. It was so quickly done that I had no thought but that he was hoaxing me until I turned and saw his clothes on the chair near by. Passing to his bedside I found he lay on his right side, with the right hand under his cheek, apparently sound asleep. Why did I not see the darkness that was closing around us?

As I stood over him his face looked so serese—so youthful. Why were my eyes so blinded as not to understand how he was, even then, changed?

My hands being very cold, I did not dare to touch him, but kneeling at his side I placed my ear over his heart; it was beating far more easily and quietly than my own. I turned down the gas, and took my writing into the back room, but where I could look on him without going in. I wrote awhile by the fire until my hands grew warm, and then went to him and felt his pulse. It could not have been more regular and natural. I felt of his brow, the back of his peck and the temples. No stronger indications of health could have been desired. Yet I felt troubled. He still lay so peacefully, undisturbed by my examinations, or the gas over his head, either of which would have usually wakened him instantly. Returning to my writing, I continued at it until one o'clock, going to him often, but finding no change in that peaceful, apparently healthful file.

At one o'clock I prepared to retire. But he was sleeping so quietly that I would not disturb him, and so laid down in the room wher dication of illness and was ashamed of my apprehensions.

About three o'clock I heard him vomiting, and was by his side instantly. When quiet I asked what had caused the vomiting. "Oh, only a slight sick headache," he said.

"Why, Henry, you never had a sick headache before," I suggested.

"Well, can't I do something original once in a while," he replied, laughing in an easy, cheerful manner. "I am all right, now. But why are you not in bed? You will be sick going round in your bare feet." And in a moment he was again fast asleep. moment he was again fast asleep.

ENTERING UPON HIS LONG SLEEP

TRIED to get him to go into a clean bed after his illness, but could not. Putting dry towels about him, and over the pillow, I went back and dressed. I could not sleep; I tried to write, while I sat where I could go to him instantly if needed. I was sadly depressed, yet not knowing why, as I watched the re mainder of that night.

The breakfast bell rang, and the little children and their father met near our door, laughing and merry, but their grandfather still slept, or appeared to, with his right hand under his face, so peacefully and so tranquil. Why did not all this noise rouse him? He. who usually waked at the first sound? I called our son and told him how auxious I was, and how long his father had lain without moving. He chided me for needless anxiety, saying "Let father sleep; that always cures a Beecher. Come down to breakfast, mother. Don't worry; father's pulse is all right; no extra heat about his head. Let him sleep."

At breakfast another son come in, and I ook him upstairs to see his father. He, also, thought my anxiety groundless, and found neither pulse nor brant suggesting any trouble, and both sons begged me not to worry, but by all means let him sleep. By the afternoon I could endure it no longer and sent for the doctor, and he, from my report before seeing

MR. BEECHER'S GRAVE IN GREENWOOD CEMETERY

[On Dawn Path, near Hillside Avenue. on the Southeasterly Slope of Ocean Hill: Lot No. 25,911]

some of his cares until that writing was finished: "Why, I have not felt so well for years—so buoyant and so ready for work."

The fair was at last over, and most satisfac-torily it resulted for all interested. Not being strong, it was decided that now, as soon as the furniture for the church parlors was bought, I was to go South. My trunk was packed and Tuesday, March 8th, I was to leave for Florida.

WRITING HIS "LIFE OF CHRIST"

O<sup>N</sup> Wednesday morning, March 2d, a gentleman from England called, I think for a letter of introduction. After Mr. Beecher had written it they sat talking for a few min-ntes. As he was hidding Mr. Beecher good norming he stopped at the door, saying:

"Mr. Beecher, excuse me, but may I ask when you will finish 'The Life of Christ?"

"I am now closely at work on it, and hope to complete it very soon," Mr. Beecher replied, "I am rejoiced to hear that," the gentleman said, and then passed into the hall, but turning back, repeated :

"I cannot tell you how rejoiced I am that you will soon finish 'The Life of Christ."

As he passed from the hall, Mr. Beecher stood for a moment perfectly still. Then with bowed head, as if in deep thought, he walked slowly back to his desk, and, as was often his custom, knelt on his revolving chair, with his arms crossed on the back, and maed earnestly out of the window.

I was writing at my desk near by, but he re-mained so still I half turned so I could see That almost rapturous expression that shone on his face can never be forgotten.

But he seemed so far away, After a moment of this weird silence, he spoke in a slow, solemn tone, as if commun-ing with his own beart, unconscious of the presence of another:

"Finish 'The Life of Christ!' Finish 'The Life of Christ!' His life was never finished.
It never can be finished. It goes on—it will go on through all eternity!"

in such a tender, happy frame of mind; every-in such a tender, happy frame of mind; everything he spoke of seemed golden colored.

Once he said laughing; "I am glad you made me take this ride. I have been working so stendily for a day or two my bead feels tired, but this ride quite brightens me up."

I said to him: "I wish I had not been so ready to encourage you to finish 'The Life of Christ' this winter. You have had so many more applications for extra work."

"Oh, you needn't worry about that," be replied. "It is a long time since I have sat down to regular continued is had, as this work.

replied. "It is a long time since I have sat down to regular continued study, as this work requires, and of course, at the beginning, I have felt it a little burdensome; but I am getting broken into the larness, and now the work will be comparatively easy. But let me tell you, dear, you little imagine how I dreaded to take hold again, and particularly to examine the first volume. I feared to find much that I must correct, or write all overagain, and I dreaded to do that. But are you not glad with me? I find I shall be delayed by comparatively little rewriting or change. In a very few days now I shall finish the work. But, oh! Eurice, since I began to work up-on it again, I feel as if I had never known anything about the character of Christ. If I was twenty years younger I should wish to burn up both volumes and rewrite the whole. Everything connected with his life rises now before me so much more wonderful, more glorious than ever before. My old love and exercise appear so low, so mean compared with the information and worship my heart ongs to pour out before Him. I know and see Him now as I never did before,

And that same far-away look that had so impressed me the day before, but less dreamy, more real, flashed over his face, as drawing rimself up, he continued:
"When I think of him, a great luminous cloud appears to rise before me: and as I look the glory bursts our beneath it, bright, shining like the sun. Heaven opens before me as if I needed to take but one step forward and en-ter the promised land." the patient, agreed with our sons that it was n slight bilious attack. But on seeing Mr. Beecher he saw at once, I tbink, cause for anxiety, but he did not say so until his second call, less than balf an hour after the first. He iety, but he did not say so until his second call, less than half an hour after the first. He roused him when he first went in easily, asked what caused the vomiting, and received a laughing reply. I noticed Mr. Beecher did not open his eyes.

Immediately on his second visit the doctor asked him to put out his tongue. The patient could only eject the tongue a little way. "More! farther!" said the doctor quickly; but the effort was a complete failure. Then, for a moment, Mr. Bercher opened his eyes and looked into my face. Love and sorrow for me mingled with a look as if he would say: "I have fought a good fight. I have finished my work." And he closed his eyes, never again to open them here. I was holding his hand, and he gave mine a loving, carnest pressure that interpreted his look. It was "Farewell." The cruel truth was now plainly revealed, and all hope abandones. The left side was paralyzed, and, recalling the earlier symptoms, the case was plainly apoplexy and of a type for which there was no hope.

It was generally supposed that from that time Mr. Beecher was unconscious. I did not believe it and never shall. I held his hand all the time unless called aside for a moment. In that case, as I returned, the nurses would say: "He's hunting for you, Mrs. Beecher." He would move his hand over the bedspread as if hunting for something, until I put my hand in his again. Several times be raised our hands together to my lips. The last time was but a few hours before he died.

Very early on Tuesday, March 8th, a change came over him. Death was close at hand. The Very early on Tuesday, March 8th, a change came over him. Death was close at hand. The family clustered about his bed, where one a thousand times more dear than mortal words can tell was passing away from us. But his singular vitality was not yet conquered, and singular vitality was not yet conquered, and there was a few hours longer left to us."

About seven o'clock on Tuesday morning the family were again hastily summoned. Death was now indeed near. That strong, Death was now indeed near. That strong, Only a few more breaths and death was swallowed up in victory. The great loving heart was at last still. The freed sprit ascended to the heavenly Home.

"Through the pearly gates and the open door,
His happy fied on the golden street
Have entered now, to return no more;
For his work is done, and the rest begon,
And the training time is forever past;
And the home of rest in the mansions bleet
Is safely, joyously reached at last.

MRS. BEECHER'S COMPLETE ARTICLES

I N response to many inquiries, the management of THE LADIES' HOME JOURNAL States that to any who may desire to keep a complete set of Mrs. Beecher's articles of "Mr. Beecher As I Knew Him," it will send the entire series, covering ten numbers of the Journal, to any address, postage free, for one dollar ($1.00). Mrs. Beecher's articles will not be issued by the JOURNAL in book form, as has been erroneously announced. Owing to the demand for these papers, it is requested that those desiring to take advantage of this offer will do so at once, as the supply of back numbers is limited.

MR. BEECHER'S UNPRINTED WORDS

THE "JOURNAL" TO PUBLISH A SERIES OF HITHERTO UNPUBLISHED MATERIAL

IT is with great pleasure that the editor of THE LADIES' HOME JOURNAL announces The Labes' Home Journal announces that he has succeeded in securing for publication in the Journal a series of important articles of spoken words and writings by Henry Ward Beecher never before published in any manner. This material has long been in the possession of Professor T. J. Ellinwood, who was for nearly thirty years Mr. Beecher's private stenographer and authorized reporter, and who made it a rule on all newer occasions. private stenographer and authorized reporter, and who made it a rule on all proper occasions, in public and in private, to transfer to paper every thought expressed by Mr. Beecher. From this interesting material, the articles to appear in the JOURNAL will be made up under the personal supervision of Professor Ellinwood. The series will, in every respect, be a notable one, as it will present some of the most characteristic utterances on popular topics ever uttered or written by Mr. Beecher. Among the subjects these papers will treat are:

HOW A CHRISTIAN SHOULD DRESS THE ETHICS OF PEW RENTING PRACTICAL ADVICE TO USHERS WOMAN'S PART IN CHURCH WORK WINE DRINKING ON NEW YEAR'S DAY THE WISE TRAINING OF CHILDREN HOW TO CONDUCT A PRAYER MEETING WEAR AND TEAR OF HOUSEKEEPING THE CONTROL OF THE TONGUE THINGS WE EXPECT OF MARRIED PEOPLE HOW TO LABOR FOR A REVIVAL COMMENTS ON MEN OF HIS TIME SEWING SOCIETIES OF WOMEN RELIGIOUS BEHAVIOR IN SUMMER WOMEN TEACHERS AND MISSIONARIES THE LITERARY VALUE OF THE BUBLE

and a number of equally interesting and freu-chant topics.

This series will begin in an early issue of the Journal, so soon as the careful editing of the material is completed.

LIFE AT A CONVENT SCHOOL

By Etbel Ingalls

HERE clings to the convent, even in these days, much of legendary romance, aiding the belief, even among intelligent people, that the cloister is at best but a prison house in which many a woman which many a woman lives out a miserable existence. But this is not the case. The woman who enters a convent in this nine-teenth century does it not only of her own free will, and because she is actuated to lead a life of sacrifice and seclusion from purely religious muttices, but does so only after the overligious motives, but does so only after the proligious matives, but does so only after the pro-longed trial of the novitiate. Should she lind, during this time, that she cannot be content with the life she is purposing to lead, she is urged to return to the world by the advice and with the assistance of the religious order to which she has belonged.

To the majority of the convents of the re-ligious orders in the United States are attached schools, usually called academies; and although the number of nums in the convent community may be great, but a small propor-tion are commonly employed on the faculty of these academies. The latter comprises the directress, who superintends the entire school an assistant, prefects, and teachers of English and the accomplishments.

To the uninitiated there is no distinction between the terms academy and convent; but the pupils of the former speedily learn to dis-tinguish between them. They, although ac-tual immates of the convent school, are allowed to cross the threshold into the convent proper but once a year, just prior to the annual clos-ing exercises. This interior is forbidding and gloomy, but only because of the absence of groomy, but only because of the absence of decoration and luxury which startles the un-accustomed eye, and is more than compen-sated by the exquisite cleanliness and order which pervade every corner.

But it is not of the lives within the convent that we are to speak, but of the pupil's life in a convent school, under the supervision of these religious women.

these religious women.

THE great outery against a convent education is the proceiving of which the nums are so frequently and unjustly accused.

During my entire school life, and out of a probable thousand sonls that were sheltered within the cloistered walls, there were but two converts, and beither of these had been previously united with any church, nor had they ever been baptized. Under no circumstances will a pupil be permitted to embrace the faith without the entire sunction of the parents or guardians; and even when consent is given, it is preferred that the step be postponed until the girl has entered the world and can determine for herself whether she was poned until the girl has entered the world and can determine for herself whether she was merely fascinated by the religion, which is seen under such spiritual surroundings in a convent, or whether she has been sincerely converted. The women placed at the head of these institutions are of the highest order in-tellectually; wise, judicious, and practical, and thoroughly conscious of the fact that prose-lyting would seriously injure the future of their schools.

THAT some girls are disastrously affected by a convent education I cannot deny. The sentimentalist of tender years, and, perchance, the youthful pessimist, who has shadowed the sunshine of her girlbood days with sombre literature, are more deeply impressed with the isolated lives by which they are surrounded than is the merry-hearted, blithesome maiden who breathes in the atmosphere of unalloyed happiness. The more sensitive minds and hearts look deeper into the secluded lives, and weave beautiful tragic romances about the sable-roked women. These girls are inclined to linger over such daydreams to the exclusion of the more practical side of this existence, and their fendency oreans to the excussion of the more purchast side of this existence, and their tendency toward melancholia is exaggerated. Then, when the books are closed and lessons are ended, instead of coming out into the are ended, instead of coming out into the world with minds filled with sensible, whole-some knowledge, they more and pone and dwell on visionary possibilities. Sometimes these maidens, ere they have stood within the vestibule of the great wide world, already im-agine it wearisome and unsatisfying, and an-nounce, often publicly, their intention of en-tering the novitiate as soon as the wrenth of white blossoms their analyses rewards and white blossoms their goodness rewards, and the laurel-wreathed medal their knowledge proclaims. But when the world, in all its proclaims. But when the world, in all its freshness, dawns upon them, it seems a fairly good place to live in; and as the years speed onward, and love has filled the emptiness of the existence, these same pensive maidens, now grown to noble mothers, bring their little daughters to place in the good Sisters' care.

It has been claimed by careful observers that a Protestant, educated with Catholics, either becomes an ardent advocate of her own be-lief, or develops a total lack of religious fervor, and sometimes becomes even skeptical. But as there are many skeptics in the world who have never been within the portals of a convent, this skepticism may not necessarily have been born of a conventual training. But even should her prior cool, she never forgets that the utmost respect is due to all sacred things; and she always retains that venera-tion for them that was required of her at school. Convent girls, as a rule, are never guilty of levity or disrespect. That is a truth which no student of convent training can galaxay. Whatever a convent girl may full to learn she never fails to imbibe a wholesome religious spirit.

A CONVENT education can scarcely be A called a thoroughly practical one, and if a girl wanted to study so as to be able to teach in an advanced school I would not recommend a convent as the place in which to secure such qualifications. The course of instruction, while differing widely from that offered by the fashionable boarding or day school, is yet far below the training of col-school, is yet far below the training of col-leginte institutions.

If a girl is not naturally of a thoroughly practical temperament, school life at a convent will not make her so. Generally, the girls' wardrobes are cared for entirely by some Sis-ters who are in charge of that department, all the mending, darning and renovating of the garments being done by them. The bed-rooms, too, are in charge of the working nuns, and though the older cirls are given some rooms, too, are in charge of the working huns, and though the older girls are given some slight duties, such as gathering up the stray books and shawls left about, or keeping the piano keys polished, they have no practical knowledge or experience of household affairs. Tutton, board and lodging are all paid for by the term, so but a scant knowledge of the care of money is possible. Each girl is allowed from twenty-live to fifty cents a week for palatable indulgences, all money being placed in the hands of the directress for distribution. But though she may be very inexperienced and incompetent when leaving the convent, the framework that she has been constructing out of the knowledge of what she knows to be right, after a little experience is ready for all kinds of additions, and before long the little school maid blossoms into noble womanhood.

THERE can be no life more regular in its Troutine than a convent, unless it is that of a military academy. From the rising of the sun until dark, every hour has its special task; and so intimutely are these duties associated with the hours to which they are assigned that and so intimutely are these duties associated with the hours to which they are assigned that long after the school days are over the girls think of eleven o'clock as "mathematics," one o'clock as "drawing," and so on. Most of us enjoy a half hour's slumbering consciousness after a deep sleep, and lie abed indulging ourselves in this most delicious languor. Remouncing this bit of luxury is one of the trials of convent life. Immediate response to duty's call is one of the first principles instilled into the mind on entering the school; so when the bell arouses you at about six A. M., from a delicious dream of that faraway home which you now realize, if you never have before, is the dearest spot on earth, you are not permitted to awaken inch by inch, but must arise and put yourself together in the most presentable manner you can in thirty minutes. Then follows the morning prayer in the assembly room, where all the sleepy-eyed girls are gathered. If you are a Protestant you may repent your own prayers privately. After a brisk run in the early morning air a bell calls you to breakfust. Then forming in line you file down to the refectory which, if you have not seen before, reduces the strength of your appetite for convent fare. Walls are bare of ornament, and the long rows of narrow tables contrast unfavorably with the cozy circle that recalls itself to your memory,

Grace is offered. A bowl of ontmeal mush, self to your memory.

Grace is offered. A bowl of ontmeal mush, with the necessories of good milk, and all the sugar you want, a piece of beefsteak, brend and butter and coffee, is the menu for the

and butter and coffee, is the menu for the morning meal. After your first home-sickness is past, you will find your breakfast, as all your meals, both palatable and wholesome.

From eight to nine you prepare for English recitations, which occupy the morning bours, after which comes the time for play in tennis courts or gymnasium. Just before dinner the mail is delivered, and this is the happiest noment of the day if the letter you have looked for comes. The afternoon is filled with the accomplishments—languages, music and painting; and at four o'clock you are off again for exercise. The last hour of study is from five to six, for there is no studying by gaslight. The evenings are very jolly, for dancing is not prohibited, and like all finishing schools, a dancing moster comes regularly to instruct those who may care to learn the intricacies of the modern graceful attitudes.

At haif-past eight evening prayers are said,

At half-past eight evening prayers are said, and as each girl leaves the room she turns and makes a deep curtsy to the directress, who presides over the evening recreation hour. One finds this performance a bit agitating at first, but practice soon makes perfect.

Corrections for misdemeanors are often very droll in their character, and though during the time of their infliction one suffers keenly. the memories that are retained of them in after years are the source of much amuse-A time-honored custom at the George-Convent (the oldest institution of its ment: kind in the United States) is what is known as being "sout to the clock." The clock is one of the kind "too tall for the shelf, so it stood ninety years on the floor." And probably for more than a century it has been keep. in close relationship with old Father Time To be sent to the clock one must be guilty of some serious offense, for this punishment is regarded as the most serious wound that can be inflicted upon the dignity of the insulor-dinate maiden. And when a girl has once been sented before that wise old time-piece, she is returnbered always as one of the girls who is remembered always as one of the girls who were sent to the clock. The disgrace of being before it impresses you the more keenly if you are fated to be there while strangers are being shown through the building, when so curious a spectacle usually brings forth a query as to your accupation. In the muffled explanation of the accompanying man you detect the faintest laughter, and then you wish to be anywhere but before that full clock, and you almost cry in your anger. you almost cry in your anger.

EVERY day what is known as "interroga-tion" takes place. Each girl is questioned separately and publicly if she has transgressed any of the rules which she listens to every Sunday morning—talking in halls, whisper-ing in ranks, carrying bits of sweets in your pockets, and numerous other offenses—and re-sponds according to her conscience. If guilty she is often a persance, which he usually a nare sponds according to her conscience. If guilty she is given a penance, which is usually a page of her dictionary, to copy from one to ten times, according to the magnitude of her sin.

Sometimes a band of mischievous maidens, who can no longer restrain their youthful spirits, commit a series of depredations, raiding the "sweet press" (a pantry where the jellies, jams, cakes and cookies of the housebold are kept), having midnight processions, visits and similar digressions from the regular proceedings of the establishment. If the offenders are successful in evading the watchful eyes and eager ears of the prefects, the faculty, in despair at their vain and fruitless attempts eyes and eager ears of the prefects, the faculty, in despair at their vain and fruitless attempts to detect the disturbers of the peace, order a general penance, and for several successive nights the entire school is put to bed at sundown. Other individual penances consist of solitary confinement during recreations, when you may employ the hours in meditation on the folly of indulging in forbidden pleasures, and in strengthening your irresolute soul against the invasion of future temptations. Expulsion is a rare occurrence in convents, and against the invisions interest temperatures. It is a rare occurrence in convents, and only takes place for really grave offenses, wherein the retention of the pupil would seriously affect the well-being of others. Now and then a girl surreptitiously leaves the convent; and should her purents urge a request for her re-admission, it is always refused.

A LL the vanities of this wicked world are discouraged, and all temptations leading thereto are removed as far as possible. That all-consuming desire of the feminine heart for dress is allayed by a uniform of black, made into the simplest of frocks, the sombreness of which may be relieved by a bit of bright ribbon. Any display of jewelry is prohibited; the only ornaments allowed are brooches and watches. Mirrors are of the minutest dimensions. A girl's mirror, indeed, is usually her neighbor, of whom she inquires the hang of gown or the becomingness of hair arrangement; for it is quite impossible to gain a correct idea of appearance in a six-inch arrangement; for it is quite impossible to gain a correct idea of appearance in a six-inch looking-glass. After some months' seclusion in a convent the first time one beholds herself in a full-length mirror, the experience has, at lenst, the delight of novelty. Powders and cosmetics are also forbidden, and are sure to be confiscated if found.

T one of the convents at which I was a A rone of the convents at which I was a student for a number of years, during a morning study bour we were surprised by a visit from the directress. Her appearance at this hour always portended trouble, and many a girl hastily consulted her memory to see if there were any rule she had wilfully transcressed.

there were any rule she had wilfully transgressed.

"Young ladies," she commenced, "a convent is not the place for frivolity, though some of you, I am led to believe, regard it as the such. From this date bangs, bustles and beaux shall be banished from this establishment." After this command we retired to her room, where we were individually searched and relieved of those hideous appendages which a few years ago were such prominent features of the feminine wardrobe; and as I survey from memory that ridiculous array of cast-off apparel, it seems to me that the minds bent on bustle construction must have been bent on bustle construction must have been legion, for of the downs condemned no two legion, for of the downs condemned no two were of the some shape or make. Having passed through this trying ordenl we were next subjected to round combs, first preceded by a plastering of wavy and unruly tresses with sone and water. The movement must have been premeditated, and not the caprice of a moment, for a comb had been provided for each girl. This, of course, lunished curl-parers and tones, and one's night rests were for each girl. This, of course, hanished curi-papers and tongs, and one's night rests were, consequently, more peaceful. With patpitat-ing hearts we waited for the command which should include in this wholesome banishment the third item in the catalogue of the direct-ress—the beaux of our belles. But, fortu-nately, the attack and capture of the bustles and kangs seemed to satisfy, at least for that time, the conquering spirit, and the banish-ment of the beaux was reserved for a future ment of the beaux was reserved for a future occasion. But I doubt if, when it came, it was as successful in its accomplishment as the exile of the inanimate objects.

We send free to all applicants our booklet on Highland Evaporated Cream Bainties. HELVETIA MILE CONDENSING CO., Highland, Ill. *,*

Nothing is so refreshing to brain and nerves as Ricksecker's Reviving Smelling Sults. Genuine at druggists', fifty cents.

Progressive Euchre players use "THE Cottreer" score marker. All dealers. Sets by mail, 15c. per table Booklet Free. W. F. BULKELEY, Cleveland, O. ***

The story of "Girls Who Have Push," an inter-esting pumphlet of 3 pages, will be mailed free on request to The Curtis Publishing Co., Phila.

lionghoese, reduces the labor of its world to any family ten time

Price 25c. by Mall

AGENTS WANTED SHERWOOD MFG. CO., Mansfield, Ohio

THE BROWNIES THROUGH THE YEAR

A NEW SERIES OF 12 ADVENTURES OF THE FUNNIEST LITTLE MEN IN THE WORLD

By Palmer Cox

NUMBER ELEVEN

THE BROWNIES

IN AUGUST

Whell August took its place in line marranthy The Brownies met at day's decline.

Said one: "At length we stand beside
A stream that is the nation's pride; No longer river finds its way Around the world to gulf or bay, And since our pleasures first began No better journey we can plan Than one upon the river bright That rolls before us here to-night."

"I well agree With what you say, and trust to me To be the pilot for the band; To take the lead and give command. I know the river well, my friends, Just where it starts and where it ends. Each bend and bar from first to last Is in my mind established fast. The trip will take a week or more; We'll hide by day along the shore, And when returns the evening gloom, Our Journey to the sea resume.

Why need I use my valued space To tell of smiles that lit each face, Or eyes that rolled with knowing squint To see how others took the hint. No longer talk was needed there To make the Brownles soon repair To where some boats could be secured That by the river's bank were moored.

Where boats careened in every case, And made a deck load out of place. Indeed, the pilot's craft was caught Upon a snag, and quick as thought Was overturned until the keel Did to the moon its shape reveal, And Brownies all, from stem to stern Were forced to cling for life, and learn What fearful dangers may surround A party, though on pleasure bound. At length, to cause no small dismay, A misty fall before them lay, That seemed to speak with thunder sound Of nothing else than Brownles drowned. One cried: "'Tis strange that no one knew About these falls.

now plain in view, Though tumbling here with stunning din Since first the world began to spin." Another said: "My friend, too late

About our ignorance you prate. Did we of dangers earlier know

We might avoid much pain and woe. Tis useless now to bend and strain

In hopes a friendly shore to gain. Let each one his position keep And take the chances of the leap." The fleet of boats, with even bow, Seemed sweeping to their ruin now; Already eyes strained out to see How deep the fearful plunge would be. One boat was caught just at the bend, Or spring, and turning end for end With all its crew, stern foremost sped, When most they wished to look ahead. The scene below the falls was wild: The crews were all together piled, Some Brownies clinging to an oar, Some to a trembling friend, and more

To please the spryest speckled trout That ever threw a tail about, And yet lack force to quite subdue Or overwhelm a Brownie crew.

In sugar mills our skill display, Or in the fields of cotton show How much about the plant we know; But now our duty is to steer

Thus night by night the Brownies passed Through trials strange, until at last They reached the southern country mild, Where sweet the white magnolia smiled, Where sugar-cane and cotton grew, And handsome palms attention drew.

Ahead, nor heed attractions here." At times, some laid aside the oar And ran for miles along the shore, And to some noted station got Ere those in boats could sight the spot. Once while they in a bayou lay the land with pride, Saw fine plantations every side That spoke of peace and patient toil, And rich returns from fertile soil. At times they went on land to try

The tempting fruit that caught the eye, And found the kind both good and fair That ripens in the southern air. Said one: "Not only is this land Well noted for the valiant stand its people made on field and flood, Until in rivers ran their blood, But enterprise and thrift, as well, On every side their story tell." Another said: "Sometime we may

To hide from human kind away, Some alligators every side. To interview the Brownies tried. And only through their mystic skill Were they preserved to charm us still. Some fought, and some jumped fore and aft,

And more were glad to quit the craft To take their chances on the land And leave the reptiles in command. Thus oft the Brownies were delayed As to the gulf their trip they made, But nothing daunted, still intact, With every member free to act. They drifted on from night to night To reach the point with spirits light, Where pours the river's waters free From many mouths into the sea. At length the Brownies looked ahead, And saw the Crescent City spread In grandeur by the widening stream, And saw the domes and steeples gleam That marked the site of church and hall, Then caught a glimpse of shipping tall Where ocean waves and river blend,

'Tis pleasant drifting with the tide Or down a stream to smoothly glide, But such mild currents often tend To rougher waters at the end; And Brownies found in their descent Some rapids that great mischief meant;

Advising how they should proceed And courage show in time of need. But water may be deep and rough, And, like a kettle, boil enough

THE LADIES' HOME JOURNAL

An Illustrated Family Tournal with the Largest Circulation of any Magazine in the World.

Published Monthly by

THE CURTIS PUBLISHING COMPANY At 433-435 Arch Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

With Press-Rooms at 401-415 Appletree Street

Edited by EDWARD W. BOK

In association with

MRS. LYMAN ABBOTT MISS RUTH ASHMORE MARGARET BOTTOME ROBERT J. BURDETTE FOSTER COATES MAUDE HAYWOOD EMMA M. HOOPER ISABEL A. MALLON MARIA PARLOA EBEN E. REXFORD ELISABETH ROBINSON SCOVIL REV. T. DE WITT TALMAGE, D.D. KATE TANNATT WOODS

Advisory and Contributing Editors With representatives at London and Paris.

Rates

Subscription One dollar per year, payable in advance. Single copies ten cents.

Advertising Rates

Five dollars per Agate line each insertion before (this) editorial page; three dollars per Agate line on succeed-ing pages and all covers. Reading Notices, six dollars per Nonpareil line. These rates are not.

BRANCH OFFICES:

New York: Potter Building, 38 Park Row Boston: 7 Temple Place, Cor. Tremont St. Chicago: 508 Home Insurance Building San Francisco: Chronicle Building

LONDON OFFICE:

53 Imperial Buildings, Ludrate Circus, E. C. English Subscription Prices: Per issue, 6 pence; per year, 6 shillings, post-free.

Philadelphia, August, 1892

AT HOME WITH THE EDITOR

HENEVER a man raises his pen to criticize any phase or probable re-sult of the modern progress of woman and her interests, he is im-understood are exclusively his. His sole ob-ject in life is very vividly set forth to impose woman's progress, and he is set down as a fee of the sex and its best interests. These little compliments have already been buried at the writer of this page, and so they will at least have lost their sense of novelty if the sentiments that follow evoke a repetition of them.

FROM my earliest years I have ever be-I lieved in woman. That belief was in-stilled into me by my mother, the confidente stilled into me by my mother, the confidence of my boyhood, the grentest joy and biessing of my life ever since. I have always believed that there were by far more good women in the world than there were women of other tendencies. This belief came to me, perhaps, as a natural one; for it is easy to believe in woman when one looks at her through the character of a good mother. I was always taught to believe that woman was the best friend that God ever rave to man, and steadily friend that God ever gave to man, and steadily and brody has that lesson grown into personal conviction. I believe that women are better than men-better in their lives, purer in their thoughts, more conscientious in their motives, nd morally stronger in every respect. But the strongest belief in womankind annot shut from even partial eyes the fact that there is appearing upon the womanly horizon certain types which, if their number increase, will do more to impede woman's prog-ress than anything else possibly can. Every now and then I bear from these types, and I wish I did not. They are the women who are progress-ing so first that they are losing all faith in those things we have always associated as the most beautiful things in womanhood. They are domning mascalinity, not only in their garments but in their ideas; they want to vote: they are leghnding to believe more in certain funciful "rights" than in their children; they are acquiring mental knowledge at the expense of heart affection; they are at the expense of heart affection; they are realless; they don't know exactly what they want, but it is something that they have not and they want it. Anything will do. These "[seitles" and "assertive" women are going to "reform their sex." Reform nothing! It is not the world that needs reform bull so match as the people who are always talking of reforming it.

THERE are, undoubtedly, certain women in this country to whom the modern progress of their sex is going to prove a diremisfortune. What is going to prove a blessing for thousands of women is going to be a curse to them. These women do not seem to have the slightest conception of the true meaning of women's present advancement. They ing of woman's present advancement. They believe that for years and years they have been slaves, particularly of men, and now they are going to have freedom; beace, they must be something different from what they have been going to have freedom; bence, they must be something different from what ther have been in the past. They must exert themselves. "Positive" and "assertive" are their favorite terms. They must be positive in their ideas, assertive in their attitudes. They must cease to believe in the home, but must cultivate a burning desire and longing for the platform or restrum. They must be seen and heard. Hitherto they have been caged up in the home; they have been abused, subjected and plainly told that they are the weaker sex. They must read books which their mothers shunned. They must not believe that God's greatest gift to a woman is a balse fresh from the hands of the Almighty, beautiful in its texture and marvelous in its conception. No indeed! What is the destiny of a child to them compared with the great burning question of "Stall women vote?" What is the gospel of loving kindness in the home to them in comparison with the theories of lisen and Tolstoi? What if the little child at home wonderingly asks "Where is manuma?" so long as she points out to an assemblage of women the only way of "How to Manage a Husband."

"Progress!" is her cry. "Women have been slaves long enough! Now for our reign!"

Well, then, my dear woman, for your reign. Be a queen, if masculinity can be queenly. But, thank God, whose ways are not your ways, your subjects will be few! And why do I know this? Let me tell you a truth or two.

It is my appreciated privilege to write each month, through the Jounnal, to a direct audience of over seven hundred thousand women, and an indirect one of far greater numbers. For the most part this immense audience is, perforce, to me an invisible one. The great majority of it I shall never see, much less know. But during the three years it has been my pleasure to write to this audience I have come to know a goodly number, not personally, of course, but through their letters. Within one period of six months, not long since, over fourteen thousand letters came to me, and each month has brought and brings since, over fourteen thousand letters came to me, and each month has brought and brings its quota. It has been given me to enter into the domestic spirit of many homes, and to know something of the influences which have made those homes happy. Into thousands of homes I have been allowed to enter more as a friend than as a stranger. From hearthstones of refinement and content, where women are of refinement and content, where women are hoppiest, and men most loving and considerate, messages of confidence and womanly goodness have come to my desk. Every written word has seened to meet with some response which gratefully I have cherished and shall ever cherish. We know women best, and we see the tenderest side of their natures, when we appeal to their sympathies, enter, so far as we can, into their deepest joys and sorrows, and strike some responsive chord. I will not say that my opportunities have been better for the study of womankind than those afforded to any one. The path which it has been given to me to walk is open to every one, but I believe that a study of the best side of woman's nature has been made possible—through confidential correspondence, through public writings, and by personal contact sufficient for me to know something, if not all, of the true inner feelings which sway a very of the true inner feelings which sway a very large percentage of what is best in the womanbood of America of to-day. And whatever I write on this page, from month to month, merely reflects what this knowledge brings

A ND as one result of certain facts which have come to me, let me say to those women who fairly bubble over with ideas of "reforming" their sex, giving them "rights," sending them to the bullet box, and similar bosh: Your so-called cause of "woman's rights," whatever you may mean by that term, is one which finds absolutely no sympathy with the women of end duclyment and refined is one which linds absolutely no sympathy with the women of good judgment and refined feelings in this country; and all the agitation in the world will not change their views. The average American woman, the woman of nice feelings, knows and realizes in each moment of her daily life that she is head and shoulders above any race of women on the globe. Her "rights" are precisely what she chooses to make them. She knows that she is the queen of her home, a sovereign in her family, the of her home, a sovereign in her family, the ruler of the destinies of her husband and her children. Nor is she willing to believe that that sphere is so contracted as some of your band of "reformers" try to picture it. The right kind of a woman makes her home and domestic life as broad as she chooses, and through that home life she knows that her influence upon the great world at large is far greater and more potent than if she were more of a "seen and heard" portion of that outer sphere. She realizes the power which she ex-ercises in her home, and she asks for no greater arena. She is content to see that her husband and sons shall make good citizens, and that her daughters shall develop into worthy women, She may mould the minds of but a few, but those are living testimonials to the thoroughness of her work in the years to come. She believes that a oneen's greatest influence is among her own subjects. And when you and other women agitators try to belittle woman's influence in the house, those women accept it as un aspersion upon some of the greatest achieve-ments in history attained through the domestic circle, and upon some of the mobbest of womankind since the beginning of creation. These women, my friend, indicae that there is always something locking in the nature of a wessam who makes light of home and of the associations which make home happy.

Do you know, my positive woman, why women do not vote? It is because the vast and overwhelming majority of women in this country do not want the ballot, have absolutely no desire for it, and do not waste a moment of their time thinking about it. Do you know why these women do not care to "broaden" their minds by reading lisen? It is because they think they sweeten their lives by reading Hawthorne and Thackeray and Longfellow and Walter Scott and Charles Dickens and the great mass of living writers whom you believe simply burden the earth with their presence. Do you know why these women will not don the ridiculous "reform" parments which you umblushingly flaunt before audiences of American girlhood? It is because they prefer to be womanly, and dress tastefully and prettily as God intended women should dress. Do you know why these women will not go to club meetings? It is because they have a little club in their own homes, and the members of it are of their own flesh and blood, with which God has sanctioned and beautified their lives. Do you know why they turn with disgust from your prantings about "the rights of our sex?" Because their bushands give them every right of love and kindness they want. Do you wonder why they "the rights of our sex?" Because their hus-hands give them every right of love and kind-ness they want. Do you wonder why they will permit themselves to be "subjected to the tyrasnies of mankind, and remain a slave to the rule of husband?" It is because they have good men for husbands, and good men respect their wives. All these things seem very difficult of comprehension with you, but that is only because an all-wise Dispensation that is only because an all-wise Dispensation has a way of dividing the gift of comprehen-sion. To some He gives in abundance; to others He withholds.

WE want brainy women!" is your constant shout. Of course we do, and lots of them, too. But, my dear soil, we already have some brainy women. The trouble with you and your guild is that you never concede anything as existing; it is always something that you want and is not. From the noise which you make one would think that this age of women was a race of dribbling siliots. The fact is, women are more brainy than you give them credit for. The great trouble is; you do not know of them. They are outside your ranks rather than within them. They do not make themselves as conspicuous as you do, and by this one fact they demonstrate that they are brainy. The difference between you and other women who say less and think more is this; you do not know the real brainy women of this country, and they do. You and your followers always remind one of the shouters in a great political campaign. From the way these men talk on the street corners and from the platforms the unknowing would imagine that they carried the vote of the country in their pockets. But, my dear woman, do you know the vote that always carries an election in this country, the vote that has the real power of decision? It is the quiet vote; the thousands of men who never attend great political gatherings. We must have political exhorters in a great campaign. They are like a great many other evils the quiet vote; the thousands of men who never attend great political gatherings. We must have political exhorters in a great campaign. They are like a great many other evils in this country: necessary to the few. But they never influence the deciding vote. And you by your exhortations do not influence, by a single lots, the quiet and retiring women of this country. If you accomplish anything, it is to disgust women with your theories. The very attitude which you assume offends their good taste.

THE fact is, that the manner which you have chosen to "reform" your sex retards the cause of woman's progress rather than advances it. Your idea is that woman must unsex berself; she must assume a massicilinity of thought and manner. But those are not the ideas of the true believers in woman's future. Man's advancement does not depend upon his assuming femininity, and just in proportion as woman becomes not depend upon his assuming feminiuity, and just in proportion as woman becomes masculine will she stand in her own light and as an obstacle in her own path of progress. You are apt in your speeches and articles to take a great deal of personal credit for woman's present rate of advancement. But others give some credit to the development of woman herself, and the times in which she lives. It is always very pleasant to believe one's self to be a reformer, but it is quite another thing to induce the rest of the world to regard you in the same light. It is well enough for you, in the same light. It is well enough for you, in the same light. It is well enough for you, in the same light. tive, to instituate that women are simply ering-ing in slavedom and subjection, and picture ber as the slave of brutal man! But the trouble is, that there happens to be a deal of good, hard common sense abroad that does not agree with you, and that intelligence hap-pens to belong to the very people whom you think are such abject slaves.

TRUE sympathetic response will never A be given to those women who seek to make of women anything but what she is by her own birthright—womanly, gentle, loving and true. If woman's mind must be cultivated at the expense of her heart—well, my triend, if you will pardon us I think we will leave the bend alone. The most of us want womanly hend dones. The ness of an average as sympathy more than we want womanly ag-gressiveness. There are a number of people in this world who believe that noman is about this world who believe that noman is about right as she is, and they do not care for many changes, especially if those alterations are go-ing to make her less of a woman. If we look very close, we may find a foult here and there, but that is because she belongs to this earth, and faultless she would not be eartlely. I know men have peculiar bleas on a good many things, but somehow or other they do not care that their wives and doughters shall be so totally different from their northers. They were women, and why should not our nives and daughters be women? We seen have a liadish notion that we want to leave a legacy of woman to the succeeding generation; not a rary of "what-are-theys"."

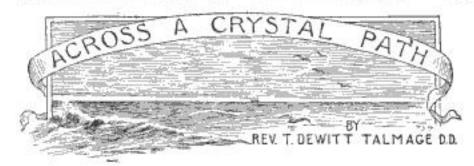

THE great majority of men may be foolish A and "behind the times," but, I tell you, they like an essentially feminine woman. They they like an essentially feminine woman. They may sometimes sneer at what they call foolish little famininities, and wonderingly ask how women can be so patient over needlework, or waste their time making pretty tidies or draping a dainty scarf over a chair or a picture. They may think a woman's love of silk stockings and pretty underwear a foolish fancy. They may telly on that they consider it a weak falling for a woman to have a dainty scent around her wardrobe. They may seem to regard a silver toilet set as extravagance. They may turn up their noses and arch their eyentows over the thousand and one little things that are the belongings of an out-and-out nay turn up their hoses and arch their eyebrows over the thousand and one little things that are the belongings of an out-and-outfeminine woman. But way down in their hearts they do not mean a word they say. The average man would far rather that his wife know the art of turning a steak to the brown than construe the most difficult Greek sentence. In his heart he would much rather she revel in new dresses, fondle his babe and indulge her womanly tastes than that she should plague him with Tolstole ideas or Ibsenic theories. He would much rather that she put her faith in him, nestle close to him, and say she wants him to advise her, than that she should strut around his house in an assertive manner and "lay down the law" to his children and his servants. He feels that God gave him a woman to protect, and he is proud of the privilege. He wants in his wife a loving, gentle woman, a woman of a heart full of sympathy rather than a head full of fads and folbles, a woman who will comfort him when he is worried, counsel him when he is perplexed, and smoothe out the wrinkles which business trouble has accumulated on his forchead during the day. He wants a woman whose loving kips and soft embrace will send forehead during the day. He wants a woman whose loving kiss and soft embrace will send whose loving kiss and soft embrace will send him into the busy world in the morning, and who will be glad to see him when he comes home at the close of a long and trying day, He does not want a nurse, a child wife, or a weak-minded woman, and he does not ask it, but he does want what God intended woman to be when He made her, loving, gentle, and considerate; in short, a feminine woman. He wants a top to be manky and woman. He wants a man to be manly and he wants a woman to be womanly. Just as he despises femininity in a man, so he is repulsed by masculinity in a woman.

WE hear a great deal powndays about the W immagement of liuebands, and the matter is discussed as if, like embalming the dend, it was one of the lost arts. But I notice that the women who are agitating the question are not the gentlewomen of this country. No, my positive friend, you who will rise at this and say that these other women are under the and say that these other women are under the subjection of their husbands and are afraid to speak. This is not so. These women have found a warm and tender place in the hearts of their mankind. They have found the secret of "managing a husband," and you have not. Prate all you like, aginate all you wish at club meetings and at woman's gatherings, but the secret will not thus be found. The place to learn how to manage a busband is not at the meeting of your club, but in your loone, at the side of your husband and with your children. "That's the old-fashioned idea," said a positive woman contemptionsly to me the other tive woman contemptionsly to me the other day. Yes, thank food it is, my friend, and it would be better for the happiness of hundreds of women to-day if they would be a little more old-fashioned in this respect.

LET us be progressive, I say! Women as well as men. Let us throw the electric spark of modern progress in whatever enters into our daily lives. To be progressive to-day means to be alive, to be imband with the electricity of the dying nineteenth century, and of the twentieth soon to be born. Let women widen their minds and broaden their homes. Let men be progressive in domestic ideas and in their daily vocations. Let us teach our children that this is the greatest century which the world less over your and that it is a ricithe world has ever seen, and that it is a privi-lege to live in it and to be a part of it. Let women acquire wisdom—the wisdom that will make them stronger in love, stronger in truth, and stronger in mercy to her sex. A woman of beart is far better than a woman of theories. of heart is far better than a woman of theories.

A natural woman is more attractive than a woman striving for originality. But with all our rightful modern tendencies, let us be careful how we apply new ideas of progress to the boly affections which God implanted in man and woman long before the mineteenth century was thought of. The higher education of woman is a round thing but it was of woman is a grand thing, but it can prove a curse if it stifles the emotions. Love, as fastioned by its Creator centuries ago, has made this old world as beautiful as it is: it has made made mad women what they are. For ages to has been the closest link beautiful as it is: has been the closest link between braven and earth. It is a gift from God himself, and if it were not applicable to modern days, depend upon it He would change it. Love has grown old, it is true. Everything else goes out of fachion, but love has remained from the dewhen banks first sang and writers first wade. Its hold upon the human heart and mind is as great to-day as ever it was, and it really seems pretty late in the day to think of changing it. The "woman of brain" may tell you that love belongs to children and not to full-grown women. But there will always be a goodly percentage of this world, the percentage which can fortunately at-ways be described upon, who will prefer to keep the old-fashioned love of husband, wifeand children within their homes, And long after the "positive" woman will have had her roign, and her disturbing theories will be forgotten, there will be peoples and peoples who will still believe that it is

" Love which makes the world go round," that it is, as it always has been, and ever will be: the greatest factor in the cortbly happiness of the human race, the essence of all religious and creeds, and the corner stone of the Ameri-

VERY man ought to cross the ocean at least once to find how many unwarranted things have been said about it. Those who unwarranted on the land have never imperiled their verac-ity by masted onic statements, are so meramorphosed by the first stationarits, are so menumorphosed by the first stall breeze off Sandy Hook that they become capable of the biggest stories. They see bil-lows as high as the Alps, and whales long enough to supply a continent with spermaceti, and have perilous escapes from sudden an-nihilation, and see over the gunwales spec-tacles compared with which "The City of New York" is a North River clam sloop.

FALLACIES ABOUT THE SEA

O NE does not find things as they expect them on shipboard. We have very often heard that sea-sickness makes one feel that he would like to be thrown overboard. One day on our ship there were a hundred or more passengers whose stomachs had turned sompassengers whose stomachs had turned som-crises; but not one of these people, so far as I could detect, would like to have been pitched overburn!. Indeed, an effort to deposit these nauscated Jonalis on the "fishing banks" would have ended fatally to the perpetrator. Not one of the sickest patients looked at the sea as though he would like to get into it. Those who were most desperate and agonizing in looking over the taffmil for the lines of lati-tude and longitude, held tight fast, less some stables latch of the ship should precipitate them into the Canaan of water for which the army of the sea-sick are said to be longing. One is often told, in many well-rounded ad-

One is often told, in many well-rounded ad-dresses, that the suits of British and Ameri-can commerce "whiten every sea." But we averaged during our voyage only about two vessels in four days. The cry of "a steamer" is so rare a sound that it brings all the passen-mer to these last. is so rure a sound that it brings all the passengers to theer feet. The mere ghost of a shroud along the line of the sky calls up all the field glasses. The most polarable food is dropped when, during the dining hour, it is announced that a ship passes. Let "Fourth of July" orators steer clear of the fallary that the sails of our commerce whiten the sea. They make about as nauch impression upon it as a fly crossing the colling.

crossing the ceiling.

One hears, too, of the sense of loneliness, isolation and almost decolation felt when out steamer such a feeling is impossible. We have a world behind, but we take a world with us. We do not my more think of how far we are feen the above then we do of how far we are feeling the document than we do of how far we are feeling the above then we do of how far we are from the shore than we do of how far the shore is from us. Though in mid-ocean, we are in the heart of the city, and hear feet shullling, and hammers pounding, and wheels turning, and voices shouting. We have not found any of the monotony of the deep. We have not seen an indeer, nor a deep. We have not seen an icebeng nor a whale; only a porpoise, here and there, a Mother Cary's chicken, or a flying fish. In simply wasching the ocean and thinking, we found each day so pleasantly occupied that we sorrowed at its speedy termination.

PASSENGERS ON AN ATLANTIC LINER

SO many styles of character come together on shipbourd that they are a perpetual study. Men by the third day turn inside out, il refer to their characters and not to their Treer to their generosity or their selfish-ness, their opulence of resource or their pancity, their courage or their cowardice, are putent. What variety of mission! This one gues to claim a large estate; this one to culture his taste in foreign picture galleries; that one to amass a fortune; this one to see what he can learn. On some the time hangs heavily, on learn. On some the time hangs heaving, and they betake themselves to the "smoking rount." Since coming on board some of them have lost all their nonney by unstaccessful wager. Two or three have won everything, wager. Two or three have won everything, and the others have lost. They have bet about the speed of the ship—bet that it would be over four hundred and seventy-live knots a day, bet that it would be less, bet that the number of miles run would be an even number. Let that it would be odd. Pools, pools, bools! Pools of betting that are pools of sin!

I we then all in all, we never dwelt not so, men and women of timer culture, and notice heart, and nobler life than our fellow hossengers.

THE SMILE OF THE WATERS

nossengers.

WE are accustomed to build up all the We are accustomed to build up all the mendous integring of the ocean. We go on board an ocean steamer ready for typhoena and cursolydous. We think the sea a monster with ships in its maw, and harrisances in its mane. But, my renders, in our seven days' verage we saw it in various moods, but were impressed with nothing so much as the smile of the sea. While we did not find the partic "craile of the deep," we concluded that the sen is only a vigorous old nurse that follows child up and down on a bard knee without much reference to how much it can endure.

I cannot forget the brightness of the morn-ing in which we came down the bay. All day long we were bathed in its welcome rays. Then the sun set, and the moon took the veil of a nun and went into the dark turrets of midnight cloud, and melted into the blackness, but the smilight of the cheery faces at the starting shone on three thousand miles of water. So many friendly hands helped steady the noble ship, and the breath of so many kindly voices filled the sails, which by the help of the great screws bore us ouward and across.

Though a gentleman has pronounced the sen a vast dose of ipecae, and though it may betray me in the future, I set down the sen as one of my best friends, although I do have a one of my best friends, although 1 do have a way of hispering around the funnel at the stern end of the boat. We never were treated so well in all our life. We had a little wild tossing, but the waves are swarthy giants, and you must expect that their play will me be that of kittens, but of a lioness with her cubs, or a levinthan with its young. When Titans play ball, they throw rocks. The heavy surge which rolls the ship is only the effort of the sea to stop laughing. It has been in a groud gale, and its sides must heave with the uproarious mirthfulness. roarious mirthfulness.

INDISCRETIONS OF THE TOURIST

THERE are physical constitutions that will not harmonize with the water; but one-half the things that writers record against the sea is the result of their own intemperance, sea is the result of their own intemperance. The sea air rouses a wolf of an appetite, and nine-tenths of the passengers turn into meatsuffers. From morn till night down go the avalanches of proyender. Invalids, on their way to Europe for the cure of dyspepsia, are sean gorging theroselves at nine o'clock, at one, at five, and at nine. I heard men who, the night before took pigeous and chicken, and claret, and Hook, and Bargundy, and Old Tom, and Cheshire cheese, and sandines, and anchories, and grouse, and gravies, complaining that they felt miscrable in the morning, and wondered what made then ill! Much of the sea-sickness is an insurrection of the stomach against too great installment of salmon, and raisins, and roust turkey, and nuts, and pies, and an infinity of pastry. One-half of the same dissipation on land would necessitate the attendance of the family doctor, and two narses on the side of the hed to keep two nurses on the side of the hed to keep the bowling patient from leaping out of the third-story window.

ACROSS A SEA OF REST

OH, the joy of the sea! The vessel bounds like a moor on the "house-stretch," bending into the bit, its sides flanked with the foam, and its white mane flying on the wild wind. You drop the world behind you. Go to Long Brunch, to Bar Harbor, to Saratoga or to Sharon Springs, and your letters come, or to Sharon Springs, and your letters come, and the papers, but it would be hard for cares to keep up with an Atlantic liner. They cannot swim. They could not live an hour in such a surf. They are drowned out, and are forgotten. With care behind you, you breather the delicious freedom of a free name. the delicious freedom of a free man! Oh, the beauty of the sun on the ocean! On the band, when morning comes, it seems to run up from the other side of the bills, and, with its face red from climbing, stands look-ing through the pines and redars. On the sea, it comes down from God out of beaven sea, it comes down from God out of heaven on ladders of light to bothe in the water, the waves dripping from their ringlets and sash of fire, or throwing up their white cape to greet her, and the sea gull alights on her brow at the glorious baptism. No sanoke of factory on the clear air. No shuffling of weary feet on the glass of the water-pacenases. But Him of Genesareth setting His foot in the snow of the surf, and stroking the neck of the waves as they lick his feet and play about Him.

WHAT MAKES THE OCIAN LAUGH

HE who goes to sea with a keen appre-ciation of the ludicrous will not be able to keep his gravity. We confess our in-capacity to see without denonstration or merriment the unheard-of postures taken by passengers on a rocking ship. Think of bashful ladies being violently petched into the arms of the boatswain, and of a man like myself esof the boatswain, and of a man like myself escorting two ladies neroes the slippery dock, till, with one sudden lurch, we are driven from starboard to port, with most unclerked sprawl, in one grand crash. Imagine the stoward emptying a bowl of turtle soup into the lap of a New York exquisite, or one not accustomed to angline fishing for herring under an upset dimer piate. Consider our agitation, when, in the morning, after waking our componion with the snatch of some familiar tunes, we found her diving out of the berth head-foremost, to the time of "Star Spangled Banner," and "Dandee," with all the variations: If, on all the ships on the deep there are so many grotesque grings on as were on our vessel, we wonder not that the sen from New York to Liverpool occasionally shakes its sides with roystering merriment. roystering merriment.

IN A SEA OF PHOSPHORESCENCE

 ${
m B^{
m UT}}$  the grandest smile of the sea is, after that blazes from borizon to horizon. Some tell us it is the spawn of the jelly fish, and some that it is a collection of marine inserts; but those who say they do not know what it is probably come nearest the truth. The prow of the vessel breaks it up into two great sheaves of light, and the clear knews an a time. prow of the vessel breaks it up into two great sheaves of light, and the glory keeps up a running fire along the heans's end till the mind falls back benumbed, unable longer to take in the spiender. In one direction it is like a vest mosale, and youder it quivers, the "lightning of the sea." Here it is crystal inlaid with jet; or the eyes of sea serpents flashing through the hissing water; or a tall wave robed in white, flying, with long trait, toward the cent; or the tossing up in the palm of the ocean a handful of opals, answered by the sparkle on one finger of foam; and then the long-resumined benuty breaking out into a whole sea of fire. On this suspended bridge many of the glories of the earth and heaven come out to greet each other and stand beckening to ship, glories of the earth and heaven come out to greet each other and stand beckening to ship, and shore, and sky for all the rest of the glories to come and join them. Meanwhile the vessel plunges its probose is into the deep, and casts carelessly aside into the darkness more gems than ever came from Brazil and Golcouds. Historians think it worth record-Golconds. Historians think it worth record-ing that, at an ancient feast, a pearl was dis-solved in the wine and drank by a royal woman; but a million pearls are dissolved at this phosphorescent bacquet of the deep, around whose board all nations sit drinking. The stars are to drop like blasted figs, and the sun is to be snuffed out, but when the ocean dies its spirit will rise in a white robe of mist, and lie down before the thrane of Gud. "It are and lie down before the throne of God, "a sea of glass mingled with fire." SPECIAL NOTE.—I hereby reserve the privi-lege of taking back all I have said if, on my way back to America, the sea does not behave

THE AMERICAN IDEA OF TRAVEL

MERICANS traveling in Europe are for A. the most part in no immensity of per-spiration. Starting with what they call "the small and insignificant island of Great Brit-Yankee who said be thought England a very nice little island, but he was afraid to go out nights lest be should fall off, they expect to nice little islamd, but he was afraid to go out nights lest be should fall off, they expect to see all Enrope in a few days. They spend truth of their time at depots inquiring about the next train, or rush past Mont Blanc, with no time to stop, clusting up a lost value.

I remember on board the steamer "Java" many years ago, I neet an English gentleman by the name of Mr. Gale. "And who was Mr. Gale?" you ask, I know not, except that he was of so bland a nature I felt be most be a "Gale from Henven." I was leaning over the rail of the vessel watching the first appearance of land, Ireland, sending out to meet us the "Skelligs," a cross-looking projection, like the snarly dog that comes out to screnade you with a volley of yelps at the gate of a friend, or like a dark-browed Fersian appearing to challenge the British ships and like them "mind their eye," and look out how they run "furnisel ould Ireland," when Mr. Gale summed up all his advice about European truvel in the terse phrase:

"Dr. Talmage, I hope you will not be rushing about Europe as Americans generally do. Stay where you're happy."

I set this down as among the wisest counsels ever given one.

In traveling we should go where we like ever given me.

ever given use.

In traveling we should go where we like it best, mut then we will be happy. The manufacturer should go to Birmingham and Manchester. The skillful and mighty-handed machinery will make an impression upon him that he can get from nothing else. Let the shipwright traveling in Europe take considerable time at the Liverpool docks, and watch the odd-looking craft that hover about the French coust. If a man be found of a time horse, and wants to see the perfection of neck. French coust. If a man be fond of a one horse, and wants to see the perfection of neck, and loof, and back, and flunks, tamed thunderbolts controlled by caparisoned drivers, let him go out to Hyde Park, or St. John's Wood, or into the royal stables back of Buckingbarn Palace—if he can get in—and see the one hundred and sixty-eight white and bay horses that wait the Queen's bidding. It is folly for a biind man to go and see London Tower, or a deaf one to hear the Westminster Abbey organ, or a man whose lifetime rending has been confined to the almanac and his own ledger to spend much time in the reading room of the British Moseum, of the British Museum,

STAYING WHERE WE ARE HAPPY

MUCH of the world's disquietode comes advice of my English friend of many years ago. Queen Mary was foulded and caressed in France. Courts bowed down and warshiped her benuty. But she went to Scothand, and Elizabeth cut the poor thing's head off. Why did she not stay where she was happy? Waster Scothand horne in Castle Street, Etinburgh; no debts to pay, all the world bringing offerings to his genius. But he went up to Abbotsford; must have a roof like Melrose Abboy, and the grounds extensive as a king's park. He sank his fortune and roused up a pack of angry crelibors, each one with his teeth at his throat. How much better for his peace if he had continued in the plain home. Why did he not stay where he was happy? Makimilian had the confidence of Austria, and the richest of all carth's treasure—the love of a good woman's heart. He gathered up all that he had and went to Mexico. A nation of assassius plotted for his life. He fell riabled with a crash of musketry, and his wrife, Charlotta, goes back a manine. They had enough before they went. They wnoted more. One dead! The other crazy! Oh, that they had been wise enough to stay where they were happy.

VOLAPUK, WITH VARIATIONS

ANY Americans abroad are exceedingly annoyed at their lack of skill in the we of the European languages. After a vain at-tempt to make a Parislan whiter under-tand tempt to make a Parislan waiter under-tand French they swear at him in English. But I have always remembered when traveling abroad the art of the physician who put all the remains of old prescriptions into one bestle—the oll, and the caloned, and the rhebarh, and the assafetida—and when he found a patient with a "complication of diseases," he would shake up his old bottle and give him a dose. And so I have compounted a language for European travel. I generally take a little French, and a little German and a little English, with a few snatches of Linnese and Choctaw, and when I find a stubborn case of waiter or landlord that will not understand, I simply shake up all the dislects and give him a dose. It is saire to strike comewhere. If you cannot make him understand, you at any rate give him a terrible stand, you at any rate give him a terrible scare.

I never had the anxiety of some in a strange hand about getting things to eat. I like everything in all the round of diet except animated closese and odorous cuditsh; always have a good appetite; never in my life missed a need save once, when I could not get any, and knowing that "eine gerostete rimidleisch schiebe" means a beefsteak, "eine messer" a knife, and "eine gabel" a fork, and "eine serviete" a napkin, after that I feel perfectly rockless as to what I can or cannot get.

OVERCOMING FINANCIAL PERPLEXITIES

In journeying from country to country the confising. But guineas, and florins, and kroutzer, and double ducats have ceased to be a perplexity to me. I ask the price of a thing, look wise as if I knew all about it, and then hold out my hand and let the vender take his pick. As riches take wing and fly away, I am determined to lose nothing in that manner. Fifty years from now a Turkish plaster will be worth to me as much as a Holland guilder, and it worries me not when I am cheated, for the man who cheeds me must, in the end, suffer more than I, so that my chagrin is lost in fer more than I, so that my chagrin is lost in compossion for his misfortune.

7. be with Talmage

GIVES A GENUIVE OXFORD TEACHERS BIBLE, Containing, 1939 Pages, and measuring open, the helded AII inches, Free to all New Subscribers at $2.00.

It is Leather Bound, Gitt Edge, Over-lapping Edges, and Contains ALLTHI-HELPS, including CONCORD ANCE, 40,000 References, Subject Index 16,000 References, TWELVE COLORED MAPS, and Other Valuable Helps, De Hitt Talmage OL 92, 93, 54, 96 BIBLE BOUCE, FEW TORE CITY.

HOME COMFORT Steel Hot Air FURNACES Guaranteed Free from

GAS, SMOKE OR DUST!

WROUGHT IRON RANGE CO.

St. Louis, Mo. SOLE MANUPACTURERS OF

HOME COMFORT STEEL RANGES Write for Cook Book-mailed PRHE

DO NOT STAMMER

Prof. H. C. Wood, M.D., L.L.D., University Pennsylvania, writes: "I have seen a number of cases of stagmering in which Mr. Johnston obtained most executed Need for 54-page pamphlet to E. S. Johnston's Institute, 1605 Spring Garden Street, Philadelphia, Pa

For Eight Cents

We will send you a bundred samples of really aribdic wall papers. The prices are from 5 to 50c. a roll.

A. L. DIAMENT & CO., 1206 Market St., Phila.

The purpose of this Department is to bring the members of the Order of The King's Daughters and its President into closer relations by personal and familiar "Talks" and "Chars." All letters from the "Daughters" bearing upon this one and special purpose only, should be addressed to MRS. BOTTOME, care of The Ladies' Home JOURNAL, and she will be glad to receive them. Please do not, however, send letters to MRS. BOTTOME concerning membership in the Order, or business communications of any nature. All such should be addressed direct to the headquarters of the Order, 158 West Twenty-third Street, New York city, and prompt attention will be given.

HEART TO HEART TALKS

I should meet with you my Circle, face to face to-day, I should tell you of a lesson I have just learned from a rose bush that was from a rose bush that was given to me a few days ago. I often think that life with me means simply learning lessons, and I want you to cultivate the habit of getting spiritual lessons out of common, every-day life, My rose bush was a real joy to use. It came to me with many buds on, and I was watching them come out. Yesterday we had a soft rain, so I put it outside the window to get the benefit of the shower; but there came a sudden wind, and the rose bush was tall and it fell. I ran down stairs and out of the front door, for my rose bush was in the street; I picked it up, and such a sight! Not a speck of soil was about the roots: not only had its home gone (the pot it had lived in), but everything had gone. I carried it tenderly upstairs, and soon had it surrounded with new soil. The half-open buds were all perfect, only one rose was broken from the stem, but the shock told on it. I did everything I could do to try to get it back again to where it was before it fell, but I do not know whether it will ever be the same again. Not a leaf on the bush that seems just the same; it looks down instead of fell, but I do not know whether it will ever be the same again. Not a leaf on the bush that seems just the same; it looks down instead of up. Many a time in the future, as I walk the streets of New York, shall I think of my rose bush fallen to the street. There are falls in life beside moral falls. Alas, alas, for the lat-cer! There are sudden financial falls, there are falls from health to sickness, there are heart falls, that perhaps no one beside the one whose heart goes down knows anything about; but this sad life of ours calls for great tenderness.

COMFORT THE SORROWING

IF the human flowers received as much at-If the human flowers received as much attention and tenderness as I gave to my rose bash yesterday, maybe they would come back to life again. Drooping people! I fear we are apt to turn away from them; they are not interesting; they are not bright; but would it not be a kind thing in us to try to brighten them? And think of what has made them as they are? I was pessing along one of our streets the other day, when I saw such a sad sight. A policeman was trying to drag a woman along who was resisting with all her night. She was young and respectably dressed. woman along who was resisting with all her might. She was young and respectably dressed. I stepped up and said to the policeman; "Will you take her to such a place, and I will see that she is cared for?" He said he could not, his duty was to take her to the station. As I passed over the street, I saw a little woman in mourning looking at the sad sight. I re-marked "How very said!" when she ex-claimed, "Thank God, I didn't do that!" I then saw her face was very note and said chamed, "thank God, I didn't do that? I then saw her face was very pale, and said "Are you in trouble?" "Yes, I thought I had reached the depths, but that (still looking after the woman) is a greater depth. Thank God, I didn't do that!" Husband gone! Money gone! And she was to be turned into the street because she could not pay her rent. An-other fall! But kind hands lifted her up as I tifted my rose bush, and she is slowly com-ing back to life, as I hope my rose bush will.

WATERING HIS FLOWERS WHAT do I write all this for? Only to V tell you what I learned, and to help you be more tender to those who have fallen. You will perhaps not pass a day without meeting some one that has for some cause or other fallen from joy. Drooping people! They need watering. As a friend said who sent me some flowers the other day, "Keep them well watered!" How the works stayed with me! The old poem of "The Watered Lilies" came back to my mind, Suppose we take for our special work this coming month the bringing new life into recoile around us! Maybe we special work this coming month the bringing new life into people around us! Maybe we shall not have to go out of our own families. And do not sny, "I need to be raised myself; wish some one would refresh me." Forget yourself, and you will find new life coming into you. I have often seen in imagination the young boy who swing the glasses of water at one of the springs at Saratogn. Early in the morning before breakfast there would be online a procession of recode and they would quite a procession of people, and they would surround the spring, and down into the water would go the tin that held all the glasses and he had a way of swinging the glasses around. he had a way of swinging the glasses around.

Now, if we only keep at the spring of living water, we shall be able to give many a glass of pure water—smiles, cheering words, little acts of kindness in a day—and this will be watering His flowers, for all are His whether they stand upright or have fallen. How pitiful to see a flower wither for lack of moisture! How awful to see a human life die for lack of love! die for lack of love!

THE ANGEL OF LITTLE SACRIFICES

THE ANGEL OF LITTLE SACRIFICES

A FRIEND has sent me a little clipping from a paper with this heading, and from it I want to quote: "The Angel of Little Sacrifices has received from heaven the mission of the angels, of whom the prophet speaks, who remove the stones from the road lest they should braise the feet of travelers. There is a place less commodious than another; she chooses it, saying with a sweet smile 'How comfortable I am here.' There is some work to be done and she presents herself for it simply with the joyous manner of one who finds her happiness in doing." Have you never seen her? There are families who have had such an angel, and the angel has gone. It might be well if the little child song "I want to be an angel" were associated with earth as well as with heaven. Think of being an angel in one's family; in the school; in the shop.

THE REAL THING

I MET two friends of mine the other day who had been shopping. They are not members of our Order, but stopped me and told me they wanted to tell me something enmembers of our Order, but stopped me and told no they wanted to tell me something encouraging. A young girl had waited on them in one shop and had been so sweet and obliging that the daughter of my friend, noticing the cross the saleswoman wore, said: "Mother, do let us try to find another with a cross on!" And they did, and my friends concluded they would always look out for saleswomen wearing the cross. O. to find sweetness and patience in those who wear the cross, is to find the real spirit of the cross. Ah, we must have it in order to show it, whether we wear the symbol or not. I heard the other day of a young girl who, being questioned as to why she wore the cross, said she had no definite purpose in wearing it. "Why," said her friend, "don't you know it means the deepening of spiritual life and helping to quicken others?" "Well," she replied, "I don't see how you can give what you haven't got! I am sure I have no spiritual life." I felt sorry for that young girl. Maybe she had more life than she was aware of. We must come to see that life may be where there is no blossom or bloom. A good desire, a wish to be right, shows life. All good wishes are prayers! Did you ever look at the bulb of a hyacinth? How lifeless it looks! How unlike the beautiful hyacinth in bloom? But the life is there. I do so love to hope for people. like the beautiful hyacinth in bloom? But the life is there. I do so love to hope for people. They need the right environment; and to see the good that is in them and to encourage the good that is in them and to encourage them is often just the environment they need. My own life affords me the hope for others. I never heard the preacher say: "Your goodness is like the morning cloud and the early dew, it passes away," but I felt I was meant, or "Ephraim is a cake not turned," that I did not immediately say to myself, that, too, means me, all right on one side and not on the other. Yes! we are sometimes too apt to look on the dark side ourselves, but after we get out in the sunlight do not let us take too seriously any such words as those of our discouraged sister—"I have no spritual life." Remember the hyacinth hulb. A little sunshine of cheer and sympathy and encouragement and the bloom will come out.

THE JOY OF DOING

WELL, I have wandered far from the "Angel of Little Sacrifices," but I can easily get back. It is all along the line of doing little things to make others happy. Be an "angel" to as many as possible. There are rough places to be smoothed; bitter waters to be sweetened; hard looks to be turned kind; sad lives to be made bright; lonely places to be made glad. All this may be the work of this same "angel." How be the work of this same "nngel."

be the work of this same "angel." How much can be done by a little sacrifice. No one so poor but there is a field for her labor. And just here is the joy of doing "In His Name." A short time before Dean Stanley's death he closed an eloquent sermon with a quaint verse, which greatly impressed his congrega-tion. Let us take it as our motto:

"Say well is good, but do well is better;

Do neil seems spirit, say neil the letter,
hay well is godly and helpeth to please.
But do well lives godly, and gives the world case.
Say well to silvace sometimes is bound.
But do well is free on every ground.
Say well has friends, some here, some there,
But do well is released where the some there.
By say well to many God's Word cleares,
But for lack of do well it often leaves.
It say well and to well were bound in one frame,
Then all were done, all were woo, and all were gain."

And what is this but the principle that Jesus himself hald down: "If a man love me he will keep my words." We say we love our friends; but we prove it only when we do for them, sacrifice for them, bear their burdens for them. How many there are who call themselves Christians who never consciously do anything in the name of their Master, or for His

"THROW OUT THE LIFE LINE"

"THROW OUT THE LIFE LINE"

NE of the most helpful and encouraging letters I have received was from one of my Circle, who tells me that I have been a "shore line" to her from month to month. She writes: "I am a ship, weary and storm-tossed, away out from shore." In that moment the wonderful privilege of being a life line came to me. O, to be able to draw the weary to the shore. And God alone is shore, and when He is reached He becomes a sea to us, and, as Faber says,

"Out on that sea we are in harbor still, And scarce advert to winds and tides; Like ships that ride at auchor, with the waves Flapping against their sides."

Else sings that rise at another, who are waves
Flapping against their sides.

How I wish I could be a life line to draw all that rend this page to a spiritual life. I hope all who are in my Circle will keep this uppermost in their thoughts, the being King's Daughters. In this Order there is one distinct thought—our relationship to God, our relationship to all humanity. Denominationalship is lost sight of. Whether in church or outside of church, our work is to serve those who stand in need of our service, as far as our influence can extend, but always beginning with those who are nearest to us. It is often much easier to serve outside of the family than in it. Our sphere is always large enough to deny ourselves, and self-denial is the noblest work we shall ever do. While I am glad of all who are doing great work. I get more and more in love with our own Order, because it ennobles the little daily sacrifices at home.

LEADING A DOUBLE LIFE

LEADING A DOUBLE LIFE

I AM sure you must often say, as I have said: "I wonder what is back of all this in the newspapers? What led to this miserable ending?" I often think of the words of the Master: "Think ye that those men on whom the tower of Siloam fell were sinners above all that dwelt in Isreal? I tell you, nay. But except ye repent, ye shall all likewise perish." We are all startled when the tower falls on some one, and we cry out: "What was it made it fall?" There are wrongs to be righted in our society life. I shall never forget the look in the fare of a noble woman whom I met at an exhibition of pictures in a well-known club house. Some lady by her side exclaimed, as she looked about the room: "How benutiful?" "Yes," she answered, with a look on her face I cannot describe, "but it robs me of my husband." I am not plending for weak women. God knows I wish they were strong. I wish the hymn "Jesus. Lover of my Soul" had any practical meaning for them in hours when they needed it most. Alas, where a woman's strength is, there is her weakness, too. If the love she ought to of my Soul." had any practical meaning for them in hours when they needed it most. Alas, where a woman's strength is, there is her weakness, too. If the love she ought to have fails ber, how pitiful her condition! Where is her safeguard? Only where any one's safeguard is; in the Christian life. The sim of many to-day, we are told, is leading a double life, "a hidden life." Well, we may use that phrase "hidden life" in a good sense. That is exactly what a Christian life is: "a hidden life." A Christian always has a refuge. I heard the other day of a mother who used to disappear once in a while from the family circle, and all she said was: "I must attend to having things adjusted." One day her daughter, determined to find out what her mother meant, went to her room and found the mother on her knees in prayer. She lived a hidden life! But there was no shadow of death in that hidden life. I stood a short time ago at Niagara, and I looked at the little bridge on one side where a child could pass over in safety. But a few yards away and there were the rapids. There the current was too swift. The only safety is in the first steps! Think of the flirting going on in society to-day called harmless, and yet so near lie the rapids! And conscience calls a halt! And friends, if they are true, warm! The only safety for any life is to avoid the first step. What a multi-tude of evils follow one false step, which might have been prevented had a kind friend given the timely warning.

A WORD FOR THE SAD

You write me so pitifully, and sometimes almost despairingly, and you want me to tell you what you shall do, where you can go. I do want you to take refuge somewhere, but il know of only one—God is our refuge! I have nothing to say against your going here or there seeking friends. They are all good, but God is your refuge! Alas for them who have sought refuge where only the worst kind of death could be the result—the fatal cup of one kind or another for relief or refuge. No, or field is not refuge to patter what our no. God is our refuge, no matter what our troubles may be. Seeking that refuge it will be made plain to you what course to take, what best to do; but the spirit, if it finds relief anyat hines where, must find relief there! When you rend this page in the Journal it will be deep mid symmer. Some of us may be by the sea, some of us in the mountains, some of us may be in the city. One thing is delightful about be in the city. One thing is delightful about our little gathering; wherever we spend our vacation, though we never see each other's face at all, we have our meeting place here,

And, after all, it is not where we are that brings happiness. The vacation of the soul is what we should seek for, and that does not always come through change of place. One may run hither and thither for happiness, or rest, and may not get it. Remember Mme. Guyon's words: Guyon's words:

"White place we saok, or place we shun, The soul flude happiness in none; But with a God to guide our way. "The equal joy to go or sin;"

B. & B.

Owing to extensive re-building of these stores, we're obliged to sell off all our immense stocks of

FINE DRESS GOODS

suitable for street and traveling gowns,

SILKS and WASH FABRICS

to make way for the builders. Hence, we purpose to forcibly demonstrate this month to the readers of this Jour-NAL just how much it's to their interest to send us their Letter Orders

for DRY GOODS

Prices on everything that will PAY you to inquire about.

250 pieces colored

PRINTED INDIA SILKS 50 cents

Large offering of

ANDERSON GINGHAMS

15 cents

and all our immense line of this season's best styles, . . 25 cents both regular 40-cent qualities.

1000 yards Black Twisted

PURE SILK GRENADINES 50 cents

And we'll send samples and catalogue.

BOGGS & BUHL 115, 117, 119, 121 Federal Street ALLEGHENY, PA.

STERLING SILVER INLAID SPOONS and FORKS

are as durable as Solid Silver. Less than one half-the cost. Will last a Lifetime. If you cannot obtain them of your Jeweler send for Catalogue. Take no substitute.

THE HOLMES & EDWARDS SILVER CO. Bridgeport, Cons.

ABOUT PIANOS

BAD PIANO will hinder your musical pro-gress; a good piano will help you do your best.

You may pay high or low for a bad piano and regret it in either case;—to get a good one you MUST pay a fair price;—you need not pay an exorbitant one.

We send planos on approval and-but write IVERS & POND PIANO CO. 183 Tremont Street, Boston.

BROTHERS CHICAGO PIANOS GRAND HAPIDS MUSKEGON, MICHIGAN.

Consists of two hand out, finely tempered, adjustable butcher's steels Any woman can sharpen her own knives and SHEARS on it will last a lifetime 75 cts to any address FOSTER RAZOR CO.

"PARTED BANG."

Main of natural CURLY HAIR guaranteed becoming it latins who went their bair parted, 26 up, according to seeing and continue of the main cool. Beautifring Since, with preparation, $2. Bair forces, Conscious, sect. O. D. naywhere, Swid to the magnifecturer for dissincted price-dens. E. BUKNNISH, Il State St. Instantal Nucle Hall, Chings.

UNDOUGHEDLY the cheapest place to buy reliable Half Goods. Range of terroral curly but, sparl size, $1.50, souldings the $2.00 to $1.00. Motivies. Varies and Hange in testimal firsh and gray which a speciality. Historiated Catalogue seat free. Goods went by mail every where.

S. C. BECK, Importer and Manufacturer of HAIR GOODS, 36 Sorth Eighth Street, Philadelphia, Pr.

POCKETBOOK Worth 50 censs, and made of imitation Sent; also Elegant Shoe Catalogue, sent on receipt of 20 cents postage and on receipt of 20 cents postage Sent on receipt on 400 RECITATIONS and READINGS Mailed to any address on receipt of 35 Cents. The cleapest and hest book ever lesses. Address J. S. OGILVIE, 5t Rose St., New York.

Perhaps it may turn out a song, Perhaps turn out a sermon."

NCE upon a time, so long ago the pligrim dust was new upon my sandal shoon, there lived a man who wrote his summer diaries with his jack-knife. Every year, while "hot mid-summer's drowsy tone counted for him long days of sunny hours," as he loitered in the pleasant tangles of the througed and populous pleasant tangles of the thronged and populous wilderness, he yielded to the universal infirmity of resting minds, and gathered of the rare and conston treasures of shore and forest, cavern and crag, beautiful and curious things to take home. He said: "My winter evenings in all years to come, and all the dark and stormy days of restless life, shall by these sweet mementoes of my care-free days of summer idleness be made delightful memories." This man is a mild sort of collector. He is a victim to the case habit. He cuts walking sticks in every "climb," and drags them to his once happy home, now, alas, shadowed by the gloomy cloud of the incurable collection manin. When once that willy serpent, outcuts of Eden, bites man or woman, until pitying Death effects a cure the victim knows no freedom from the restless working of the subtle dom from the restless working of the subtle

SERMONS IN STICKS

"SEE," this man of ancient time once said to "SEE," this man of ancient time once said to me, in a soliloquizing moment when he alone was within hearing of the hat rack, "See; here is the chronicle of all my summer outings for namy a backward-looking yester-day. This guardy bit of jack-oak I cut on the historic hills of Valley Forge. Beside it used to lean a wand of dogwood from the summer land of Yorktown, but it was used for a poker last winter. I had a pretty bit of pine I cut a... Chamcook Mountain years ago, but the washer lady levied on it as a fitting implement wherewith to punch her own weekly collecc... Chamcook Mountain years ago, but the washer lady levied on it as a fitting implement wherewith to panch her own weekly collection in the boiler. To what base uses may we come at last. There was a most gracefully crooked sneel of manzanita that I got from the chapparal on my way to Yosemire, but it is now on duty as a prop for the lid of a bin in the cellar. I was proud of a live oak stick from Louisiana, with a most indescribable and incomprehensible natural curl on the end, but the Fates decreed that it should be a 'shinny club' for the boy, and who shall right the fates? Not even the gods; and I am but a little tin god, on wheels, which you pull about with a string. Here is a maple, a Nova Sodian born, which I brought away from Evangeline land, a treasure of the brightest of all sweet summers, when 'all my days were neale of gold and all my nights of silver.' Oh, I have a splendid collection of noble alpenstocks, orange sticks from California, sweet scented cares of spice wood and choke cherry from the Adirondacks, but they are mostly utilized for pea brush and bean poles. I bring these things home with me, stlent but eloquent and tender chroniclers of my wanderings, and they find their places and missions of decoration and usefulness in their new environment.

EACH TO HIS OWN vironment.

EACH TO HIS OWN

SOME of these sticks, in all the vicissitudes O of the wilderness and civilization, retain unchanged their romantic nature, and are my unchanged their romantic nature, and are my companions in my daily walks, although not altogether, lest I should be mistaken for a drummer for a cord-wood house. Some of them, like Aaron's rod, even in wintry days, in uncongenial climates, and in the face of incredulous minds, bud and blossom with fragman memories. Some of them have patrician pedigrees, and every knot and wrinkle is a well-attested date or circumstance. Some are of such plebelan origin that all their poor and barren history is lost, and they are as sticks cut from the deadly Upas tree, distilling from their dry and supless veins a poison of mendacity, as the man who leans upon them unblushingly invents memoirs for them. Some are ever ornamental—the dudes of the built are ever ornamental—the dudes of the bull and hat rack, unfit even for the light exercise and hat rack, unfit even for the light exercise of twirling in one's fingers. Some become useful, and maist the gardener, the housemaid and the cook. But whatever they are, and whatever they do, the scent of the wildwood clings to them still. I own I do not like to see them set to work. I look upon a degraded walking stick as I would upon at Indian chieftain, toen from his wigwam in the heart of the aromatic, pulsing woods, and made to of the aromatic, pulsing woods, and made to wield the pulsiant boe in a bug-infested potato patch; a Bras Coupe with bowed bend and broken spirit; 'honor rooted in dishonor;' a wood-nymph grubbing a sassafras thicket; n river god wearily pumping maddy rain water from an over-flooded reliar on Front Street; a post torn from the secenth line of his sonnet, and zent to the village for a bar of soan, a and sent to the village for a har of soap, a yeast cake, two gallons of kerosene oil and a slab of liver. Still, these things have to be done. The great Shakespeare went down on his kness more than once before a fire that was enjoying a quiet little smoke with a bundle of wet faggots, striving to 'revive it with his breatle,' the while, perchance, 'it sparkled in his eyes, and, like the dog that is compelled to fight, snatched at his master that did tarre him on,' before he completed that passage in 'King John,' The uneless, however beautiful, is never long lived. autiful, is never long lived.

AS THE TWIG IS BENT

WALKING sticks have their eccentricl-ties, as have their human companions. ties, as have their human companions. Sometimes, when the atmoner is but newly ended, and the garrison in vase and hat rack has been heavily reinforced, the entire colony will come crashing and ratiling down in the night, and there follows a general existion the next day. Weeks afterward I spend my days as a tale that is told a great many times, seeking to discover and collect the scattered remant that is left. I once had an alder stick so crooked that every time any one walked across the floor, even in a distant room, this stick would rock and tremble and fidget uneasily in its place. This, happening at all hours of the night and day, drove the whole family into a nervous fever, until at length I labeled the stick and presented it to a college nuseum. Some of the sticks come home all right, but in the process of domestication slowly shed their bark, so that the hall curpet is reduced to a state of chronic wood-yard chippiness. in the process of domestication slowly shed their hark, so that the hall curpet is reduced to a state of chronic wood-yard chippin.cs. Others, as they dry out, develop a maiodorous of or that leads to the unanimous diagnostication that they were picked before they were ripe, and are straightway ordered forth to cremation. Some wait until they have been carefully scraped, painted with three or four costs, and varnished with infinite pains-taking, and then calmly split from end to end, curling up at the edges of the split. Others take kindly to steaming, and straighten out until a straight-edge cannot find a fault in them, and as soon as staining and polishing is complete, and an expensive head fitted on, suddenly develop inflammatory rheumatism and curvature of the spine, legacies of the marsh whence they were taken, doubtless, and hung therselves into more misshapen shapes than a wet clothes-line, bastily coiled in the dark by an inexperienced man, can imitate. But soon or late, usually soon, they all go the common way of summer walking sticks, and thus by a providential arrangement make room for the new and carefully selected stock which I intend to bring home the next summer.

FROM NATURE'S STOREHOUSE

FROM NATURE'S STOREHOUSE

THUS far the man. But it is not only walking sticks that come hopping home with the family from jount and pilgrimage. Even in this blessed August mouth, us the Even in this blessed-August month, us the Journal seeks you out in your summer loitering, you are in the very fever and madness of collecting things. When you went to your room in the hotel you found in bureau drawer, on closet shelf, in nook and corner, pebbles and bits of rock, and shells and moss, leaves, flowers and fungus left there by departed guests who had gathered of the benuties and wonders of strange lands more things to earry home in three trunks, already full of outing rainment, than could be packed by hydraulic pressure in six empty ones. Bark is hydraulic pressure in six empty ones. Bark is a favorite. In a few generations there will be, in the processes of evolution, a species of birch tree that will have no bark below the first branch. A forest of such trees will appear us though they had rolled up their bark preparatory to wading the brook. And moss; you have enough roses already pathered to make a mattress. How beautiful it is in the woods, down in cool, moist places under the balmy pines and the whispering bemlocks, where it creeps about the foot of the plumy forces, and never a fringe of green over the where it creeps about the foot of the plumy ferns, and peeps, a fringe of green over the hank, to look at the brook sparkling in sneg as it hurries on it way to find a mill wheel! When you carry it to your room by the basket, and pack it into a trunk, how beautiful it is when you drag it out by the handful. When it is pressed out flat, like a unordered ify upon the wall, then it is a study. The moss is. You guess what it was when it was alive. That is the game. Fungus that smells to besven, but not of heaven, Rather of the carthearthy. Bulrashes to stand in the corner of the mosic room. All winter long, they silently shed their gracious fuzz and memories until every curtain and carpet in the house is flocked with the touch of the mesdow marsh. When you throw them away in the spring the boys you throw them away in the spring the boys get hold of them and hold a knightly tournsment with these reedy lances, that makes it pleasant for the carpets of the neighbors who leave their windows open. They close the windows and say—but never mind what they There are some speeches which sound

A PECK OF POLISHED PEBBLES

O'NE summer, the collection in a family of which I wot somewhat, ran exclusively to pebbles—pebbles of all sizes and all colors, from all along shore from Halifax to Plymouth Beach. They were male welcome into the house, being what the housekeeper calls "clean dirt." Not only were they pretty, and suggestive, and reminiscent, but they were headed in a source of ways. Exerciting and handy in a score of ways. Every trunk and bug came home in ballest with them, and they were stacked and spread and scattered in every room. They provided a store of "fixed ammunition" for firing at tramps and dogs, that made the yard a haunt of terror to all two and four-footed manualers. When the two and four-tooted maratters. When the boy, who has mastered the mysteries of hard pitching, dropped an "in curve ' on the short tibe of a brindle dog, with a gleaming pebble that had been pressed by the foot of Mary Chilton or held in the fair hand of Priscilla Chilton or held in the fair hand of Priscilla herself, perhaps, that unhappy dog thought he was smitten of Miles Standish's great iron pot, leaded with dynamite at that. And he said so, too. And kept on saying it until he was three miles down the road. The family resolved to include pebbles, hereafter, in every collection. They are going to bring home higger ones next month, because this is not-sidential year and they will come bome bigger ones next month, because this is presidential year, and they will come handy as messengers of fraternal greeting with which to salute the transparencies of "their friends the enemy" as he finants his insolent banners in front of the house. True it is, that once or twice a nest of round white pebbles being left upon a stairway, the man of the house, as he thoughtlessly picked them up with his slippered feet and went recklessly down stairs with them, has been heard to say what he would do with the person who next brought a rock—he always calls them rocks under these circumstances—into the house. But as he has so often said what he was going to do next time and no one has ever suffered the slightest inconvenience from the working of his malignant charms, there is no terror in his threat.

BREATHINGS OF THE SEA

BREATHINGS OF THE SEA

"PRAISE the sea, but keep on land," wrote Herbert, and people largely follow his advice, although, if they keep on transporting the seashore to their inland homes, in a few generations there will be nothing but sea and generations there will be nothing but sea and no place for us to put the souvenirs which we bring away from the "always wind-obeying deep." I knew a man from the wild and woolly west, who, on his first visit to Nan-tucket went off Wauwinnet and caught a shark a mile long. It was not a geographical nulle; only a marine mile. He packed it in a box with a number of other marine bric-à-brac which he collected and cared with his own box with a number of other marine bric-a-brac which he collected and cared with his own hands. At least he thought they were cured. They were sick enough to need it. Aquatic plants, sea weed, shells and things, specimens of real and still life. He sent the box express to his brother in a far-away inland town. When it arrived his brother's first impulse When it arrived his brother's first impulse was to hurry it out to the cemetery and bury it without notifying the Board of Health. But then he reflected that he might get into trouble if he did, and this gave him pause, and reminded him that it would be an unchristian thing to bury his brother without any religious service, even though he had died of a malignant and infectious disease of some tropical nature. So he cant for the mighter notimaignant and infectious disease of some trops-cal nature. So he sent for the minister, noti-fied the coroner, invited a few friends who could stand anything, and they read the short-est funeral service they could find, with pas-tilles burning in the room, a tar barrel blazing in the yard, and a gentle dew of disinfectants in the yard, and a gentle dew of disinfectants distilling from every corner and nook in the house. About three weeks after the funeral the man came bome unexpectedly, and presenting himself unannounced at his brother's door, frightened his sister-in-haw into a series of shricking hysterics. They arrested the man, fined him, and sent him to jail for attempting to defraud a life insurance company.

IMITATION MEMENTOES

THAT is the trouble, frequently, with ma-rine and other souvenirs which you col-lect yourself, unless you buy them at a store and fib about them. And nobody cares a cent lext yourself, unless you buy them at a store and fib about them. And nobody cares a cent for such things when you buy them. You can purchase anything you want from mountain and desert, cavern and senshore, much more cheaply and far better in quality in Chicago or New York than you can in Denveror California or Nantucket. You do not buy views of Yellowstone Park when you are there; you wait until you get bome; then you take your time, and select good ones. But as a rule you do not care very much for things you buy in this line. At least I do not. I would not give ten cents for the erndle in which George Washington was rocked. In fact, as I have no bables about the house, I would not care to have it lumbering up the piace. You buy meat and shoestrings and land and soap and "that sort of things." But when it comes to buying relies and souvenirs and ancestors, that is muther kind of shopping. You see why the pror bits of things which you guther and bring home are so much more benutiful, so much more eloquent and companionable than the highly finished article in the same line displayed in the shop windows, can possibly be to you. It is just the difference between a friend to whom you show your heart and tell your thoughts, and who is so poor that he can friend to whom you show your heart and tell your thoughts, and who is so poor that he can not afford a Sunday countenance and has to wear the same one all the year, and an amanuensis to whom you dictate a letter, but who dresses so much better than yourself that you half feel your dictation an impertinence.

SUMMER MEMORIES

PLUME-drooping ferms and tufted reeds. From woods where tangled sunbeams lay Snared by the wild untrampled weeds. Where blackbirds whistle all the day;

Fringed mosses, softer than the light That kissed away their tears of dew; Long trailing vines with leafage bright And Autumn blooms of brilliant hue;

White gleaming shells from where the waves Sing once again the Siren's song; And pebbles, found where ocean's caves The chorus of the sea prolong;

Big, ghostly moths, with mottled wings, And spooky bugs in armor dressed.

And grotesque bones of unknown things

And some things worse than all the rest—

With these I startle room and hall I pin them up with memories glad, Until each staring frenzied wall Looks like a crazy quilt gone mad.

Robert & Burdette

You can't get AN IDEA Mantels, Grills and Fret Work mless you il write for CATALOGUE ! which we will must Address BRIGGS & LEIBIUS 311 Summit Street,

Toledo, Ohio

For Heating Dwellings Public Buildings, etc., by Hot

Water Circulation, the eurn ev

HOT WATER HEATERS

AND RADIATORS

are the original and best. They have never failed to take the highest awards wherever shown.

Send for our new illustrated book "How Best to Heat our Homes," a work of art on the subject of house-warming.

QUENEY HOT WATER HEATER CO., 163 Pranklin St., Boston, Mass.

Beiling Agencies:
New York: JOHNSON & CO., 71 John St.
Chicago: RICE & WHITACRE, 47 So. Canal St.
Philadelphia: J. C. TRACESKI, 246 Arch St.

KEEP COOL

THE BEST ELECTRIC FAN

For Ventilation in Sick

Room, Study, Office, or Dining Room. A PERFECT MOTOR for running a SEWING MACHINE. Attached to any machine in five

ONE-HALF ORDINARY PRICE.
Strictly High Grade in Every Particular.
No Better Machines Made at Any Price.
BATTERIES for running MOTORS in places
there there is no electrical current.

THE ROBINSON MOTOR and BATTERY CO. John Hancock Building, Boston, Mass.

"Royal Egg"

MACARONI and care by American wheat and care by American wheat and care by American measurable of the property of the fact, and the property of the fact, buy a posted box of your drawer, or such it reads in stances and we will small FREE a SAMPLE BOX with book of original receips.

BOYAL FOR RACABOST WORKS, Mosespelle, Blan.

THE PEERLESS STEAM COOKER

Cooks a whole most over one burner on grading of, gas, or com-mon cook stove. It will pay for in-self in one senson for cupoing fruit. Agents wanted, either set; big profits: exclusive territory. Address, with stamp,

C. E. SWARTZBAUGH & CO. 334 Bearborn St., Boson 931, Chicago

DO YOU READ ADVERTISEMENTS?

TRATS WHAT WE WANT TO FIND OUT.

To the first 25 who mention this paper and take for free pist of our $1.50 buts on $1 monthly payents in CRIFFITH, Chlengo's coming factory Suburb we will sind a receipt for $10, mon any lost heresfeet bought of us to the next light free admission to the World's Fair. Try it:

11 9806038 & CO. 500 thanker of Connects. Chicago.

THE Minneapota Saving Pund & Investment Co. of Minneapolis, Ninn., is a safe place to de post or invest money to any amongs. Write

This Department is conducted and edited by RUTH ASHMORE, who cheerfully invites questions suching any topic upon which her young women readers may desire help or information, ddress all letters to Ruin Ashmore, care of The Ladies' Home Journal, Philadelphia, Pa.

WONDER if you are the sort of girl who never knows when it is wise to close the gates of silence and let speech remain inside them? I have said many times that much unhappiness was that much unhappiness was brought about by people not knowing when to say the kindly word, or the loving word, but I am sure that just as much results from the inability to repress the word of condemnation, or the one that is suggestive of contempt. You may know all of the bad side of somebody well; if you do, repress it. Do not let anybody think that that is all you have been able to discover in them. Do not let anybody think that in the garden of life. let anybody think that in the garden of life you can only find the poisonous weeds, and that your eyes are not well enough trained to dis-cover the beautiful flowers. Somebody comes to you and tells you something disagreeable that an acquaintance has said about you; and without a second's thought you pear out all without a second's thought you pour out all the ill that you have ever known, or heard, of the one who has said the unkind words.

THE ART OF REPRESSION

You do not see where the virtue of re-pression comes in. It is a virtue then, and a great one; for just so surely as the story was brought to you, just so surely will what you have said be carried back to your what you have said be carried back to your friend. And there is another thing. Not only must you learn to repress the unpleasant words, but you must put down the unkind thoughts; begin to excuse the woman who has spoken ill of you; begin to think out what possible cause she may have had for finding fault with you; and if, after all your thought, you can only come to the conclusion that she was actuated by petty malico, then make your own heart throb with delight as you decide that you will not be petty, and that you will not be small enough to say the words that come to your lips. Pebble throwthat you will not be small enough to say the words that come to your lips. Pebble throwing is an amusement for children; it is a vice among older people, but even if the pebble hits you and hurrs you, endure the pain, make your lips form a smile, and let it be among the things that do not count. It will make a better woman of you, it will make a stronger woman of you, and it will make a Christian of you. One of these summer days when you have an hour to think about yourself take the word "repression," and decide when you believe it desirable, and when you think it is not, and you will find that once that knowledge is yours, and you live up to that knowledge, you will be the happiest girl in all the wide world.

SOME OF THE IRRITATIONS

SOME OF THE IRRITATIONS

I KNOW just as well as you do how perfectly delightful it is to swing in a hammock and read the story of some famous woman's life; or, even just to dream there about your sweetheart; and I know just how irritated you get, and how plainly you show it in your face, when somebody asks you to come in and help dress the children, or set the teatable. I know just how delightful it is to be telling your ambitions to a girl friend, and to suddenly remember that it is your turn to darn all the stockings this week. I can see the expression on your face. I know when darn all the stockings this week. I can see the expression on your face. I know when you are studying out a bit of music how hard it seems to leave it to go and make the wheels of a sewing machine whirl around, making aprons and sewing up long seams in frocks and beamning towels. There is a frown on your forehead, there is irritation in the way you walk, and you do your work sulkily, which means badly. You have been disappointed, and you look at your mother as if it were all her fault, and as if she had no right to ask from you these services. Shame upon you, my girl.

In this world we get many friends, there

In this world we get many friends, there may be many sweethearts, but there is but one mother. There is but one woman in this wide world who has suffered that you might wide world who has suffered that you might live, and but one woman to whom it ought to be your greatest pleasure to give the helping hand cheerfully. Nobody is as proud of your ability to talk, your ability to bring forth beautiful music, or to win a sweetheart, but you ought to be just as proud to do for her anything you can. You can put into your work a cheerful gratitude, and you will find the work will go quicker, will be better done, and that the look of joy from your mother's eyes will be a reward worth all the rest. You say you cannot help efficie irritated.

You say you cannot help getting irritated.
Yes you can. At heart you are a good girl, and you can do anything you want to. I am moved to say this by having been in the house with a girl who found everything that was not to her own pleasure an irritation. And I saw just what it was unking of her: a woman about whom no one cared, who was growing wrinkled with ill temper, who irritated overywrinkled with ill temper, who irritated every-body, and at whose departure every-body was glad. That is not the sort of girl you are striving to be. Oh, dear no! Not if you are one of my girls; for, please God, every one of them is trying her best to be the bit of san-shine in the house, so I suppose I must have said this for the benefit of the girl that you and I will call the other one.

ARE YOU A CHRISTIAN?

THAT is what a girl wrote to me the other day. I do not think she meant to be impertinent, but she was. Suppose I had answered "Yes," suppose I had answered "Yo," By neither of these answers would she have swered "Yes," suppose I had answered "No."

By neither of these answers would she have known what I really was; for one might accept the story of Christ, and believe it, and yet not be a Christian, because it is "by their works ye shall know them." What are your works? What lave you done that gives you the right to call yourself a Christian?

Have you been like unto Christ Himself, loving, forgiving even unto death?

Have you been like Christ Himself, considerate of the sinner? Thinking out the cause of the sin, and tenopering justice with merce?

Have you been like Christ himself, the joy and comfort of your mother's heart?

Have you, like Christ himself, done absolutely unto each one as you would be done by?

Have you, like Christ himself, been full of loving kindness and sweet humility?

It is possible that you have not even tried to be all, or part of this; it is possible that your idea of Christianity is the reading of sermous and questioning the faith of your sister woman. Do not do this, my friend. Make your own life every day so much more like Christ's that of sure part of the content of the christ's later of the christ same christian of the christ's later of the christ same christian of the christ's later of the christ same christian of woman. Do not do this, my friend. Make your own life every day so much more like Christ's that out of your gentleness and sweetness will come not the unkind interrogation, but the beautiful example that makes every woman look at ron and say, as a quiet prayer, "This woman is a Christian. Dear God, make me like unto her."

A BOUQUET FROM THE COUNTRY

Did somebody ever bring you a bouquet from the country? Somebody of whom you were found? It is not like the one got at a florist's shop. Each flower has been picked just as it grew, so that all the blue ones are not massed together, all the pink ones on another side, and the perfume group does not have its stems done up in tinfoil. They smell are in the perfume in the perfume upon them, and which have bloomed out under the gracious smile of real sunshine. You hold a bunch in your hand, and you look at them, and somehow each one tells you its To hold a bunch in your hand, and you look at them, and somehow each one tells you its story. There's the pale blue fuffy flower that is known on the other side of the water as heather, and which an old colored mammy told you was really the paint brush of the fairies. There are the drooping heart-shaped blossoms, clear white, with a pendant red drop like a tear; you take one out, press it, and put it in your prayer-book, for in countries where religion and noetry are very close they call this it in your prayer-book, for in countries where religion and poetry are very close they call this "the bleeding heart." Then there is a bunch of royal purple pansies, each one a face, and if you look hard you will find in them faces you love. Then there are the pink and the red and the white clove pinks; in the city they call them carrations, but you laugh at their having that name in the country. Then there are long stalks of the mignonette, the sweet-smelling flower whose quality is said to surpass its beauty. There are the prim, pale blue little Quaker ladies, as neat as if they only lived to tench you the beauty of that virtue; And then there are stalks upon stalks of sweet-smelling geranium put about the flowers before they are tied with a soft ribbon. I tell you, my girl in the country, that a bouquet from there means more than all the orchids that were ever cultivated in a greenhouse; and what I want you to do is to remember what what I want you to do is to remember what the flowers mean to the dweller in the hot cities, and to give of your plenty to those who have to spend their time where the roadways have no daisies or black-eyed Susans growing beside them, but instead hard blocks of stone. A bunch of flowers can be gathered by you in half an hour; it can be put in a box and sent by mail for little cost and less trouble, and you are selfish and mean if you do not give of your plenty to those who have nothing. I mean this when I say it, and you must be the other girl, and not one of mine, if you submit to being called selfish and mean.

THE HEATED DISCUSSION

MY dear girl, what earthly good does it do you to lose your temper, to say silly words, and very often to show your absolute ignorance by allowing yourself to be drawn into a heated discussion about religion or politics? One never makes converts by show ing that one cannot control one's own temper. And one is very much apter to make enemies by making so-called smart speeches in defense of a cause than to gain friends. Do not let anylody induce you to get into an argument unless it should be a very quiet one, and one of which you are sure you have all the knowl-edge, that will enable you to come out as vieof which you are sure you have all the knowledge that will enable you to come out as vietor, and then do not let the subject discussed be either of the two I have mentioned; for they are the best breeders of dissension and the best subjects for upsetting a household imaginable. As the brightest girl in the home you can essity convince the rest that discussions about them had better be reserved for some other time, and as the brightest girl you can easily manage that this other time shall. can easily manage that this other time shall

WHAT YOU WANT * * TO KNOW * * *

Under this heading I will cheerfully answer each month any question I can, sent me by my girl readers—RUTH ASHMORE.

E. H.—For suggestions as to fancy work refer to general articles on that subject in this Journal.

Susta II.—As I do not approve of piercing the ears, I cannot give the advice asked for in your letter.

A SPESCRIBER—You certainly do not put "Miss" be-fore your name when writing it in an autograph altom.

ELLER-A tall girl, even if she is young should wear erakirts sufficiently long to prevent her looking awk-

Execuse A light collation during the summer would e one of chicken or longue sandwiches, ten and leed

A. B. C.—A call is not required after an ordinary tea. With evening dress eval links of white confinel are test liked by men.

C. M. T.—It is not necessary to acknowledge announce ment cards in any way, unless the people who are mar-ried are intimate friends of yours.

Nan-In sending out the invitations for a birthday party, it is considered in better taste not to state that it is in commemoration of the day of your birth.

SINCERE A SOURCE - Unless the young man has made a proposal of marriage to you, or signified his intention of doing so, it would be very foolish for you to give up your other neu friends.

RITTH W.-You evidently mean the mixture of resewater and beamin known, centuries ago, as virginal milks. A few drops of it thrown in a hasin of water will tend to soften and freshen the skin.

REAROUS—Souvenir sponsare those having engraved upon them, in an artistic way, either the name of the city in which they are sold, or the head of some noted person specialty connected with that city.

P. A.—it is in rather better taste to give a reason for decibiling an invitation, if you have one shat can be told, but if not, it is equally polite to simply regret your hability to accept the kind invitation offered you.

Sistem-It cannot be said that a girl has disgraced berself who has run away and got married; certain ly, however, she should go to for father and mother and ask their pardon rather than expect them to come to her.

DOTTEE—The only time to wear a wrapper is in the early morning, or in the privacy of one's own room. (2) A lounge, a couple of pretty chairs and a table with a card receiver on it, are sufficient furniture for a small reception hall.

Minneapolis Girl.—You say your hands perspire whenever you assume kid gloves; the remedy for this would be to wear a losse-fitting glove and to powder your hands with ordinary toilet powder just before as-suming them.

KITTER A.—A little borax thrown in the water in which you bathe your body will tend to make your akin dryer and subtue extreme perspiration; usually this results from great weakness, and a built or a posi-tive rest is required.

A SUBSCRIBER-Visseline rubbed well into the roots of the bair will, it is said, thicken it. (2) If a man friend story visiting you, the best way to treat him is to be per-fectly polite when you meet him, but to abstain from saking him to call upon you.

May—There would be no impropriety whatever in you and yourgir) friend going to the open alone, but if the man to whom you are engaged to be married objects to it, then it would be wheat to give it up. (2) do not be-lieve that a property made, well fitting curset, is in-hurious.

GRACE B.—It is in very bediaste to put" no presents" on your wedding cards. People who think at all have gotten ever that old idea that an invitation to a wedding necessitated a present, and so it would seem rather too suggestive of your expecting them for you to decline them in advance.

CINTHA—Say to the bride that you wish her all hap-piness and to the bridegroem that you congratulate him (1) Your escort site on the right side of you at the table (3) When a party consists of one man and two women the gentleman would sit at the bead of the table with a lady on each side of him.

J. M. H.—A deergyman is introduced exactly as any other man would be, his derical garb usually indicating his profession. (2) At a dinner served in courses you should hake each dish offered and eat a little of it, even if you do not care for all.

E. C. A.—As you do not care for silk sheeves in your silk gawn, why not have them of some of the pretty woolcrinkly materials that look like soft crope? (2) in writing a better to a man friend commence it: "Dear Mr. Brown "and not "Dear Friend." Thank you very much for your kind words. Mas. G.—It will be wisest to submit your beavy draperles to a professional cleaner. (2) A powder made of equal proportions of prepared chalk and order resol will be found a pleasant tooth pewder and one that will not injure the beeth. If you are careful to wish them well so that no powder remains on them.

SUPPRIMER AND OTHERS—I cannot recommend any depliatory, and while I sympathize very much with these who suffer from superfluous bair. I can give them no belp. I have said this a sampler of times, and as I receive a great many letters I shall be forced in the fluore to ignore all letters containing this question.

X. Y. Z.—"Dear Miss Brown" is a rather more formal address than "My Dear Miss Brown." (2) For the ques-tions about the wedding, reception, etc., I would advise your consisting a good blook on exquette. The answers required are too imany for me to treat them properly in this column. Will you allow me to wish you all joy and impriness in your new life?

A. W.—Cold, or any other innecest cream, may be used upon your skin and will tend to keep it smooth. Be not think about the summer freckles, for they will find away with the aniumn winds. (?) You seem to have read a very good class of books. I do not think that a good novel, benest in purpose, pure in tone, and picturing life as it is, will harm any one.

Be inculibre.—The article on complexion will give you the suggestions that you wish about caring for your skin. My experience with wire brushes is that they pull the hair out. The best kind of brush is one that has long bristless of medium stiffness, which while they go well through the hair, removing the dust and dandruff, do not carry off locks of hair with them.

F. L. 1.—It is not necessary to bow to young men who are your fellow students unless you have taid a formal introduction to them. It would be quite proper, as you and your steer are truin, to have one set of cards upon which should be engraved! "The Misses Jones," to be used when you call together, and then for each to have a card with her Christian name upon it perched by "Mas" to be used when you are making visits abone.

E. W. First calls should be returned within two weeks. (2) As you are the only daughter your visiting earls should have "Miss Smith" engraved upon them. (2) If a party of gentlemen same for your benefit it would be merely polite for you to write them a note thanking them for the country. (4) You say that you asked the roung man to call upon you, that he necepted the invitation and has since been visiting at your borne. It certainly would seem superfluints for him to set your permention to do so at this late day.

Cases: Vinselline will durken the hair biagoiled directly to it, exactly as all greace will, but in recommending it for the bails I distinctly stated that the visselline is to service of the transition of the state and that grant quantities are not desirable. It will tend to make the evolutions grow, CI Girls of fifteen do not very fairly vells, though it is quite ential to see a gazza thed star likely fasts, so that the delicate skip is grantened. It is neverting a man triend you give the initiative by bowing first. (b) For suggestions as in the care of the har see the critical in the Jone number of the Jone number of the Jone number of the Jone number, on that subject.

WHAT DO YOU FEED THE BABY?

Lacto-Preparata and Carnrick's Food are the only perfect Infant Foods that have ever been produced.

Lacto-Preparata is composed wholly of milk, and when added to water, yields a food that is almost identical with human milk in composition, digestibility and taste. It is designed more particularly for infants from birth to seven months of age, during which time infants should have only milk.

Carnrick's Food, composed of half Lacto Preparata and half dextrinated wheat, is designed for infants from seven to twenty months of age.

The above two Foods are the only Infant Foods worthy of the name, and the only ones that will always perfectly nourish a child. Send for free samples and a 64-page pamphlet, entitled Our Baby's First and Second Years, by Marion Harland, with advice by an eminent physician, on the Care and Feeding of Infants.

REED & CARNRICK, NEW YORK

"My Baby Weighed

8 lbs. at birth " " 3 mos. . ...

I think we were starving it, for no food agreed with it. Dr. Hodgdon, of Dedham, was called in as a last resort, when the child was four months old. He

In 2 Months it Gained 9 lbs. \ All by Using And Now Weighs 21 " Lactated Food recommended Lactated Food and Before using Lactated Food it had little life or activity, but now is as lively as a cricket." Geo. K. Dennett, 23 Bromfield St., Boston, Mass.

Lactated Food saves bables' lives. It is the perfect substitute for mother's milk. Regular-sized purkage free to any mother who will agree to give it a careful trial. WELLS, RICHARDSON & Co., Burlington, Vt.

Tooth-Food.

This medicine for babies prevents and cures pains of teething and resulting diseases, not by putting children to sleep with an opiate, for it contains no harmful drugs, but by supplying the teeth-forming ingredients which are lacking in most mothers' milk and all artificial foods. It is sweet and babies like it. $1.00 a bottle, at all druggists. Send for pam-phlet, "Teething Made Easy."

THE REYNOLDS MFG. CO., CINCINNATI, O.

"MIZPAH" VALVE NIPPLES WILL NOT COLLAPSE.

Make nording sear, and prevent much, colic, because they admit air into the boilts as the milk is drawn set, and prevents a recumb being formed. Sample free by mall upon request, with valuable toleranding for eleming and keeping alppion sweet and healthy. Z WALTER F. WARR, 50 S. Third H., Phille, Ph.

MR. COATES cheerfully invites questions touching any topic upon which his young readers may desire help or information. Address all letters to FOSTER COATES, care of THE LADIES' HOME JOURNAL, Philadelphia, Pa.

URING the past six months fully two hundred letters have reached me from boys have reached me from boy a making inquiries a bout electrical matters. All of these I have answered briefly by mail, but the subject is so large, and the interest in it is so absorbing, that I have determined to devote my page in the be matter.

I may say at the outset, that of all the pursuits open to the boy of to-day—that is, the boy who wishes to win name and fame—there is none, perhaps, that is more fascinating than the study and development of electricity. Part of the attraction that is connected with this great science or industry, no doubt comes from its novelty, for, despite its gigantic growth of late years, it is as yet a new and almost unexplored force. Com-pared to steam, it is as an infant to an elderly man. Yet this infant, in all probability, will be the ruling force of the world within a few

THE INDUSTRY OF THE COMING CENTURY

THOMAS A. EDISON has done more than any other living man to open up this great field of industry. At the same time he has a wide and more thorough knowledge of its possibilities. Yet be said to me not long its possibilities. Yet he said to me not long ago: "I am only beginning to learn the business. The mind of man is not capable, at this time, of grasping the future developments of this wonderful force. What may yet be done through its agency remains to be seen, I could not, if I would, prophesy as to the final results, and I fear that I should be laughed at if I tried. You may look at the progress that has been made during the past ten years, and then consider that this new industry has all the future before it. It is a ten years, and then consider that this new in-dustry has all the future before it. It is a scientific miracle; one of the greatest ever evolved, and its possibilities are almost limit-less. The best informed of scientific men will not attempt to say what may or may not be done by means of electricity. It would be worse than rash, for no man knows. We are constantly studying and just as constantly discovering new wonders. It is a study that is fascinating, and that one never wishes to give up after be learns its first rudiments."

THE OPPORTUNITIES OFFERED

N<sup>OW</sup>, my boy readers will doubtless form in their own minds one short and simple question;
"What are the opportunities for the boy of to-day who engages in the electrical industry with the intent to make it his life work?"

with the intent to make it his life work?"

That is the question that I have asked of a dozen or more men who are leaders in the development of electricity in its several branches. They gave various answers, but there was one statement that they made in common: That a boy's success, in this as in any other pursuit, depends mainly on the boy and his mental and moral make-up. But they all agreed that there is no pursuit that offers greater inducements to the right sort of a boy. The boy who is clever with his hands or his brain, who is willing, ambitious and a boy. The boy who is clever with his hands or his brain, who is willing, ambitious and persevering, and who takes up the study of electricity in good carnest, will find no reason to regret his course. He may not, to be sure, become an Edison. But he will have at his hand work that will bring to him all in the way of material compensation that a reasonable person should wish for, and he will be engaged in a field in which his mind may constantly find new delight.

EDISON'S WONDERFUL SUCCESS

WHEN I speak of the success that will be met by the elever, industrious boy who enters that pursuit of which this talk treats, I do not mean mere monetary success As this world is made up, money is a u-eful and necessary thing. But the boy who enters upon any pursuit with no thought save to accumulate money is making a mistake. His effort to become wealthy may be successful, but he will miss the great undercurrents that make the life of the poorest man sweet and whalesome. There is no evidence that Galiwholesome. There is no evidence that Gali-leo, or Newton, or Darwin put money above all other things, but their names will live for all time. Theirs was a success that succeeded. has money been the moving influence Edison. The development of the wonwith Edbon. derful force that he bus spent the better part of his life in studying, has brought him morely in the natural course of things, but no our who has met the famous man and talked with who has met the famous man and talked with him has ever been able to took that he is in may way mercusary. His inventions produce money, but he looks beyond this to their re-salts on the world at large. He thinks more of his experiments than of his bank book. He lives for his profession and not for the profit there is in it. Were it otherwise he would be less great than in a. His is a survey that is an object because that were live and that is an object lesson that every boy may study with profit. It has been one of honest, manly endeavor, the timer by reason of the fact that there has been nothing to equal it,

MIRACLES OF MODERN SCIENCE

Miracles of Modern Science

Tex years ngo there was but one electrical branch that was really worthy to be classed as a great industry, and that was the science of telegraphy. Telegraphy in itself was, and is, a wonderful thing, but it was but the first of a series of scientific miracles. The result of these has been the opening up of many hundreds of companies that are engaged in the perfecting of electric forces and the manufacture of electrical machinery. The foremost experts now reckon that from $800,000,000 to $1,000,000,000 is invested in the business. $1,000,000,000 is invested in the business. There is one firm that was started some ten There is one firm that was started some ten years ago that has a capital of $50,000,000 invested. The Western Union Telegraph Company alone has a capital of over $100,000,000. These are large figures that show clearly what great progress has been made in this new industry. Yet even now it is in a crude and in many ways unfinished state. But crude, though it may be, with a future before it that even experts hesitate to speculate upon, it is being utilized in all manner of ways for the benefit of mankind. Not only are written messages now signaled over the wires, but spoken ones as well. It is used to operate machinery in the place of steam. It runs railway cars. It is driving gas from the field as an artificial light. It supplies heat. It is the hope of the foremost experts that the time is now at hand when it will furnish the natural power to our great ocean steamships. Then there is the domestic branch that in itself is a highly important one. Electric bells, burder alartos, and seems of other coveres. self is a highly important one. Electric bells, burglar alarms, and scores of other conven-iences are now in thousands of business and private houses.

VARIOUS BRANCHES OF THE BUSINESS.

THE average boy who reads all this may be puzzled as to what branch of the electric The average boy who reads all this may be puzzled as to what branch of the electric business will suit him best. The matter is not so complicated as it may seem. After all, there are but five branches to be considered. They carry the rest with them. Any of these branches is of sufficient importance, and holds out inducements to move anybody to take it up as his profession. But the studying of any one of these branches will lead to the study and consequent familiarity with the others. Perhaps it would be more correct to say there are four branches to the electrical industry proper. These are the telephone, the telegraph, lighting by electricity, and the development of the electrical power for the use of railroads, steamships, and those various lines of business that in the past have had to depend upon steam as a motive power. The fifth division referred to is what is known as the general electric trade. It lies in the manufacture of tools, appliances and general industry, and in its way is as important as any of them. It is crowing just as rapidly, too, for the deand in its way is as important as any of them.
It is growing just as rapidly, too, for the development of the great force has been such as to call for constant progress in the business of making instruments and tools.

WHAT OFFERS THE BEST INDUCEMENT

WITH that branch of electricity known as WITH that branch of electricity known us telegraphy most of my boy renders are doubtless more or less familiar. It is the older branch of the business. It has reached that state of development where it does not offer the same advantage that it once did. Still the boy who takes it up and does his full duty by it will find that it is not without its reward for the persistent worker. What is true of telegraphy, is in a measure true of the telephone business. It is in a sense a monopoly controlled by a few. But it is in its further developments that opportunities for inquiring minds and willing hands are to be found. Even now there are more than 200,000 found. Even now there are more than 200,000 miles of telephone wires in use, and upwards of 400,000 instruments connected.

Electric lighting is newer than the two branches mentioned, but its growth has been There is the great sum of $150,-000,000, or thereabouts, invested in it. This represents the operation of upwards of 150,000 are lights, and more than 1,500,000 incandescent Still newer than this branch is development of power by electricity, applied to locomotives, steamships, stationary engines and all that. The possibilities in this line seem almost limitless. A few years ago the ties of an electric nailrond was dismissed with the mere suggestion of it. Now, the subject is puzzling the brains of thousands, and in some of our great cities the electric car has been tested, not with great success, it is true, but it is the general opinion that with new discoveries and improvements from time to time, the old horse and steam raffronds will disappear entirely. It is in these latter pursoits the development of the electric light, and of the electric motive power, that the young man of to-day may find work ready to bin hand. The rest depends mon binned. He may become a great electrician or inventor along the line of his profession, or he may remain an inferior and poorly paid workman all his life. But if he remains the latter, he will have himself to blame, for there is no turnoit that seems to offer greater or is no pursuit that seems to offer greater or more solid advantages to the young mun or boy than does electricity in his several branches.

SECOND TO NO OTHER FORCE

HAVE dwelt at some length upon the magnitude of the electrical industry, for the reason that it is so young that most of my boy renders can scarcely be acquainted with it. It naturally follows that a business so vast, and with so great a future before it, is one that holds out special inducements to young men who enter it now, and to use an expression, grow up with it. It was advice of this kind that the famous railroad magnate, Commodore Vanderbilt, gave to his protégé, Chunnecy Depew, many years ago, when the latter seemed Depew, many years ago, when the latter seemed inclined to make politics, to a large extent, his inclined to make politics, to a large extent, his profession.

"Stick to railroading, Channeey," said the wise old man, "railroading is going to be the business of this country."

He was right. Mr. Depew took the advice. He advanced as the railroad grew, until he is now, as you know, at the head of the great Vanderbilt railroad system.

Now, if Mr. Edison and other prominent experts know anything of the matter, electricity opens up much the same field of endeavor to young men that the railroad did twenty to young men that the railroad did twenty years ago. Indeed, it may in time outgrow it. years ago. Indeed, it may in time outgrow it. Yet it is not in my way the rival of the other industry. On the other hand, it is the hope of electricians that they may help in the further progress of the railroad by supplying it with a motor power superior to steam. When they do this, and furnish steamships with the same, when they light all our houses and streets, when they supply heat, and do offe hundred and one other things that are now done by hand, and when the telephone, the phonograph and all the other wonders of late wears are fully perfected, electricity will rank years are fully perfected, electricity will rank second to no other force from an industrial standpoint, Then the boy who has taken it up and grown with its growth will find bimself in an enviable position.

THE RIGHT WAY TO START

THE RIGHT WAY TO START

MR. EDISON and the other experts all agree on another point, besides, in the opinion that the boy of to-day will find the study of electricity a good thing to take up. They agreed that when a boy started in this profession he should start in at the bottom, He cannot start at the top. He may be aborn inventor, but he cannot hope to vie with Edison, or even inferior men, in one year, or two, or more. He must remember that the very best of the experts are at this time but feeling their way in this profession. They are developing a great power, whose force, strength feeling their way in this profession. They are developing a great power, whose force, strength and usefulness in the future they can but imagine. Mr. Edison, whose accomplishments in this branch of science have been so many, might claim to know, but he makes no such claim. He says that he is only beginning to learn it.

learn it.

This is an important time in the history of the business, for the leaders in it are working hard to make electricity a motive power, capable of supplanting steam. It cannot now, 80 far, even in the running of railroads, it has been found impossible to economically generate the electric currents directly. Steam and water are used for the purpose, but in most of the electrical establishments in this country steam is depended upon almost entirely. But the electric motors, when perfected, will be far cheaper than steam notors, and the man who provides the means for bringing the former to the right point will have fame and fortune at his feat. his feet.

ONE WAY TO BEGIN

ONE WAY TO BEGIN

OW to enter upon the profession is the question that will confront the boy who has a desire to engage in it. Let me repeat that the best way to get into it is to start at the bottom. Of course, it is possible for him to study electrical engineering and all that in regular classes. But that will cost, surely. The science is taught in trade schools, but these are not numerous enough to be necessible to all the boys who would like to know something of the wonders of this modern science. But for those boys who cannot attend these schools, where the first radiments of electricity

But for those boys who cannot attend these schools, where the first radiments of electricity are to be learned, there is still a way. There are electrial works and factories in every town of any consequence in this country. There are always opportunities for a boy to obtain places in these. These positions will at first be humble ones. The work will be hard. The compensation will be small, or for that matter, there may for a time be no return at all. But the boy who really wants to thoroughly learn this great business will not be dismayed by these conditions if there is any good in him. To succeed in this profession, the boy must be clever with his hands, as well us with his brains. That is what has belped Mr. Edison to his present high fame. Not only is his a master mind, but his is also a skilled craftsman's hand. There is no man's work about san's hand. There is no man's work about his factory whose labor he cannot do. He is master of every branch of the business, even down to the making of the most delicate tools that are required in it. All this he learned by hard study and persistent labor. What he has done other boys may do, in at least a degree, by copying his methods.

POSSIBLE REWARDS OF ELECTRICITY

A S to the compensation that a boy may expect in the electrical field that is a matter that cannot at this time be reduced to any reliable statistics. It is another thing that depends a great deal upon the boy himself. Inferior, or carcless boys, who continue as such must expect no great rewards. Boys of the right sort may look forward to almost mything that is in reason, for at the rate this business is developing there is no telling if it will not reward those who follow it, just as the great railroads have done,

SOUND, PRACTICAL ADVICE TO YOUNG PEOPLE

A BUSINESS education is necessary to business success. Every person should study book keeping, business forms, pennanship, fetter writing, business law, or shorthand I at home, by until Successfully taught by BRYANT & STRATFON'S COLLING, 450 W, Main St., Buffalo, N. Y, Write for Prospectus.

EQUAL in every particular to the $75 and $100 sults made by any other leading house. We are the only house in the United States making a specialty of Evening Bress Sults at the lowest possible cost. We import only the best fabrics, the style, fit and finish of our garments are strictly guaranteed, and our Dress Sults acknowledged to be the most elegant made.

NO RISK. Obstomers may return garments if unsatisfactory, and all express charges will be paid by us. Every gentleman in society finds an Evening Bress Sult a necessity, as good form demands such for parties, weddings and all evening receptions. We send full instructions for self-measurement, so simple that any one can use it. We are general tailors, and furnish samples of all styles of goods. Address including 6c. for postage).

KAHN TAILORING CO., 14 Washington Street Box T, Indianapolis, Ind.

"Like Poor Poll."

It was said of Oliver Goldsmith, you remember, that he "wrote like an angel, but talked like Poor Poll.

How many people do we meet, in these days, who talk like "Poor Poll," simply because of missing teeth, which have been permitted to decay and drop out for lack of proper care?

Rubifoam

the Perfect Liquid Dentifrice, will make and keep your teeth pearly white, gums healthy, and breath sweet; neither can there be any decay while it is used.

All druggists.
Large bottles 25 cents.
E. W. Hoyt & Co.
Lowell, Mass.

GORMULLY & JEFFERY MFG. CO.

222 to 228 N. Franklin St., Chicago

WASHINGTON NEW YORK

IN THE

The glorious days of open doors - all outside is smiling welcome --here's health and joy all unconfined-The cycler sees everything -he's where everything is free as freedom - from the heights of exhilarated happiness be cannot fall-from his Columbia Safety.

All about Columbias free on application to any Columbia agest, or seat by mail for two two-cent stamp. Pope Mig. Co., 224 Columbia Ava., Boston.

Owner Two Lamon

CHAIRS

and CRIPPLES. House Jorgious.

BICYCLES ON EASY
Nucktra charge. All makes new or 20 stocks and others dealers in U.S. Cata froz. Agia wanted. State Misses 4 C., 80 U.S. Person of HAYWOOD will be glad through this Department to answer any questions of their readers may send to her. She cannot, however, undertake to reply by fore, do not ask her to do so. Address all letters to MISS MAUDE HAYWOOD, 5' HOME JOURNAL, Philadelphia, Pa.

PESTRY PAINTING

COND PAPER

ERE is a definite method to followed in painting faces with the tapestry dyes in order to gain the best results. ertain fixed rules can be erthin fixed rules can be even for the mixing and applying of the colors, a light variation in the pro-tinus employed producing dations for any shade of trily portrayed. The method of is extremely simple, but this, to have a few practical t, to see a face put in by it, to see a face put in by seed in the art, because al-ons can be easily given in ge beginner lacks the nec-and confidence to follow essful issue. The appearance 1 its various stages is suffibe rather startling to any-evious knowledge as to how to be obtained.

t for anyone who is unable s, and yet anxious to learn s, and yet anxious to learn themselves for the under-ge figure subject, by painting s on small pleces of canvas, count of experience and fa-dued. Each one should be possible, even though it may led during its earlier prog-er of fact, if only the draw-the actual mainting may be the actual painting may be sted and brought out right, would be at first supposed, be carefully transferred and with a finely pointed crayon; wers the purpose very well, gun by blocking in the markof the face with pure san-medium and a little water, medium and a little water, still further diluted for the tones, and leaving the broad. For putting in the features very tiny still brush should order to be able to model ent accuracy. At the cont stage, the face should stand frome, the drawing and expectly and boldly indicated, a eyes, if blue, must not be tine, but should be painted been local color. For this mixed with ultramarine, pointing is quite stry the painting is quite dry the seral tone of the complex-d on. This wash must be any be made of sanguine at two-thirds medium and. The whole face, with the eyes, must be covered, and abled in, the canvas being I with it. While the that is a following mixture may be se following mixture may be a yellow and indigo, making mass green, and the same uted and rendered slightly sen, while the wash is still tenough for the color to run cable when applied, work the shadows and half-tones or previously touched in some doring of the cheeks. The a counteracting of the red duction of transparent and s. Allow this painting to this are obtained by means and whatever painting up, dieration may be necessary, shed by means of the same aployed, but mixed in still ng green where the tone is uine where it is too cold or specially careful at this stage much color, , use for the shadows brown z added, and for the wash, with ponceau. For brown ir, paint the shadows with d make the wash of a pale ed, renumbering that black always cold, bluish high a mash for the hair is made. ork up the half-tones with e, and vice versa.

ith a few words of general contions in the handling of was are apt to depend too of it. Paint broadly, emit-ce work of this kind all work of this kind all c careful to keep the thats are very strong, and a pic-strongthened; it is better at side of getting the painting han to risk making it dark

PAINTINGS IN OILS FOR BEGINNERS

BY INA I. ALLEN

HE habit of close and acthe nature of close and ac-curate observation of things, their features and movements, is one of the rarest of possessions, but it is absolutely necessary to one who would win any decree of success or an

it is absolutely necessary to one who would win any degree of success as an artist. Most persons observations are vague and wanting in fullness of detail and precision. The unpractised eye fails to observe that the color of everything varies with the quality of light falling upon it; that in the dark all things lose their local color, and a leaf or blade of grass which we call green may vary from the deepest possible tone through all the shades of brown and green and yellow, even to white, according to the quantity and quality of light in which it is seen. Turner was one day painting a landscape with the richness of color that was his specialty, when a young girl who was painting near by, left her easel and came to look over his shoulder. "Why, Mr. Turner," said she, "I don't see any of those colors in the grass or the trees." "No!" said Turner, "Don't you wish you could?" Certain it is that the power even of perceiving color may be developed in no slight degree by exercise.

HAPPY are they who have an intuitive perception of color; but those less fortunate should not be discouraged, for the faculty can be acquired by patient application. If you have not already done so, try first to become intimately acquainted with the colors in your color box, and to recognize them wherein your color box, and to recognize them whereever they occur, whether in a picture or in nature. If you are painting from a colored model, after mixing your tint take it up on your brush and hold it beside the color you wish to match. If it is too dark you know you must add more white, or if it is less blue you will need the addition of that color.
Practice combining tints in this way until you detect easily what is wanting. But above all train your eye to the careful observation of the harmony of tints so bountifully displayed in nature. If you are looking at a sky or flower try to detect by your eye the colors that are in it. Aim to develop a habit of so doing, and before you are aware of it you will find yourself thinking: "There is a great deal of yellow othre in that sky" or "madder lake in the half-tints of that leaf."

A SIMPLE spray of ivy makes an excel-lent study for a beginner in painting from nature. First sketch the design in out-line with charcoal. For the background mix from nature. First sketch the design in outline with charconl. For the background mix lightly on the palette, with a good-sized bristle brush, the following colors: white, yellow ochre, raw umber and ivory black. Always mix colors as little as possible, as too much mixing muddles them, destroying their purity and brilliancy. The brush is better in this respect than the palette knife. Begin at the upper left-hand corner. If an old board is used for a background, you can practice on the palette strokes to insitate the grain of the wood. A knot or two may be effective, but be sure to keep the backgrounds quite simple, avoiding detail, which would only detract from the beaves. Bemember you are painting leaves, and everything else must be made subordinate to them. Close one eye and study the first leaf. Note carefully where the light strikes most directly. We always speak of this part as the light: then notice the part where the least light strikes, making a shadow. Between the lights and shadows you will find a part very little affected by light and shade, and the color of any object uninfluenced by light and shade is called the local color. It is this color solely that the unpeactised eye sees. The beginner is slow to recognize the texture of solely that the unpractised eye sees. beginner is slow to recognize the power of light and shade in a pointing. Local color seems more real, and there is a disposition to let it hold its own even into the lightest light and the deepest shadow. A most important point is to guard against the excessive use of local color. Lay in first thegeneral tone or local color of the leaves while the background is still wet, so that the edges of the leaves may be softened into it. For the local color use Antwerp blue and Indian yellow and into this natural the shadow using more blue and lastly paint the shadows, using more blue, and lastly paint the high lights, adding chrome yellow.

P your design is large, begin only what you A can finish at one sitting, as it is essential to have all parts wet at once, so there will be no harsh edges, Leaves that are behind others should have their edges softened into the buckground more, and by working a little of the background color into them they can be thrown still farther back, so that the leaves will appear in the painting just as they are on the branch—different distances from the eye. When you succeed in doing this, we say you have produced a good atmospheric effect, for it is the effect of the atmosphere that makes the remote object less distinct. no harsh edges. Leaves that are behind others

HELP IN TOWN SYOUR OWN WORK

Under this heading I will be glad to answer, every month, questions relating to Art and Art work. Maude Haywood.

N. H. M.—An oil painting always looks well rather deeply set in a gilt frame.

A. G. B.-When asked about painting in oils on fabrics intended to be washed, my invariable advice is "don't."

C. G.—I believe that the secret of the method of coloring the photographs as you describe lies with the Japanese.

QUEEN M.—A crayon looks well set in a simple oak trame. The old paintings may be suitably mounted in INNORANCE—Full and clear directions as to applying the decaleomanic pictures are supplied with the mate-rials for the work.

EDENIA AND OTHERS—It is not necessary to understand the details of the photo-engraving process in order to do good illustration work.

E. E. S.—In pointing in elis upon paper, the surface may be previously prepared by a coat of size. The ordi-nary size is used, being merely melted in a little boiling-bot water.

FRANCES-The chances for a woman earning her living by painting on china, depends entirely on that woman's ability as an artist. I cannot recommend pri-vate teachers.

NELLIE-The cause of the paint scaling off may be that the picture was variabled before it was perfectly dry, or the trouble may lie in the vehicle employed

L. E. F.—The application of gold leaf is too difficult for the ordinary amstew, who usually wastes the valu-shie material, and in the end falls to get the same effect as an expert workman.

Ruzy—The coloring used in thiting photographs de-pends entirely upon the tone of the print which is be-ing colored. (2) Try some still-life studies in water color, suggestion for which were given in the March number of the JOURNAL.

FANNIE-For brown paneles in water colors, use the umbers, the siemma and brown madder; for the deep prilovich parts take orange cadium. (2) Use Wantman's hand-made drawing paper, procurable from all dealers in artists' materials.

Mas. W. H. D.—If you are a subscriber to the Jour-sal, you will find in the back numbers many bints which will be helpful to a beginner in oil painting. In the June JOURNAL, among the answers to correspond-ents, advice was given as to the outilt suitable.

Mics. W.—Mail cloth is obtainable from the best dealers in materials for art embroidery, but is not always called by that name. In texture it somewhat resembles buckshack toweling, and is particularly suitable for work having darned backgrounds. The price is from $2.30 upwards.

Mexicoca. — likestrated papers certainly accept good photographs or sketches as illustrations, but they have to be landed over to a draughtsman to be put into subsable shape for reprediction by the less expensive processes. (2) The size is immaterial, but the chearer the pletures are as to detail the better.

INQUESES.—In making enlargements for decorative work, a pantograph may be employed. It is a mechani-cal contrivance which can be procured from about a deliar upwards, from most designs in artists' materials. Directions for the neo of it were given in an article pub-labed in the Journal for August of lest year.

Pro-In oils use crimson lake and Antwerp blus.

(2) Bead "Lillies for Easter" in the April number. (3) The coloring to be used in out-door scenes depends entirely on conditions of light and atmosphere in the picture. (4) Any ordinary atomizer is employed for applying finalif to charcial drawings, and should be kept clean.

C. I., D.—Finish the flowers in oil as much as possible in the first painting, and do any necessary touching up when the study is quite dry. (2) Satin or velves should be stresched but not too tightly before painting upon E. (3) If you wish to varnish the flowers of course varnish the whole panet. (4) In oils, employ hog-hair trushes for general use. A. M.—In painting a pale dark complexies, the colors employed should be yellower in tone and browner in the shadows than in a fair flow. Much the same analous may be used, but a sught difference in the proportions of the colors when they are mixed gives all the attitude required in obtaining the various tints. The lower pigments employed the better.

A SUBSTRIEBER—In order to get work of any kind published, whether writing, linestrations, or moste, the only plan for an unknown beginner is to send the MS, or drawings to a publisher, with a bein note, offering them for his consideration. If returned from one place try several in succession. If the matter is really well worth publication is will probably find a market sooner or later.

H. E. H.—To gain transparency in pointing grapes, it is necessary to pay very particular attention to the eareful rendering of the reflected lights, which in purple grapes are very crimson and in the green varieties very jetlew. For purple grapes use crimson lake and Anterept thus, and for the green ones, the duober greens mixed with the yellows or blues, as required, may be employed.

A. R. C.—In illustrating a booklet, water colors may be used on ordinary water color paper. The pictures must, of course, only be drawn on one side of the paper, (2) If the words of the hymn are to be printed the space on the drawing where they are to be should be left blank. The size of the drawings may be the same as when printed, or larger. The terms of publication vary ac-cording to agreement in each individual case.

M. E. H.—When a picture begins to crack after having been painted for some length of time, the trouble usu-ally lies with the vehicle which was employed in mix-ling the colors; or sometimes the rause is owing to the painting having been varietised too soon, before it had had time to become thoroughly dry and hardened. The best plan is to consult a professional picture restorer, who will know best, after seeing the painting, how to advise you.

W. L. B.—Whatman's drawing paper may be used for pen work. The kind known is hot-pressed should be chosen. For many purposes firistol beard is pre-ferred. (2) The drawings must be made with hold ink, cl: The size may well be about twice or three lines as large as they are intended to appear when published. (4) For a familie for charcoal drawings, dissolve haif a drachm of gum mastic in two omness of alcohol. (5) The pen and link sketch you send would be unit for publication because E is made with ordinary writing link. The drawings you send show clearly your lack of artistic training. You evidently possess some degree of imagination, but you could not hope to do work of this character for publication without a period of study in the principles of drawing, preferably in some good selected. If the theatrallous are your own unabled work. I should hadge it worth your while to enter as a course of training.

of training.

D. P. N. Aven Orbitics—The following method of pointing phaster of Parts casts is given by a first-class European firm: Procure some belied linesed oil. The most be bought ready prepared, as the boiling is a special process, and common be done at home. If too those for use, warm it sightly. Hawing previously well distort the cast, give it a cost of the oil, applied very thinty, which must be allowed to thoroughly dry. Continus to part the cast over with the oil, setting it dry in between each application, until the phaster will absorb so more. Two or three cases are usually required. The streaky appearance of the cast at this single is of no consequence. These take off paint of any descret shade, thin it will spirits of turpertime and lay it as very thinty. It will probably be necessary to paint if over everal thuse, allowing the color to dry in between, for on no goeson must be paint be laid on thickly enough to show the much marks, since in that case the delivates of the modeling would be obligated. may be washed with some and water.

NEW ENGLAND CONSERVATORY Founded by Dr. Eben Tourise. OF MUSIC. CARL PARLTEN. Music, Riccution, Literature, Languages, Fine ris, and Tuning. Send for Illustrated Calendar. FRANK W. HALE, Gen'l Manager, Boston, Mass.

PEIRCE (OLLEGE or BUSINESS

A high class commercial school affording complete equipment for business life. Also French and German. Office open air assumer for examination and encomment of students. Full term begins Monday, Sept. Mi. 1982. Application blanks now ready. Early enrollment necessary. For Codinge Amoud, Shorthand Amouncement, Gradualing Exercises, including Mr. Andrew Carnegie's remarkable address on practical education, call or address.

THOS. MAY PRINCE, Ph. D., Principal and Founder, Becord Building, 317-319 Chestnut St., Fulladelphia, Fa.

 AND SHORTHAND

STUDY LAW AT HOME

SPRAGUE CORRESPONDENCE SCHOOL OF LAW, (Incorporated) Send ton come (stamps) for

J. COTNER, Jr., Sec'y DETROIT, MICH.

All expenses paid to energetic students

The Utlea (N. Y.) Conservatory of Music, having facilities for more purits, offers free for the school year beginning Sept. 3th, room, board, plane, and $62.50 of tuition in each student who may induce six others to other the institution for "One Year Course." Other advantages to those who induce fewer than six. Plan of action and culadogue sent free. In 180, 400 students.

Hellmuth LONDON, College, Canada.

College, Cauada.

Per Young Lodies and Givis.

Boartiful Home. Beathy Climate. Full Academic Correc.

Music, Art. Elevator. 10 cares. Sucouts from 55 Provinces and Scates. For illustrated catalogue, address.

New, E. S. ENGLISH, R. A., Prin.

FT. EDWARD COLLEGIATE INSTITUTE

Eth year Sept. 19, $700; Superb modern buildings and appointments; steam heat; rooms for 180 young women and for 12 professors and teachers; figuraturing courses and preparatory; intelligent cure of bealth, morals and manners; conspicuously thorough departments of Art, Music, Election and Languages. See Illus, catalogue, Jos. E. Kino, D. D., Ft. Edward, N. Y.

HOWARD SEMINARY West Bridgewater, Physicsth County, Mass. Twenty-five miles from Boston. High-grade school for Girls; pleasant surresindings; house care; manufeer limited. Advantages in Music, Art. Elecution, Physical Training, Cooking. Diploma awarded for graduation from a regular course. Send for illustrated circular to Bt. M. WH.LARD, A.M., Principal.

CHICAGO ATHENÆUM-PEOPLE'S COLLEGE

This year. Open all the year to both sense. A school of high perceion for therough fournetton. All studies circline. It can-cioned Reconvers. Shorthand and Grammar Departments. Drawing, athenantics. Medican Languages and Charles. Electrica. Litera-Mathematics, Modern Languages and Classics, Electrica, Litera-ture, Wood Carving, Music, Library and Grammatum. Address E. J. GALVIN, Supt., for Catalogue

BUSINESS EDUCATION

CHICAGO BUSINESS COLLEGE 45 to 49 Randolph Street, Chicago, Ill.

DELICATE And all others spend winter in pure, mild alr, at the UNIVERSITY OF TENNESSEE Knowythe STUDENTS Literary, Engineering, Law and Normal Write for announcement.

WESTERN MICHIGAN COLLEGE

Grand Rapids, Mich. | Chatterd and emmodations. Leading Literary, Musi

WALNUT LANE SCHOOL

Boarding, bay and College Preparatory for girls. 36th year opens September 18th. For circular, address Mass. Turnousia B. Richarles, Principal, Mass Sana Louise Thace, A. M., Associato Principal, Germantown, Philadelphia.

Woman's Medical College of Pennsylvania The 42d Annual Session opens Sept. 28, 1892. A 2 years' graded course of 7 months is given in betures and clinics. Address Clarks Mackinsta, M. D., Denn, N. College Avenue and Est Street, Philadelphia.

CINCINNATI CONSERVATORY OF MUSIC.

Miss Clark Have, Directors, Established Se-Ladies from a distance may board in the Conservators where they are under the personal supervision of the octross. Students may outer at any time. For outer no, address Miss CLARA BAUR, Cincinnati, Obto

ASHLEY HALL, HOME SCHOOL for Young Laftes and Little Girls, Music, Art, Languages and thorough preparation for college, MISS WHITTEMONE, Montvale, Mass.

HORNER MILITARY SCHOOL, OXFORD, N. C. Modern buildings, hearthful elimate, beautiful mur roordings, numbers hulled. A model actual for buyes Cusacces sent on application. BOESER & BEEWRY, Principals

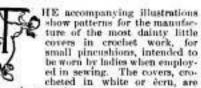

A Sketching Camere that reflects any small sictors life-size sent on trial. Catalogue (A) free.
C. R. JENNE, Fort Wayne, Incl.

SQUARE DESIGN (Illus, No. 2)

ARTISTIC CROCHETED COVERS

BY SARA HADLEY

slipped over the cushions, made in silk or satin of any desired shade, and finished off pretrily with a ribbon bow to match. The pincushionsmeasure about three inches across, and the bor-der, three-quarters of an inch wide, ex-tends some distance berond. Directions for working round pin-cushi on (Illustra-tion No. 1): Make 8 ch join in a ring, work 12 tre with 1 ch between into the ring; join, catch a se into the 1st space, * 12ch, I d c into same space; work 16 tre into half the loop made by the 12 ch, then 6 ch, catch back then e.c., catch back to 5th ch to form a picot; repeat twice more; 15 ch catch into 6th stitch back, 5 ch, 1 d c 3 times into loop thus made. This forms the foundation of the trefoil. Work 1 d c, 12tre, 1 d c into each section, 16 ch, catch into 12th stitch back, work section, 16 ch, catch into 12th stitch back, work 20 d c into the loop thus formed; 5ch, catch in-to last of the 3 picots worked on the way up to the trefoll; work 3 picots as before, joining them to those already made with single stitches. I ch between each picot, then 16 tre in-to the 2d half of the loop starting from the foundation ring. I d c into the same space the loop started from, 1 s c into the next space of the foundation; repeat till 12 trefoils are made from *. Take note that after the 1st ring of 20 d c has been made instead of making 15 ch 29 d.c. has been made instead of making 15 ch after the 3 picots make 5 ch, catch to the center of the ring of 29 d.c. then 11 ch, catch back into 6th stitch and work the foundation of the trefoil into this loop as before directed. Border: 1 d.c into center leaf of trefoil, 10 ch, 1 d.c into center of last leaf of trefoil, 2 ch, 1 d. tre in-to center of top half of ring formed of 20 d.c., 2 ch, 1 d.c into center of 1st leaf of trefoil, 10 ch, 4 d.c into center of next trefoil; repeat. 2d row—4 tre with 2 ch between under the last

ROUND DESIGN (libras, No. 1)

2d row—4 tre with 2 ch between under the lat 9 ch, 1 ch, 1 tre under the 2ch, 1 ch, 1 tre under the next 2 ch, 1 ch, 5 tre under the next 10 ch with 2 ch between each ;

3d Row-1 d c under the 1 ch directly over the double treble; 2 ch, 1 tre under next space; repeat until reaching the space over the next d tre; miss over the space behind it, work I d c as before into the space over the d tre;

repeat. 4th row-1 d c worked into the d c over the d tre. 2 ch, miss 1 tre and work 1 tre under the next space, 9, 5 ch, work 1 tre back under the tre just worked, I tre into next space without any chain between: 5 ch, repeat from * until there are 7 plents formed in this way, then I tre into next space, 2 ch. I d c into the d c in the preceding row over the d tre; repent from the beginning of the row. The unequal divisions in the border are inten-tional to give the scallops a shell-like form. Directions for working square pineushion:

(Illustration No. 2.) For the center rose make 10 ch. join in a circle; into this work 1 tre,
3 ch 8 times.
21 row—1 dc, 5 tre, 1 dc into each of the 3 ch.
3d row—At the back of the scallops make 4 ch. 1 dc into the tre between the 3 ch into which the 5 tre are worked; they nock 1 dc.

4 ch. 1 d c into the tre between the 3 ch into which the 5 tre are worked; then work 1 d c, 9 tre, 1 d c into each 4 ch. At the back of the 21 row of scallops work 5 ch. 1 d c between each group of 9 tre; into each 5 ch work 1 d c, 11 tre, 1 d c. On to the 13' stitches in each scallop work as follows, starting from the beginning of a scallop; 6 d c into each stitch; this brings it next the center stitch. Then brings it next the center stitch. Then make 5 ch, and into the 4th ch back 1 d c; repeat 3 times, making in all 4 pi-cots, 1 ch, miss the center tre in scallop 12 dc, this brings the work next the center work next the center stitch in next scal-lop, II cb, catch in 6th stitch back. To form the trefoil work into this loop I s c, *, 3 ch, 6 d tre, 3 ch, 1 d c; repeat twice more from *, then niong the 5 ch work 2 d c, 3 tre, 1 more tre into the side of the last d c on the scallop, miss 1 tre, 12 dc up to the middle of the next scallop. Repeat the picots and trefoils until 4 of each are made. Then work 1 d e between the 2d and 3d picots, *, 5 ch, 1 d tre between the 1st and 2d d treble in the 1st leaf of the trefoil, 4 ch, 1 tre, miss 4 d tre, 1 tre, 4 ch, 1 tre between the 1st and 21 d tre of the center leaf of trefoil, 4 ch, miss 4, 1 tre, 4 ch, 1 tre between the 1-1 and 2d d tre of the 3d leaf of trefoil, 4 ch, miss 4, 1 d tre, 5 ch, 1 d e between the 3d and 4th picots; repeat from 3. Next row—9 d c under the 5 ch, 2 d c into the next space, 3 ch, 3d c into same space, 3 ch ch, 3 d c into same space, 3 ch, 2 d c into same space; repeat into all the spaces over the trefoil, then 9 d c under the 5 ch; miss the d c worked be-tween the picots, and repeat from *.

Next row—10 tre, with 5 ch between into the loops of 3 ch, over the trefoil, 5 ch, 1 tre, into the middle stitch of the 1st 9 d c, 6 ch, catch back into the tre just made, the into the center of the next 9 d e, 5 ch; repeat from the beginning of the row, Next row-2 tre, with 2 ch between each into every

5 ch, 1 tre into the loop be-tween the two tre over the picots. Next row-1 tre into each tre in preceding row, with two ch between.

Next row—Begin at a corner space, work 1 d c into it, *, 4 ch, 2 d c into same space, 3 d c into the next 2 spaces, 1 d c c into the next 2 spaces, 1 d c into next space; repent from *.

Border — Into one of the loops formed by the 4 ch in the previous row work *, 5 don tre with 2 ch between 3 ch, 1 d c into next loop, 3 ch; repent from *.

Last row—Work into each of the 2 ch between the 5 d tre, 2 d c, 3 ch, 2 d c, then 6 d c into each of the 3 ch, without any ch between.

Back for square cushion: Make 8 ch, join;
work into the ring 16 tre, with 1 ch between.

Next row—1 tre 2 ch, 1 tre, into next space
4 times, then 2 tre into the same space with 2 ch between to form a corner; repeat. Work 8 more rows in the same way increasing be-

8 more rows in the same way increasing be-the corners occasionally by working 2 tre into the same space.

Last row-1 de, 3 ch, de luto next space; repent, entching the cenrepent, catching the cen-ter of each alternate loop at intervals into the d.e., forming the foundation of the border for the front square. Leave one side of the square open, to slip the cashion into it. Ground for the back of physicilars.

phoneshion (Illustration No. 3); 10 ch, join; work into this ring 24 d tre with 1 ch between each. then work 8 rows of 1 tre into each space with 2 ch between increasing them so that the circle lies flat by working 2 tre with 2 ch between into one space at Intervals, Outside row—1 de into any space, 5 ch. *, 1 de cinto same space, 1 de into next space, 5 ch.; repeat from *. In working this last row each the back to the front at base of the trefulls and between them in the 1st row of the border, leaving opening large enough to slip in the cashion.

REVERSE SIDE (Illus, No. 3)

BY MAY WINKWORTH

EXTER cotton No. 10-4 thread.
Cast on 3 stitches and knit plain.
23 row—make 1, knit 1, make 1, knit 1, make 1, knit 1, 3d row—make 1, purl 5, knit 1.
18th row—make 1, purl 1, knit 2 make 1, knit 1, make 1, knit 1, purl 1, 5th row—make 1, purl 1, knit 2, make 1, knit 1, make 1, knit 1, purl 7, knit 2.
6th row—make 1, knit 1, purl 3, knit 3, make 1, knit 1, make 1, knit 1, knit 2, purl 2.
7th row—make 1, knit 2, purl 3, knit 3,
8th row—make 1, purl 3, knit 4, make 1,
knit 1, make 1, knit 1, knit 3, purl 31.
9th row—make 1, knit 1, knit 4, purl 4.
11th row—make 1, knit 4, purl 13, knit 5,
12th row—make 1, knit 4, purl 13, knit 5.
12th row—make 1, knit 4, purl 15, knit 6, hait 1, make 1, knit 1, knit 5, purl 5.
13th row—make 1, knit 5, purl 15, knit 6.
14th row—make 1, knit 5, purl 15, knit 6.
14th row—make 1, knit 5, purl 15, knit 6.
14th row—make 1, knit 5, purl 15, knit 6.
14th row—make 1, knit 5, purl 15, knit 6.
14th row—make 1, knit 5, purl 15, knit 6.

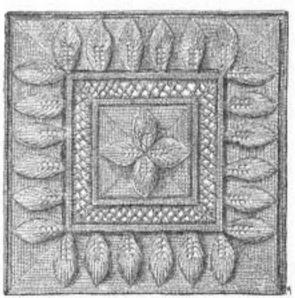

gether, purl 6.

15th row—make 1, knit 6, purl 13, knit 7,
16th row—make 1, purl 7, slip 1, knit 1, pass slip stitch over knit stitch, knit 9, knit 2 to-

16th row—make 1, purl 7, slip 1, knit 1, pass slip stitch over knit stitch, knit 9, knit 2 together, purl 7.

17th row—make 1, knit 7, purl 11, knit 8, 19th row—make 1, knit 8, purl 9, knit 9; thus continue until 3 stitches are left in the leaf, then knit the 3 together, making 1 stitch in the leaf.

26th row—make 1, knit 25, 27th row—make 1, knit 27, 28th row—make 1, purl 28, 29th row—make 1, knit 28, 30th row—make 1, purl 38, 31st row—make 1, purl 31, 32d row—make 1, knit 32, 33d row—make 1, purl 33, 34th row—make 1, knit 34, 35th row—make 1, knit 35,—36th row—make 1, purl 36, 37th row—make 1, knit 37, 38th row—make 1, purl 38, 39th row—make 1, knit 37, 38th row—make 1, purl 39, 41st row—make 1, knit 2 together; repeat until end of row, when knit 1, 42d row—make 1, knit 2 together until 2 stitches are left, then make 1, knit 1, knit 1, 42d row—make 1, knit 2 together until 2 stitches are left, then make 1, knit 1, knit 1, 44th row—make 1, knit 2 together until 2 stitches are left, then make 1, knit 1, knit 1, 44th row—make 1, knit 4, 46th row—make 1, purl 43, 45th row—make 1, knit 44, 46th row—make 1, purl 45, 47th row—make 1, knit 47, 49th row—make 1, purl 48, 30th row—make 1, knit 47, 49th row—make 1, purl 51, 33d row—make 1, knit 52, 54th row—make 1, purl 51, 33d row—make 1, knit 52, 54th row—make 1, purl

53. 55th row-make I, knit 54. 56th rowmake 1, purl 55.

make 1, purl 35.

57th row—make 1, purl 2, *, knit 1, make 1, knit 1, make 1, knit 1, purl 7; repeat from * until end of row, then purl 1.

58th row—make 1, knit 1 *, purl 5, knit 7; repeat from * until three stitches are left,

59th row-make I, purl 3, 8, knit 2, make I knit 1, make 1, knit 2; repeat from * until end of row, then purl 2.

60th row—make 1, knit 2; *, purl 7, knit 7; repeat from *; knit 4; repeat the above until ten row—make I, part 8, 7, sup 1, knit 1, knit 2 together, part 7; repent from 2, then part 7, 70th row—make 1, knit 7, 2, part 13, knit 7; repent from 2, then knit 9, thus continuing until 3 stitches of leaf remain, then put the 3 stitches together, make 1 stitch.

6 holes are made in the leaf. 69th row—make 1, purl 8, *, slip 1, knit 1.

82d row—make 1, knit 60, 83d row—make 1, knit 70, 84th row—make 1, part 71, 85th row—make 1, knit 72.

8th row—make 1, part 73. Cast off as such row-make 1, purl 73. Cast off as loosely as possible.

This forms one of the four triangles which are used to make each square. The number of squares required depends on the size of the bed upon which the quilt is to be used.

EDITORIAL NOTE

As The Mary F. Knapp retired from the editorship of the becartnest some months since, and is no longer identified with The Landes' Heart January, correspondents will kindly refrain from addressint letters or manuscripts to ber. All manuscripts or letters appearance to knitting, exchesing or needlework shauld be addressed, impersonally, to "The Editor, Tim Lanuar Hous. Jorges at, Philadelphia, Penna."
The Editor of The Lanuar' Houn. Jorges and the property of the Committee of th

NOW READY-THE AUGUST PART OF THE

YOUNG LADIES' JOURNAL

The best Journal for Ladies and Families, containing the LATEST AND BEST FARMINGS: PROPERTY AND BEST FARMINGS: PROPERTY FASTIONS: NUMEROUS COMPLETE STORIES of absorbing bistreet: and the opening chapters of a NEW AND ORDININAL STORY valided "A RASE ACT," besides New Music EMBROLOGRY DESCRIPT, E. T. The many complete magnitude for halve published. Price, 30 Cents. Vanity, $4, including the Christman number. All new designs and THE INTERNATIONAL NEWS COMPANY, NEW YORK

NEW NOVELS 15 Cents FAMILY LIBRARY MONTHLY.

THE INTERNATIONAL NEWS COMPANY, NEW YORK. Si and Si Iname Street, one door East of Broadway.

Sabstriptions Received for any Periodical, Foreign or Demostic

COSTS BUT LITTLE TO READ!!

A perusal of our catalogue containing over 2000 titles of books at ten, twenty and twenty-five cents per copy, will convince you of this fact. Catalogue may be had of any bookseller or newsdealer, or will be mailed free upon application to

SEASIDE LIBRARY

No. 142 Worth Street, New York City

SUBSCRIBE ### ILLUSTRATED WORLD'S FAIR Sci. 50 a year. Send 25 cis, for sample copy. The only Publication illustrating the Progress and every Phase and Frature of the tirest Exposition from scart to finish, Great Indoorments to Lady Agents. Address JEWELL, N. HALLIGAN, Gracest Sanager, Chicago

DE WITT & COMPANY,
47 Certlandt Street, New York.
Designers, Engravers, Printers,
Makers of Fine Stationery,
Special-Engrand Files and 196 Cards, $1,26. Sample Basic
Not. 5 and 4 new trady. Send year came and address for car-

PORTRAIT DRAWING successfully taught by mail. Write for circulars. PRACTICAL ART SCHOOL, 17 Quincy St., Chicago, III.

MUSIC Send stamp for complete cata-ingue of sheet and book music at less than is regular rate E. J. KNOWLES, 3844 Aldine Place, Chicago

FASHIONABLE HAIR.

We will mail goods to reliable parties throughout the United States for approval. The new-est styles and hest of goods at lowest prives. No money re-quired until they are received, No obligation to keep goods if unsatisfactory. Send for circular.

JOHN MEDINA.

Sample pair of either style mailed on receipt of 25c. I. B. KLEINERT RUBBER COMPANY, 26 to 32 E. Houston Street, New York.

Send for EMBROIDERY SILK of What to make the colors, seet past part for 30 EUREKA SILK and filters deliver a week SILK EUREKA SILK CO Mention PRICE CENTS.

MENDING MADE EASY with ut a Theore for of clothing from the finest slik to a backskin militen, and gloves and unobecine without sewing, quicker, number and stronger than twee before. Sample to cents. Miss Anna Graves, Box 660, Chicago, Ill.

SEW LESS The Invisible Mender. Mends any article of wearing apparel without sewing or showing a seam. 20 cts. a package. Agents wanted, send stamps for Catalogue MBB. A GAIL, Station W. Brooklyn, N. Y. Box 123

SILK SATIN and PLUSH REMNANTS for Cracy Poles. A large pile, pretty pieces.

keeping, Penmanship, Correspondence and ng taught av MAIL FIEE. Every State repre-t. Over 4,000 Students. Send 6 cts. in stateps

SHORTHAND The 08G00DBY SCHOOL OF SCHOOL OF SCHOOL OF STENGGRAPHY, Rachester, N. V. Instruction by mail only. Terms, $15.06, including necessary brooks. Instruction thereugh and complete, Symposis for Scient Stamp.

CHORT-HAND Send for Catalogue SELF TAUGHT for self-instruction of Books and helps of BENN PITMAN and JEROME B. HOWARD, to THE PHONOGRAPHIC INSTRUCT. CINCENNAT. ORDO.

STAMMERING

r "Speech Defects, Their Couses and Cor-Refer to Groups F. Jelly, M. D., Boston, E. J. E. THORPE, Newton Centre, Mass.

-SFWH ON HOME DRESS MAKING BY EMMA M. HOOPER MISS HOOPER invites, and will cheerfully answer any questions concerning home dressmak-ing which may be sent to her by the JOURNAL sisters. While she will answer by mail, if stamp is inclosed, she greatly prefers to be allowed to reply through the JOURNAL, in order that her answers may be generally helpful. Address all letters to Miss. EMMA M. HOOPER, care of THE LADIES' HOME JOURNAL, Philadelphia, Pa.

GNS IN COTTON DRESSES

THE fashionable modistes al-Ways bring out, late in the summer, some advanced styles of pretty conton dresses, and lately they have taken a fancy to satines in a great degree; but these must have either a gray, bright blue, or red surface, with cashmere-colored scrolls, or white fig-ures. They are made for esses, where most cottons become have the fashionable bell skirt, with have the fashionable bell skirt, with a of velvet ribbon, or three ruffles of ack satin ribbon, gathered thickly up each other, which makes a very il on the lower edge. The round worn with an Empire sash of black ive inches wide, which is tied on the with two upright loops, and one fallow with two upright loops, and also to of a deep cuff below the elbow. The covered with eern or Irish point lace, se yoke to match may be pointed, round are. Narrow black satin ribbon is tied it the top of the cuff, with the bow at the 2; the same ribbon encircles the collar, in the left. A dressy gingham gown of 2; the same ribbon encircles the collar, in the left. A dressy gingham gown of and cream stripes, with a little pink all here and there, has a bell skirt and a coff the goods, with a ruffle of white Irish it above. A round waist has a pointed e, plain collar and deep cuffs of the lace, ha pointed girdle of blue moiré ribbon six hes wide, which is folded narrowly around a waist, like a belt from the girdle, and hangs two embs at the back to the bottom of the css, with a rosette where the ends part at a waist line. A dainty morning dress is nade with a princess back, having the bias sell seam up the bock, and shirrings at the waist line, which fits the otherwise senmicss back to the form; the front is cut with a slight point and a gathered skirt.

HOW TO TRIM

FRENCH batiste, in cross-bar patterns hav-I ing a white ground, are made over plain lawn, making the lining a low-neck waist, sleeves and bell skirt. An evening dress of batiste will have a full skirt gathered thickly in the back, and slightly in front with a deep hero. The round waist has a yoke of the inevitable Irish point lace and deep cuffs of the same, or the sleeves may be lower and full. same; or the shoves may be long and fell, ending in a wristlet which is tied round with ribbon. Wherever the cotton dresses show a hair line, or figure of black, the ribbons are selected in black moiré or sutin; the slight-est excuse being thus taken advantage of to use est excuse being thus taken advantage of to use black on the dress, but black Irish point is never used on a light-colored cutton dress. For a slender figure there can be no prettier triuming than a bertha ruffle on the waist, which is sewed on the dress, and turned over so as to fall wider and fuller on the shoulders. A new vest for lace or embroidery on cotton dresses is V shaped, ending at the waist line. On either side are revers from the waist line to the bast, ending at the too with a how of on ether side are revers from the wast line to the bust, ending at the top with a bow of ribion formed of three apright loops and a small knot in imitation of the Prince of Wales' plumes; this is placed on either side of the test, bending the revers. They are also used as shoulder bows, and if there is a trimming of a jabot of lare from the collar to the bust the laws, thisk the lawer and the bows finish the lower end.

WHAT COLORS TO COMBINE

N making new gowns, or while remodeling old ones, care must be taken to combine conizing colors as well as materials that agree. This senson has witnessed an almost unbounded popularity for green, which is one of the most useful of colors, as it corresponds with tan, gray, black, white, and even laven-der has been stylishly arranged with pale green, but any such apparently glaring con-trust must be arranged only by an artist in colors and slandes. Tan and brown forms an adminuble contrast, and the gray slindes are worn with pink, cardinal, black, yellow and roen. Navy blue looks well with a rest of an, yellow, pink, paler blue or deep red, and green. lavender has been very fashionable with pink pale green, besides always agreeing well with clear purple shades. There is a clear layender, as well as a pinkish shade, and the latter is more becoming as well as the stylish selection at present. A sharp contrast is as agreeable as a slight one, but harmony and apcopriateness must be preserved. Very often a sinde lighter or darker than the dress will combine better than a contrast, especially if the fabric of the gown is of a prominent stripe or figure, as then a subduing effect is desira-ble. An eye for colors is a welcome gift to any dressmaker, but is also one that may cultivated when nature has denied the talent, now a necessary one.

FOR STOUT FIGURES

N my last article I spoke of the difficulty that stout figures had in dressing at the present time in a manuer becoming to the person, and yet stylish as to design. I am forced to speak of this again, for not a week expires that I have not complaints on this score. It is must an fortunate that the present styles are is most unfortunate that the present styles are so illy adapted to stout figures; but, unfortunately, a fashion writer does not and cannot make the styles. By using a little ingenuity and taste, however, many of the present de-signs may be well adapted for stout figures. signs may be well adapted for stout figures. But I must impress it upon my readers that it is not really the manner of making that is as important as the material selected. No power could make a stylish costume for a large woman out of a dress with a huge pattern upon it, or one with wide stripes, but a material with a very narrow stripe and plain surfaces, or delicate figure, would add greatly to the annearance. the appearance.

SUITABLE DESIGNS

THEN, of course, crosswise trimming must Let be avoided; stout people cannot wear broad, heavy frills, or what is generally termed any "fussy" styles of trimmings. Their sleeves should be moderately full, and in place of being high upon the shoulders should droop seeves should be moderately fill, and in place of being high upon the shoulders should droop more toward the elbow, giving the present wide appearance rather than the high. The close-fitting bell skirts are most unbecoming to a full figure, but the addition of a small fold on either side, draped into the belt, will at once dismise the extreme plainness and keep to the idea of the bell. This skirt I fully explained in the issue of last month. The folds around the bottom, or a plain trimming like rows of velvet or ribbon, should be worn in preference to any raffle. A slight train in the back adds to the height, and thus takes away from the breadth. Very stout women are apt to sink in at the back just below the waist line, which gives a broader appearance to the hips. This is easily avoided by wearing a very small pad fastened in the skirt under the belt; it should be very small, so as to round out the basque in the slightest manner, and yet take away the depressed apskirt under the belt; it should be very small, so as to round out the basque in the slightest manner, and yet take away the depressed appearance. Where the waist is rather small and the hips large, jutting out like shelves on either side, there must be what is called a "give" to the bottom of the basque, which is made by letting out the side gore seams, and taking in the waist line very sharply. Stout people should use the very best of whaletone for their basques, and not only hone every seam, but put an extra hone in between the side form and second dart, and one up the center front on the button side. Where the waist is over twenty-eight inches in measure, a double side form should be used. It would be impossible to describe the shape of this basque so that the different parts could be cut out without a pattern; but the two side forms are really no larger than one, but having a bias seam they make the figure look more tapering. As paper patterns cost but thirty cents upiere, I would advise any one of this figure to buy one with the double side form. The fashiomable basque, showing only the side the shoulder seams in the outside material are extremely unbecoming to full figures. The point in front should be about four and a half extremely unbecoming to full figures. The point in front should be about four and a half inches below the waist line, then shaped to fully two and a half inches below over the hips, with a point at the back the same length as in front, or cut the back with a deep narrow cont-tail, which is opened up the center, eighteen or twenty inches long, below the waist line, and at the bottom three inches in width.

FLANNEL GOWNS

"HIS material has become a standby for all A ages, though commonly grouped under the name of "outing" dresses. Plain naxy blue and white flamed, stripes and cross-bars of many sizes, are wern indoors and out. Boating, yachting, tennis, mountain, secside and country walking costumes are all of this seasonable and serviceable material. The trimming should never be fixey, and always something that will endure sun and rain, as something that will endure sun and ruin, as rows of nawhine stitching, or a blas liorder of a contrasting flannel, machine stitched on the edges, or finished with rows of feather stitch-ing in wash embroidery silk. Yachting gowns are gnyly decorated with rows of gilt braid and tions. Either this must be replaced often, be of the best metal, though even this turnishes in a short time in the sult air. A flan-nel dress should be sponged before making it up, though a few of the domestic flames are not of the shrinking class. Nowadays, a dress not of the strinking class. Nowadays a dress of this material has a bell, or gathered skirt, with a sulfor or plaited water. a Rossian with a suffice or plained was-t, a Russian bloome, or a blazer, to be worn with a silk or

DRESSMAKERS CORNER

Under this heading I will cheerfully answer each month any reasonable question on Home Dressmaking sent me by my readers.

EMMA M. HOOPER

JESSIE JONES-Your questions were answered in articles in May and June issues.

A. S. N.—I do not give the names of corsets in this column. (2) Jet or slik ging and a vest of black ben-

MALGETE-Try navy, clear dark green, pinkish iam and gray, never a cold steely gray, faint pink, light blue, cream and very delicate yellow.

NETTIE MAY-Let out the under arm scame, dampen and press out the traces of stitching on the wrong side, situater scame the same, and add a vest of silk.

Darsy-I am afmid the color will never return to our dress, but try benzine on a piece to experiment with: if unsuccessful, the dress will have to go to a Mass L. I., A., Pour Hernos—A private lotter was sent you. April 6th, to the address given in your letter of inquiry, and it has been returned with the stamp "unclaimed" upon it.

P. E. M.—The necessity for your answer is now over, but in any case such a long repty should buye been sent you personally, as so much space in this column can not be spared for one person.

M. F.—Of course this is too late to be of any assistance, but I must remind correspondents that to avoid deoppointment they must enciose a stamp and their address or write me in time to avoid a cruss ded columns.

Moss OLIVE—I am surry that your letter arrived so late, but as I have said many those before, when in a hurry send your personal address and do not wait for an asswer through the columns of the Lasses' Hosic Jothnat.

Miss R. A. W.—You requested an answer by mail, yet failed to give any address beside your name. Black sallies, alpara and mediair are used for petticuate when salk is not wished. (2) A tan or black reefer, liussian or box cost.

MILLEGETT-Your slik is really not findingable, but a wearable for an elderly indy, making it with a slight-y draped front and bell back, ruffle, high slierres, soluted cont-lail basepe and jet on the edges, lace ruffles at the wrists and as a jubot down the front.

OLD-FASHIONER GIRL-Your organdy will remoded into a full skirt of five breadths, turn or radie, fall skeeps to chows, low round walst, with a poke and deep cuffs of point de Genes have laid over lavender silk. Then wear a ribbon belt tied in a long bow at the back,

AN ORPHAN—Piece your black satin skirt down at the tottom, inding this with a ruffle of the same or a flat berder of molré ribbon three or four inches uide. (2) Trins the waste with carrow jet gimp, and if a point-ed basque, back and front, lay the ribbon folded on the edge, tying it is a long bow at the back.

M. L. M.—Bell skirt, flat border of No. 18 moire rib-ben headed with marrow jet gimp; basque pointed with deep, narrow "habit" back, high sleeves, jet on collar and wrists in two rows, and a marrow vest of beaded not or colored bangaline. You might perfer a correlet fract, which has been described several times to the JOURNAL.

N. M.—It will be impossible for you to remove water stains if they have special over the surface of your silk dress. A French dyer could probably de this, but they would have to cloan the entire naterial. If you have not such a place in Kansas City as a French dying es-tablishment, your dress could be sent by mail to Chicago, your nearest large point.

W.s.—Wear the cream wood. (2) Full skirt, round waist, full sherres, V or square yoke and deep culls of frish point have, or have a simplice whist and V of lace; rishon or leadler belt. (3) Make green with hell-skirt, radie, now high sherres, busque pointed in back, corre-te front, tiny vest of old rose or lighter green silk; fin-ish edges with jet, slik or changenible green bead glimp.

PREPLEXITY—Bayadere stripes are so inheard of that it would not pay to remodel yours for a dress. Why not use it for a slik petheout? (2) Girl's dresses have been written of many times before this will get a clauses to appear. (3) The glucham should have a full skirt, ruffle or been, full showers, round waist, yoke and deep cuffs of point do Genes lace, and a waist belt of ribbon.

M. W.—Wear navy blue, graybh green, golden and darker brown and favon shades. (2) Navy blue serge and blazer, etriped witte said tan gingham, black China-silk having small lavender faures. (3) A mirrow-striped laffen silk for the evening dress in changeable effects of tan and green, blue and gold, may and gold, etc. (4) Princess back and pointed basque front. Wear a well-ditting corset.

a well-filling corse.

C. M.—I should not advise a princes shape for a thin cotton dress. The one you mention would be much predict made with a gathered skirt having a deep heas, and round walst and very full sheaves to the elbews, and round walst and very full sheaves to the elbews, and round walst and pointed yoke of érou or white appears here. Then wear a pointed girdle of blue ribbsu, live inches wide, to match the dress, which can end in the back like a narrow belt, or have two long ends to the bottom of the dress, but no loops.

Povestry STRICKEN Mornier.—Serge and flamed are correct. (2) Line the lacket with sliests if of sorge, but not those of flamed; one lacket outwoars fully two kills. (3) The skirts can be warm with bloose and sliet wasts of thinner materials. (4) As many as he can afford; certainly two every day, one best and one second best. (5) They do not wear gingham apress. (6) They do not wear gingham apress. (6) They do not wear gingham apress. (6) They do not wear youks, as a well-shaped figure does not disturb youthful bends, and they soon outgrow the fleshy look.

INQUIRER—There have been several articles written concerning the making of thin wash goods, and in them I think you would probably find a salitable model for a middle-aged haly. If you have not noticed them, however, the dress should be made with a gathered skirt and a round wast, and embraidinty or plain triuming could be used, a round yoke and very deep cuffs of embroidinty with the waist belt of No. It ribbon which you can tie at the side of back, or finish in frost with russite and backle.

A. B. C.—You can make the terms suit of striped famout or outing civils, or if you wish something very pretty. Bough quite expensive, use the woot taffers, an haporard fastic. This is furly inches while and $1.75 a yard. The prethest striped famous would be him, yellow, has, or gray, with white for the alternate scripe. The most comfortable way to make this is a fell skirt and a sailor blotse. The most stylish is a bell skirt and jacket waid and blotse vest. It requires no trimping except the cedlar and deep coffs of a contrasting color, the pains blue, with faulter stitching on either sale of winter silk.

FORLY—It would be impossible to tell you what outfit you should have for a senson in the White Mountains unless you gave some idea of the amount of money you wish to spend. Gl. At a both observationing thing gests there would not, of course, be as march dressing as in one of the larne, helistiable houses, but at the same time you would need a mountain or climbing sult, a couple of morning dresses, which should be of wood, and at least too evening dresses, and a wrapper far your bedroom, and if they give hope or benull parties you should have one or two drawing dresses. But everything depends upon the amount of money that you wish to put in this outfit. In asking such questions please give more details in the future.

PCZZI.ED MOTREET-Vower friend was mistaken, as beys wear shirt walets of finen, psecule, combre. flamed, restrict dervice, "Guiling" violit, etc., with kine trousers and a Window crystal Ced in a large haw. (2) By "coar soils," was meant a short, round jacked ween with transers, or kill skill, with deep wother and coefficients of yet and the parket, which suits are not interested for turneter warr by your eliging. (3) The dressess and yet simulated with feer a bey's best were by mant-of-warr will set form with a striped flame, with or the and whith artiped flame, with or the and whith artiped flame, which a striped flame, and with a striped flame, which are a pror man. 4 Your run have many blue flamed in the flames as well as a large weither of boys, while in the flames at.

WM. SIMPSON & SONS' Printed Fabrics.

CROCK OP PAOL

PRINTED EFFECTS

#PROVES MASHING.

WARRANTED ABSOLUTELY FAST

PRINTED

EMINENTLY SUITABLE FOR LADIES'& CHILDREN'S DRESSES AND LADIES' SHIRT WAISTS

GREAT VARIETY OF PATTERNS IN BLACK, PINK OR WHITE Warranted Fast Colors

PRINTED BATISTE, 36 Inches Wide.

KING PHILIP MILLS.

Send two-cent stamp for samples of

Cambric, Lawns,

Nainsook and Batiste,

KING PHILIP MILLS,

85 Worth Street, New York, N. Y.

BARBOUR'S LINEN THREAD

ADAPTED TO ALL KINDS OF

HAND AND MACHINE WORK

LACE AND EMBROIDERY, now of so much interest to the Ladies, especially considered,

SOLD BY ALL RESPECTABLE DEALERS IN THE COUNTRY.

ASK FOR BARBOUR'S.

HAVE YOU A TORN DRESS? UNIVERSAL MENDING TISSUE

Which mends Sifk, Satin, Plush, Vetes, all Cuton and Woolen Goods, Kid Gloves, Guesamers, Carriage Tops, Imbeers, Oil Cloth, Carpets, etc., without seeing and much senter. Also brens all trees Goods better than can be done by hand or machine. Price, per perkage, postpaid, 2 cents. Try it. State. Compty net Local Agents waited, 175 per cent. profit. Address J. F. UPSON & CO., Manufacturers and Wholesale Agents, Unionville, Com.

RESS CUTTING

BY THE TAILOR METHOD. WAIST, SLEEVE AND SKIRT CUTTER. Simplest and most practical ever made. Any lady can become a practical free Culter in half an hour. 4.8" Hall price to his codese H. Send for circular, B. M. KURN, Inventor, BLOOMINGTON, H.L.

TABLE MATS. We will send you 3 cursour Loon Tubes Mats, sik to work them, also have a look to be a look to be

BABY'S HEALTH WARDRONE. Complete outfit by BABI 3 Ann's claims, M par, M cas. Short cloths Si pai, M cts. Full directions, kind, material require Patterns improved DMC. Nos. E. E. PHILLIPS, Sect. 3.

1111 woman who wishes to enjoy herself, who wishes to get good health with a breeze

the adoration of fracks or the dressing four or five times a day. People ask, "What shall I wear at the mountains?" or "What shall I wear at the senside?" And for the first wear at the senside?" And for the first general answer I can only say better err on the side of simplicity than on that of over-dressing. An acquaintance of mine said she had had the best time in her life one stimmer at the senside when she had for wearing two outon frocks, a flauned one, a summer silk, and a winter evening dress fixed over for the diances. Enjoyment-does not result from what one wears, but what one is and does, and in one wears, but what one is and does, and in one wears, but what one is and does, and in giving and gaining pleasure there must be an unsethishness bubbling in the heart like a spring, that causes one not to envy the fine feathers of other people, but to look at them with pleasure, and to be satisfied with one's own modest plumage.

DRESSING AMONG THE MOUNTAINS

DRESSING AMONG THE MOUNTAINS

If you are going up among those hills where certainly there does he repose, I would test advise you, in selecting your warstrobe, to give a thought to the house in which you are to stay and to the climate. Extensive inquiry and personal observation make use think it most desirable to buy one, two or three pretty, well-fitting flamed gowns for general day wear, because the mornings are apt to be cool, and if you come down to breakfast looking as marty as possible in your cloth or flamed costume, you will not have to wear an outside wrap far into the middle of the day, as you too often do if a cotton gown is worn; and you need only put on your hat and gloves, whether you go for a short stroll or a long walk. The cloth skirt, with a silk blouse, a blazer, Eton jacket or cut-away coat of material like the skirt is always pretty and in good like the skirt is always pretty and in good taste, and the jacket may be laid uside at noon-taste, and the jacket may be laid uside at noon-time if it is very warm, and with your dainty belt and blouse you are sufficiently drassed not only to look well, but to feel combotable.

I have said silk blouse, because there seems to be a general liking for them, but the striped flamed ones are in equally good taste, while those made of French piqué, with a deep turn-over collar and turn-back cuffs, are rather newer. The piqué used for these blouses is not quite as heavy as that liked for frocks: it is shown in a dull, pute blue, pute grey, faint pink, and in blue and white, pink and white, and lavender and white stripes. The blouses are gauged to fit on the shoulders, their most prominent feature being their very deep, turn-back cuffs. For evening wear nothing is prefiter than the light-weight summer silks, and if they are cut with a round neck and and if they are cut with a round neck and finished with a frill of lace or an outlining of velvet, they are quite dressy enough to be danced in, and, of course, as there are dances every night, it is not expected that you wear a regulation evening dress until the great festival of the season comes off.

ADJUNCTS OF A MOUNTAIN COSTUME

FOR mountain wear you must give a great deal of thought to your shoes; well-fitted, comfortable russet ones are most desirfitted, comfortable russet ones are most desirable for all the day, while putent leather is not recommended at all unless it should be in the form of a pair of fancy slippers intended for evening wear. Walking among rocks, knocking your feet against even tiny pebbles defaces the shirty leather and makes the shoe look as if it needed varnishing, and yet, when this carnish is put on, mountain air seems to affect it to such a degree that it grows dull. Your gloves want to be those easily put on, and so it is wisest to choose the soft chamois ones, that even when they begin to show evidences of wear are not absolute disgraces.

Have becoming lats. You can get all the

Have becoming bats. You can get all the wide-brimmid, picturesque ones that you desire. You can have a big blue or black felt but fastened up at one side with a big red quill or a small bunch of mottled feathers; and you can have an Alpine one with no decoention, one which may be put far back or fur forward on your head as suits your face, the time and the place. For driving, a leghorn with sweeping plannes or gay flowers upon it with sweeping pluners or gay flowers upon it is in order, and you may carry delightful bright parasols that would be out of place either at the seaside or in the city. The woman who loves red can satisfy her soul when she dresses for the motorizains, for dark clothes with red facines or linings, big red parasols, and if she fancies them red shees and stockings are possible, while she has grey rocks and great trees to form her background.

Of course, cotton frocks daintily made may be worn, but for early morning and in the the word, but for early morning and in the evening a jacket is required over them, which takes away from their pretty book, and so the tailor-nuale get-up is given the preference. Another thing, it is difficult to get om's gowns laundered or even pressed in the country, and nothing is unifier than a nuch wrinkled cotton force. By the way do not be translated course. forck. By the way, do not let stards and your cotton gowns ever become acqualated; they are not in harmony, and the rustle of the one antagonizes the other.

TO GO IN WITH THE GOWNS

J UST remember that drug stores and fine groceries are not to be found among the hills, and so if you are inclined to simbure, that sunburn that sings and burns until you suffer agonies, take with you the remedy that you have always used for it, and do not rely upon getting it where you are going. Then, if you are not quite strong, or have a fairey for some special brand of tea or cocoa, supply yourself with it, otherwise your pleasant days may be broken into by discontent with your breakfast, dinner or supper, and life even in the wild, sweet country will seem to you not very well worth living. If the nights are cold, a light-weight flamnel night-dress will be useful, and if the supply of blankets is not plentiful where you beard, you will appreciate the soft, downly pair that concernous bone. Take with you one, two or three cushious, covered UST remember that drug stores and fine soft, downy pair that comes from home. Take with you one, two or three cushions, covered with no inexpensive material that may be pretty, but which you will not grieve over if it should be injured and then you will have a rest for somehody's head in an easy chair, you can make your hammork a most delightful place of repose, and with a few more little belongings you can give to your room a homelike air that will make it a pleasant retreat when you weary of out-door lite.

FOR WEAR AT THE SEASIDE

IT almost seems, when each wave romes rushing in with its story of the immensity of the world, as if frill and frivols should not be thought of. But then everybody does not listen to the story of the waves, and from the very little people who dince amid the billows, and who this and build wordrots tise billows, and who the and build wondrous forts in the sand, to the girl who is listening to alove story, there is a thought of what must be worn. For the little people I repeat again and again, let them have plain clothes, plenty of tisen, and a good time. Let there be no frock that sand or salt water will injure; let there be no hat which, if it should blow away ned go sailing over the sea, cannot be replaced for a very small sum, and then there will come to the small folk nothing but a joyous, happy summer that will be remembered when they know, more's the pity, the menting of the word sorty. word sorrow.

THE PRETTIEST SEASHORE GOWNS

LL materials are possible at the sensible, A. for the sun comes out with such vigor early in the day that even if the cofton gown suggests chillinus when you first get up, by the time you have breakfasted and listened to the music, or are ready to go for a walk, you the music, or are ready to go for a walk, you are perfectly comfortable without any outside wrap. The simplest of cotton gowns, when there is with it a pretty last, dainty gloves and a suitable parasol, is quite as proper for the dressy afternoon drive as is the silk gown made in its most claborate style. Young women, and by this I mean young married women as well as young girls, prefer cottons, and have them made so carefully and so smartly that they look as well as if a richer material were used. It is possible for one to have a great many of them, especially if they are made at home. For evening wear in the drawing-room, whether one is dancing or not. are trade at home. For evening wear in the drawing-room, whether one is dancing or not, black lace, black net, pale, light-weight sitks, figured muslims and gauzes of all kinds are in order, and may be made as elaborately or as simply as one desires.

Do not be induced to wear last season's ball dream unless indeed that have been made.

Do not be induced to went last season's ball dresses unless, indeed, they have been made over and are as freel and dainty as possible. Crushed crépes, stringy-looking nets, soft silks that have a massy look would ranke even the prettiest of girls look ordinary. I think for wear at seasible dances the pretty printed or embruidered muslims are much more desirable than claborate looking ball dresses. They are not very expensive, and, as there are made are not very expensive, and, as they are made up simply, a great deal of material is not re-quired. Of course, the bodice can be decorated as one pleases.

A pretty gown that I saw worm by a fashionable girl was a pink muslin, having roses of the deeper shade stamped upon it; the material was thirty-five cents a yard; the skirt was made dancing length and quite plain, the front and sides having for their descration long strips of ribbots set at regular intervals reaching almost to the edge of the skirt and finished with a small pink rose. The bodice had a pointed girdle formed of ruses, the collar was a band of the ruses, and a knot of rithon on each sleeve was caught by a rose. A ribbon fillet was worn in the bair with a tiny rose just in the center.

At the watering places there is a decided tendency to wear a great deal of jewelry, a something which is in extremely had taste in a hotel, unless, indeed, it should be at some elaborate ball or private diamer given outside of the public dining room. When a woman assumes her most gorpoons frocks and all of her jewelry at a public place, it is fair to suppose that she does this because she has no op-portunity to wear them during the winter. Shees matching the gowns are in good taste for driving or for exening wear, but for dayrime the ordinary russet slice or a patent leather one is in good taste. Varnish is of as little use at the senside as in the mountains, but a substitute is offered for it in the use of vaseline, which if applied to the slice with a cloth or a sponge kept especially for that pur-pose will make the leather retain its brightness during the entire season.

THE BATHING COSTUME

F you are well and strong you are going to aid to your strength by going in to find

L and to your strength by going in to find out whether the waves are really sad, or whether they won't tell you a story of their nerriment, and of their acquaintance with fascinating mermaids and jodly mermen.

Of course, you want a pretty dress for this occasion. People of relimenant choose find their bothing costumes those which, while they are most comfortable and permit the greatest freedom of the body, are yet absolutely modest. We read, and occasionally see very elaborate suits of white and pink, and those that are trimmed until they seem better suited for a Roman charies race than a sea both. However, very dark blue or block coarse serge, or flammel, makes the most comfortable suit, and perfect modesty is achieved fortable suit, and perfect toolesty is achieved when this suit is in two pieces; that is, the trousers which reach just below the knees, and the bodice, which comes up well about the threat, and has either steeves, are in combina-tion, making one, while over this is worn the short skirt which fastens to buttons about the short skirt which fastens to buttons about the waist, the mode of attachment being hidden under a canvas belt. Long black wooden stockings are in order, and if you are going to lathe mach, and wish to keep them from wearing out, it will be wise to get them a size larger, and to insert in their feet the soles sold in the stores for knitted slippers. It is best to wear a rubber cap, and so pretect one's land from the sult water, because this is certain, in time, to injure it, though one often sees articles recommending the salt both for the hair.

By the be that warman will feel the heat.

recommending the salt both for the hair.

By the by, that woman will feel the best who takes ber plange after having a very light breakfast; she will come out feeling desperately hangry, and then she should eat something, after which she should rost, and, if possible, sleep awhile. If you are inclined to be chilly as you cross out of the water, have a long cloak of rest Turkish toweling, with a pointed bood attached to it; throw this about yourself, drawing the bood over your hand, I advise red for this, because it will not so readily face when the salt water has to dry upon it. Then, too, it makes a prefly spot on the bench. It is scarcedy necessary to say to a well-bred girl that I do not advise her lingering on the beach in her bothing dress, though she sotherlines does this from thoughtlessness. What she should do is to go right from the What she should do is to go right from the buth bouse to the water, and when she has buth house to the water, and when she has plunged and dived and floated and swam un-til she believes that nature intended her to live in the water, and when someloody else is telling her that it is time for her to come in, she must go right from the embrace of the big billows to her dressing roots.

THE CHAPEAU AT THE BEACH

OF course, feathers are impossible. I say impossible with an addendum; that we the woman who has an efficient maid who makerstands the art of carling feathers is the one who can with perfect propriety assumethem. Under other circumstances they grow drazgled, and give a generally miserable look to what otherwise might be a very smart get-up. However, the straw or believe high that may be However, the straw or leghern lists may be freighted with flowers placed just where they are most becoming, for the picture-sque in lasts is one of the great joys of being out of the city in the summer time. Every woman likes a picture but, but every woman with a knowlpicture but, but every woman with a knowledge of good dressing knows that except for driving they are impossible in the city. The smiler hat with its stiff, broad brins and plain band is liked for morning ucer, and if one is really on a yacht the regulation yachting cap is very amort, but it should not be worn when one merely means to loaf about the hotel and never put foot on a boat unless on the one that crosses the ferry.

The large felt hots are specially for mountain wear, though the smaller tennis hat in felt may be assumed by the young woman who controls the coart, the ball and the mosphet. Talle, chiffon, or lace parasols, that is, those of this lare with no liming, noist not go too near the water even in a carriage, for no the sace with a many, that range to be proposed to also be a time en in a carriage, for they seem to also be a time en dew and to get a droopy look that is not at all smart. Their only use would appear to be that affected by young girls inclined to flirt in the corners of piazzas or drawing-rooms, and who, regardless of the ill back that were come many them from of the ill luck that may come upon them from opening a parasol under a roof, will uplift one of these dainty belongings and hold it so that mobody sees their blushes except the man who is most interested in them.

THE FEW LAST WORDS

IT is the thinking of the weather-effect on one's warrivobe that waches women how to dress properly either at the sesside or the mountains, and until they have tenrared this, they will easier incorrectly wintakes. The they will make innumerable most important thing of all is that you are gning away to enjoy yourself, and to do this you have got to think of your gowns before you start, so that they will be ready to just you start, so that they will be ready to put on when the good time comes. And, my dear girl, if an opportunity comes to you to have the good time, do not let the fact that you have not many gowns keep you from it. Fix up your belongings so that they will look as well as possible and then went them with a light heart and one in which envy and malice are not known. Assume the gown you have with pleasure, remembering always that if you have not all the belongings you may if you have not all the belongings you may desire there is some other girl who has not desire there is some other girl who has not even the outing. To think of one's mercies is a wise thing to do. It makes everything one has seem more desirable, and it causes a sympathy for people who are not so rich in mercies to rise up in your heart, making you more gentle and considerate. Nobody ever loved anybody because of their pretty clothes. It is pretty hearts and pretty souls that gain hearts and happiness in this world, and whether you are at the senside or at the mountains that is what you want. And though I may only seem to you a pan, I still say that wherever you go, I hope you may have the very best time that is possible.

TIMELY SUGGESTIONS

WOODWARD & LOTHROP

You must have the NECESSARY "GRIP" to serve for a night out of town or to carry the inciden-tals headed by your side on the train or boat. A good one for collinary use is analosef

HEAVY ROAN LEATHER,

a close imitation of Alligator; nicely lined, strong han-dies, nickel triannlages, four projection tips 85 cts. on bottom; pay size from 10 to in inches,

PERFECTION IRISH LINEN WRITING PAPER

Detayo and more real stress, 20 cents a pound

ONE, TWO OR THESE INITIALS ENGRAVED ON 100 SHEETS of paper in Sed. Sibr. $1.00 Yellow, Gray or Black, with 100 encyclopes.

A SHIRT WAIST SPECIAL

THE BEST QUALITY PERCALS made into LAMES SHIRT WAISTE; styles to be worn inside or outside the skirt-topked, plained or plain-meat and pretty patherns. The usual $1.00 quality, any and,

75 cents JAPANESE FOLDING FIRE SCREENS Fan stoker, hundesmely decorated. 35 and 50c. Complete with stand.

WOODWARD & LOTHROP

10, 11 and F Streets, M. W., Washington, D. C.

SPECIAL BARGAIN

300 BLAZEDS to be sec-prepaid, anywhere in the U.S., this extra-fine Ladies'AB-Wool Tailor-Made Cloth Blazer. black, blue or tan, edged with slik cord to match, and slik cord and tassel,

for $2.95

all sizes from II to Glarch land. As no more than 300 will be sold at this petro-this garment being worth $1.06, we advise you to order as once.

Illustrated Catalogue of ladies,' men's and chit-dren's wear sent free on application. Address

MAHLER BROS. importers 503 & 504 6th Ave., N. Y.

CORNUCOPIAS closely clustered in crochet produce this pretty figure.

Converting Cotton into Silk is as paradoxical as drawing out while drawing in; both results are reached by one curious operation. These things, together with Irish Lace, Sewing, Cro-cheted Scarls, Belts, Garters, Passementeries, and other fascinating Fancywork fads, are explained in "FLORENCE HOME NEEDLE-WORK" for 1892, which is now ready. Send 6 cents, mentioning year, and we will mail you the book; 96 pages, 160 illustrations, NONOTUCK SILK CO., Florence, Mass.

YEDDO CRÊPE

IN ALL COLORS THE ORIGINAL

and all kinds of Pancy Work. Improves by washing

Sold, among others, by SHEPARD, NORWELL & CO. BOSTON

ACME A complete garment, when a climber period in flattings, protecting the control of flattings, protecting from the control of flattings, protecting from the control of the control of

Stamping Patterns

Any one who wants Stamping Patterns can have distinuent to select from on acceptable to pay for what they keep and return the rest. Address HENRY MITCHILL, North Reading, Mass.

PREVENT - CORSETS - BREAKING at the walst, also repair broken once in 5 minutes with The Penri Cornel Shirida. Soid in all by foods stores, or and Cornel she and Scottle for sample par-title flows. A SLA, 52 a 121 Green M., S. I.

Ladies, Send Stamp for Primer. I do shopping of all kinds. Nine years, experience : est reference. Markhout & Marcu, sid Spruce St., Phila-

PURCHASING Home in New York at the lowest prices, No commission asked. Address for circular, Many J. Charty, 2st West 26th 2st, New York.

THE SMALL BELONGINGS OF DRESS

By Isabel A. Mallon

E material that is very popular in England does not seem to obtain that is the colored al-psca. On the other side they are wearing it in steel blue, souff color, which is the best name that can be given to the fashionable to the fashionable brown, moss green, and white. A very thin quality of white alpaca is frequently used for petticoats, and then it is trimmed with three narrow ruffles of ribbon, each differing in shade; that is, a crimson one at the bottom, a deep pink will be next and a very pale pink will be on top.

A pretty frock of white alpaca that is not exremain and which may be worn at a rarden pensive, and which may be worn at a garden party, has three scant ruffles of three-inch wide pale-blue satin ribbon about the edge.

The bodice is a round one, draped over the figure, so that the few seams required are not visible. It is confined at the waist by a ribbon belt that terminates in a large ribbon rosette, placed a little to one side of the front. The collar is of blue ribbon, and the sleeves have cuffs of it. The hat is a stiffened lace one decorated with a large ribbon bow, and a standing up bunch of forget me-nots. The gloves are white undressed kid.

The mode alpacas are oftenest made in tailor fashion, a cont and waistcoat constituting the bodice part. Such a get up makes a pretty traveling suit and a useful one, for it shakes the dust as a clever woman does an undesimble

In the country, at the senside, or in the mountains, it is quite permissible to ride in a habit that would not do for park use. That is to say, the close-fitting, warm bodice may have substituted for it a comfortable silk blouse, and a broad-brimmed sailor hat may take the place of the silk use. The skirt must take the place of the silk one. The skirt must be the same as that assumed for more formal occasions and, like Casar's wife, it must be above suspicion, inasmuch as it must tell that it was cut by a first-class tailor.

THE short Eton jacket of black broadcloth, which is so fashionable this season, was described and illustrated in the JOERSAL two years ago, which goes to prove that it is the business of the fashion writer to see far into

THE doubte-breasted plqué waisteaut is very popular, though it must be confessed that as a shirt and a jacket are necessary with it, it is not very cool. With the shirts the tailor-made girl has elected to wear the stiff, black satin tie that gentlemen choose for evening. There is always a method in her choice, and finding that the white scarfs soil very easily, she decides to wear the one that will last the longest, and elects that it shall be the last the longest, and elects that it shall be the most fashionable.

BELTS and braces of two-inch wide gold galloon are fancied with skirts of black or blue serge and blouses of black or blue silk. At a fête of any sort the girl who admires symphonics in white and gold will wear such adjutation belonging over her all white are glittering belongings over her all-white cos-

A VERY beautiful necklace has a rope chain with small pearl pendants from it at wide intervals, while about them is festooned another gold rope that makes a frame and is most effective against a white throat.

THE girl who can embroider well on linen may, during the long stimmer days, do a kindness for her women friends, by embroider-ing on their handkerchiefs a very small and curious mingling of their initials.

A COARSE linen known as "butchers' blue" is in vogue for those blouses made with flat plaits and fitted closely to the figure. The material is sufficiently strong to permit its being made up without a lining.

WITH the princess gown, which is un-W doubtedly returning to us, has come the fatter for striped silks, and they are noted in black with pole blue, black with rose, and black with mode. If a color is used upon them as a decoration it is oftenest hidden under black lace.

FASHION has decreed that soft, undressed leather shoes in the natural russet shade L' leather shoes in the natural russet shade may be worn all the day long, unless, indeed, one is gotten up very gorzeously for some special occasion. I cannot recommend a white shoe, for even the foot of a Cinderella looks large and ill-shaped in it. For wear with an all-white costume, nothing is so pretty as a black patent leather shoe, fitting one well and being sufficiently large so that the foot is not forced into the narrow, pointed toe. forced into the narrow, pointed toe.

OR people who like flannel bodices in P place of silk or cotton ones, the very ightest weight of flamed, having hair lines of blue, olive, black, brown, lavender or pink upon it, is most fashiounble, and then the collar, cuffs, and girdle can be of ribbon to match the narrow stripe in color,

WOMEN who consider themselves good V dressers do not permit any decoration to be put upon a sailor but. It may be as jamity and becoming as possible, but under no circumstances is it counted a dress hat, and, therefore, any trimming save its simple band of ribbon is to be desired. of ribbon is in bad taste.

A VERY picturesque hat is made of stif-fened black lace, and has as its decora-tion a large bow of pule-green ribbon, while that anomaly in nature, pale-green roses, stand up at the back

THE very wide revers known as the "Em-The tery was revers known as the Em-pire" are most effective on house dresses of scarlet, pink, or blue crepon; though made of black satin, no other portion of the gown needs to be of the sombre shade.

MOST of the stiff, creamy lace buts are of Irish crochet. This work is done most beautifully in the land of wit and pretty women, and sells there for what seems a ridiculous price when the amount of time required to do it, and the skill with which the fine needle needs to be handled, is taken into

THE little Toreador jackets of velvet are not only very smart-looking, but may be put on over a thin silk when the evening is

A RATHER grewsome brooch is one made to represent a bat. The wings are outstretched and are black enamel, while the body of the bat is formed of a moonstone and the eyes of two tiny rubies. Speaking of brooches, the girl who is going yachting werrs a brooch of gold rope twisted as if it were intended to be thrown ashore and hooked on to the post at the wharf.

THE tailor-made girl scorns all watch chains, unless, indeed, she should wear a fob. Usually, however, she carries her watch loose in her coat pocket.

A PRETTY scarf pin to be worn in a four-in-hand scarf is of gold with a head that shows the sharp-pointed nose and odd face of SILK stockings with the old-fashioned clocks are shown in the stores, and although they are pretty, I do not think they are as retined looking as the all-black stocking. Quite a number of very elaborate ones have gold thread used for embroidering the clocks, but as these stockings will not wash, I should not think many would be chosen. A very comfortable stocking for sunsmer wear is known as plated silk. It is not as expensive as pure silk, but has its gloss and wears well. Women with sensitive skins find lisle thread stockings uncomfortable, and to them I recommend, from personal experience, the silk plated ones.

a parasol to be worn with many gowns is desired, then one of the changeable ones will be found most useful. A certain amount of thought, however, must be given to the colors in it, so that it may be in harmony with each costume. Blue and scarlet will, I think, be found the most desirable, as these colors go well with almost any shade worn, unless it should be layereder. should be lavender.

A UGUST is essentially the month of the leghorn but. With its broad brim bent to suit the face and its decoration of gay flowers or pale tinted feathers, it is not only fashionable, but seems essentially in season.

OVER all-white costumes it is counted good form to wear a primrose yellow waist-ribbon, caught at one side with a large rosette formed of many loops of ribbon. Of course, with such a decoration the hat would either be all white, or would have a yellow rose as its trimming. Frequently hats are seen with the crown cut right out and a large, yellow rose that fits right in made to form the top of it.

OUNG women who affect oddity in their Y handkerchiefs are having extra-sized squares of white lawn finished with a narrow hem, while in one corner is an oval embroidered in pale blue, pink, lavender or dark scar-let, against which comes out in full relief the initial letter, which is in white.

SMART black straw hat has a poke A SMART black straw hat has a poke brim and a very low crown; around the crown is a band of narrow green ribbon velect, and at the back and just in front are banches of yellow forget-me-nots—a flower unknown outside of milliner shops. The ties are of dark green velvet, come from the back and are knotted under the chin just in front. It is said of Worth that he very much approves of the combination of yellow and green, but that he has never yet been satisfied with the shade of green attained by the manuwith the shade of green attained by the manu-facturers. Unless it is very carefully managed, the green and yellow will suggest to the frivolous an early spring salad with hard boiled eggs rampant upon it,

THE brooch composed of two united hearts outlined either in diamonds, pearls or any precious stone, continues to have a vogue suggests that, after all, as a nation we are a bit sentimental, and that we think of the two hearts but with a single thought, though the most that can be said about this brooch is that they are but two hearts with a single pin, and that this is given to breaking in a very unpleasant way.

FRENCH corset maker shows this see A. son the corset number of undressed kid; he claims for it perfection of its and an elas-ticity equal to the gloves. Unfortunately he does not say anything about its wearing powers, and really, when it is remembered how satin will fray and contille will split, that certainly the delicate undressed kid will have but a short life.

Examine the new oil cloth on the kitchen floor; its color and gloss are being destroyed and you may see where a cake of common soap fresh from the hot water in the scrubbing bucket has been laid on it for a moment, the free alkali having eaten an impression of the cake into the bright colors.

A more careful examination will show small "pin holes" here and there where the alkali has cut through the surface to soak into and gradually weaken the whole floor covering.

This is what cheap soaps and washing powders do. Professor Cornwall, of Princeton, says of the Ivory Soap, "It will not injure the most delicate fabrics."

COPYRIGHT 1892, BY THE PROCTER & GAMBLE CO.

Stylish Cloaks.

Before buying a cleak or wrap this season you will ask, "Where can I get a stylish, well do and perfect fitting gamment at a reasonable price?" We ought to be able to bein you got and make every cleak to order, thus having a perfect fitting and afteely maked garineat; we are manufacturers of cloaks, and by selling direct be you we save you the plotter's and realist's profits, and no matter where you live we pay the capross charges. Our new Fall and Winder catalogue is now ready. It contains over 100 illustrations with descriptions and prices of Jacketts and Rimssian Blooses, from $2,800; three quarter length Walking Coats, $450 up; Box Coats, Coats and Jacketts with before and Walking plated backs, Newmarkets, $450 up; Long Cloth Capes, $550 up; Circulars, $56 up; Plosh Jacketts and Sarques, Matelasse and Velvet; garnesies; Misses Newmarkets, $455 up; Choikes, $2,500 up; etc., etc. We will send you catalogue by return Hall, logether with a $8 inch tape measure, new measurement diagram, (which thourses a perfect fit and more than FORTY SAMPLES of the cloths and plusher from Which we make the garnesna, to select Arm. On receipt of four cents postage.

Among our samples are the newest fabries in Kerseys, Clay Diagonals, Devon Cloths, Chevrous, Ladies' Cloths, Plushes, Wide Wales, Wormeds, Bedford Cords, and everything styllab in Imported and Domestic cloths; all the powest shades are represented. We also have a special line of medium and light weight samples for early Fall war, and a special line of block samples.

Write for our catalogue and samples to-day; they will save you from $2 to early Fall war, and a special line of block samples.

Write for our catalogue and samples to-day; they will save you from $2 to early Fall war, and a special line of block samples.

FASHIONABLE AND HEALTHFUL THE GENUINE

Jackson Corset

Waist

A perfect corset and waist combined. Pamens for its style, exceeds symmetry, and healthful qualities. Take no other. Putrated Pts. 21, 506. See patent sleap or each Weist-

Made only Jackson Corset Co., Jackson, Mich.

IF YOUR DEALER HASN'T IT, WRITE TO US Or to the E. T. CORSET Co., Sherbrooke, Province Quebec, Canada

SOMETHING NEW! Just what you want! The patent

"COMFORT" DRESS ELEVATOR

For Country, Sea Shore, City or Ball Room.

Operated Instantly with two fingers while walking. Suitable for any style skirt. Weight, only one-half source. Sold by all leading slows, or sample unaited on receipt of 35 couls by

LOUIS C. WUEHNI DRESSMAKING SIMPLIFIED

No use saling a Chart of Square can except with The Melbowed Gameson Drafting Machine in Carding St. Hot. Graceful and Perfect. Fitting Gameson. Easy to Learn, Haydd to Ew. Fittings Fore, Follows exercise Factors, Indiana Fore, Follows exercise Factors, Indiana Fore, Follows exercise Parkets, Indiana Fore, Follows exercise Fore 20 days to test at your own home. Sent the Haustraned Greater. Fitte Schold Rid., Co. 8 Was Vork City.

Send M cents for copy of our elegant Prench Fashion books explaining how to cut latest style garment.

We will send you a fringed linen Tidy of "An Owi Maid." Flore to work it, legalls' book of stirrhes and E-page Catalogue of Stamping (suffits, etc., all for six 2, stamps (12c.) Address J. F. I Smalle, Lynn, Mass. Hox J

FOR THE HELPLESS

Send for 12-page illustrated catalogue (free) of Rolling, Reclising and Carrying Chairs, Invalide Confests, etc., address Bargent Mg., Co. 814 Brondway, New York or Muskeyen, Mich. Bration Tex Latent Book Jayra.

That you don't live PESSSTEVANIA WEST VIRGISIA INDUANA BAINOIS MISCOSSIN OF DOWAD

for $1.00 definered FRES tall other States their freights

THE LADIES' DELIGHT IRONING BOARD 4 ft. 4 in long. II in wide, I in thick, folded. Has solf-adjusting Clamp and Brare. Can be fastened to shelf, window sill, or table in one second. A child can do it. In firm and solid as a rock. Nothing like it made. Is the simplest, most convenient and the only perfectly satisfactory IRONING SOARD ever constructed. Address

AREN'T YOU SORRY

THE WALTER HILL CO., 218 Wabash Asense, Chicago

NICKEL PLATED TIDY HOLDER, Send 15c. Ser a

HAT every women should wish to have a beautiful complexion is as natural as that a gardener should desire each of his penches to have a perfect skin. If peaches require to be carefully looked after, to be protected from too intense heat, or from too great chill, it is certain that a thousand times us noncheare is required for the skin of a human being. It has been chimed that the finest skins in the world are seen in England, but this is not so. For while an English woman's complexion is most beautiful while she is young, after she passes twenty-five she is not to show a too great tendency to reduces, which bright color exploits itself on her checks, her efflows, and to her reverse to the sile of the sile. bright color exploits itself on her checks, her elbows, and to her regret, very often all over her nose. The land of beautiful complexions is that of wit—Ireland. There, where it is never very hot and where a natural moisture exists in the air, the skins, even among the pensantry, are a clear white with an exquisite pack coming and going on the checks, a pink that is absolutely suggestive of a real rose, Among the better classes, where good food is the rule, not only are the most perfectly beautiful complexions, but the most perfectly beautiful women to be discovered. The combination of black hair, blue eyes and a clear skin is the one oftenest seen in the hand of bogs, a combination that a painter pronounces perfect. In America, where we have extremes of heat and extremes of cold, the women incline to delicate complexions requiring nauch care, but which when properly cared for are bly like in their beauty. their beauty.

THE FIRST GREAT NECESSITY

T cunnot be doubted that what one eats will make or mar the skin. The famous I runned be deabted that what one eats will make or mar the skin. The famous Fortach writer on food, Brillat-Savarin, savs, "rich food makes beautiful women." But this was builty translated; he meant by it, not rich as indicating greasy, or oily, or heavy food, but he meant good food, that which is properly cooked and which is fresh. The pale pasty complexion of many of our women is attributed, without any extent househ to be properly cooked and which is fresh. The pale pasty complexion of many of one women is attributed, without any extra thought, to too much pastry, too many sweets, over-done meat and an insufficient quantity of fresh regelables. The green salad in any shape, from the long curling lettace leaf to the crisp little watercress, is a constant beautifier, and more than this, regularly enten, it quiets your nerves and gives you a pleasant sleep. But if you flood it with vinegar and powder it with sugar you have simply made for yourself a dish that will have no effect upon you whatever, unless it should be by the force of the vinegar to break the cannel of your teeth.

The right way far you to eat this most beautifying of dishes is to have upon it a good by the force of the vinegar to break the cannel of your teeth.

The right way far you to eat this most beautifying of dishes is to have upon it a good to not care for this then cat your solad as did the hornaits of old, disping a leaf in some salt and having with it a piece of bread and butter. All fresh vegetables, especially asparagus, tend to improve the skin. I do not say give up all sweets, but I do say eat them in their proper place; that is after you have had your dinner and when you will not require a great quantity. Pastry, if vaten at all, must be so light that it is above repreach; then it will not have any apparent effect on the skin, but it will tend to fatten you.

Meat should be tinder, rather than overdone, and whenever carves for you should give

Meat should be under, rather than over done, and whoever carves for you should give you a thin slice, so that it may be easily chewed, which means easily digested. Mutton and beef will tend to strengthen you, while fowl and game of all kinds, as well as lish, are direct scents working in the interest. direct agents working in the interest of your complexion. To the fact that so amny chickens are esten in the south many doctors attribute the peach-like skin possessed by southern women. However, each person while governed by general rules must make individual ones for herself, as that which is one man's most is another one's poison is particularly applica-ble as applied to the result on the skin. Too much cannot be said about the value of all fruits, and if to begin the day you can get nothing but an apple for your breakfiest it will be much better to ent it than to permit yourself to go without any fruit. Oranges, grupe fruit, melons and all the small berries are not only desirable, but really aid in getting one's constitution in such good condition that clear eyes and a good skin are the natural results. If you do not care to ent oranges, squeeze the juice of them in a goblet, weakening it with a little water and drink that. The first great recessity toward making one's complexion good is the knowledge of what to eat.

Speaking of fruit, how many people know that one of the most cleansing, as well as the most delightful washes for the teeth, is a ripe. sweet strawberry. The way to use it is to take it by the stem, press it against one's teeth, rub it all over them, and then, still retaining it in the mouth, rinse your teeth off with clear water, which, when it disappears, carries the crushed strumberry with it. Not only are the teeth whitened and made clean by this, but a delightfully fresh taste is given to the mouth,

THE VALUE OF BATHING

EVERY woman thaters herself that she knows how to bathe, and that she does it well, and yet when some one induces her to take a Russian bath it showns on her that never before has she hern entirely clean. Pernever before has she been entirely clean. Personally, I recommend the Russian or vapor both taken once a week as the greatest factor toward preserving the skin. It is not as exhausting as the Turkish bath, it causes a natural personation, the pores of the skin throw out the dirt that has accumulated in them, chagging and making them unleadthy, while the thorough scrub that follows and which one cannot give to one's self, removes every possibility of nucleunlines, and the various showers and sprays brace one up and make showers and sprays brace one up and make one feel capable of great deeds. Women who cannot take a Russian bath, however, can have its near equivalent at home. That is, a very but bath can be gotten into and one can remain there until perspiration is the result; then the shower, warm of first and gradually graving shower, warm at first and gradually growing colder, can be used, after which the bather will feel as if her skin were as smooth and white as satin.

white as satis.

I cannot too strongly recommend the use of the hot bath. The great benuty of Mrs. Laugity was her fine skin, and people who did not know credited her with taking a cold bath every morning, whereas the truth was that she took one so hot that for a few moments she could scarcely stand putting her four in it but in which the greaturille was and moments she could scarcely stand putting her foot in it, but in which she eventually got and from which she went back to bed where she took a cup of ten and a bit of toust, which formed her breakfast. If one has not time for a hot buth in the morning it is equally good at night, and if one finds it difficult to sleep, the cold spray can be omitted and the languid feeling resulting from the hot water-will tend to make tired eyelids droop upon tired eyes.

THE BATHING OF THE FACE

F I asserted that you did not know how to L wash your face you would think that I had said something that was at once rude and displayed of my ignorance, and yet do you? Do you take a basin full of water and laving Do you take a basin full of water and laving your face with your hands dry it with a rough towel, believing that the harder you rib the more attention you are paying to your face? That is not washing your face. That is giving it a dab. The requisites for a good bath for your face are a big basin, a soft towel, a cake of parc, good some, and considerable wisdom. With a rough towel you treat your face as if it were made of iron, you enlarge the features, your six injuring the eyes and you make your skin course. The face wants to be gently, but thoroughly dried with a soft, absorbing towel. While advocating the use of hot water for the face, still, as it is not always desirable in cold weather if you are going out. I would say use water that has the chill taken off of it. Then with a thin flammed wash chelb, well rubbed with soap, give your face its first off of it. Then with a tain financi wash cloth, well rubbed with soap, give your face its first treatment, closing your eyes so that the soap, like truth, may reach to the innermost paris; after this wash the soap thoroughly off your face, and if you use a good quality of coap the shiny appearance, which is so often offered as an objection to refer a soap and offered as an objection to refer a soap and offered as shiny appearance, which is so often offered as an objection to using soap, will not exist. There seems to be an idea that women must not use soap upon their faces, though it is plentifully used upon all other parts of the saly, few renembering that the face, above all other parts, is exposed to the dust and the wind, and requires special treatment.

If your skin has a dull, dend feeling, throw a few doesn of either can de colorue, rin or a few drops of either can de cologne, gin or whiskey in the water, and give your face a thorough bath with it. This tends to exhibtherough bath with it. This tends to exhibi-rate the skin, and if the circulation is but will being the blood to the surface so that a pretty blush is the result. Where the skin is in-clined to be dry, vaseline or cold cream, well rubbed in at night and thoroughly washed off in the morning, will tend to make it smoother and less bounds. and less hursh.

SOME SIMPLE MEDICINES

THE simplest medicine for the skin, the one that will cool it when it is sunburnt, and will do much to remove summer freekles, is the oldest known preparation. It is said that Cleopatra used it, and that it was prepared regularly for Mary, Queen of Sess. It is the preparation known as "Virginal milk." It is made by taking a quart of rece or elderflower water, as is most fancied, and adding to it one onnee of simple tincture of benzoin, drop by drop. Keep this well corked, and when you wish to use it throw a teaspoonful in a basin of water; this quantity should give the water a faint milky bue and the ofter of pine. Be sure and get exactly the ingredients recutioned, for any other tite cure of benzoin may prove injurious to the skin.

For greasiness of the skin what is known as toilet vinegor is desirable; this may be ap-plied with a soft eng, and it should be dabbled. and rubbed on the face. By the br. do not use soap either before or after the tollet vinegor, as the acid of one will decompose the other, and an undesirable effect may result. When the skin is stained from furs, or black material close about the throat, a slice of lemon rubbed over the marks will effectually remove them. ternally, drinking lemonade frequently giving an impetus to the digestion, while the piece of the fernon applied to the skin is commended for removing freekles and tan,

A RECEIPT FOR A COMMON COMPLAINT BECAUSE of her sensitive skin the Ameri-B) our girl is particularly apt to freekle, and these freekles seem to give her a great deal of worry. Now, my dear child, if you will only think that with the natural childs the freekles will disappear and stop worrying, you will be much happier, and will gain a bright look in will disappear and stop worrying, you will be much impour face where otherwise wrinkles might come. Funnily enough, men never object to freekles, and I think it is because they are sure that the girl who has them is displaying a clean face, and cleanliness, which with them means daintiness, is always admired. However, if you insist upon a prescription to try and remove the sain spot I will give you one recommended by one of the greatest authorities on skin, that is, Dr. Ernsmus Wilson: "To one ounce of elderflower ointment add twenty grains of sulplaste of zine; mix this well and rub it into the skin at night; in the morning wash it off with plenty of soap, and when the greate is completely removed apply the following lotion: Infusion of rose petals, half a pint; citric neid, thirty grains. All local discolorations are said to disappear under this treatment, and if the freekles do not entirely yield they will in most cases be greatly ameliorated. Should any unpleasant irritation or roughness of the skin follow the application, a lotion composed of half a pint of almond nixture and half a dram of Goulard's extract will afford immediate relief." I give this prescription because it comes from a extract will afford immediate relief." I give this prescription because it comes from a famous skin doctor, but I do not vench for it; instead, I advise enduring the freckles and not bothering about them.

MADAME GRISWOLD'S Patent Skirt-Supporting Corsets AND SKIRT SUPPORTERS,

For circulars and terms to agents send to MADAME GRISWOLD, 928 Broadway, New York; 7 Tempje Place, Boston, Mass.; or to General Agents, M. M. Wygant & Co., Fredonia, N. Y.; J. B. Putnam, 126 State street, Chicago, Iti.

SHE can wash, rives and dry 16 or 180 dishes at one time with a machine, without chipping or breaking a dish, and without using a dish more truck; she can save from two to three hours per day of disagreenible work, and prevent the destruction of her lands, by shopply purchasing the light ranging and lock-less Sievens 19th Washing Machine. Ved run no risk, as every machine is guaranteed to do be work perfectly or money refunded.

Send for illustrations, testimoplals and special offer, gents wanted.

STEVENS DISH WASHING MACHINE CO. No. 37 Arende, CLEVELAND, O.

BOARDING AND DAY SCHOOL FOR GIRLS

Park Classical School, N. Y. City. Reopens September 21, at 7 West Salb, N. A. parent wishing to colocate sagisters in New York can live with them at the chool, Mas. Luwus & Mass Kinger, A. M., Principals.

MERIT WILL WIN

Sales, 15,000 Pairs a Day

CANFIELD

DRESS SHIELD

CANFIELD SPECIALTIES

1. The Cambeld Bisper. The only article of its kind that affords perfect protection without harmini results.

2. The Cambeld Bib. The only bit that is thoroughly waterpreaf, with highly absorbent specifies.

4. The Cambeld Crits and Red Sheets. The only macroproof sheet that is free from objectionable features. Sheet. 30 x 3 inches.

4. The False and Specialities are fee after by all first-case frey deads shown as a specialities are fee after by all first-case frey deads shown as a second by mail on receipt of above prices.

Any lady from the bis on the case of the first part of the following prices.

Any lady formishing her address, and stating where this advertisement was seen, will re-ceive by return and a set of mininture sam-ples of The Canfield Specialties.

CANFIELD RUBBER CO. 73 Warren Street, New York City

The

The Best in the Market.

Simple of manipulation. The shutter is always set. Plates or films are used. Covered with leather.

Size 4 x 5.

Price, $18.00.

Send for catalogue and copy of Modern Photography.

Rochester Optical Company, 21 S. Water St., Rochester, N. Y.

Dinner is Served

MAGIC WORDS-What epicureun delight they comjute-but also! what depths of misery can follow if the soup be bad.

WHITE LABEL EPICUREAN SOUPS

ARE THE

Only Indisputably Correct Conserved Soups

New 10 Cents, or name and address of your proces with this elipping and a cents for wayte can. 17 carieties.

ARMOUR PACKING CO. SOUP DEPARTMENT KANSAS CITY, MO.

8 Per Cent. Investment

A limited amount of Preferred Trescury Stock in a refulce mainfartering company for sale in small bots. Further details and refs., Lock But 258, Reston, Mass.

National Parties of Section of Parties for September 1 Budersed 1 Section 10 September 1 Budersed 1 Section 10 September 1 Budersed 1 Section 10 Section 1

PORTABLE HOUSES

OF ALL KINDS For Sammer Onlines, Art Studies, Huntley and Pish-ing Cables, Children's Play Husses, etc. Grand Englis Partable Some Ca, Grand English, Nick.

t8th Edition

THE HUMAN HAIR,
Why R Falls off, Tores Groy and the Remedy,
By Prof. If ARLEY PARKER, F. R. A. S.
A. T. Leve & Co., 1883 Arch St., Phillade, Pa.
DIGRIZED DY GOOGLE

A Department devoted to a sociable interchange of ideas among Journal readers. Address all letters to Mrs. Lynan Abbott, care of The Ladies' Home Journal, 433-435 Arch Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

RE we more quarrelsome than men? Poets all along down the ages have called us gen-tle, forbearing and forgiving, and have attributed all the combative qualities to men; but can we honestly claim the peaks the poets have given us? Much self-claim the pease the poets have given us? Much self-examination is never good, nor is any introspection good unless it leads to reformation, but a little questioning of ourselves, and a speedy change for the better if we find ourselves in the wrong, will not harm us. Whence come neighborhood fends? Most likely from unkind words spoken by feminine lips, carried by gossips' tongues to feminine ears. Why is it that so often come divisions and dissensions in women's organizations for philanthropic and literary work? Are we jealous? Does envy provoke the mischief? Do women, more than men, meet one another one week with effusive cordiality, and the next with stiff coldness? Life goes much in waves, I think, and, perhaps, just now I have happened to feel the sprny from a wave of quarreloumeness, and that it is only temporary. But it has led me to ask myself, and I repeat the question to you: Can anything be done in the family to give the daughters those peace-making qualities which in theory we admire? And can we contribute more to the various departments of social life of that charity which "suffereth long and is kind, envieth not, vanneth not itself, is not puffed up, doth not behave itself unseemly, seeketh not her own, is not easily provoked, thinketh no evil, rejoiceth not in iniquity but rejoiceth in truth, beareth all things, believeth all things, hoyeth all things, endureth all things.

THE ghost which questions whether woman will not lose her womanly qualities in the process of higher education will not down. It appears not only in the quiet and the shade of midnight, when ghosts have a right to appear, but it stalks abroad in open daylight. The innocent have always borne the penalty of the guilty, and the clamorous women who parade on public platforms, and who make parade on public platforms, and who make themselves obnoxions in public conveyances, who give their families peace at home by going abroad with their debates, these are they who throw discredit on their innocent sisters. I throw discredit on their innocent sisters. I wish I might picture the homes in which I am so happy as to be a welcome guest, where highest education for man and for woman combine to make highest happiness and highest usefulness. Woman may dwarf her best powers by cultivating only her emotions, she may do it by cultivating only her body, and, of course, she may do it by cultivating only her mind; but that is not higher education, and wherever a young woman has found a place where she may obtain knowledge, and also the other fruits which a perfected character should bear, she cannot be hurt by that pursuit. pursuit.

W11.L you kindly enlighten a mother upon the fol-lowing point: Do you think it is right that girls of sixteen should be allowed to visit art galleries unac-companied by teacher, mother or overried friend? An ENGLISH READER.

As a rule, no. But some girls at sixteen are better fitted to care for themselves, to maintain their womanliness and their independence than others are at thirty. Apart from the question of propriety, the value of such visits would be increased if the young girl had for a companion an older friend whose comments would come her eyes to the heauties and the companion an older friend whose comments would open her eyes to the beauties and the defects of the exhibition. Here, as in every other means of education, the pleasure is doubled, and the profit immeasurably in-creased, if the novice be under the captivating influence of a wise discriminating older friend whose companionship is prized. Lacking such companion, circumstances must determine hether a chaperone is required.

COME one has told us about an interesting little club. Which suggests that she and others may be pleased to hear of the one I have joined out here in the far west. We must every second Friday evening from seven cmill ben o'clock. The officers are president, wice-president, secretary and librarian.

Our doings consist of music and songs, readings, recting and dislogues, with a debate once a musth on a surject selected by the club a menta in advance; the distances are chosen at the same time. We have "list hath!" occasionally, which means that each ose in the club writes a topic on a piece of paper, and drops it into a hai, which is then well shaken and pussed around. Each takes out a slip and speaks for two or three minutes upon the topic suggested on the paper drawn. We have no membership fee, but any who is also gives a book to the Brazry, which is the steamer yet, as we are just beginning. I would be happy to be told how they got along in similar clubs, and shall hop for scene suggestions.

Active.

Societies such as this not only give entertainment for a passing boor, but are means of education. If the topics considered are those which call out thought and stimulate study, the result will be far greater than you could the result will be far greater than you could have supposed. In many towns magazines are taken by such a club, and sent from one to the other of the members in regular order; while each member pays but the cost of one maga-zine, she may have the reading of many more. Some one will perhaps give us the details of the management of such a book club.

D<sup>O</sup> you believe that a wife should always seem pleased when her histonic brings being an interpreted guest? Or, should she colleges to hinger as apondon that indheriumate baspitalities are both expensive and unwise except upon special occasions; and thus unless the family is a very weighty one, the histonic should give his wife some notice of his intention to have guests to their table?

Unless she could be pleased, I do not think it is best for her to try to seem pleased. Use-tainly, she might try to make her husband understand that unexpected guests do present understand that unexpected guests do present difficulties in ordinary households, and certainly every hustand should be careful not to add to the household burdens unnecessarily. Sometimes the pleasure which a guest brings is quite compensation enough for any added care or labor. Mutual concessions must be made in this as in so many other cases in the conduct of a home. The household would be a very unhappy one where the head of it was in too great fear of making trouble, or where the wife was unnecessarily annoyed with an unexpected demand upon her lavier. A very amusing incident occurred in the family of a friend. The master announced in the morning that he would not be at home to dinner, and the mistress, adjusting her plans to that fact, arranged to take her own meals with her little children, joining them at their moon dinner, and their bread and milk supper. Such a plan gave an opportunity to favor the cook with an extra bolidren and the kitches time. a plan gave an opportunity to favor the cook with an extra holiday, and the kitchen fire was allowed to go out. As the mother was in the nursery, enjoying an unusually free hour with her little ones at their bedtime, she heard a noise down stairs, and found that her hus-band had entered, bringing home two gentle-men to dinner, forgetting entirely that his own absence would make so much difference in the domestic arrangements. After a brief, probably somewhat spirited conference, a mes-senur was sent to a categor and in on hour senger was sent to a caterer, and in an hour and a half a dinner was served in the house. I am not sure whether the bill for the dinner emphasized the lesson to the master, but I think be should have seen that circumstances emphasized the lesson to the muster, but I think be should have seen that circumstances are very much changed, in even a liberally-managed home, by the absence or presence of two or three people. Of course, no lady would exhibit displeasure before the blameless guests, but I emmot think that she could be called upon to exhibit positive pleasure when she must feel quite a contrary emotion. In a very little while, however, an attractive most might be prepared, and her husband would feel an a-bled prisle in his wife and home; and possibly a certain sort of pleasure would be excited by the opportunity to show her ability to meet an emergency; and if he appreciates the effort she has made, and avoids giving her needless burdens in the future, a wife may really feel glad that she has had the experience. We are very complex beings, never wholly glad nor wholly sorry. You have heard of people who enjoy poor health. Some people enjoy being unnoyed.

I HAVE a daughter of seventies who is very fond of reading, but she seems to object to my selection of her books. To you think that pureous and tractions should select the books of a girl of that age to read, or is it better to allow her the free range of a public library?

E.F.

Neither. Unless one has the sympathy of a girl it is no use to undertake to select reading matter for her. One young girl of that age has taken an older friend for a mentor and is following, of her own choice, a course of reading which has been laid out for her. In most cases the girl chooses her reading because of the influence of some other person, and there is nothing. I think, which can be done, which is more effective in the way of education, than the stirring of the inclination in a young mind toward good reading, but it must be done with care. You must allow for a difference in taste care. You must allow for a difference in taste which is not reprehensible. One cultivated reader is devoted to history, another to poetry. One finds modern literature the best, another sees nothing worthy in that which has not the flavor of age. You may find science in some of its fascinating presentations is the subject which must be the pioneer in opening the way to your daughter's mind, or it may be fiction, or poetry. To insure docility, one should begin to read with a child very early, and watch carefully what is enjoyed, and give the best of that kind, gently guiding from that to other forms of literature.

PRAY allow use a word in commendation of your remarks in the Jacobary neighbor of Tux Lausies? Hours Joins Nat. I am so clad to see you networking a line of reading within the reach of all, and which to we had proved an inexpansible source of tendit. There is such an inexpansible source of tendit. There is such an expansion of the changint: "I know semishing about that place." I have you will again toge this pion, as it cannot fall to give a life-long plension, and who know how soon may be at specifical use, so opportunities for foreign travel sometimes come uses pecually. For yours backs of travel have proved a delight, for often they are tho keymrid as most charming this of history or remarks, and from thing but bests to another.

See Series Hura.

I am very glot to have this plan of foreign travel, taken around the evening hange or the winter fireside, brought again to temendarance, it can be taken just as well on the lawn, un-der the trees, and I hope many of the young readers of this page will find it a good way to pass their more leisure summer marnings. Could it not be made to supplant some of the wand taken hotel reacces? vspid talk on hotel piazzas

I OFTEN see letters from the far week, but selfour one from Virginia, although we have many subscribers here. I like to read letters from the west and hear how our states live flow: It gives to in the cast an obea of western life, Pope was right in saying. The proper study of mankind is man, "but if one caused visit the west and see its islandstants, the next best time; to do be to read about it. Of course, all know of Vigitial, her resources, her montains and vatleys, ber fields, verdine, her uniture, retinement and beoptiality. Yet many are not asticled, but go west to seek formance. I wish to know if any of the sisters belong to the "Chantanqua Society?" I have joined it, and must say the work is harder than I expected, but very improving. It takes one back to the singe when Columbos first saw a bird lying to what he supposed was land, thence coward and upward to the present age of advancement. It also crosses the broad Allandic to Europe, tells us of her poets, generals, anthes and all men who have held their "Bodypeints on the sands of itne," and shows us the cries, the beautifut works of nature and of art. Those who live on isolated plantations in the west would be much pleased with the "Chantanqua Course."

It has believed with the "Chantanqua there."

We forget, I think, that these letters do give us glimpses of parts of the country with which we otherwise would not be familiar, and al-though the glimpse is a very little one, is helps us to know our far-separated sisters. I am glad you have enjoyed the "Chautauqua

I TOO, am very much interested in the blind women speaken of. I am very sure, for a woman who does her own work, they could be a very gird help, but as seriants in the city R would be a very different minitor. I have had three years' experience in city life not form mode to because my experience is very more as -M. E. C. Y. ways, but all the help I have I need not have no doubt but that a blind woman, if empalies not have given up trying to keep help, because it's harmone combert than to have such as I have had. I know the dirt-tolard very wolf. And if I must have some things go now I know the reason.

I one does, totally dead had I take the whole care of my hoise, but necessary is a trying to have such as I have some things go now I know the reason.

I one does, totally dead had I take the whole care of my hoise, but resours, on a farm, and do all the week about I have the house. I set at the head, or anther feet, of the table, and B's in very few places that I cannot fill my place. I think for this reason I cannot remain understand sentething of what a blind woman might be able to do. I but my hearing when a young woman and low read the ligs.

P. A. S.

No disability is great enough to oversome a noble and purposetal spirit.

I HAVE a family of small children. Their father is an neitive worker in church, but hasty in speech and given to compensation of hatquage. I have learned that it caus all through his family. The more oil speech and significant family of the women, indicag of their wiset, hack of management, cir., and as the common, of course, come from different families, it hardly seems reasonable processive all of them "weights to stay port." How I dread to see may children follow hardly seems to me trained to consider all of them "weights to stay port." How I dread to see may children follow half on a transfer to consider the mother to be treated with consideration always and given all affectionate respect. An amount has more thought of, but continually I hear, "What's the near of telling a he alson it," "You know there's an insula in that." Our of my bays said, doubting a fact as I gave it to him, "We'll, I shou'l know: ; jupa says you lie, so if you dou'l, why he dose." Now what can I do? Bestionestrance is useless. Are there so books teaching infliencity, perhaps, respect for trust, badleiner, honor to wommikhad? I don't want to bring up any more of that kind of husbands and fathers; men that try to be good, but have high tempers, narrow views and an aordinate value of their own importance. They don't make comfortable bounes. I thought, perhaps, by reading about I might gradually change their more father's raiber than a right, to steem around and descent constantly.

Talletkan Morraica.

It is very hard to row up stream, and to make your children refined and true when the current of the home is turned in the other direction must require all the help which you can get from the Divine arm. But do not be discouraged. Success has attended such efforts as yours in quite as hopeless conditions. A friend recommends you to get and read to your chidren a very sweet story called "Mrs. Mainwaring's Journal," which will help to give them noble aspirations,

A FRIEND who has fixed in our bome writes me A that she recently had exvasion to tell some parents, whether a very traditionne haby, born we have imbred our little one. "th!" the father replied," we think to much of our bulp to treat it that way." This is just the mishake many parents make. They are too restroiched in locking tottle religion of these children. In the matter of governing them, as well as of prometing their lappiness, their future goed to stripped by the aaxteey his present results. A childre plot when, mental and increasing their lappiness, their future goed to arripped by the aaxteey his present results. A childre plot when, mental and increasing their lappiness of the carefully guided from the moment of birth, if not even before, on through his infancy, child has daily tenth. Let me tell how our littleby, now ten months old, has been taught. From the first he was allowed always to go to sleep uithout being beld or racked, and so take his meals at regular periods. The latter was no easy tack, as his storing his was so deranged that he seemed to be begging for food continuously, and I have sait and held his little hands and almost, cried with him, but is finally became exhibitioned in the habit and satisfied with the plass. We avoid everything that would not, be infulged, such as taking him up as soon as coming into his presence, going to him while he cries unless the needs our immediate attention, thus die couraging his disposition to exp. letting him remain up after his retiring hour, etc. We calibrate regularity hi all his habits. Our have are love, straigethy and feminass.

There is no more lates upposed many lines by Raby, and by our friends, who land and manner have been directed into a line of healthful development.

Eva. ...

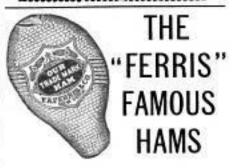

There is more labor in bringing up fathers and mothers than in bringing up their lables. The greatest difficulty in the management of children is in the unwillingness of parents to take the trouble to do the thing which they know is right. A mother who, with far-seeing love, is willing to suffer the present pain of training her boby, will surely reap her reward, but one must not carry rules too far. Karli baby is a distinct individually, and while there may be, and should be, many laws in the mother's reign, she must be quick to adapt the application of those laws to the special need of the child and the occasion. We are learning. I think, to make huby a little less uncomfortable in his first days with us, by giving him proper clothing, and the cries which are the natural expression of disconfort will be less frequent. It is perfectly reasonable that the calls of the child who is a little ancomfortable, continually bringing to it the know is right. A mother who, with far-see amount or able, continually bringing to it the southing of its mother, should multiply us be grows to enjoy the pleasure of acciety. The boy who reared veriforously, bringing his frighted nurse to his hed "only to have his teurs wised away," was but one of a large number of old and young who want to be soothed. It is a characteristic which grows very disagreeable with age, botofler having been sentously cultivated for years it cannot be easily uproofed.

A.J. H. Abbott

VAN HOUTEN'S PATENT PROCESS increases by 40 PER CENT, the solubility of the deab-forming elements, making of the cocca bean an entity digested, delicious, nearish-ing and at imulating drink, readily assimilated.

even by the most delicate. Hold in 1-8, 1-4, 1-2 and 1 lb. Cans. 23-1f pot chtainable, enclose 25 cts. to either Van Hourne & Zoon, 166 Reade Street, New York or 45 Wahash Ave., Chicage, and a can containing enough for 25 to 46 cups, will be mailed. Mention this publication. Preared only by the inventors Van Houten & Soor, Weesp, Holland. 85

First pounds, and a heavier one is equally as good. Hames from young pigs, though good for boiling, if broiled or fried, will serve juceless and dry, budy the center of the Ham should be silved. Both cods may be used for boiling, served in various ways, as suggested in our fluthe booklet of review. Out from each side of the Ham with a very sharp knole cleanty to the bone, dividing the silves in the center. You will thus avoid the necessity of sawing. The silves should never be cut more than one-quarter of an inch thick, and one-sixth of an inch is still better. Trim very chockly the akin from the upper side of each siler, and also cut from the lower edge the outer rim of muscle that has been somewhal hardwed by smoking.

Have the fighing pan very but before the ment as put in. Turn the silves quickly, and as soon as the fat is needy browing on each side, add one-half cup of bailing water. Over the pan tightly and place where the traiter will bed slowly for fifteen minutes. By this time much of it will have disappeared. Serve at once.

The first process relains the juices of the ment, and the servoid makes the muscle tender and most, if these reconstructions are described fortuned. "OR Frying never use a Ham of less than 13 or 14

the servoid makes the innerte tender and moist, if these suggestions are closely followed. We invite every housekeeper to supply her table regularly this summer with

The "Ferris" Delicious Hams and Bacon

If you are not familiar with their high quality, please THY THEM. When you decide in their favor, don't let your Greer put you off with anything else.

" Only a little higher in price, RUT---!"

CONTRICKY CONTRICKY COWDREY COWDREY

"What say you to a ham sandwich?"

"If prepared with Cowdrey's Deviled Ham I'll welcome it with delight, good Grumio. Bring it me, Katharine."

COWDREYCOWDREYCOWDREYCOWDREY

LADIES, PRESERVE YOUR FRUIT WITHOUT HEAT

Use Pettit's Cider and Pruit Preservative. Always successful, and retains natural fruit flavor. Sold everywhere, or will mail a sample box for as cents. HAMILTON MED. CO., Canajoharie, N. Y.

MISS PARLOA will at all times be glad, so far as she can, to answer in this Department all general domestic questions sent by her readers. Address all letters to Atiss Maria Parton, care of The Ladies' Home Journal, Philadelphia, Pa.

Cooking receipts are not given in this Department, hence do not ask that they be printed and do not send manuscripts of that nature to Miss Partion.

VNY questions are asked me as to why the white clothes grow yellow, the flannels shrink, the prints are cloudy or streaked, the standed clothes stick, and so on. The limited space in this de-partment forbids an exhaustive article on the subject, but here are some suggestions which, if followed, will are some suggestions which, if followed, will insure satisfactory results. It must be remem-bered, however, that under certain adverse conditions, it will never be possible in the city to have the clothes as spotless and white as in the pure air and the sanshine of the country. The greatest natural bleacher is the sun, and clothes allowed to dry out in the open air, exposed to its full influence, de-monstrate that fact,

MONDAY MORNING MATTERS

If the clothes must be dried in a close city yard, where the sun never shines, and dust and smoke fall on the dump garments, they will not look clear. It often happens that the water is so impregnated with iron and other substances that it is impossible to give white clothing a clear appearance. On washing day arrange the white clothes in this manner: Half fill two tabs with warm suds. Put in one tub the pieces soiled the most; put the remainder of the articles in the second sub. Have a third tub half full of cold water. Wash the cleaner clothes first, rubbing soap on the parts which are soiled the most. Wring from this water and drop into the tub of clean warm water. When all are done, rinse the clothes well in the warm water, then wring out and soap the parts that were badly soiled. Put F the clothes must be dried in a close city well in the warm water, then wring out and some the parts that were builty solited. Put these same pieces in the boiler of cold water and on the fire. Let the water get almost boiling hot, then take up the clothes and put them in a tubful of cold water. Rimse them from this into another of warm water and from this into another of warm water and from this into a third of bluing water. Wring them as dry as possible, then shake them out and hang on the lines. They should become perfectly dry before they are folded. All the white clothing should be washed in this manner. The second tubful run, of course, be rubbed out and rinsed while the first is being scalded. If clothes be not thoroughly rinsed rubbed out and rubbed withe first is being scalded. If clothes be not thoroughly rimsed and bluing be used, the soap will combine with the bluing to give a vellow tinge to the clothing. This is especially the case when liquid bluing is used. A thorough rinsing is really one of the most important steps in all the week the work.

TO WASH SILK UNDERGARMENTS

To three gallons of warm water add three tablespoonfuls of household ammonia. Let the silk garments soak in this for twenty minutes, then rub scap on the parts which are the most badly sailed and wash the articles with the hands. Never rub them on a board, Rinse in two waters, wring dry, and lung on the life. When rearly dry the table in and fall the line. When nearly dry take in and fold, and, if possible, iron within a few hours. Never let an fron come in contact with the silk. Lay a piece of cloth over the fabric and

SATINES, GINGHAMS AND PRINTS

THESE kinds of goods look better when no THESE kinds of goods look letter when no scap is used and they are not starched in the usual way. For two dresses make one gallon of starch by mixing one cupful of thour with one pint of cold water. Pour on this three quarts and a half of boiling water. Pour half of this mixture into a tub containing four gallons of warm water. Words one of the gallons of warm water. Wash one of the dresses in this, rubbing the fabric the same as if soap were used. Now rings in two clean waters and lung out to dry. The starch cleans the fabric, and enough of it is held in the cloth to make it about as stiff as when new. Wash the second dress in the same way. This method is not for light-cambries, but only satines, ginghams and dark prints. If the colors run, put half a capful of salt in the second rinsing water. If the color of the fabric be blue and faded, put two tablespoonfuls of acetic acid, or twice as much vinegar, into the last rinsing water. This will often restore the color, but not always, as it depends upon the chemicals used in the dyeing. The acid can be used in the last water in which faded blue flannels are rinsed. Colored a veleshould Wash the second dress in the same way. blue flannels are rinsed. Colored goods should be dried thoroughly and dampened only a few hours before you are ready to iron them. They should be ironed on the wrong side...

NEVER RUB SOAP ON FLANNELS

NEVER RUB SOAP ON FLANNELS

I AVE a tub half full of strong scap suds, in which has been dissolved a table-special of bornx. Shake all the dust and lint from the flannels and then put them into the suds. Wash them by rubbing with the hands and sopping them up and down in the water. Never rub scap on flannet. Wring them out of this water and put them into a tub of clean, hot suds. Rinse thoroughly in this water, them in a second tubful. Wring dry, shake well, and hang on the lines. Take them in a net fold, rolling them very tightly, Wring a clean cloth around them, and, if possible, from the same day. Do not have the irona very hot, but press the flannels well. Have clean suds for the colored flannels. To prevent shrinking, the temperature of the water should be the same in all the tubs.

POINTS ON STARCHING AND IRONING

POINTS ON STARCHING AND IRONING

N making and using starch have all the I mensils and the water perfectly clean.

Mix the dry starch with cold water enough to make a thin paste. Pour on this the required amount of boiling water, stirring all the while. amount of boiling water, stirring all the while. To each quart of starch add a teaspoonful each of sait and lard. Boil the starch until it looks clear, which will be in about ten minutes. Strain it through a piece of cheese-cloth (it will have to be squeezed through the cloth). White articles should be dipped into the hot starch, but have it cooled a little for colored articles. For collars, eaffs, shirts, etc., have the starch very thick; for white skirts it should be rather thin; for dresses, aprons and children's clothing also, the starch must be thin, and for table lines only the thinness kind inc. and for table linen only the thinnest kind imaginable should be used. Always have surehol clothing thoroughly dried; then sprinkle evenly with enough cold water to make them very damp. Fold smoothly and roll up in a clean cloth for several hours. In roll up in a clean cloth for several hours. In ironing, begin with the plain pieces, like the sheets and pillow cases. This will get the irons in condition for the starched clothes, which should be done next; and after these finish the plain pieces. Have the ironing blanket and sheet spread smoothly on the node and tacked in place, and have some fine salt spread on a board. The a large piece of beeswax in a cloth, and after rubbing the hot iron on the salt, rub the beeswax over it. Finally wipe the iron on a clean cloth. This powers will make the iron clean and smooth. process will make the iron clean cloth. This process will make the iron clean and smooth. Starched clothes must be made very damp; other articles should be dampened only slightly. Starched clothes must be ironed antil perfectly dry. In ironing, do the rubbing, when possible, the length of the cloth—that is, with the selvage.

WHEN WASHING WINDOWS

WHENEVER it is necessary to wash windows, use plenty of clean cloths, clunge the water often, and rub the panes until perfectly clear and dry. Then the glass will be clean, no matter what particular method is followed. will be clean, no matter what garticular method is followed. To go more into detail, here is a good rule: Half fill a pail with topid water, and add to it four tablespoonfuls of bousehold annuousa. Wash the glass with old linen, or a piece of cheeserloth. Riuse the clath often, and squeeze so dry that the water will not run from it. Rule the glass quite hard. Now wipe dry with a clean piece of cheeserloth and polish with a channels skin or a piece of newspaper which has been crushed in the hand-antileoft. Clause the water often and always. until soft. Change the water often, and always have the drying cloth perfectly dry and clean, Some housekeepers use only channels skins for washing and wiping the windows, but I have found the above method more satis-

THE MARKET FOR JELLIES

W HERE to find a market for preserves and jellies is what one reader asks, Searly all the first-class process in the country sell home-made preserves, jellies, pickles, etc. The woman's exchanges also sell large quantities. There are many women who have no time to look after this branch of their homsesping, being must through the fruit season. They employ other women to do this work for thorn, or buy at the stores. I would mivie any one who intends to make a business of this kind of work to see what customers she can get amount the people she knows, and also learn what she can do with the stores and the exclusives. If the product be of a superior quality I am sine that there will be a demand for it. This, like any other business, takes time to bribl up, therefore one need not be discouraged if she cannot get orders at find. Do good, honest work and persecent and one

REMOVING STAINS FROM MARBLE

() NE of the questions asked by several sub-ONE of the questions asked by several subscribers is, how they can remove stains from marble tables. It depends largely upon the manner in which the stains are made. If by graise, specal wet whiting or chloride of lime on the stains and let it remain for several bours, then wash off. Washing soda, dissolved in hot water, mixed with enough whiting to form a thick paste, and labt on the stains for several bours, will remove grease spots. Sometimes the marble has a discolored appearance from scratches. If it be rubbed hard with ust whiting and then washed and wiped dry, the mark will disappear. Ink and iron rust are usually removed with an acid, but that cannot be employed on burble, as it would dissolve the stone. The remedies given for grease spots can, however, be used. Should an acid be spilled on numble, pour ammonia unter on the spot and it will neutralize the acid, thus saving the marble. acid, thus saving the marble.

WHEN ACIDS ARE SPILLED

DOTTLE of household ammonia should A be kept where it can be reached conveniently at any time; then, when an acid is accidentally spilled, pour ammonia over the spot at once. In the case of marble, all acids attack the line and unless the ammonia be used instantly, a rough surface will be the result. I know of nothing that will restore the polish to this rough surface.

WHAT THE SIDEBOARD IS FOR

WHAT THE SIDEBOARD IS FOR

SEVERAL people have asked about the uses of the sideboard. The drawers are for the silver and cutlery, the closets for wines, if they be used, and often for such things as preserved ginger, confectionery, cut sugar and, indeed, any of the many little things that one likes to have in the dining-room, yet out of sight. The water pitcher and other silver and pretty bits of china can be placed on the sideboard. Cracker jur and fruit dish also belong there. At dinner time the dessert dishes are usually arranged upon it. usually arranged upon it.

HOW CUCUMBERS SHOULD BE SERVED

COUNTRY girl asks how enembers A COUNTRY girl asks how cucumbers should be served. Pare them and slice very thin into a bowl of ice water. Let them stand in a cold place for half an hour, then drain off the water. Put the cucumbers in a deep glass dish with a few pieces of ice. Put about two heaping tablespoonfuls in a small sauce plate, and let each person season to suit his or her individual taste. Vinegar, salt and pepper and oil should be passed with the cucumbers. Sometimes a few slices of onion are mixed with the cucumbers, but this practice is very disagreeable to many persons. is very disagreeable to many persons

NICKEL-PLATED TABLEWARE

ONE subscriber asks me about nickel-plated O NE stitiseriber asks me about nickel-plated tableware. Several years ago I bought a dozen nickel-plated tablespoons to use in my lectures, because they seemed so much stronger than plated ware. I found that the nickel melted and peeled off when exposed to a high temperature, making the spoons rough and musightly. A dealer told me a few days ago that this ware is not made now because of this flaw. this flaw.

WHAT DOILIES ARE, AND HOW USED

A NEW subscriber asks what dollies are, and how used. They are small squares, or round anakins, which are placed on the dessert plates, under the finger bowls, etc. Sometimes very small round ones are placed under the Roman punch glasses, on small plates, like those for brend and butter. These doilies are usually made of fine linen, embroidered with colored or white silks; or they may be orna-mented in drawn work. They are sometimes fringed, and often hemstitched.

A WAY TO REPAIR WALL PAPER

HAVE a set of children's paints, selecting I AVE a set of children's paints, selecting those that have creams, browns, yellows, and perhaps green, blue and red. Mix the colors until you get the shade of the foundation color of the paper, then lightly touch up the broken places. If the breaks be small this will be all that is necessary; but, if large, it will be well when the first color is dry to touch up the place with the other colors. This is a much easier, and more satisfactory, method is a much easier, and more satisfactory, method thun patching the paper,

WHAT SOME CORRESPONDENTS ASK

To keep flies from chandellers, wipe the chandellers with a soft cloth that has been wet in kerosene oil. This should be done several times during the summer. Fly specks can be wiped off in the same manner, even when on gilt picture frames; but the cloth must be only slightly moistened in the latter case, and used lightly, else the gilt itself may come off. come off.

If the readers who want to know how to make like curtains look creamy, and low to wash Madras curtains, will refer to the May number of THE LABRES HOME JOURNAL they find the information they desire; and some points about removing stains from, and ing the color of leather, were given in the Murch Journal.

ie March Jouxnan. Several correspondents ask for my soap re-spt. They will find it in the January munber of the Journal.

Somebody maks if a painted floor can be stained. No. To be sure, the paint could be scraped off and the staining done then, but it would be an expensive undertaking.
The correspondent who asks how rea should be served from a five-o'clock tea-table will find the unswer in the April Jouxnay. A subscriber asks if postry and layer esks should be eaten with a spoon or fork. With

A reasier of the JOURNAL asks if enstors are used on the table. No; they are not used on private tables. The oil and vinegar are put on in handsome glass bottles, and the peoper in dainty silver or china pots. One of the safest and best things for washing the bair is far soap. It is a good plan to use if once a month, Uneweetened and free from all preservatives. Keeps rany length of time in all climates.

AN INFANT'S FOOD.

by any courts of time in all cumules.

Its Uniform Quality, Convenience and Economy reader HIGHLAND EVAPORATED CREAM preferable to all other forms of cream or nitk for todies. Tes, Cherolate, Ice Cream, Charlotte Russe, Castards and all uses to which ordinary cream or milk may be put.

Sold by Grocers and Druggists Everywhere Write for our Infant Food circular and Highland Evaporated Cream booklet cutified "A FEW DAINTY DISSIDS."

HELVETIA MILK CONDENSING CO.

No Alkalies Other Chemicals are used in the preparation of W. BAKER & CO.'S BreakfastCocoa which is absolutely pure and soluble.

It has more than three times the strength of Cocoa mixed with Starch, Arrowroot or Sugar, and is far more econical, costing less than one cent a cup. is delicious, nourishing, and RASLE

Sold by Grocers everywhere. W. BAKER & CO., Dorchester, Mass.

A Graceful Act

Of hospitality is to offer your evening guests a cup of Bouillon before leaving. Use Armour's Extract of Beef and boiling water; add salt, pepper and a thin slice of lemon to each cup. Serve with plain crackers, Armour & Co., Chicago.

IF YOUR HUSBAND FINDS FAULT With your cooking, send us ten two-cent stamps for Mass Parloa's New Cook Book and make him happy. F. B. 6000DNOW & CO., Box 1687, Boston, Mass.

BARLOW'S INDIGO BLUE

The Family Wash Bine, always giving satisfaction Formule by Grocers. Ask for it. D. S. Willemann, Proprietor, 23 North Second Street, Philadelphia, Pa

PERFECTION Loose bottoms. Caken removed washed overy where, Set, by CAKE mail, Sec. Agents WIGHLARDSON MFG. CO., D.St., Bath. N. Y. TINS

BURNETT'S FLAVORING EXTRACTS

Are in our judgment the best goods that are now or have been on the market.

C. JEVNE & CO., Chicago Dec. 1, 1891.

INDOOR SUMMER AMUSEMENTS

HEN the mother packs the trunks for the summer holiday in the country she boliday in the country she must not forget that there will be rainy days and cold, dull evenings, when the children cannot go out of doors, and will want amosement in the house. If she provides for this beforehand she will have occupation rendy for beforehand she will have occupation rendy for them, and will not be worried lest their fidgeting should disturb the other boarders. Chiliter's tastes differ as much as those of their siders, and in making provision for their electrinament each mother must be guided by the inclinations of her own family. Some children ask for nothing more delightful than to be read to. An interesting book will hold them enchanted until the reader is exhausted, to after life they will always associate certain pages with the dear voice that interpreted them. It is a great gift to be able to read aloud with case to one's self and pleasure to the hearer. Indiren can be trained to do so with a little rouble, if they have daily practice in the right way, and if the story is absorbing they will not listorer that they are at the same time acquiring an accomplishment. ng an accomplishment.

THERE are so many amusing games that the difficulty is to choose between them The dimenty is to choose between them when the family purse is long enough to permit their being purchased. Ouijn, or the talking board; Halma, Tiddledewinks and numberless others may be found at any toy shop, Variations of the every opular. Authors, "dominous, checkers, the old favorites that amused as when it is wear children, have not lost their variations of the every popular. Authors, donalnoes, checkers, the old favorites that amused as when we were children, have not lost their power to charm. A box of letters is a most satisfactory investment, they can be used in so many ways. Word-making and word-taking, lor, instance, when each player makes a word and the others try to take it by altering it, adding a letter to form a different word, or trying to change it by subtracting a letter, as "droop," which becomes "drop" by osing an o, and then chaims it. Whoever gets ten words first wins the game. Transformation is another; a word with plenty of rowels is chosen, as "comfortable," and five, en, or lifteen minutes, according to the age of the players, is allowed to make words out of the letters contained in it. Whoever has the most words at the expiration of the time is the rictor. This can be played with pencil and super if there are not enough letters from which to draw.

A GAIN, there are games where no other implements than pencil and paper are equired. One of these, called "Observation," is a modification of the method which Robert Houdin, the celebrated French conjurer, used o train his son to quickness in perceiving and accuracy in recording the result of his impressions. Housin used to take the boy past a shop window where a number of articles were exposed for sale, and after one rapid thance require him to write down as many as an ecould remember, returning to verify his ist. In the game twenty-five small articles are placed on a table, half a minute is allowed to view them and then each player writes fown as many as he can remember. The serson having the largest number correct is he winner. In "Distraction" the players write he numbers from one to one hundred on a sard, or paper, mixing them in every way; he paper is then passed to the next neighbor, who is obliged to cross them off in sequence, Finding twenty-six next three, for example, so may not mark it off until he has discovered all the intervening numbers and drawn a line brough them. The one who finishes first all the intervening numbers and drawn a brough them. The one who finishes first taskes a point, and five points wins the game. When there is a large party this can be played in tables, like progressive whist, or cuchre, und the winner receive a prize.

MANY persons have a prejudice against cards, and do not think it wise to permit heir children to play with them. Human inture is prone to long for forbidden pleas-Homan nature is prome to long for forbidden pleasures, and the noment that a thing, innocent itself, is made desirable by being proditited, young people, and old people, too, segin to want it above everything. If chillern play cards with their father and mother, and have been accustomed to see and traction, the bits of painted pasteboard do not seesess that mysterious charm which surrounds them when they have been taboose until the girl or boy is add enough to choose. until the girl or boy is old enough to choose then they seize on them with a consciousness of breaking bonds and throwing off restraint, which is not good for their moral nature. If the onscience prevails, they go through life de-burget from a legitimate recreation which scould have given them pleasure. Elisaberii Romssos Scovii.

TO STERILIZE MILK AT HOME

By KENYON WEST

TATISTICS are not always en-tertaining, but they prove that among recent scientific mechods for the preservation of headth and the prevention of disense, the sterilization of milk ranks very high. The object of this paper is not, however, to praise results, but to describe methods. by sterilization we mean to "free from germs." To do this no chemical agent, nothing, is equal to heat, heat intense and prolonged. The old process of boiling is imperfect for the reason that, as the air was, in the first instance, the cause of the development of these parties are the state of the development of first instance, the cause of the development of these noxious germs, means must be taken to prevent the air from again coming in contact with the milk. Corking with perforated rub-ber corks and boiling the bottles in water is also apt to be a failure, though it approaches nearer the true method. The only sate way is to steam the milk in the following manner: Have as many bottles as will last for the feeding of the child for twenty-four hours. It is searchy necessary to say that they must be is scarcely necessary to say that they must be perfectly clean and carefully rinsed. Sometimes lime-water is useful for rinsing. Size of bottle depends upon the age of the child or the condition of his appetite. The best bottles are round with a rounded bottom, as they can be more easily keep clean, though any clear. condition of his appetite. The best bottles are round with a rounded bottom, as they can be more easily kept clean, though any clear glass bottle is not objectionable. Fill the bottles by means of a small funnel to within two inches of the top. See that no milk touches the neck. Cork with wads of cotton, previously subjected, in the oven, to heatenough to turn them a light brown. This renders them sweet and pure. They should not be put in so tightly as to prevent a free pessage of air through them. Do not have the steamer hot at first, but after the bottles are placed in it gradually raise the temperature to 212 degrees. For several years I have used a patent sterilizer, as it is much less trouble than the ordinary household steamer. It takes care of itself, whereas the common one needs constant watching. Besides, with it I have fewer bottles broken. If the bottles are of uniform size and round, they can be placed in a rack which isolates them from one another. If they vary in size put them directly in the steamer upon a flat piece of tin, or within a circular pan. If there are so many as to touch, wrap thin choths around them to prevent breakage. Cracking of the bottles is, however, one of the trials which beset every experimenter. I was troubled very much until I discovered that two or three inches of water put in the circular pan renders the bottles comparatively safe. When taken out until I discovered that two or three inches of water put in the circular pun renders the bottles comparatively safe. When taken out place the bottles on a folded paper to cool. If, by any mischance, they have been filled too full, the cotton may have, by the expansion, been forced out. This should be replaced before taking from the store and the steamer allowed to boil ten minutes longer. And the bottles found in this condition should be used first.

used first.

As it is important to keep the air excluded As it is important to keep the air excluded from the milk it is well, even while feeding the child, to pour out only a portion of the milk and re-insert the cotton while the first portion is being drunk. If the child uses a nipple, of course the milk must be steamed in his nursing bottles, and as the cotton is removed the nipple drunk over the neck. If any dilutions of water or cereals are indicated, they must be put in the bottles before the steaming takes place. Sometimes there is a film or seum on the top of the milk to which a nervous child may object. Shake the bottle well to mix in the cream, then rinse a strainer with boiling water or lime-water and strain the milk as it is poured out. If it needs to be beated again put the bottle in a tin cup of water and heat it gradually before uncorking. If poured out into the cup all the previous trouble of sterilization is rendered, in a measure, useless.

we, useless.

No infallible rule can be given as to the time required to steam the milk. It depends upon its age and condition. If a cow is kept, do the work directly after milking, and it will take work directly after milking, and it will take but a few minutes to kill the germs. If you wait hours, a longer time will be necessary. The objection to milk steamed much longer than an hour is that its flavor is impaired, and the child does not like it so well. Otherwise, it is better to steam it two hours than run risk from contagion. The best way is to obtain the purest milk and sterilize it as soon as it is brought to you. The test of the thoroughness of your efforts will be the "keeping" of the milk for an indefinite time. But for those who cannot test the matter for themselves and wish a "rule" to go by, it is fairly safe to say that, unless the milk is very old, or has been exposed to more than ordinary noxious influences, an hour's steaming will be all that is ences, an hour's steaming will be all that is necessary. But no tears need be shed should a few minutes longer be given to the work.

WHAT A WISE MOTHER CAN DO

THE can take ten minutes every day and O read to her children a few words on astronomy, geology or physiology. Not dry statistics, which carry no knowledge to the little minds, but the names of plants and stars, their places, and the mythological story connected with them; stories of the strata of rocks, with coal and other minerals buried between with coal and other minerals buried between clay and stones; how the hot waters and the cold are deep down under us, waiting for min-until he needs them and discovers their hiding places; stories of our own bones and nerves, muscles and blood; the course of our food from the mouth to the stomach; how fresh-air invigorates us, and stimulants dry up the tissues. It is astonishing how easily little children learn the long words and use them intelligently. All these subjects and a huminal intelligently. All these subjects and a hundred more are brought before them every day in a rightly conducted kindergarten,

A PLAY BOX FOR CHILDREN

A PLAY BOX FOR CHILDREN

WE have a very unique arrangement for children which can be easily made at home. I called it "Juanmetrics" Play Box, "for number one and number two will soon be old enough to use it. Mine was made by a handy friend at very little expense. The bax is four feet square, eighteen Inches deep, both sides and flooring made of planed and sand-papered white pine. The outside of the box is shellarked and the interior lined with a cheeseechth comforier, cut to fit and tacked into piace. When boby was small, soft pillows were kept in the box and were removed then alle was old enough is enself steady by the sides, and when a fittle over a year old could valk all around the box. By this time the pads were removed, for we found that more fimespecially noise-could be had without them. With the nid of casters undermeath, the box could be redied anywhave, and by its use we went through a cold wither without any coughs or colds. It is try for the best haby tender I have ever seen or heard of. I have since seen a dry goods bux cut down for the same purpose.

A CONVENIENT APRON

A CONVENIENT APRON

WITH the summer days comes the question, how shall we keep the light dresses clean while the little toes are playing out of doors, it will take half the pleasure from the fredic if the bothersome order; "Bo very cureful of your dress," is constantly heard; and the gingham aprone do not look well when we want the little ones booking fresh and attractive at their out-door play "when papa comes bother?" We overname the difficulty by purchasing a little extra material and making one or two aperons like each sud, very simple little affairs and easy to make and laundry. Take a straight piece of the goods half a yard wide, and long enough to reach from the aboutdors be the bottom of the dress; inche top cut out a small curre for the neck, and halfing it before the child flad the width across the cheen, and cut out the curves for the area, and ended all around with narrow straige-double pleese folded to getter and "run up" on the machine-for tying. If the material is a yard wide take a piece the length desired, and cut, it in half for two aprons; they are spitckly lied on, will keep chean the front of the dress where we much dirt seems to collect; and in a moment may be unded, when papan or a caller appears, leaving the dress fresh and chem between the appears, leaving the dress fresh and chem tenents. Being of the dress material they will not have the appearance of aprous, but will seem a part of the smill, and are equally prety for the dainty dresses of the small lady or the kittanis of the little man.

PULLTING INFANTS TO BED AWAKE

PUTTING INFANTS TO BED AWAKE

IN the April Journal. "Weary Mother" is perplexed about pulling her boby to bed awake. I rocked mountly girl until she was thirteen months, and finally decided to put her in her crib and let her go to steep to herself, giving her a picture eard or a handkerchief to take her attention. The first time she cried for some time, has now she goes into her crib wide awake, and in a very few minutes is sound asterp.

L. A. D.

MAKING HOME ATTRACTIVE FOR BOYS

MAKING HOME ATTRACTIVE FOR BOYS

"INITIS morning, as I entered the bright, cheery home of a friend, the brast trees evidanced, perhaps, by the storm raging without, I said almost involutarity, as I pansed on the thresholt: "the How pleasant it is here!"

"Is it?" said my friend. "I'm very glad it looks as, and I want it to be so. I want it to be the most attractive place in all the world in say bays." My own heart echoed the thought, for I have alway, too. Then I glaured about me, and I saw traces of suchber's hand and mother's heart everywhere. There were plane and guitar, for the boys are fined of music, and have some inste and possible talent in that like. There were gued books and magazines, which my friend ead "We are reading together, the boys and I. I try to adapt their tastes to mine, and mine to theirs, and we derive munica pleasure and benefit." There were comfortable chairs, not too fise, with entitiong cushiers, games to be brought out upon occasion, and the subject nearest that mother's heart secured to be those two boys and how to make them happy and comfortable, and how to give them a feeling of companionship in their own home. M. O.

I NOTICE in the April JOCRNAL "Mattle 8." writes

I NOTICE in the April Journal. "Mattie 8." writes of her baby's ears being turned over. If she wishes I on lead her a cop such as may habes wear that will keep the ears down. I make them of sincer mustle and it them tight; they are not irritating at all and will make the hair grow smooth and soft. My babies wear them from six months old to eighteen mostle. If her haby is not a year old the cap will help, I am sure.

M. A. C.

Caps made for this purpose are sold in the large establishments where children's clothes are a specialty.

A BABY'S WARDROBE

K INDLY advise me what constitutes a baby's wardrobe. I have tot an idea, and your information will be very valuable to me. How long shall the decases be, and what will be best for the little one to skep in at night?

ANXIOUS.

A moderate outfit for a haby consists of 3 bands, 4 shirts, 4 fluonel skirts, 2 cotton skirts, bands, 4 shirts, 4 fluincel skirts, 2 cotton skirts, 48 napkins, 6 dresses, 6 night slips, 3 wruppers, 6 pairs of socks, 2 blankets, cloak and bood, The dresses should be thirty inches long from neck to bottom of hem. The buby should wear at night either its little shirt, or a fluonel slip, and a cambric slip over it.

These questions, and many others relating care of a baby, are fully answered in "A Requirements," which will be sent from the JOURNAL office for twenty-five cents.

LAXATIVES FOR THE YOUNG

SO many questions have been asked on the point of the best laxatives for children that a few simple suggestions may be helpful. Suppositories: These may be of paper, which is tightly rolled, four inches long, oiled and inserted a short distance, or piece of white some two inches long and as thick as a lend pencil. or the glycerine or gluten ones which can be purchased ready for use. Their use is not attended with any ill effects.

Laxative food, as strained entmeal, or a teaspoonful of powdered extract of malt put in the milk three times a day. With children over a year old soft-baked apple, orange juice, porridge of any of the cereals; plenty of water to drink.

Massage: Gentle rubbing and kneeding of the whole abdomen beginning low on the right side, passing upward, across and down the left side. A little oil can be rubbed in the skin at the same time, and the movements continued for ten or fifteen minutes at the same hour every morning.

GIVE THE said

"Let me taste it."

but it's good!"

now."

BABIES

NESTLÉ'S

FOOD

THIS series of photographs, taken from life, has excited so much interest that we have received inquiries beyond number we have received inquiries beyond number as to how they may be obtained. To meet this demand we have had them incorpora-ted in our new book entitled "The Bahy." which is a charmingly written and daintily illustrated story of Baby life, containing matter of interest to every mother. It has been carefully written by authorities on the question of infant life and infant feeding, is printed on the best paper and beautifully bound. We will send "The Baby" to any mother who will send her address and mention this Magazine. Address THOS, LEEMING & CO. 73 Warren Street, New York

REMEMBER, this is not the time for making experiments. Here is a text for every mother to remember during the hot weather: "Nestlé's Food is invaluable as a diet in Cholera Infantum and Summer Complaint."

BABY WARDROBE PATTERNS
Complete could, 25 improved patterns for infants' clothes. Also 25 of short clothes. Filter set with full directions for making, amount and kind of material, by mall, scaled, 56 cents. Patterns absolutely reliable. HINTS TO EXPECTANT MOTHERS, a book by a trained gross, free with such set of patterns. Mrs. J. BRIDE, P. O. Hox 2018, New York.

B of every gar- A ment re- B consisting Y imperced by pat, Sec; short children, 25 pat, Sec; kind, and, mat ri-required, valuable hygienic information by professional nurse, and portfolio of bules, from life, free, with each. See England Pattern Co., Sea S., Posting, Vi.

This Department is under the editorship of EBEN E. REXPORD, who will take pleasure in answering any question regarding flowers and floriculture which may be sent to him by the JOURNAL readers. MR. REXPORD asks that, as far as possible, correspondents will allow him to answer their questions through his Journal Department. Where specially desired, however, he will answer them by mail if stamp is inclosed. Address all letters direct to EBEN E. REXFORD, Shiocton, Wisconsin.

OTHING gives a floer dis-play during the early full months than the gladiolus, and no flower is of easier cultivation and it may be added that no flower is cheaper, for of late years so many firms have gone into the firms have gone into the growing of bulbs for the market that the supply bids fair to exceed the demand, and fine bulbs of this plant can be bought for so small a sum that it would seem as if everybody could afford to have a few of them. Some of the choicer varieties bring fancy prices, but some of the most beautiful sorts are verycheap, and the seedlings which are offered at less prices than it seems possible for them to be grown for, are just as satisfactory to most persons as the named sorts. Be sure to send for some of these plants next spring. You will be sorry you did not when you come to see your neighbor's garden bright with them, and think that the money you invested in a "novelty" that proves an eyesore mould have bought enough of these charming plants to bought enough of these charming plants to fill a good-sized bed.

THE CULTIVATION OF THE GLADIOLUS

THE CULTIVATION OF THE GLADIOLOS

THE cultivation of the gladiolus is very simple; it will grow in any soil that is rich and mellow. It should be planted as soon as the weather becomes really warm. Put the builts about six inches under ground. If you want to produce the best effect with them set them in clumps. Eight or ten in a mass will give you from twenty-five to thirty-five or forty stalks of bloom, or ought to, at least, and from this number you get a solid effect that is much more satisfactory than where the builts are set singly, and there are only three or four are set singly, and there are only three or four much more satisfactory than where the bulbs are set singly, and there are only three or four stalks in a place.

From a dozen bulbs set in spring you should have thirty or forty bulbs in fall, as they increase very rapidly. In a short time you will have enough to fill your garden and to give away to your friends; but you will find that you can make use of a great many. Nothing is more useful during August and the early part of September for cutting. Half a dozen stalks of scarlet and rose and creamy white and vivid cherry flowers in a tall vase will produce a charming effect in a corner or beneath a mirror. Dig the bulbs on a dry, sunny day, after the frost has killed the tops; lay them in the sun through the samp part of the day. Cover at night, and next day expose them to the sun again. After a little cut the tops off to within six inches of the bulb. When the remaining portion of the stalk seems quite dry, fit the bulbs together and hang in a cool but frost-proof room; or the bulbs can be wrapped in paper and hong in some closet in paper bugs, until spring. Examine them once in a while to see that they are not molding; this will not be likely to happen if you are careful to dry the bulbs well before storing them away.

GROWING WATER LILIES

GROWING WATER LILIES

GROWING WATER LILIES

A CORRESPONDENT writes: "I have enjoyed your talks about flowers in the Journal and had so many helps that I take the liberty of giving a little experience, which may help some one else; a sort of floral reciprocity. For many sensons we have been growing nymphæodoratæ in a large tub, sunk level with the surface of the lawn. We chose an eastern exposure, where the pond is shaded from the afternoon sun and the west winds. The bottom of the tub was covered to a depth of five or six luches with mad from the border of a tom of the tub was covered to a depth of five or six inches with must from the border of a creek or pond, the roots Inid upon this and covered three or four inches deep with soil from the vegetable garden. The tub was then filled—by pouring gently—with water from a well. As the water evaporates the tub most be refilled, generally a pullfull each day, and kept as nearly as possible level full. By the last of June a few blooms appeared the first year of planting. When hard freezing weather seems probable we fill the tub full of water and cover with boards, over which long. and cover with boards, over which long, course straw or old carpet may be spread and kept in place by a few small boards. Last sea-son we had water lilies from June fifteenth untit; September first; some days the pond showed half a dozen blossoms, and was at all times "a thing of beauty," the glossy green leaves nearly covering the surface of the water. During my summer "outing" I guithered and brought a few roots of the amazingly large white and small yellow varieties from Ontario, Camela, and placed varieties from Ontario, Camida, and placed them at one end of the pond, which had been changed last April from a tub, to a tank, three end a half-by five feet, and two and a half-feet deep, made of two-inch oak planks, precisely as a cistern. The tank was covered with boards only during the last winter. Ice two inches in thickness covered the water during several weeks, while at least one foot of water beneath it kept the lily roots safe from frost. This on the southern border of Pennsylvania.

THE BEAUTY OF BORDER PLANTS

The beauty of Border Plants

It will be time to set hardy herbaceous plants next month, and I want to tell you about a few that I know will give you perfect satisfaction. All are entirely hardy, and thus is what you should make sure of in plants for the border, for half hardy sorts that come through the winter in a dead-alive condition are worse than none at all. I have a group of percunial phlox that affords me much pleasure, and attracts a great deal of attention.
It is composed of rose and pure white varieties. of perential phlox that affords me much pleasure, and attracts a great deal of attention. It is composed of rose and pure white varieties, the rose occupying the center of the group. For two months it is a perfect mass of flowers, and many persons have stopped to ask me what those beautiful plants were. There are crimson, purple and like varieties that are equally as desirable. This plant sends up so many stalks, and each stalk bears such an immense head of closely-clustered flowers, that it makes it possible to obtain solid masses of color with it. The plants increase in size from year to year. They are easily propagated by division of the routs. You will want some of the new varieties of iris. These flowers rival the orchid in beauty and delicate color. Such blues, and purples, and delicate color. Such blues, and purples, and delicate etherent shades of yellow and line and violet you can find nowhere else. No border is com-plete without at least half a dozen varieties of this most exquisite flower. Be sure to get a few plants of it. If I were obliged to confine my choice to one bardy plant I think it would be the iris.

VARIETIES OF BORDER ORNAMENTS

OU will want some of the aquilegias, Ceru-You will want some of the aquitegas. Cerusers lea is a Rocky Mountain variety, with very large flowers, the outer sepals a deep blac shading into blue, petals white, with green tip to the spur. A chrysoutha is a bright golden yellow, and is a charming flower. It blooms for about two mouths, and forms a birsh two or three fiest across. One of the most distinct aquilegias we have, and also one of the most desirable.

Dicentra is not a new plant, but it is none the less meritorious because it is not of recent introduction. It has very pretty fern-like foll-age, of a soft green, and there is so much of it age, of a soft green, and there is so much of it that each plant forms a cushion of verdant beauty, above which the long, arching flower stalks are effectively displayed. The flowers are borne in long, slender sprays, and droop in the most graceful manner longinable. They are rose colored, with a whote center.

Gaillardia grandiflora is one of the most gargeously showy flowers I know of. Its blossoms are shaped like those of the wild daisy, but are about three inches across. The center is a dark reddish brown, with a texture like course plush. The petals are orange, crimson and red, with these colors divided in rings runing around the entire flower. It blooms from ing around the entire flower. It blooms from June to November. There are many other good border plants, but most of them are so well known that it is needless to mention them

In preparing the border for the reception of these plants, make it rich with old manure. Spale the ground up well, and have it mellow and light. Keep the grass from getting a foot-hold among them if you want them to do well.

PREPARING FOR THE AUTUMN

ANY of your plants will require re-pot-ting before you take them in for the er. Begin to get material ready now, You will find it a pleasant task to go into the woods and pastures with a basket and a trowel, and gather turly matter and leaf-mold from about gather turly matter and leaf-mold from about old strings and in the corner of the fence. And while you are getting soil together for re-pot-ting plants this fall be sure to get more than you need for that purpose, and store it away for winter use. There will always be plants that need top dressing with fresh soil, and some will require an entire change of earth, and there will be new ones, and so a supply of parties unstering will come lamit all the new potting material will come limity all the year round. Don't wait until cold weather is at hand before you begin the work of re-potting to it while you have warm and pleasant days. and the work will be done better than it would be in cold, raw weather. Another reason why it should be done now is: It will give your plants a chance to get established before it is time to take them into the house. If you wait until the iast moment, they will not have recovered from the disturbance which their roots must undergo, and they will go in-to winter quarters in a condition far from what it ought to be.

A DESIRABLE WINTER BLOOMER

If AVR you some plants of linum tryginum growing for winter use? If not, you ought to have, for this is one of our best winter bloomers, and pechaps our very best yellow winter flower. It is as showy as an allammed, and can be grown as easily as a geranium, then good plant of it in full bloom will brighten by a window as if the up a window as if the son was shining in at it in midsummer splendor.

T. E.—Increase violets by rooting the renners. Trim your lines in spring after blooming. They generally bloom every year.

Ina-Yeu can get orchids at all prices from dealers in your city and New York. Better buy the orange; it is a slow grower from seed.

E. A. W.—The best hardy white rose is Madame Plantier; the test yellow, Person or Harrison's. Cut back the La France and give it a rich soil.

T. F.—There are books that will assist the amaieur ardener, but he can never depend wholly on them, is must study, experiment and flud out for himself.

J. W. C.—I do not know anything about such a "tag" as you describe. Ask some of your local flories. Your orange plant is probably taking a rest; if the stalk in green and plump it will doubtless grow again.

E. B. C.—Cover the whole built of your glovinins. A soil of leaf-mold and sand units this plant. Keep it most, but never wet. Allow no water to get on the leaves. All bully, soid-leaved plants are injured if water stands on their foliage.

Must H. Water does not injure the foliage of begoning when the surface of the leaf is smooth like those of the rubra, well-misseds, oc., but the rex class is injured by it. As a rule, never apply water to the foliage of any plant unless it is smooth.

So nocuring a Sow panales for next spring flowering in August and September. Cover the young plants in fall with same leaves, over which place brusches of evergrees to hold them in place. Do not cover deeply, as the paney requires a free circulation of air.

Max. J. W. K.—An excess of water or smedime will always cause the begons to shed its foliage unless the one caring for it is wise enough to see the cause of trouble, and remove to a north or east window, and dry off. Use a light soil, water spartingly, and keep your plants in a north or east window.

G.—The mealy bug is a white downy-looking mass that you would hardly think a its ing organism. It looks more like a tit of cotion than anything else, but it is able to do great injury to plants. Kerosene emul-sion is the best of anticious for it. Angle worms can be driven from the soil by using thus water.

E. A. W.—If the ruse has been grown all along in a por, and you cars to keep it for winter Bouering, I would not turn. It out, as it will weaken it when you come to take it up to the fail. The roots will be in-jured at the very time when they ought to be in the best rendition. I do not think it would stand a winter out of doors.

Mas, I. 8.—You do not say whether you have your rainfulum in a pot or the open ground. Only the family-lax of sorts are adventure pot calture. In the open ground the cediumy variety, used to produce tropical effects because of its great foliage, should have a great deal of water, and the soil it is planted in should be as rich as possible.

Mass J. D.—If your potnegranate grew well I exempt see why it should not blasm. With me it is sure to blassent well if it grows well. Callus should be put out to rest in Jone or July. An average stacel root should have a six or seven inch put to grow in. Largor roots, of coasse, require larger pots. Keep the soil well drained. Warm water is good, but hot water is not.

oranical. Warm water is good, but no water is not.

Max, W. R. P.—The helicitrope can be propagated very easily from contings. Insert in sand, which should be kept very moist and warm; they will start at any season. Hydrangers are propagated frest rendily by layering. H. protecutate granulators is hardy as a like. Thomas Hogg stands the winder well as far purit as New York edy. To make pinks body and compact keep all those states pinched off through the summer.

H. L. R.—A convenient protection for grapes from bees is to take grocers' paper same, about 6 x 8 inches in site, and slip them over the banefrof grapes, and field in the opening, and fastes the same with a ph. The grapes ripen a little more slowly, but they are all the assesser for that, not they are entirely generated from birds, bees and dust, and they can be left on the vines till all the banes have fallen. Put them on when the grapes begin to turn color.

began to turn event,

E. R. T.—The agapanthus plant is of the easiest cointvarion. Give it a soil of foam, which need not have much sand in it, as the strong and-fiestly roots require a somewhat beavy soil. White growing frastly water usstrailly. This plant is what is called an evergence; by that it is meant that it does not got like the amaryitie, and that it keeps or growing the year round, though more vigorously at certain sensons than at others. In this online period is from April to June.

M. E. S.—Callas thoom repeatedly; so does the amoryllis. You can remove the young bulls, or let them grew along with the parent plant, as you think best, it does not affect the plant it any way for remove them or to leave them. If you want plently of flowers from your persaltines in winter, cut the plants back in spring and allow no buds to grow. Re put as soon as the plants begin to start after cutting back. They will not require re-porting in fall if good, rich soil was given. When they begin to bloom some fertilizer can be applied.

Mass, Giscousta Lanne—You can grow permites, or any kind of amount, for that matter, in beds where to its are planted, without interfering with the bulls, makes you the up the sail to such a depth that you touch the bulls. This will not be necessary if the sail is kept mellow and free from weeds. It know nothing about the hardiness of the Mary Washington rose. There are no ever-homology goes that could be hardy with you. Some of the highest preprints orank to sent in fall, and could be laken through the winner safety with a covering of invas, but they are not ever-bluomers.

C. C. R. A. cutrestandard without the said to be be a fall to

C. C. K.—A correspondent writes that she has tried to kill worms in the soil of her pot plants by isserting matches, and her plants have been killed or injured by it. Others have writes that their waperiments have birried out similarly. I have tried them, and my plants have not been injured in the least. A correspondent in one of our horizontal magnetices any that it makes a great difference what kind of match is used. "The particular match, the kind I tried, is not like the ordinary cheap match, this writer says. She claims that it will kill the worms without injuring the plants, while the other match is death to both plants and worms. It would be well to experiment confusely with both. Keep the heliorape from blooming in summer if you want it to flower profusely in winter.

wand it to flower profusally in winter.

Mas. H. A. T. —This correspondent writes that she has an amany-tills Johnsoul which was partied at least three mostles ago. It has graven five sew leaves, and section to have come to a stand-still, with no signs of flowering. The plant would have to become established after repeating, and the disturbance incident to removal would be giften sure to interfare with its blooming if it were incident to do as. If it has grown well in sons be getting ready for blooming as soon as its period of rest house. This plant finites its growth after discerting, not before, as many seem in think it ought to. Henrally the first indication of new growth is the appearance of a flower stalk. After that, new leaves are sent up, and at this time preparation is made for discerting. The had is formed, but remakes out of sight mult the plant takes a new start. If you have had your plant only there assumes you cannot expect a great deal from it. It has not fairly got started.

Mas. M. R. S. — To winter germshams without potting months you termine sepect a great usur from it. It has not fairly got started.

Mas, M. R. S. —To wrinter greandams without pottling them, lake the old plants up as late as possible in the fall and its them together in hunches of tim or three and hang them to the beams of the collar, where they will be kept cool and cather day. It is well to cut off most of the tops a week or true before lifting the plants. Begorine like a soil of learn and tory matter, with some sand, to make it friable. Water about as you would a geranium, and keep out of the long. So many varies they for the late to the many varies of ext begoing have ref markings on the leavest that it is impossible to say what variety you have be failed. Marguerite carnations are good winer biomers. Some seed in Oxforer, in order to bring the plants into bloom rarly in the season. If you want your larbelage to brisen profisely, give a self made up mestly of leaf-mold, with all roots and foliage. Keep out of strong smoother, after the middle of summer apply some kind offertilizer once a week. Built the plants as first as the pools iff the old pass, lift you have them is been and twelve bring losse. By you have them is been and twelve bring losse. We you have them is been and twelve bring losse. Never but the self get day, or the plants will be allowed some to drop their leaves and bade.

LADIES' AND CHILDREN'S BOOTS AND SHOES

Asserted highest honors at 1808 | Melbourne . 1808 | Melbourne . 1807 | Frankbert . 1808 | Amsterdam . And wherever rise exhibited.

Fine Shoes from the Maker.

Delivered by Mail. Bright Dongola Kid, $2.50 In Style, Pit and Wear equals be best still Boot sold at Shoe tores. Buying direct from the talker sures wholesaker's and statler's profit. Sent postage aid to any part of U.S.

Store: 25 to 8; widths, A.R.C. D and E. Open or Genuson Sense Toe, Send $2,5 th Protat Note, Noney Order or Begislered Letter. Catalogue of other goods free Allen Shoe Co., North faction

31 Milk St., Besten, Mass.

Inguille! Home and Art Magazine is a text-mack on PANCY unter, PAINTING, ART and nearwa-monto introduction, Lida and M. J. Charleson, Editors. Each number condains a Monnehrome or a Colored Standy. Stante copies. B cross, St. Seper year. We give this Pancy Frieze Free with a YEAR'S account-tion.

This small libratation gives but a faint title of the beauties of this Paney Frieze. It is an exact artistic reproduction of the Grigiani Oil Pulming, reproduction of the Grigiani Oil Pulming, reproduced full size, a vana tosse, is all its Benartiful Colors. Pres. 31.0. Send $1.50 for a year's selectricion to Inguilla: Magazine, and pet the passey PRIEZE FREEZ. We will send you a 3 Months' SUBSCHIPTERS. and the PANSY PRIEZE for 75 cents. RAMPLE CHAY 10 cents. Address

J. F. INGALLS, LYNN, MASS.

"A delar serred to a delice served."
This Lindber's Holded Fremesh Beengola K, led Bertten Hong sold, proposid, anywhere in the U.S., on recopy of Cash, Money Order, or Fostal Nose, for $1.50.
Equals every way the boots sold in all retail stores for $2.50.
We underthis locatourselves, theresold we prevented the fit, sight and every and if any seels not satisfied we will refused the motory or seed
another the Common Score

DEXTER SHOE CO., 143 Federal St., Boston, Mass,

A DELICIOUS PERFUME. DELICATE BUT WONDER-

FULLY IMPERISHABLE. Ask your druggist for it, or send us of cents in stamps for 1/4 ox. sample.

C. B. WOODWORTH & SONS Rochester, N. Y.

Almond Meal, the original, Whitens and nourishes the Sicia, retraves Pimples, Eczem, Blackbests, Wriskles, Shiny Skin, Moth, Tan, Wriskles, Shiny Skin, Moth, Tan, Wriskles, Liver Spota and all skin blemish, Ask for Miter's the original, Purfectly harmies, 25 cents by stall.

II. A. MINER, Maiden, Maas, Bent filter or Portal Nes.

IT'S WONDERFUL! "The New Treatment" for Catarrh, by estroicum, Send stamp for 200 page passiphlet, fron. Agonta Wanted. HEALTH SUPPLIES CO., 710 BROADWAY, N.Y.

DISSOLVES THE ROACHES.

INDACH STATE CONTROL OF THE PROACHES.

PARTIAL DEAFNESS. The SOUND DISCS HIAL DEAFNESS, The SOUND DISCS repr per first, of cases, than all similar devices com
d. The sense to the Eury or cleaner are to the Eges, lively invisited. Wern months without respond
H. J. WALLES, Bridgeport, Conn.

FREE Eye Tester by mall. Shown at our the kind of glasses conded. KEENE, 120 Washington Street Boston, Moss.

16 Caction for $1.00
Basels on Cacti, 155 pages, 18cts.
Catalogue free. J. Blace A to, Philips.
CACTUS

TO ALL, CORRESPONDENTS:—Any question from our readers of help or interest to women will be cherrially answered in this Department.

Rel write gour questions phining and briefly. Do not have any ninevennity words.

The right to answer we reject any question in reserved by the Editor.

Answers consort by premised for any specific lister. They will be given as quickly after receipt as possible.

All correspondence should be accomposed by full means and address, not for publication, but for reference.

GRACIE-There are no harmless does for the bair. CELLA-The Washington Monument is 555 feet high. SUPPRIMER - We cannot give addresses in this column. TRAVIS PARK - September 28th, 1875, fell upon a Son-day.

ANNA-The colors of Vassar College are pink and gray.

 $\mathbf{M}, \mathbf{S}, \mathbf{C}, -\mathbf{M}$ rs, Henry Ward Beecher lives in Brooklyn,  $\mathbf{N}, \mathbf{Y},$

NANNIE—Chloroform will remailly remove stains from light salk. Mus. M. M.—"The Mayflower" returned to England in April, 821.

Primeron-Col. Valentine Baker was dismissed from the British army.

Dos - It is said that cloves will prevent mould from collecting on lak.

Dayrox - It is quite improper and incorrect to speak of children as "kids."

JANET-James Russell Lawell died at Cambridge, Mass., on August 12th, 1801. MARIANNA - The Jorienal, will shortly publish as article on the care of the hands.

C.s. L. "D. V." is an abbreviation of "Dec solente" which is Latin for "God willing."

Pensons—Mrs. Harrist Beecher Showe is still alloy; she resides in Harrisori, Connections.

J. M. R.—Elta Wheeler Wilcox was born in Johnstown Center, Wis., about the year 186.

INQUISITIVE-The origin of the expression "Consistency thou art a jewel" is miknown.

CHARLETTE – Montaing exempts people temporarily from the ordinary obligations of society.

Manua. The poison by grows in clusters of three leaves; the harmless variety in clusters of five.

RALEBOT - For a woman of five feet five one hun-dred and thirty-five pounds is the proper weight.

M. N. M.—It is always in the worst possible form for a man to take a woman's arm either by day or night.

P. P.—Wedding invitations should be issued about two weeks before the date appointed for the weiding.

Many—Your friend should be addressed as "Mes. John Brown;" her signature would be "Clara Brown." ALICE AND POLLY—There has been no sequel to "The Anglomaniaes." (2) Richard Harding Davis is unmar-ried.

MARY-We were in error in June. Jay thould has we daughters, the youngest one is about fourtren years

L. B. 8.—The word "fillet" in a cultury sense means a deficule, tender piece of meat; the fillet of beef is the tenderion.

M. H.—R. S. V. P. is the abbreviation of a French drase," repender sil was phall," and memor "Answer, f you please."

NANETTE-Mr. Samuel L. Clemens (Mark Twain) is married; his wife was a Miss Olivia L. Laugdon, of Emira, N. Y.

BLASCHE-Any one who uses imitations of United States come for advertising, or other purpose, is liable to a flor of $100.

Grack.—A, S. Roe is a brother of the late E, P. Roe; we do not think that E. R. Roe is in any way related to the dead anthor.

READER-E. P. Boy diedni Cornwall, N.Y., July 19th, es. "The Earth Trembled" was, we think, the name

TRAVELLER-The Gulf Stream touches the United States, Newfoundland, the British boos, Norway, Portugal and Morecco.

K. Y. Z.—The o'dow of General Sherkinn receives an annual peacion from the United States Government of two thousand dollars.

Channall.-President Harrison has only one grand-son, his namewike, Bergamin Harrison McKee; the other two grandehildren are girls.

LENNOX-II was James Howell, the author of "The Familiar Letters," who said: "If one were to be worded to death the tittest language is Italian."

Latter-liv naving a certain day engraved upon your visiting early year friends will understand that it is your day at home, and a ill call at that time.

CONSTANT - Jefferson Davis was twice married; his first wife was Sarah, vid st daughter of Zachary Taylor; his second a Miss Howell, of Natchez, Miss.

Geographics.—The copyright law of the United States accures to authors or their nedges the exclusive right to translate of to dramatice their own works.

8, 6.—In addressing a letter to a married lady use her hashesel's some or initials, as for instance; " Mrs. John Levils Smith," in preference to "Mrs. Mary Ann Smith."

J. R. H.—A well-fitting corses should fit every part of the figure, hold the best im, and the amount over the hips. Corsess do not need to be pulled together to fit in the back.

Manuscet - We should not consider the word "basele" s being particularly suited for a young girl's use. It is any, and although an expressive word is a very in-legant one. elegant one.

M. F. W.—It is not necessary for men to remove their hats while riding in an elevator when there are ladies persent. An elevator in a public building is a public convergancy. May - The gentleman should precede the lady leaving the car, so that he may be ready to nested her alight. (2) Allow the gentleman to nek permission call upon you.

WORKENG GREE,—If you were employed by the mouth and broke your side of the contract by leaving before your mouth was up your employer is not bound to pay you mything.

LITTLE HOTSEREEFER—Salted almonds should be served in dainty little silver or clim distics, and should remain on the dinner table from the beginning until the end of the meal.

Congruent Antoquartion concerning the Brevel In-stitute, Philadelphia, may be obtained by addressing the provident of the Institute, James McAllister, Lt., Pulladelphia, Pa.

WARRES It is contourney for the family of the heide bear off the expenses of a church wedding, including to sear all the expenses of a church weekling including the maste, though quite often the groom gives a special present to the organist.

Bisumous D. Volupek is very coully be need on ar-co and of the extreme simplicity, its grassman has a single conjustion and no bregular verbs. We cannot fell you where a may be acquired.

ASSEAA We approve of the form "My licer Sir" for the beginning of a better. Only in a instinced leiter strend "Bear Sir" to need. Letters of combitance re-quire no reknowledgements.

Let use—You will find the quotation:

"Two cools with but a single thought,
Two bearts that beat as one."
in the play of "Impount."

O'unor's—The United States Government issues bills of the following denominations; one, two, five, ten, twenty, fifty, one hundred, over hundred, one thousand, five thousand and ten thousand.

M. C. N. -The mirde to Moore's "Last Rice of Sum-mer" was indisposed by Sir John Shereisson. Photow used the air in "Nartha," the scene for which opera is laid at Richmond, on the Thomes.

ANTTA—An act passed in June, 1872, notherized the Poetmaster-general to been postal cards, and the first in this country were on sale in May of the following part. In England poetal cards have been in use since 1890.

P. S.—A wedding that is brid before six o'clock in the eventual is a "morning weshing." The bride may went full brides does will vell, etc., but the group must near morning dress; under no circumstances must be near his dress still.

T. V. R.—The "Beview of Reviews" will keep you fully informed on convent topics. (2) Write Messes. Fowler & Wells, New York City, for a back upon physiognomy. (2) There is a Training School for Missionaries in Chicago, III.

MAZIE—There is an old supersition about people whose cyclinus meet that they are deceiful and not to be trusted, but we have us faith in supersitions, and we should not advise you to distract any friend because har cyclerows happen to have that peculiarity.

OLD READER.—The cottage property where General Grant died at Mount Metiregor, is now, we believe, the property of the Grand Armer of the Republic. Mount McGroper's near Saradoga, New York, and bouries are allowed to cuter the cottage without any charge.

ELORE SISTRE-A single woman, or a married woman, who is legally the head of a horsehold, is en-titled to the same privilegers as man under the United States Homestend laws. Five years' residence on the tract is usually necessary to secure title to a Homestead claim.

Anxpors Readen.—The law provides that no part of the money dos, or about to become dos, to not per-sioner, shall be liable to attachment, keys or setsure by any local process whatever; and this applies to letters in transit containing checks, and those in post-office awaiting delivery.

You so Morning—Only infiling friends should be in-vised to a christening. If the christening takes place in the house, do not allow the haly to be brought down stairs until the guests are assembled, and send him back to the mirrory as soon as the coverance is over. The decorations used should be altogether white.

M. G. E.—The Prince of Wales is heir apparent to the Eritid crison; after him bloom, Prince George, Should Prince George die wilhout lesse the croren would de-scend to the daughters of the Prince of Wales. The Prince of Wales is advays heir to the crown, and after lein his nearest heir, be that heir male or female.

Bassar—West Point endors, unless some released by isovernment, are required to serve in the United States amy for eight years after graduating. (2) The course of instruction at West Point requires four years; the cadets are allowed but one leave of absence during the course, and that is granted at the end of the second year.

All necession—The Society of "The Baughters of the American Revolution" was organized in Washington, B. C., in 180. The President-General of the Society is Mrs. Benjamin Harrison. (2) There is a New York State society styled "Haughters of the Revolution," of which Mrs. Judge Ingraham, of New York City, is secretary.

A hereatickit—It would be unde of you to express your disapproval of wine at a dinner party. While it would be perfectly proper for you to discuss the subject at a chaird meeting, if the question came up for discussion, it would be quite improper to criticize your fittent's ac-tion while seated at her table. Simply leave your glass of wise untouched.

Alack—Amounterment earth should be sent out as soon after the wedding as possible. 12: It is customary to send cards to each member of a family. It is never well in attempt to be evolutioned in the matter of earth of any surt. 13: It is very last form in begin a letter "Friend Mary" or "Friend John;" "My Dear Miss." or "My Bear Mary" would be the correct way in commence a note.

Miss R.—The National flags are all of the same pattern. They essists of thirteen stripes alternaling red and white; ablue field which should be two-liftle of the entire length of the flag, upon which are displayed the forty-flag white-stars, one for each state. The stars are arranged in six parallel horizontal lines, eight in the upper and hove rows, and seven in the other four. The regulation flag is ten by wineteen feet.

E. A. S.—"Annie Laurie," the heroise of the song, use the danghter of Sir Robert Laurie, of Maxwell-town. She was been on December 18th, 182. She lived to be nearly eighty years of age. The song was originally written to an old air by William Doubless, of England. Both weeds and time were nitered by Lady John Scott, sister of the late Dake of Buccloud, and were published by her for the widows and orphurs left by the Urimean war.

Schan.—The "Cake Walk" is a pedestrian diversion of the Viginia regrees, the price being an elaborately decorated take. The "Walk" is usually held in a large hall, the spectation search or standing while the contest-sants occupy the floor; prizes are usually given for the hest "gentleman walker," the best "lady walker," the hest "matched couple," the best "lady walker," the best "matched couple," the best "high stepper," such contestant tying with the other in the exhibition of flarey steps of all sorts.

F. K. W.—The expression "The Four Hundred" was colosed by Mes, Astor and exculsted by Ward McAllaber; it imposted in this way: "How many hyritations have you sent out, Mrs. Astor?" issised Mrs. McAllaber upon the occusion of her fancy dress boll. "About tun thousand" was her rept. "Year resum will be over-crowded, I fear," remarked the would be distator, "Oh, no," said Mrs. Astor, "only four hundred will come; there are only four hundred of us,"

S.V. T.—There has been for many years past a custom on the part of unmen to prefix their marken in their married manies in their structures, remespacifly it desirable that girls should be given only one Christ'in name, in order that they may be able to follow the custom the more surjey. The more important the family name, the more desirable it is that it should be retained, the recognizes in the signature Mary Harrison McKow at once that it is that if the President's daughter, and we know that "our exam Nellie Grant" is always "Nellie Grant Sartoris."

Right Max well seem group terms a manage remains afficient forms of your variation in making use-fid and force articles for a little rate which you might held not before from the for a little rate which you might held not before Trumbuckting or Unrishnase when people are always ready and tilling in him. Make advance of all surfaces and the surfaces of the control of the latest the boundaries have surface and the control of the control of while you're rubbing away over a tub of steaming clothes. If you want to keep comfortable and save your health (think of inhaling that fetid steam) and strength, stop the rubbing-and the steaming.

Pearline does it. Pearline; cold water; no boiling; little work; that is the programme for hotweather washing.

This taking away of the rubbing is more than a matter of saving work. It's a saving of needless and ruinous wear and tear to all your summer clothing. Direction for this easy, safe and economical washing, on every package of Pearline.

Beware Peddlers and some unscrupulous grocers will tell you,
"this is as good as" or "the same as Pearline." IT'S FALSE—Pearline is never peddled, if your grocer sends you an imitation, be honest—send it back.

333 JAMES PYLE, New York.

WHITING'S FINE STATIONERY

One wishing to fill all the demands of polite society will be careful that one's writing papers be entirely correct. Whiting's Stationery is the standard form for correspondence, and has been for over 26 years. These papers are the most elegant made. Come in rough or smooth finish, and all the fashionable tints. At all first-class stationer's.

WHITING PAPER CO., New York Offices: 150 and 152 Duane St.

ROOZEN'S DUTCH BULBS for Fall, '92, and Spring, '93, PLANTING

Byacinths, Tulips, Narciasus, Lilles, Crocus, Banunculus, Iris, Amarytlis, Gloximias, Promies, Bolphiniums, Gladfoll, Bahlias, Etc., Ric., in thousands of surfeties, new and old. ♣₹ The flowers which, if planted mixors in the Fall, cheer the bonnes in the glommy Winter months; which, if planted outdoors in the Fall, are among the first to show their exquisite bandles in the Spring.

Our 2d annual edition of "MODERN INTENDING BUILDERS INCMESS" is now ready for INTENDING BUILDERS. It contains 40 designs of describings WE covered during '84 and wherein it defend contract figures which is IMPORTANT TO YOU and wherein it differs from other books which impossible to build at costs quoted. Need See, money under or alliver, for a casy, prepaid, and if after you have READ IT over and find yourselves dissultated with our book, return READ IT same to us, and we will refund you your money.

The Saving and Sensible Architectural Bureau

Stockings there is only one hose supporter which cannot cut the stock ing. All genuine WARREN HOSE SUPPORTERS are made with Warren Fasteners with Rounded rib on Holding Edges — all other supportersmust cut the stocking. The Warren is for sale everywhere, Made by George Frost Co., Boston.

Dr. Lyon's Perfect Tooth Powder

Thoroughly cleanses the teeth and purifies the breath. Used by people of refinement for over a quarter of a century. Sold Everywhere.

Famous Faces. A contection of this beauty and value, - fine or negraved and value, - fine or negraved to the boundary of the b inker, and costant be broght unvaluers. Planes bound with silk in line embossed cover. Given FREE multil September with every new subscription to Housekeeper's Weekly, at regular price, SLOO L MARION HARLAND'S "Home Talks" each week. The only issuededd WEEKLY, It hely wing a new sensation. Address HOUSEKPEPER'S WEEKLY, Philadelphia, Pa.

SYLPH CYCLES RUN EASY

No complication; no ungainly features. A power saver; speedy every where. Note the speed features than any other two makes, STOP THAT 2007. It is a vitation that three not the labor of propolision. The Sylph 2 part spring frame with horyen E, in, custion three new cut or best procurate make riding over rough roude or had patvenents, frasible. Highest grate. SIN to SIN. A cure wanted. Cutalogue free.

ROUSE-DURYEA CYCLE CO., Moleny, so G Street, Peoria, III, Con-

M. D. ISRYANT & CO. IO Maiden Lane, N.Y. 83.00

WELL-ATTESTED MERIT

Mrs. Henry Ward Beecher writes:

"BROOKLYN, N. Y., February II, 180.

"BROOKLYN, N. Y., February II, 180.

"I have used Allicock's Formors Playtens for some years for myself and family, and, as far as able, for the many sufferers who come to us for assistance, and have found them a genuine retief for most of the actics and pains which then is beir to. I have used Allicock's Posotrs Playtens for all kinds of famoness and scute pain, and by frequent experiments find that they can control many cases not noticed in your circulars.

"The above is the only testimony I have very given in favor of any plaster, and if my name has been used to recommend any other it is without my authority or sanction."

Russell Sage, the well-known financier,

"New York City, December 20, 1890.

"For the last twenty years I have been using All-cures's Possocs Plastenes. They have repeatedly cared me of rheumatic pains and pains in my side and back, and, whenever I have a cold, one on my chest and one on my back speedily refleve me.

"My family are never without them."

Marion Harland, on page 103 of her popular work, "Common Sense for Maid, Wife and Mother," says:

"For the acting back ALLCOCK's POSOUS PLASTER is an excellent comforter, combining the sensation of the sustained pressure of a strong, warm hand with certain tonic qualifies developed in the wearing. It should be kept over the sent of the uncasiness for several days—in obstitutic cases, for perhaps a fornight."

"I think it only rearse writes:

"I think it only right that I should tell you of how much use I find Allcock's Possets Plastens to my family and amongst those to whom I have recommends ed hem. I find them a very breastplate against colds and coughs."

W. J. Arkell, publisher of Judge and Frank Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper, writes:

"JUDGE BUILDING,
"Cor. FIRTH AVE. and SIXTEERTH STREET,
"New York, January 14, 1884.
"About three weeks since, while suffering from a severe cold which had settled on my chest, I applied an Alacock's Posects Plaster, and in a sport time obtained relief.

"In my opinion, these plasters should be in every household, for use in case of coughs, colds, sprains, bruless or pains of any kind. I know that in my case the results have been entirely satisfactory and bene-ficial."

Hon, James W. Husted says:

"When suffering from a severe cough, which threat-ened palmonary difficulties, which I was recommended to go to Florida to relieve, I determined to test Alac-cock's Ponnice Plastruss. I applied them to my ebest and between the shoulder-bigdes, and in less than a florteight was entirely circed."

Henry A. Mott, Jr., Ph. D., F. C. S., late

"My investigation of Allcock's Fonors Plaster shows it to contain variable and essential ingredignts not found its any other plaster, and I find it superior to and more efficient than any other plaster."

Buffalo Lithia Water

Not half so many people kill themselves with drugs as formerly. They've found out what nature's remedy, a perfectly pure water, can do for them, and give it a chance. The results are wonderful. Send for our 32-page pamphlet and hear what eminent physicians and others say of this remedy, and find out what it can Did you Buffalo Liis in con-Free

Illustrated do for you, Pamphlet thia Water stant use at Arkansas ?

Hot Springs Dr. Blaydes, the President, says: "We use it in many obstinate cases with uniformly excellent results. It certainly possesses some extraordinary property." And the editor of Christian at Work, in a strong testimonial, says: "I use it constantly as a table water, and trust to it entirely, using no drugs."

tion. Price of case with 1 doz. halfgallon bottles, $5.

The pamphlet contains full informa-

Buffalo Lithia Springs, Va.

HOTEL NOW OPEN

POINTER!

DOSSIBLY it has not accounted to our renders that the LUBERG HPG, UR, EH, EH and 225 North Eighth St., Fiblia, we can of the lurgest panellatures of Birycles, Ghibren's Carriages and Refrigers towards their insurance Factory in politics proof. In their magnificent politics proof. In their magnificent mode of Cycle Sambries and Engels Salts. The carriage department powerts a grand appearance with reversil handered Considers handsomely updedenseed and triumed. The Giscier Refrigerators with their owns wants for invasiances with their owns, which is the result of the control of the control of the carried of their states of the control of their states of the control of their states of their tensions field of described cooking onto a mining as field described on their will be mad.

EVERY LADY

should have a bottle of Hawley's Unique Curlene on her toflet table. It will keep the hair in our from one to two weeks in the most trying weather. Try one tottle and be convinced of its merits. It is consided by all who use it to be the only preparation that will keep the hair in our and give it the soft, glossy appearance of naturalty curly hair, Poilowe instructions minutely and you will never be without Hawley's Unique Curlene. Children's hair can be beautified beyond measure by using this marvelous preparation. For sale by druggless, or sent, on receipt of price, direct from HAWLEY MFG. CO., Omaka, Neb. Price one dollar, The original and only patented Curlene receipt. No chap imitations. Agents wanted.

WANTED Everyone to send as their cabinet and 25 cents. We return it Mineline.

2x25 inches, regular card meaned, also cabinet for extra two cents. Crayons, Nx 2, 84.00; 2x 24, 86.00.

HAVEN & STRATTON, L. II. 126, Filtsfield, Mass.

ARE YOU DEAF?

DON'T YOU WANT TO HEAR?

THE AURAPHONE will surely help you if you do.

It is a new scientific invention which will restore the bearing of any one not born deal. When in the ear it is invisible, and does not couse the slightest discomfort in wearing. It is to the ear what the glusses are in the eye, an ear spectacle. Write for particulars.
The AURAPHONE COMPANY,
200 and 202 Powers Block, Eochester, N. V.

We will send you, on receipt of the cents, by return mail, an exquisite performed Sachet for the Corsary, made of sain, and bound with gold and sain's ceed. Odors—Jockey Clab, White Heliotrope, White Violet, White Liliac, White Itose and Ess. Bouquet. Address BES. LEVY & Co., French Perfumers, 34 West Bireet, Boston, Mass.

TOTAL NAME OF SI STRANGIAGE BLITE CARRES (new)
To Deposice Overseason, 12 PENR, 1 Chain, 1 Lore Pin, 1 Ring, with my product SPORT PAIRS IN second by designed in LATINAL CARR CO., CIRCUITIN, Gua-

The Rev. Mark Guy Pearse writes:

Government chemist, certifies:

Allcock's The best, Corn and and bunions ever produced. Easily

and cheapest remedy for corns applied - give im-Shields

Shields

Shields ple of the BUNION

SHIBLDS sent, prepaid, on receipt of 10 cents. The Corn Shields are made large and small. In ordering, state size wanted. POROUS PLASTER CO., 274 Canal Street, New York.

PILLOW-INHALER

Per Catarrh, Breschitis, Ashma, Ilay Fever.

Ashma, Ilay Fever.

Mrs. S. T. Rorer, 1617 Chestont St., Philada., asthores of "Mrs. Rorer's Cuok Book," ages: "I have used the Fittlew Institution in the Fittlew Institution of 1 recommend it to those who wish as got rid of catarrh."

Mrs. J. B. D. Myers, Bartian, ages: "It cared me of threat and long freside."

d for pumphlet and testimonials, or call and ass. If PILLOW-INHALER CO., 1217 Filbert St., Phila., Pa.

Every Mother Should Know

What will make her baby bealthy and happy. Bon't use cheap, crarise wood shirts, they are full of stores, and make the baby cross and sick. The fine Silk and Weol Shirts and Bands and fine Ribbed Wool Goods made by T. O. GARDSER & CO., Boston, will make the baby healthy, happy and wise. Ask your dealer for them. Take no other goods.

HELLO, BOYS!

2 cents will get our Illustrated Catalogue, No. 48, of Base Ball Goods, Fishing Tackle, Lawn Tennis Goods, Tents, Camping Outfits, Photo Outfits, Out-Door Games, etc.

All these Goods at Wholesale Prices THE WILKINSON COMPANY

83 Randolph Street, Chicago, III. THE CELEBRATED DETROIT

HOT WATER HEATER The I

POR WARMING HOMES AND GREENHOUSES SEAR FOR ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUE DETROIT HEATING AND LIGHTING CO. 250 Wight Street, Detroit, Mich.

A BOON TO THE DEAF!

Success two-cost stamp for information and terms. S0000D BROS., cor. 7th St. & Broadway, Oakland, Cal ORNAMENTAL HARDWOOD FLOORS

WALLS, BORDERS, WAINSCOTINGS, CRILINGS. of finest grades. Foreign and domestic hardwoods. The Interior Hardwood Co., Indianapolis, Ind.

WOMEN CANVASSERS WANTED Profitable work at home in all parts of the United States. Send name of Christian preacher as reference. Address with stamp, Howard C. Baser, Sallim, Kas

30 days on trial. Rosel's Magic Scale, the popular Ladies' Tailoring System. Tilestrated circular free. Rose Magic Scales Co., Chicago, Ill.

500 SCRAP FINE FREE

SHANDON BELLS

LEAVES A DELICATE AND LASTING ODOR. An Ideal Complexion Soap

For sale by all Drug and Fancy Goods Dealers, or it unable in procure this Wonderful Soap send 25 cents in stamps and receive a cake by return mail

JAS. S. KIRK & CO., Chicago SPECIAL - Shandon Bella Waltz (the popular seriesty Waltz) sent FR EE to anyone sending as three wrappers of Shandon Bella Sons.

MISS BEACH'S Curling Fluid. Keeps the hair in curl for days Innocent as ecogne. A tollet necessity. Not sent on trial.

30,000 Ladies Have Endersed It

How ARE Fortune

The state of the s ACEM BUILD

Our New Book BUILD

of 192 pages, object tender. The octating Sourcement, of persisting a great variety of

BESIGNS and PLANS of

CENT SENT BENT.

$1000 PIANO or $300 ORGAN FREE

CROWN PIANOS & ORGANS

WRINKLES! With Absorpt Not Comm.

FILL YOUR OWN TEETH with Crystaline. Stop Pain and Decay. Lasts a lifetime Circular free, T. F.THUMAN, M. D., Wells Bridge, N. Y.

TO BE SURE YOU ARE GETTING

THE BEST, BUY THE

The result of 20 years experience in treating skim diseases. For sain by druggiets, or sont by mail for 50c. A Sample Cake and 145 page book on De-matology and Scanty seet seeded for 10 cents. Blue-trated on Skin, Scalp, Nervous and Blood Diseases. Also Disfigurements like Birthunarks, Moles, Warts, Inda Ink and Provder Marks, Scars, Pittings, Reduces of Nose, Superlinous Hair, Pimples, Facial Development, etc. Consultation free at office or by letter.

JOHN H. WOODBURY
Dermatelogical leatilute, 125 W. 42d St., New York City.

WAVY HAIR SWITCHES. All long convent Hair, $3.00 up. COCOANUT BALM, Complexion Beautifur, makes the skin asfair and soft as a child's. $1.00 per box. All MONTE CRISTO beautifying reparations and heir dyes (all shedes), also the celebrated Oculina Eye heartifur and rigogulouser. Pamphlet, "Bow to be beautiffur," sentires. L. SHAW, 54 W. 1448 ST., NEW YORK.

LADIES! LADIES!

plus bedure you buy. Will refer you to 10,000 uell actisfied customers. Agents Sample Book $1 Address 138-138 W. Madison St., CHICAGO, ILL

MY WIFE SAYS SHE CANNOT SEE HOW DO IT FOR THE MONEY.

MME. CELIA CONKLIN'S CURLING CREAM The best preparation on the market for holding the Hair in Curl, Bangs and Frienes, ab-solutely harmless. It is an execution to the hair.

card case to P. H. Riers, an State St., Chicago, Ill.

ALL IN COLUMN COLD PRODUCT OF THE COLUMN COLD PRODUCT OF THE COLUMN COLD PRODUCT OF THE COLUMN COLUM

4c. A DAY PER ROOM HEAT YOUR HOUSE Either with HOT WATER or STEAM as preferred.

If you are building a New Home, or wast to make the old one Comfortable, it will pay you FURMAN BOILER and System of Heating to investigate OUR THOUGH AND SOURCE 150 page ILLESTRATED MANUAL on House Heating and Ventilation sent free. Address, HERENDEEN MFG. CO., 10 CLARK STREET, GENEVA, N. Y.

Sec Name "EVER READY" on Back of Each Stay.

Gutta Percha on both sides of steel. Warranted water-proof. Beware of Imitations Manufactured by the YPSILANTI DRESS STAY MFC. CO., Ypsilanti, Mich.

A LADY WANTED

To open a Teller Parise at home, obtain names, soul elections, and manage Agents for the fidinty, inspellining particular, and elegantly put up STLFAN TOLLET PREPARATIONS. Bend at more for circulars describing our interest and SEM PLAS. We parameter you paying, extensioning, our compression described on the parameter of the parameter of the parameter of the parameter of the control payer, and can refer to bendered so engaged! Also, nitractive industrates for Agents.

Write innoculately and receive PEEE our copprighted work on one weatherful New Art. FACE MASSAGE, The only book on the subject. We are said propositions of MasSAGED the genuine, original (Presents) proparation for Face Massage Treatment of Wirelston, lines and Messakate. Engineered and potential in E. S. and foreign constricts. Price EL00 prepaid, with hartractions in Farishan system. Its affect is marchines. Praised and endagged the parameter of the parameters of the parameter of the parameters of the parameter

Digitized by Google

Will Not

Cut

THE SECRET OF BEAUTY

Is found in Cuticura Soap, the most effective Skin Purifying and Beautifying Soap in the world, as well as the purest and sweetest of toilet and nursery soaps. It is the only preventive and cure of pimples blackheads, red, rough and oily skin, red, rough hands, with shapeless nails, dry, thin and falling hair, and simple baby blemishes, because the only preventive of inflammation and clogging of the pores, the cause of minor affections of the skin, scalp and hair.

Cuticula

CUTICURA SOAP

Derives its remarkable purifying and beautifying properties from Cuticura, the great Skin Cure; but so delicately are they blended with the purest of toilet and nursery soap stocks, that the result is incomparably superior to all other skin and complexion soaps, while rivaling in delicacy and surpassing in purity the most expensive of toilet and nursery soaps. Hence for summer rashes, tan, sunburn, freckles, and bites and stings of insects, it is the best in the world. Sale greater than the combined sales of all other skin and complexion soaps.

SUMMER HUMORS OF INFANCY

When the pores open freely, is the time of all others to cure heat humors, itching and burning eczemas, scaly and blotchy eruptions, and every species of torturing and disfiguring skin and scalp diseases, with loss of hair. At no other time are the celebrated Cuticura Remedies so speedy, effective and economical.

BELLEVICE CONTROL POLICE

THE PROPERTY OF THE PARTY OF TH

It is the season of all others to forever cleanse the blood, skin, and scalp of all impurities and hereditary elements, which, if neglected, may become life-long afflictions. Parents, think of this. Save your children years of physical and mental suffering by reason of torturing and disfiguring humors and diseases.

CUTICURA REMEDIES are sold throughout the world. Price, CUTICURA, the great Skin Cure, 50 cents; CUTICURA SOAP, 25 cents; CUTICURA RESOLVENT, the new Blood Purifier, $1.00. Prepared by the POTTER DRUG AND CHEMICAL CORPORATION, Boston.

"All About the Skin, Scalp and Hair," 64 pages, 300 diseases, illustrations and testimonials, mailed free.

THE LADIES' HOME JOURNAL

ONE DOLLAR A YEAR

PHILADELPHIA, SEPTEMBER, 1892

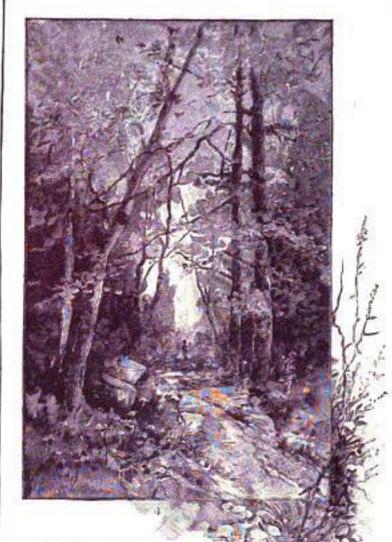

TEN CENTS A COPY

器 (ontents 器

-

|                                                                                                                    | -   |     |
|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----|-----|
| The Day After Summer-Poem Harrison S. Morris                                                                       | Con | ret |
| A Fair Fee                                                                                                         |     | 1   |
| Unknown Wives of Well-known Men-                                                                                   |     |     |
| XXI-MADAME ALEXANDRE DUMAS Lucy Hamilton Hooper                                                                    |     | 3   |
| A Law Firm of Women Laura Grover Smith                                                                             |     | 3   |
| Why Young Men Defer Marriage John Lambert Payne .                                                                  |     | 4   |
| Women and Life Insurance Walter H. Barrett                                                                         |     |     |
| A Live Ember-CHAPTERS IV-V fulia Magruder                                                                          | -   | 5   |
| Some Graceful Embroidery Designs . Mande Haywood  As Worked at the Chicago Society of Decorative Art With Haywoods |     | 7   |
| Between Mistress and Maid-                                                                                         |     |     |
| THE EVOLUTION OF THE HIRED GIRL . Harriet Prescott Spofford                                                        | 9   | 8   |
| WHO ARE OUR BEST SERVANTS? Mrs. Lyman Abbott                                                                       |     | 8   |
| UNTRUTHFULNESS OF SERVANTS Helen S. Conant                                                                         |     | 8   |
| RECOMMENDATION OF SERVANTS Christine Terhune Herrick                                                               |     | 8   |
| A Princess's Midnight Wolf Hunt Marquise de Fontenoy                                                               |     | 0   |
| Getting Home From the Country Helen Jay                                                                            |     | 9   |
| Pathways Through Life-Poem Emma C. Dourd                                                                           |     | 0   |
| Inconveniences of Growing Old Anonymous                                                                            |     | to  |
| A Model Husband-Poem Eleanor M. Denny                                                                              |     | 0   |
| The Care of the Hands Isabella M. Aitken                                                                           |     | 0   |
| The Brownies Through the Year-XII . Palmer Cox                                                                     |     |     |
|                                                                                                                    |     |     |

| reconstruction and a communication                  |    |
|-----------------------------------------------------|----|
| DEPARTMENTS                                         |    |
| At Home with the Editor                             |    |
| As Seen on English Shores T. De Witt Talmage, D. D. | 13 |
| The King's Daughters                                | 14 |
| From a New Inkstand Robert J. Burdette              | 15 |
| Side Talks with Girls                               |    |
| Side Talks with Boys Foster Coates                  |    |
| In Literary Circles                                 | 18 |
| WOMEN IN JOURNALISM Foster Coates                   |    |
| Art for Art Workers                                 |    |
| Hints on Home Dressmaking Emma M. Hooper            |    |
|                                                     |    |
| Dress Hints for Elderly Women                       | 22 |
| Crocheting as a Graceful Art-                       |    |
| A GRACEFUL QUEEN LACE Alice S. Luka                 | 23 |
| A CROCHETED CUSHION COVER Florence E. Lynne         |    |
| WIDE CLOVER LEAF LACE Lena Thatcher                 |    |
| Just Among Ourselves                                |    |
| Everything About the House Maria Parioa             |    |
| Mothers' Corner Elisabeth Robinson Scovil           |    |
| Advice to Doctors' Wives A Doctor's Wife            |    |
| All About Flowers                                   | 28 |
| Suggestions for Stenographers Nellie M. Hanby       |    |
| Questions and Answers                               |    |
|                                                     | 3- |

THE DAY

AFTER SUMMER

By HARRISON S. MORRIS

THE tented sheaves are on the hill; The furrow's hid in haze; The wind, it sets the stream achill, The ripened wood ablaze.

> A shower rattles on the leaves, And roads are rutted mire;

A sole belated singer grieves Within the blackened brier.

> Far off the curling fagot smoke Weaves tree-top into sky; And waves of sappy odor soak The winds that shiver by.

· (VRTIS · PUBLISHING · (OMPANY · PHILADELPHIA

100 In Cash Prizes!

VIES' HOME JOURNAL

THOUSAND DOLLARS

the largest list of Yearly subscriptions by January 1st, 1893.

HUNDRED DOLLARS

the second largest list of Yearly subscriptions by January 1st,

NDRED DOLLARS EACH

ing in the next three largest lists of Yearly subscriptions

DRED DOLLARS EACH

g in the next five largest lists of Yearly subscriptions by

DRED DOLLARS EACH

ig in the next twenty largest lists of Yearly subscriptions

DOLLARS EACH

in the next twenty targest lists of Yearly subscription

I be divided as indicated among the 50 persons sending bers at One Dollar each, between now and January 1st, wission which they earn (and retain) for every subscriber his cash commission write to us. winners of the Cash Prizes offered in our subscription

| Yearlyarrigitions | 50 DOLLARS                                    | EACH ,        | YearlyInheriptions |
|-----------------------|-----------------------------------------------|---------------|------------------------|
| . 678                 | to Mrs. F. T. Bidell                          | West Perginte | 2 . 140                |
|                       | II Miss S. A. Turner                          | Vermont       | . 130                  |
|                       | 12 Lizzie Cansidy                             | New Jersey    | 113                    |
|                       | 13 C. B. Tuttle                               | Kansar        | 115                    |
| 444                   | 14 Mrs. A. E. Hummel                          | Propagation   | . 100                  |
| 400                   | 15 E. R. Kelsey                               | Moonchusett   | , 103                  |
|                       | 16 Mins H. I. Sceley                          | Odlifornia .  | 100                    |
|                       | 16 Miss H. I. Sceley                          | Kansus        | 85                     |
|                       | 18 Miss S. A. Lacy                            | Connecticut   | 81                     |
| 242                   | 19 Effie A. Pattie                            | Texas         | 74                     |
| 252                   | so Sarah Kittridge                            | Mannehmeett   | 74                     |
|                    | at Miss E. C. Pope                            | Maryland .    | 64                     |
|                       | 22 Clara Lanum                                | Ohio          |                        |
|                       | 23 Flora Newly                                | Indiana .     | . 52                   |
|                       | 24 Chester Brown                              | l'ermouf .    | 51                     |
| 23                    | 25 Mrs. J. I. McCormick .                     | Physician     | . 53                   |
| 5.0                   | 26 Rev. E. W. Cummings                        | l'ermont      |                        |
| 17                    | 26 Rev. E. W. Cummings27 Mrs. T. J. Sherk | Minnesola .   | 50                     |
| 15                    | 38 Miss M. E. Terry                           | Ossmedient    | 50                     |
| 3                     | 29 Mrs. M. A. Ratliff                         | Ittinote      | - 5045             |
|                       |                                               |               |                        |

PUBLISHING COMPANY, Philadelphia, Pa.

We Give this Was You can have the Desk or Lamp FREE If you will buy one of our Combination Boxes of "Sweet Home" Soap and Toilet Articles, which we sell on trial too. You must have SOAP—It is an absolute necessity—the only question is where you shall buy it, we make it a decided object for you to buy of m—direct from factory to consumer, and save all middle-neet's and dealers' profits. Our Combination Our Combination Box costsins a large supply of the best Scaps and facet Tollet Articles made, and will give sel-isfaction to the most instruction to the most fastishous person. We have been manufacturing Soaps for over it years, and operate one of the largest and best equipped plants in this country, having a capacity of ten million pounds a year.

The "Chautauqua" Desk

Is a "thing of beauty" and will be "a joy forever" to all who possess one. It is artistically designed, complete in appointments, a model piece of furniture, and affords what nine out of ten hornes had-a suitable and convenient place for writing letters, studying, drawing, etc., etc., which will be used and appreciated by every member of the family. It is made of SOLID OAK, varnished and hond-pubbed finish, with brans trimmings. It stands five 13 feet high, is two and a half (250 feet wide and ten and a half (150) inches deep.

icep.

It is a perfect and complete desk, and also has three roomy sock shelves, a top shelf for brio-à-lene, seven pigeon holes or papers, compartments for letter paper, his, etc.

When pinced in your home, filled with books which you wine, and ornamented with the gifts of friends, it will secone a centre of attraction, and you will be graieful to us or adding a new pleasure to your life.

ORDER YOU RUN NO RISK.

We do not ask you to remit in advance, or take any chances. We merely ask permission to send you a male fall you are not satisfied in every way, no charge will be made for what you have used and we will take the box away at our own expense. HOW CAN WE DO MORE? If you want the Lamp instead of the Deek, state it in your order.

We can refer you to thousands of people who has Sweet Home Scap for many years and still order at intervals, also Bank of Paffalo, Bank of Commerce, I Henry Clews & Co., Bankers, New York; Metro National Pank, Chicago, or any other Banker in the States, Also R. O. Dun & Co., and the Bradstreet Co.

EACH BOX CONTAINS

EACH BOX CONTAINS

ONE HUNDRED CAKES (roll size) $6.00

"SWEET HOME" Family Soap, stough to last an average family one year. Has no superfor.

11 BOXES BORAXINE, a New and Wonderful Discovery! Cannot Possibly Injure the Fater. Simple—EssEfficient. In each package is a coupon for 10c, pagable to poorle-shorth in all
One Box (1-4 Doz.) Modjeska Complexion Soap.

It removes all roughness redness, blotches, pimples and imperfections from the face. Especially adapted for the nursery or children's use.

One Box (1-4 Doz.) Crease Borth Toilet Soap.

One Box (1-4 Doz.) Crease Ontmeal Toilet Soap.

One Box (1-4 Doz.) Elite Toilet
Soap.

One Box (1-4 Doz.) Elite Toilet Soap.

30
One English Jar Modjeska Cold

One English Jar Medieska Cold Cream, belightfully Pleasant, South-ing, Healing, Cures Chapped hands

One Battle Modieska Tooth Pow-der. Preserves the beeth, hardens the guest, sweetens the breath. One Packet Clove Pink Sachet Powder, hodsed, Lasting. One Stick Napoleon Shaving Sonp

Price of Articles if Bought Separately, $11.00 Price of DESK if Bought of Dealer,

All for $10 YOU GET THE DESK GRATIS.

blished 1875. Incorporated 1892. Paid up Cash Capital, $500,000.

Over Ten Thousand persons who have used "Sweet Home" Soap for several years have become Stockholders in our Company. LARKIN SOAP MFG. CO.,

BUFFALO, N. Y. FACTORIES: Senera, Heacock Carrol Streets.

Girls

······

Do you Sing

and would you like a full course of the best vocal training absolutely free of expense?

Do you Play

***********************

the piano, organ or violin? and need a complete course of instruction at the leading Conservatory of the country?

Do you Paint or Draw

or want to learn clay modeling under the best teachers, with expenses paid?

You can find out how to do it by sending name and address to

> THE CURTIS PUBLISHING COMPANY Philadelphia, Pa.

THE LADIES' HOME JOURNAL

Vol. IX, No. 10

PHILADELPHIA, SEPTEMBER, 1892

Yearly Subscription, One Dollar Single Copies, Ten Cents

"Good night; God bless you, my dear."

A FAIR FEE

A Story: By Cornelia Rathbone

LVENHOOK was small, but then its quality was unexceptionable, it was so Dutch, so conservative, so eminently aristocratic. Not eminently aristocratic. Not that it was, by any means, on one dead level of respectability. Being a town it had its depths, which respectability respectably ignored, and its heights, beside which, in Wolvenhook's eyes, the heights of other towns seemed as though they were not. In High Street the king peak was reached; there respectability culminated. Enough blue blood coursed in its two short blocks to impurple the red of a thriving western town; every door plate bore its Van, or Ten, or well-bred hyphen suggestive of Revolutionary grandsires. Its very name gave evidence of honorable old age, for many a year must have passed since it was, in reality, the high street of the town. It had, indeed, only set foot upon the hill, up which the younger, high street of the town. It had, indeed, only set foot upon the hill, up which the younger, less dignified streets had swiftly run, leaving the old one far behind, fow down in all save name. The old people behind its antique door plates smiled as they watched the upward narch. "It is all very well for new people," they said, "but we are too old for that sort of thing."

It was a trifle inconvenient, perhaps, to be calle away from the center of things; but the ranjority were possessed of comely bays to bear them thither, if need be, and the few whose chiefest wealth lay in ancestors went cheerfully afoot, supported, doubtless, by the consciousness of this buried treasure. When consciousness of this buried treasure. When this unsubstantial prop failed to strengthen the feeble knees, they stayed cheerfully at home, and viewed the world from an upper window. Mrs. Van Vier, at the lower end, swept the street indefatigably from a griev-ously modern but convenient "bay," and Mrs. Clinton-Cone, with the aid of a skillfully placed reflector, was equally at home with the upper end's affairs.

upper end's affairs.

But upon all High Street's otherwise untarnished respectability and antiquity there was one blot. In the very heart of it, check by jowl with Mrs. Clinton-Cone, face to face with Miss Susan Van Droop, lived a person called Davis, a person without ancestors! Worse offence still, however, this person had a son, an equally ancestorless son, with whom Elsic, sole daughter of the house of Cnyler, had taken it into her very independent, very American little head to fall in love.

The son, Bob by name, was junior partner in the law firm of Clark, Fraly & Davis, and was regarded by the world outside High Street as a very brilliant and rising young jurist. Davis pere did something in iron, car wheels or kettles, High Street was uncertain which It was quite clear, however, as to the original old Davis, who had married a nobody with money, bought the Birck house, heaven knows why, and died there. He had been a grocer—a retail grocer! To be sure, so had the Van Kleeks, and the Cuylers themselves; but then note the difference! For them it was a descent, a brief, necessary adjustment of new settlers to new environments; but to the a descent, a brief, necessary adjustment of new settlers to new environments; but to the Davis's it was a rise, the grocer having begun life, it was said, as a peddler, and Mrs. Clinton-Cone, that handbook of useful information, even shook her bead a little dubiously at that. But, in spite of all this, Elsie fell in love with Bob Davis.

Davis pere did something in iron, car wheels

How it all came about nobody knew. It was, in fact, a very old affair, dating back to the days when Bob, just out of knickerbockers, had drawn little Miss Cuyler up the hill from school on his sled some dozen times or so. This being told mamma, was promptly put a stop to; and Elsie, with hot cheeks and flashing eyes, told Bob of the prohibition.

"I can't play with you any more, Bob, and just because my mother doesn't know yours."

"She can't" said Roh

"She can't," said Bob, roughly. "Mother's dead," "Well, any way, I can't play with yon," said Elsle, with a little choke in her voice, "but I don't care, you're the nicest boy in the street, I don't care what they say, and Fil love you always."

And Bob then and there registered a vow in his boyish heart to serve for his true little love, if need be, as Jacob served for Rachel, but to win ber in the cod.

"Don't cry, Elsie," he said,
"I'll make 'em let us be friends some time, see if I don't!" and then in the slindow of the old church porch they kissed one another -think of it! a peddler's guindson and a daughter of the house of Cuyler! — and Elsie gave Bob the bine ribbon from her curls, and Bob slip-ped his desirest treasure, a pocket compass, into Elsie's hand, and then they said

After that there had been no more sied rides, no more talks by the churchyard corner; but there had been smiles of recognition and stolen glances sweet as the forbidden always is, and growing sweeter and shyer as the years slipped by.

It was not until at Elsie's first dinner party, however, that they really met again. The dinner was given by Mrs. Martin, one of the hill people. Direk Bognert had taken Elsie in, and when she summoned courage to lift her eyes from her oysters she found Bob Davis on her other hand.

on her other hand.
"Miss Chyler, you know Mr. Davis, of course," said her hostess, leaning forward a

"Oh, yes," said Elsic, shyly,
"I am not quite forgotten, then?" asked

Bob.
"Of course not," said Elsie, flushing a lit-ile, "one can hardly forget one's near neigh-lors, Mr. Davis."
"You don't wear blue now," said Bob, smiling.

"Blue is childish," said Elsie.

"I like it, though," said Bob.
Then they talked of the roses, of Mrs. Murrien they talked of the roses, of Mrs. Mur-tin's charming new candle shades, of the last play, of Mrs. Wendell Carter's novel. "I have that bow of blue ribbon still, Miss Cuyler," said Bob suddenly. Elsie laughed a little, and flushed again. "I think I have the compass put away some-where "the said."

Elsie laughed a little, and flushed again. "I think I have the compass put away somewhere," she said.

"Of course you will be at Mrs. Fenton's dance on Tuesday," broke in Dirck Bognert,

"It was a delightful dinner," Elsie told her mamma. Dirck Bognert had taken her in; she had so enjoyed it! Mrs. Cuyler smiled; she approved of Dirck.

After this these two inconsequent young people met frequently, Bob having been taken up enthusiastically by the hill set. Before the winter was over the little blue bow was no longer alone in its hiding place; a glove, a faded rose, a dainty note or two kept it company there. But by that time Mrs. Clinton-Cone had discovered what was going on. She had spied two figures loitering homeward through the dusk; she had seen a lingering hand-clasp as they parted at the steps; she had enught unwary glances thrown at Elsie's window pane. Small things, but quite enough for Mrs. Clinton-Cone, who by long practice had become an adept at putting two and two together. Consequently a sudden quiver stirred the High Street air; somebody had whispered; little thrills of excitement began to run along the stately brick and marble fronts; the very names upon the door plates shuddered.

Mrs. Clinton-Cone's next "Thursday" was crowded. Her tea cost not a penny over forty shuddered.

Mrs. Clinton-Cone's next "Thursday" was crowded. Her tea cost not a penny over forty cents the pound, and skim milk masqueraded as cream in the old silver jugs, but her Thursdays were always popular. She presided so charmingly behind the Queen Anne silver, and the Lowestoft cups, in her beirloom-filled, relic lined drawing-room; and then there was always a tasty dish of gossip served with the thin brend and butter, which more than compensated for the weak tea.

Elsie farmished the relish to-day, and the excitement waxed farious. Mrs. Clinton-Cone sighed, with raised eyebrows: "Of course, it is lamentable," she said, as always apologizing for her victim in her gentle, purring way, "but perhaps the poor child is hardly so much to blame, after all. You know, I believe so strongly in heredity, and we all know that—well, that she can't be expected to look at things in quite the same way that we do, perliage. Can she, Miss Susan?"

Miss Van Droop flushed a little at this, and electroned by temporary are of liage. Can she, Miss Susan?"

Miss Van Droop flushed a little at this, and clattered her teaspoon nervously by way of response. One or two of the ladies smiled.

"Mr. Davis is a very nice young man, I've heard," said Miss Van Droop at last in a small, timid voice, "and if they love each other, poor young things, think how said for them."

"Dear Miss Susan is always so tender-hearted!" purred Mrs. Clinton-Cone.

"Oh, to indeed, no," said Miss Van Droop, deprecatingly, "but one can't help feeling sorry, I think," Miss Van Droop sighed softly as she rose to leave,

"What is it about Miss Van Droop?" whispered a little débutante. "I saw Mrs. Van Vliet laughing."

"Oh, it was long before your day," said Mrs. Clinton-Cone. "Susan was in love with this young Davis' father, that's all; it was stopped, of course. Mrs. Van Droop wasn't one to stand that sort of thing, but they say that Susan has never got over it."

Miss Van Droop, menuwhile, had reached her own door, and pulled its shining bell handle.

"Matilda," she said as she entered, "there her own door, and pulled its siming orn handle.

"Matilda," she said as she entered, "there is such a pretty little fellow out here with a fiddle: I wish you would get me my purse."

"Miss Susan, you know your ma wouldn't have no beggars encouraged," said the grim handlmaiden severely. "Sit down now, till I take off your rubbers."

"Thank you, Matilda," said Miss Van Droop meekly.

meekly.

She went slowly up the stairs to her room and shut the door; Matilda's heavy footsteps died away; then a door in the nether regions slammed—Matilda always slammed doors, slammed them aggressively; it was her way of saying amen to the Declaration of Independence.

doors, slammed them aggressively; it was her way of shying amen to the Declaration of Independence.

Quickly and cautiously Miss Van Droop mised the window sush; the little fiddler had not yet finished his tune, a sweet, old-fashioned one! How often Miss Van Droop had samg it in the old days! That hat happy evening at the Stanton's—how he had praised her singing of it! She had enught his eye as she sang, she remembered, and afterward he had thanked her and pressed her hand.

"Give me back, give me back the wild freshness of morning!" squeaked the little old fiddle from below.

Miss Van Droop cast one quick glance over her shoulder at the door; then a silver piece rang on the pavement at the fiddler's feet, and Miss Van Droop, with the window shut, stood before the dressing table, furnishing hurriedly with her bonnet strings.

When the bonnet strings.

When the bonnet with its strings neatly rolled and pinned, was replaced in its box, and the camel's hair shawl folded away in the brass-bound camplior chest, Miss Van Droop drew her chair close to the fire and sank into its cozy depths. She was not cold, but the fire, with its cheery crackle, had a sociable, living sound, and Miss Van Droop was lonely. This story about Elsie Cuyler had brought back the past so clearly, it seemed almost as if it were her own story she had been hearing the safternoon. "I wonder if it will end like mine!" she thought. She shuddered, and poked the fire to make it crackle londer; but, in spite of the fire, it felt londy in the big, quiet house. She thought of Elsie; of her

"It does seem to me too ridiculous that I can't marry whom I please."

gay, andacious speeches, her pretty little wil-fulnesses, her tender, caressing ways. Would she, too, sit alone by and by and make the fire crackle to drown the crying of her empty heart? Ah, Elsie, she told herself, was made of sterner stuff than she had been. Then Miss Van Droop, with the little fiddler's time ringing in her cars, stole away from the fire, and came back with a letter in her band. She read it slowly, with dim eyes, which had faded, too; and when she had read it she kissed it softly.

The old clock on the mantel shelf broke and long into her dreaming. Half-read five!

suddenly into her dreaming. Half-past five!
Miss Van Droop startet. Hidden by the heavy window hangings she peered out furtively through the meshes of the stiff lace curtains. Yes; there he came, he was always tively through the meshes of the stiff lace curtains. Yes; there he came, he was always so punctual, a tall, erect figure, stepping firmly and lightly in spite of his white hair and his sixty years. He mounted the steps, fambling for his latch-key as he went; and Miss Van Droop watched him through the curtain meshes, with his love letter clasped tightly in her hand. For thirty years she had watched thus for Robert Davis' home-coming. Was it thirty years? Thirty years since the day when, obedient to her mother's command, she had looked her lover in the face and passed on broken-heurted. Thirty years! It seemed like yesterday.

Miss Van Droop turned away and laid the letter back in its place with tender hands.

By and by she smoothed the soft bands of her faded hair, which had been so bright a gold thirty years ago, and went down and took her place in the gloomy dining-room, where the shaded caudles made little circles of light on the polished malnogany, and gleamed softly on antique glass too old to sparkle, and brought into light the Van Droop crest on the rare old silver tea service. For company she lead Matilda, standing grim and silvent behind rare old silver tea service. For company she test Matilda, standing grim and silent behind her chair.

After tea Miss Van Droop sat with her work in the drawing-room. She was knitting a little jacket for a consin's child. Then being restless to-night, she opened the pinne, and played a little, touching the yellow keys lightly. It was quaint, old music that she played, full of turns and quavers and trills. There were gavottes and minuels, and simple, tender airs with many ingenious variations. She played them with much precision and carefulness, in a delicate, old-fashioned style which somehow seemed to suit the old music. Then faintly and uncertainly her fingers felt their way into the air the little fiddler had played that afternoon; and very softly, in a thin, cracked voice, which yet sounded like the faraway echo of something very sweet, Miss Van Droop sang the old song again: Droop sang the old song again:

"Each wave that we denced on at morning ebbs from us, And leaves us at eve on the bleak shore alone."

And leaves in at eve on the bleak shore alone."

she sang; and then the old voice trembled and failed, and Miss Van Droop shut the plane lid, and turned the light out, and went up through the darkness to bed. But first she looked across again to the house opposite, where the light shone still: "Good night," she whispered, "God bless you, my dear."

In a palm-screened corner of Mrs. Martin's great ball-room Bob and Elsie were gloomily facing the future.

facing the future.

"You are quite sure it has got about?" asked Bob for the twentieth time.

"Sure! why, haven't people been shouting it out within an inch of my ears all the even-ing, as if I were a wax-work in the Eden Musée! Mrs. Clinton-Cone will be over by to-morrow to condole with mamma. Heavens knows why she hasn't been before—she must knows why she hasn't been before—she must have had an attack of something."

"There's nothing for it, then, but to see your father in the morning," said Bob, gloomily.

"There couldn't be a worse time," said Eisie. "He's so put out about that law-suit of his; there's a hitch somewhere, and yesterday be heard that his lawyer, Mr. Buel, was ill, and couldn't conduct the case; he's in a terrible way about it."

"It's a great pity about Buel," said Bob.

"They are afraid it is softening of the brain. It was sad news to me, for he's been a first-rate friend of mine, the dear old man! I have always thought, though, that he took the wrong view as regards that man Hatch. I suppose that is where the hitch you speak of comes in."

"Why, what do you know about it?"

"Why, what do you know about it?"
"Well, the truth is, I have been working up the case a little on my own hook," said Bob.
"It is rather out of the ordinary run, and interested me, and then, in a way, it was your case, you see. Buel and I have talked it over several times. I told him I thought he was wrong about Hatch." "This suit has been father's one thought for years, almost," said Elsie. "I don't know what he will do now, I'm sure."

"Well, I'll see him to-morrow," said Bob.
"It won't be a hit of use," sighed Elsie, "Oh Bob, if I could only give you a few dozen of noy grandfathers! Goodness knows I don't want them! It does seem to me too ridiculous that I can't marry whom I please, just because a hundred years ago some Cuyler or other founded the family—as they call it! Just as if he had popped up ready made like a mush-room! It is as had as belonging to a reigning house! I suppose nobody would object if I sup gested marrying your great-great-grandson! Oh-dear, why didn't that Cuyler die young and leave us unfounded!"

Elsie made her absurd little speech with a

"Can't you see me at fifty, Bob," slee said,
"Can't you see me at fifty, Bob," slee said,
"prim and faded, and mildly dejected, with a taste for ten, and goesip, and good works; and not even a cat for company, for I hate the slight of them! Can't you see me, Bob?"
"You will be not dear wife here before that "You will be my dear wife long before that, please God!" said Bob, taking both of Elsie's hands in his. And there was so much quiet determination in his tone that she felt quite comforted.

"I vowed as a boy that I'd win you." went on Bob, "and win you I will, if you'll only be true to me, Elsie."

"Bob," said Elsie, "I can't promise to marry you without their consent, but I'll love you, and I'll wait for you all my life, dear."

It is an easy thing to vow vows. Nothing is simpler—an impulse, a breath and it is done but oh, the keeping of them! Out of the mighty multitude of glowing young hearts who swear to set the world aftre, how many, think you, ever light anything at all save their bed-room candle.

Bob had sworn, glibly and hopefully enough, to win his true love in spite of all the old Dutchmen, living and dead. It was easy to be hopeful while music throbbed and swayed, be hopeful while music throbbed and swayed, and his sweetheart was at his side; but later, when the lights were out, and the music silent, and his sweetheart a block away, things assumed a different aspect. Win her? Yes! in that resolution he never faltered, but a great impassable How rose up before him, and blocked the way. Night, however, brings counsel, and when Hob finally turned in, though his head indeed was a whirl of chaotic ideas, light beamed over chaos: the reserver of ideas, light beamed over chaos; the creation of ideas, light beamed over chaos; the creation of his plan was begun.

"Are you training for a walking match, Bob?" said his father at breakfast, "You kept me awake half the night tramping over my head. Next time you have a troublesome case, my son, do, at least, in mercy to me, take your boots off. Was it a troublesome case, by the way, or a bad conscience?"

"Neither," said Bob; "it was a troubled mind this time. The fact is, father, I'm going to be married."

"Well, you're frank at least, and certainly there is something refreshingly sudden about you, Bob! When is it to be? To-morrow?"

"In about twenty-five years, father, I should think," said Bob, gloomily.

"I'm glad you give one time to get used to the idea," laughed Mr. Davis. "You quite took my breath away. Who is she, my boy."

"It is Elsie Cuyler, father," said Bob.
Mr. Davis sprang to his feet.

Mr. Davis sprang to his feet.

"Look here, my son, haven't you more pride than to let one of that family play the fool with you? A girl with no more heart—no more truth—"

"Don't father, please," interrupted Bob. "I "Don't father, please," interrupted Bob. "I can't let even you say a word against her."

"But Bob, my boy," stammered Mr. Davis,
"I tell you I know what they are! They are all alike, root and branch—they are all alike—bearless and false: I ought to know; I suffered enough at their hands!"

"Not Elsie, father," interrupted Bob again.

"And prouder than Lucifer."

"But not Elsie," said Bob.
Mr. Davis groaned.

"Now, my dear old father," said Bob, throwing his arm caressingly over his father's shoul-

"Now, my dear old father," said Bob, throwing his arm caressingly over his father's shoulder, "nothing you can say will shake my faith in her. She has the pluck to stand out against any Cuyler or Van Droop living. Her cousin was weak as water, poor thing. Elsie says it broke her heart,"

"Pooh!" exclaimed Mr. Davis contemptuously. "She had none to break! Well," he went on with a sigh, "have your own way, Bob. I won't stop you if you think you are right. I don't see how you are going to get her, though."

right. I don't see now you me her, though."

"I've got a hit of a plan in my head," said Bob. "I'm going down to see Buel about it."

"Broke her heart, did it," muttered Davis Senior, giancing across at the house opposite, when Bob had left him.

The immediate result of Bob's visit to Mr.

Buel was two notes. One, addressed to Peter Cuyler, Esquire, City Buildings, Wolvenhook, was as follows:

"DEAR CUYLER: Come to my house if you can some time citier to-day or to-morrow; I am forbidden the office. I want to see you about the suit. Robert L. Davis, of Clark, Fraly & the suit. Robert L. Davis, of Clark, Fraly & Davis, has just been in, and he struck me as just the man to take it. He has the whole case at his fingers' ends, followed it at the trial, and has been studying it up independently ever since, it seems. I verily believe he has hit on a solution of the Hatch difficulty—cleverest thing I ever heard. I don't think you could get anybody better to enrry the case up for you. He is young of course, but his you could get anybody better to carry the case up for you. He is young, of course, but his law is sound, and he is wonderfully keen, and a brilliant speaker. If you think well of it, I will have him meet you here at any time you name. I am off early in May, so the sooner something is settled the better.

"Yours very truly, J. J. Buzz."

The other note ran :

MY LITTLE SWEETHEART: Just a line to "HY LITTLE SWEETHEART: Just a line to tell you that I shall not see your father this morning, after all. I have a new plan which I will explain to you to-night at the Freemans'. Meantime suppress Mrs. Clinton-Cone. Until to-night, my darling.

"Hastily, but ever faithfully, Bon."

While Free and All Property and Bakey.

While Elsie was still poring over Bob's note, she was hastily summoned to her mother's room, where she found Mrs. Cuyler in tears, a telegram in her hand. "Your mother's room, where she loubd arts, Cuyler in tears, a telegram in her hand. "Your grandmanma, my dear, your poor, dear grand-mamma," sobbed Mrs. Cuyler. "Your Uncle Richard has just telegraphed me to come at once—and I'm afraid it is the end. She is so old; ninety-five her last birthday."

Whereupon Elsie, although her grandmam-ma had known neither her, nor any one else, for ten years, was quite conscience-stricken to find that her keenest feeling was one of rejoicing in that her mother for a time at least would be out of the reach of Mrs. Clinton-Cone's tongue.

You can just eatch the twelve-thirty train, manuma dear, if you hurry," she said. Immediately all was bustle and confusion in the Cuyler household.

Just as the footman was putting Mrs. Cay-ler's traveling bag in the carriage. Elsie, glancing out of the window, saw Mrs. Clinton-Cone standing on her doorstep. "She is coming!" thought Elsie, with a sinking at her heart.

sinking at her heart.

"Dear mamma, you will lose your train!"
she cried; and straightway she hustled slow, stout Mrs. Cuyler, breathless, but still expostulating, bodily down the stairs.

"Take the telegram over to your coasin "Take the telegram over to your consingment," Mrs. Cuyler managed to gasp, stopping on the steps, "she is the eldest grand-child. She might want to go down."

"Yes, yes, manuna," cried Klaie, "but indeed you haven't a minute to lose!"

And just as Mrs. Clinton-Come reached the curbstone, the carriage rolled rapidly away.

"What an escape!" gasped Elsie, sinking exhausted into a clair, "In another minute she would have successed driving down with exhausted into a chair, "In another minutes she would have suggested driving down with mamma—I am positive she would. Poor mamma," she added with a little tardy computetion, "I hope she won't have very long to wait at the station!"

That afternoon Elsie obediently carried the telegram over to Miss Van Droop, whom she found by the drawing-room first, knitting a boby jacket, with a volume of Mrs. Hemans' poems propped open before her.

"I am disturbing your reading, I am afraid," and Klaje.

"I am disturbing your reading, I am afraid," said Klaie.

"Oh, I wasn't reading, my dear," said Miss Van Droup. "I was just committing a little; it makes the time pass, and when I repeat alond it seems quite like company, you know. Yes; it is Mrs. Hemans to-day; you see I am on a jacket. Cowper goes with socks, and Longfellow with mittens, and then I have Moore for wash-rags, and Byron for shawls, and Sundays it is usually Night Thoughts. I think variety is nice, don't you? I used to take the Kings of England and French verbs when I was younger, but it doesn't seem worth when I was younger, but it doesn't seem worth while for me to learn anything now, so I indulge myself, and I don't think it is really wasting time, for you see I knit all the while."
"Poor Cousin Susan!" said Elsie, gently laying Miss Van Droop's thin hand caressingly against her soft, fresh check.
The little was mean your extend to Miss.

The little caress was very grateful to Miss Van Droop, for she received so few of them nowadays. She kept Elsie's hand in hers and smoothed it softly as she spoke.

"I wanted to say something to you, my dear," she said. "Of course you know I would not counsel anyone to say against a parent's not counsel anyone to go against a parent's wishes. Oh, never, never, my dear; that would be a dreadful thing! I never could have would be a dreaded thing! I never conid have brought myself to do quite that, not quite to disobey, but sometimes I have thought if I had only been firmer perhaps I might have won them; but I was always weak and easily ruled. I got thinking the other day, what if you ever came to be like me, and so I couldn't help speaking; you'll excuse me, won't you, my dear. People say you get over heart ache, but I don't think you always do. Perhaps you get over the ones God sends, but if you hurt your own heart, Elsie, I think the hurt always stays. So I wanted to say to you, don't always stays. So I wanted to say to you, don't do anything you can blame yourself for by and by; it is bad enough to be old and lonely, but to have something always in your heart to be sorry about is worse. And, my dear, I think it would be cetter to throw away anything else in the world than love. I threw it away, and so I know. And Elsie, I should so like to feel that you would make up for it somehow— I'd— I'd like to think his son—"

And then Miss Van Droop broke down, and Elsie drew her into her strong young arms and comforted her; and by and by they talked softly and shyly about Elsie's love story, and Miss Van Droop and it made her very happy to hear about Robert's bey; and she flushed a little as she said the name.

Bob threw himself heart and soul into the study of the intricate, puzzling case, which study of the intricate, puzzling case, which had dropped from Mr. Buel's failing hands into his strong grasp.

The case at the time of its first trial had made quite a stir in the legal world. Consequently, could be only lay his finger on the weak spot which he felt existed in the enemy's defenses, and succeed in reversing the decision of the court, his name was made. He would of the court, his name was made. The woods then, he felt, be in a position where he could more confidently urge upon Mr. Cayler the re-quest for his daughter's hand.

The case was put down for the following October, and until then it was decided to keep Elsie's parents in ignorance, if possible, of

Elsie's parents in ignorance, if possible, of their daughter's revolt against family tra-

'It isn't exactly like deceiving them, you know," said Elsie, somewhat casuistically.
"It isn't as if we were going to see each other all the time; as long as we aren't there certainly can be no use in making everybody unbappy."

"No use at all," said Bob decidedly. "Of course, I would rather fight it out fair and square. I hate concealment and all that, but when it comes to fighting a lot of ghostly grandfathers, why, I don't see that there is anything for it but to meet them on their own ground, as it were."

Fate had consained with these young lovers.

Fate had conspired with these young lovers to keep their secret from parental ears. Mrs. Cuyler after her mother's death decided not to return to Wolvenhook, but to have Elsie join her, and to go across immediately to England for a few months rest and change. Mrs. Clin-ton-Cone, therefore, had found no opportunity to enlighten Mrs. Cuyler as to those tell-tale glances and hand-clasps.

This was to be the last meeting before Elsie sailed. They had strolled away together in the spring sunshine under the soft feathery elm branches, through the sweet fresh springtime sounds and odors. Everything them thrilled and throbbed with life, and gladness; and their hearts thrilled too, in

Two days later Bob, with a sudden tightening at his heart, read Elsie's name in the pus senger list of the "Gallin." He wendered He wondered whether she had known his roses by the blue ribbon that thed them; and then in his strong, true faith, he smiled a little to see her mother's favorite. Direk Bognert's name mother's favorite, Direk Bognert's name among the rest.

"As if, God bless her, I wouldn't trust her with a dozen Dirck Bogaerts," he said. In six months, when his case had at last been reached and heard, Mr. Chyler followed to fetch his family home. Pending the de-cision of the court, he burried off, and almost before the roll of the sea was out of his head had started back with them. By the time had started back with them. By the time they reached home the decision would be known and the suspense over.

Bob had fought his fight well, and had made two or three telling points in his argument. One of the wise, siken-robed judges had leaned toward his neighbor and whispered laconically—"Brains?" Little they thought those learned men, sitting so solemnly behind their carved cak screens, that romance was masqueuding before them in legal array; that a bride as well as a decision was being asked at their hands.

that a bride as well as a decision was being asked at their hands.

There was one old Judge, however, who knew. He looked down from out the carried paneling of the court room wall; fortunately for his would-be grandson, however, a hard coat of varnish scaled his lips.

His son, however, had nothing but smiles for his young lawyer, and when he learned that the great case had been decided in their favor, his enthusiasm knew no bounds.

"My dear fellow!" he cried. "What a triumph!"

"I am glad to have been of service to you,"

I am glad to have been of service to you," said Bob, and after awhile he named the price of that service.

"The fee I ask is possibly an unusual one." he said. "But you have been good enough to speak of my services as having been of great value to you."

"Eh?" interrupted Mr. O.

"Eh?" interrupted Mr. Cuyler sharply,
"Your kind appreciation, therefore, embolders me," went on Bob undisturbed, "as does my knowledge of the importance of this decision to you

M. Cuyler fldgeted nervously,

"And leads me to hope that you will not think my demand unreasonably great." "Well, well, out with it! You make as much preamble as though you were asking for a cool thousand!"

thousand!" said Bob contemptuously, "That is a good joke! That decision worth the great sum of a thousand dollars to you!
Or perhaps you meant pounds, being just over from England. That is a good joke!" he said pleasantly. "However, I'll get to the point.
Mr. Cuyler, I ask us my few your damabtee's Mr. Cuyler, I ask as my fee your daughter's hand."

"What, sir!" eried Mr. Cuyler, his red face aflame, "You—you—!"
"I have loved her all my life," said Bob.
"I have loved her all do you dare tell me!" "You—you nobody! do you dare tell me!" stammered Mr. Cuyler, fairly speechless with Bob bent over the peppery old gentleman, holding him down in his chair with one strong, young arm, and looking him full in the eyes.

"Now, Mr. Cuyler, listen to me," he said quietly. "Marry your daughter I will, either with your engent or without it as you clease. quietly. "Marry your daughter I will, either with your consent, or without it, as you please. I will take your consent as my fee. If you refuse it I must, of course, express my demand in pounds, shillings and pence; and I warm you I shall not insult your daughter by naming a pultry sum as her equivalent. I shall then, as I said, marry her without the cossent you refuse. I swear I will. You have your choice. Don't answer me now—take till tomorrow to decide; talk it over with Elsie, Possibly you may conclude that to accept my proposition will be the wisest and pleasantest arrangement that you can make, as it certainly is the best from a financial point of view."

"You are a clever young dog! I'll say that for you," funed Mr. Coyler.

"Thank you, sir," said Bob pleasantly, "Think over my suggestion, will you! Good

"Think over my suggestion, will you! Good That evening the Cayler's man-servant ac-that evening the Chyler's man-servant ac-tually went up the Davis' steps and pulled the Davis' bell handle. Mrs. Clinton-Cone saw him do it. He left a note, which Bub-tore open breathlessly and kissed a dozen times. Mrs. Clinton-Cone was terribly aginated. She hungered and thirsted after the knowledge of what that note contained.

She bungered and thirsted after the knowledge of what that note contained.

"Oh Bob. dear Bob," it said, "it's all right—they have given their consent at last, and I am so happy! Come over at once; they are expecting you. Don't look for an over-cordial welcome, though. I have tried to impress upon them that 'the Lord loveth a cheerful giver,' but it doesn't seem to affect them. There has been a hattle royal, but we have won the day, and nothing else matters—and oh Bob—I love you—love you—love you.

"Yours forever. Easie."

And so, when spring came, there was a wedding in High Street over which discussion waxed fast and furious. All the matrons shook their heads, and all the maidens appanded. The presents were, of course, superb, Direk Boguert sent a diamond star. Mrs. Clinton-Cone herself sent a lovely set of dear little devotional books, bound in white veilum, with such a sweet note. with such a sweet note.

The wedding itself was very much like all weddings, except that perhaps the bride prettier than some brides are, and that the bridegroom looked more radiantly triumphant.

bridgeroom looked more radiantly triumphant.
Miss Van Broop came, of course, looking almost young and pretty again, in the dainty little bonnet whose purchase Elsie herself had superintended. She cried a little when she kissed the bride. "This nakes me so happy, my dear!" she said. Good, unselfish, little Miss Van Broop! And then, with the tears still in her eyes, she kissed Bob, too.
Mr. Davis felt lonely that night, after the

Mr. Davis felt lonely that night, after the wedding was over and the happy pair gone; there was an empty feeling about the house. There was an empty being arout the house.
"I shall miss the boy terribly!" he said, wandering restlessly to and fro. By and by be drew up the shade and looked out into the night. There was a light in the bouse apponight. There was a light in the house apposite. He whistled softly as he stood there— he whistled the tune very badly, but it was a pretty old tune. By and by he broke off and sighed—"So it broke her heart, did it!" he said softly. "Poor Sasie!"

And across the way Miss Van Droop in the darkness looked out from behind her custains darkness, looked out from behind her curtains and saw him standing there against the bright background of the room.

"Good night," she said, the tears streaming down over her faded cheeks. "Good night; God bless you, my dear,"

L-KNOWN

XXI — MADAME ALEXANDRE DUMAS

By Leey H. Hoopen

HERE is probably no literary man in France, whether dramatist, critic, or poet, whose influence in the world whose influence in the world of Parisian literature and art is as widespread and as fully recognized as is that of the younger Dumas. He is now somewhat over sixty years of age. His first great success in his career, "La Dame aux Camellias," produced at the Vaudeville, after delays and trials which came near driving the young author out of his senses.

driving the young author out of his senses, dates from 1852. Since that time he has known nothing but triumphs in his professional life.

He was already famous when he first made the acquaintance of the brilliant and beautiful woman who afterward became his wife. She was a Swede by origin, of an ancient and noble family, and her maiden name was Knoring. She was born in St. Petersburg, and her childhood and her girlhood were passed in that city.
She was still very young when an alliance was formed for her with the head and representative of the Narishkine family, a race closely allied to the Imperial house of Russia, whose founder long enjoyed the favor of the Empress Catherine the Great, and was created by her Viceroy of Poland. That sovereign desired to confer upon him the title of prince, but Narishkine refused the proffered honor after the style of the well-known motto of the de Robans: "Its king I cannot be; a prince I will not condescend to be! I am a Roban." But the descendants of the haughty Viceroy are generally called princes by courtesy.

MADAME DEMAS

The young Princess Narishkine soon became known throughout the Russian empire as one of the loveliest women in Europe. Her neck and shoulders were of statuesque perfection, her complexion dazzlingly fair, and her eyes, of that greenish-blue color which is so peculiar and so rare, were not only remarkable in colorfounder long enjoyed the favor of the Empress that greenish-bitte color which is so peculiar and so rare, were not only remarkable in color-ing, but were large and brilliant, and sligudar-ly expressive. Her magnificent golden hair was one of the noted elements of her beauty. She joined to her personal charms those of a bril-liant intellect, varied accomplishments and great force of character. Moreover, she was one of the most elegant of the noble ladies that adorned the Russian court—a great halp in the fullest accompany of these of a beauty in the fullest acceptance of that oft-abused

Notwithstanding this remarkable combina-Notwithstanding this remarkable combina-tion of attractive qualities, the young Princess falled to find the happiness she deserved in her early married life. Prince Narishkine soon westried of a wife who was intellectually so much his superior, and, as he was addicted to excessive brandy drinking, active unkind-ness speedily followed upon pussive neglect. It is said that "Ouida" drew from him the character of "Prince Zouroff," in her novel of "Moths," while his charming wife was the original of the "Princess Vera," in the same work. It is certain that in this instance the fiction and the facts bear a close resemblance fiction and the facts bear a close resemblance to each other.

But, more fortunate than the beroine of that But, more fortunate that the arrangement powerful tale, the Princess Narishkine was still young when also was left a widow with one child, a little daughter. She was living in Paris at the time of her husband's death. He left his affules in such confusion that the in-heritance of his daughter was in danger of being seriously compromised. The Princess returned to Russia, took the management of the involved estates into her own hands, and the involved estates into her own hands, and succeeded in evolving order out of chaos, and in rescuing the imperiled fortune.

Her mission thus accomplished, she returned to Paris, and at the expiration of her period of mourning she became the wife of the most gifted French dramatist of the present generation. It is impossible to impost a project that tion. It is impossible to imagine a union that might be in all respects more congenial. Alexandre Dumas is not only a writer of won-derful power and originality, but he is in pri-vate life and in society one of the most charm-ing of men. He is declared to be the most brilliant conversationalist of Paris. His verdict concerning a book, a play, or a public performer, is considered as final. He is an art personner, is considered as man. He is an art connoisseur of remarkable intelligence and profundity, and in all his fine qualities, and in his tastes and pursuits as well, he has found an intelligent and appreciative companion in his wife. his wife.

This is especially the case in his work as a dramatist. Madame Alexandre Dumas al-ways took a deep interest in dramatic art, and was, during the days of her first marriage, an amateur actress of considerable talent. We amateur actress of considerable talent. We have a glimpse of her in her youth as one of the performers in private theatricals at the palace in Venice, which was the home of the Duchess de Berry (the mother of the Count de Chambord) during the later years of the exile of that Princess from France. By her very decided success the future Madame Dumas gave proof of a taste and a talent that pre-eminently fitted her for a union with the author of the most markling dramatic works eminently fitted her for a union with the author of the most sparkling dramatic works of the present day. She appeared, for instance, at one of these soirees in the character of "Madame de Bree," a young widow, in a comedietta by Messrs. Labiche and Melesville, called "Attentating Circumstances." Among the spectators that evening were numbered twenty-seven personages belonging to the royal or imperial families of Europe. The Duchess de Berry had caused an actual theater, capable of seating three hundred persons, to be constructed in her Venetian home, the Vendramini Palace, and gave therein a series of amateur performances of which the brilliant Russian was the acknowledged star. She was personally a great favorite with the Duchliant Russian was the acknowledged star. She was personally a great favorite with the Duchess, that ill-starred Princess who was intended by fate to become the Queen of France, and who would certainly have fulfilled her destiny had it not pleased Providence to make of the last of the Bourbon kings of France (Charles X) an absolute fool. Madame de Narishkine was then not quite twenty years of age, and was in the full bloom of her dazzling beauty. After her second marriage the charming and courted belle retired, to a great extent, from the whirl and excitements of the gay world to devote herself to her husband, her children and her home. She was a great favorite with devote herself to her husband, her children and her home. She was a great favorite with her famous father-in-law, and the author of "Monte Cristo" used to declare that if he needed a model for a fascinating society lady he would only have to describe his son's wife. Her second marriage was blessed with two daughters—Colette, now Madame Lipmann, and Jeannine, who was married rather more than a year ago to the Count d'Hauterive. Madame Lipmann has two little sons, in one or both of whom it is to be hoped that the hereditary genius of the Dumas family will be continued. Jeannine, who was named hereditary genius of the Dumas family will be continued. Jeannine, who was named by her father after the beroine of one of his best known dramatic works, "The Ideas of Madame Aubray," in her abounding gaiety and high spirits, her wit and her untiring vi-vacity, reproduces many of the traits of her paternal grandfather, while Colette, in man-ners and disposition, greatly resembles her father. Neither of these young ladies have inherited any portion of their mother's love-liness.

eldest daughter of Madame Dumas. The eldest daugnter of Managine Dubbas, M'ile Olga de Narishkine, married soon after her introduction into society, the Manquis de Faltans. Some few years ago Machame de Faltans was attacked with measles of a malignant and dangerous type. The infection spread to her hulf sister, Madame Lipmann, and af-terward to that lady's two little boys. Madame Dumas, who was devoted heart and soul to her children and her grandchildren, took upon berself the care of the invalids, and nursed and watched over them with untiring affection. From the anxiety and the exhaustaffection. From the anxiety and the exhausting fatigue of those long weeks she has never recovered. Her health was permanently shattered, and she no longer either receives visitors or goes out into society. She was present at the marriage of her youngest daughter, which took place at the family country-seat at Marly, but she was then visibly frail and suffering, and that was her last appearance before the gay world. She lives now in tranquil retirement in the handsome residence belongtirement in the handsome residence belong-ing to her husband, on the Avenue de Villiers, surrounded with every care and atten-tion that conjugal affection and filial devotion tion that conjugal affection and filial devotion can suggest. She passes her time in embrood-ering, in painting in water colors, and in perusing the best specimens of the literature of the day, for she is so accomplished a lin-guist that she can read and enjoy the writings of every prominent author in modern Europe. She has taken especial delight in reading the works of libera and of Tolstoi in their original tonems. She has born presented the writing tongues. She has long projected the writing of a life of Alexandre Dumas, but her delicate health will not suffer her to undergo the fatigue of may prodonged effort of composition. In her youth she was an admirable musician; but she has relinquished, of late years, all ex-ercise of that accomplishment.

Madame Alexandre Dumas is about sixty-seven years of age, being a few years the senior of her illustrious husband. Few of the great men of France have married as brilliantly, and loppily as well, as did the younger Dumas. Benutiful, fuscinating, gifted, possessing a large fortune, absolutely devoted to her higshand and her children, the congenial companion of the great dramatist's life, the subject of our present sketch stands out on the pages of the iterary and social history of France as one of the most noteworthy of the wives of that nation's celebrated men.

A LAW FIRM OF WOMEN By LAUBA GROVER SMITH

HE great progress of women has ceased to be at all surprising in this country, and in many of the States women are represented in the various profes-sions, particularly that of law. Mrs. Myra Bradwell, of Chicago,

Bradwell, of Chicago, who was recently admitted to practice in the United States Supreme Court, ably edits the "Legal News," and Mrs. Phuebe Cozzens, of St. Louis, is a well-known lawyer in the west. Miss. Lavinia Goodale was the first woman admitted to the practice of law in the State of Wisconsin. In 1875 she appeared before the Sued before the Su-preme Court of the State asking per-mission to practice mission to practice in that court, and her brief proved that she had at least the essential mental qualifications. The motion was denied by the judge at that time, who held that "womanbood is moulded for gentler and better gentler and better things." Miss Goodale maintain-ed, however, that women could never have full justice in the courts until properly rep-resented, and that the union of delicacy, refinement and conscientiousness of woman with the firmness and vigor of man was necessary for the proper ad-ministration of justice in our courts. Also, that in excluding women, free and wholesome competition of the best existing talent was prevented, and that it was unjust to banish so large a portion of the community from a field arge a portion of the community from a field for which many have taste and ability. Since that date Miss Goodale has been admitted to the bar, and is now one of the eight she, with her three daughters, went to Madison, Wisconsin. She took a house and "kept the home" until she and her daughter, Kate, were graduated from the law school of the State University. The two younger daughters were in the high school at the time. Going to school with one's mother, Miss Kate assures one, was a great improvement on the usual way. In speaking of the invariable kindness shown there by members of the level professhown them by members of the legal profes-sion, Miss Kate mentions only one case of direct partiality. The young men of the law class were in the habit of making a record of the ages of its members and registered Mrs.

MRS. PIER

Pier at twenty-six and Miss Pier at eighteen.

After the graduation of Mrs. and Miss Pier they returned to Fond du Lac, but came to Milwankee the year following, where they have since practiced their profession.

sion. These ladies were instrumental in the passage of two laws in the Legislature, viz., that a married woman is capable of acting as an assignee, and that a married woman who is an attorney at law may be a court commis-sioner. Last Sep-tember Mrs. Pier was appointed court commissioner, and is the only woman holding a position of that kind in the United States. These women have good standing among lawyers, and are not con-sidered unequal adversaries. Their practice is general, with the exception of criminal cases. Most of their cases and conscientions application to their work.

Mrs. Pier is a handsome woman; her face

MISS CAROLINE PIER

MISS HARRIET PIER

women lawyers in the State of Wisconsin, of whom four are the subjects of this sketch, Mrs. Kate Pier and ber three daughters, Kate H., Caroline and Harriet. They are all members of one law firm in the city of Milwankee. They are all interesting, "feminine" women, if one may use the expression; apparently they have lost none of their womanly qualities, but gained so many privileges that one is reconciled to a progress, which twenty years ago many thought threstened the detruction of home ife. It is not probable that any one of these young ladies is unfitted for a home because she has identified herself with an unusual calling for a Only a woman. Only a few years ago, if a woman found it necessary to work for a living, as she often did (apparently suffering both the curse of Adam and Eve) there was no career open to her save school-teaching or dress-making. Now, as a progressive woman says. she can do anything where her pettleouts do not catch in the machinery." Mrs. Pier, after the death of ber father, was left in charge of his estate. She became interested in the questions that arose, and possessing a keen and brilliant mind she directed it to the study of law. There are many women upon whom devolve the responsibilities of an estate who may appreciate the motive which led Mrs. Pier to become her own lawyer. About six years ago indicates a strong and sweet character, which would temper justice with mercy. Miss Kate is very beautiful. She is tall and slight, her face is refined, and her deep-blue eyes are true Irisis eyes, and full of expression. She wears her long black hair in braids which hang nearly to the ground. It may be of interest to feminine readers to know that Miss Pier wore, when she plead and won her first case at Madison, a pretty black slik dress, brightened with a bit of color at her throat. It must have been a strange scene, indicates a strong and sweet character, which strange scene, when five most "potent, grave and reverend seig-niors" listened to a slip of a girl as sle plead her case, and plead it well and with con-

About a year About a year ago the younger daughters, Caro-line and Harriet, finished the law course at the Uni-versity, and are now associated with their mother and sister. The firm is a busy one and each member does her part. The lumber members are not very active as yet, but follow-ing the precedent of mother and sister, they will have their opportunities. They are also pretty girls, at

The firm now includes the names of Kate Pier, Kate H. Pier, Caroline Pier and Harriet Pier, and its numbers are demonstrating most clearly that they are qualified to mak with men in the learned and honored profession of law. fession of law.

MISS KATE PILE

*In this series of pen-portraits of "Unknown Wives of Well Known Men," commerced in the January, 1964, Journals, the Selferring, each accompanied with portrait, have been printed: potesti, have been printed) Mas, P. Bainston,
Mas, P. Bainston,
Mas, P. Bainston,
Mas, P. Bainston,
Mas, C. Bainston,
Mas, C. Bainston,
Mas, C. Bainston,
Mas, Charletter,
Mas, T. Da Wiff Talmain
Mas, Charletter,
Mas, Charletter,
Mas, Juel, Charletter,
Mas, Will, Carletter,
Mas, Will, Carletter,
Mas, Will, Carletter,
Mas, Will, Carletter,
Mas, Max, Charletter,
Mas, Max, Charletter,
Mas, Land,
Mas, Charletter,
Mas, Legans, Field,
Mas, John J. Invalids,
Mas, John J. Invalids,
Mas, Edward Bellamy
Mas, Charletter,
Mas, Mas, Land,
Mas, Edward
Mas Any of these back numbers'can be last at 10 cents each by writing to the Journals.

WHY YOUNG MEN DEFER MARRIAGE

By John Lambert Payne

T is a vitally im-portant fact, proved alike by statistics and observation, that young men are marrying later in life than did young men thirty years ago; and upon this it it was found that for some unaccountable ason, the ceasus gatherers of the United ates did not take a record of the conjugal adition of the people in decennial periods derior to 1800, and because of this neglect it impossible to find reliable data for the purses of comparison. In the Canadian pro-nce of Outario, however, the record in this re-ect is fairly accurate for a period of thirty or rty years, and it may be safely assumed that e same conditions have operated in that part the Dominion as in the more congested States the American Union. Without going into the Dominion as in the more congested States the American Union. Without going into elaborate array of general figures, which suld call for qualification and explanation account of their source. I may say that a ag and careful search of available records inly reveals the fact which has just been mounced. For example, the Register Gend for Ontario has just sent me an abstract his record for the past seventeen years, sich shows that the marriages of men becen twenty and twenty-five years of age we declined from thirty-nine to thirty-three recent, while the marriages of men between irty and thirty-five have increased from wen to fourteen per cent, within that period, ac conclusion indicated by these figures has en fortified by interviews with prominent sugmen of long experience, who must be marded as thoroughly competent witnesses, sey were unanimous in the judgment that ung men are patting off matrimonial allices to a much later age than was observed enty-five years ago, and that the number of chelors is rapidly multiplying. By bachers, I mean those men who have reached y thirty years of age, and are comfortably f, but have made no matrimonial engage-ents.

ME question that naturally arises is: What are the causes which have operated to ing about this serious state of affairs in ciety? The broad answer to which I am ir-sistibly led is, that this is one of the prices e pay for a higher civilization. As wealth is been distributed and high class education ade general, young men and young women id new obstacles arising in the pathway to arriage.

It is no longer fashionable to begin married le in a humble way and climb up to a better ste. Young men know that modern society prone to measure a girl's start in domestic le by the display at the wedding and the rent which the husband is able to pay for his mic. Cases like that of Henry Ward Beecher, arrying on $300 a year and beginning life two small rooms, are looked upon noways as curious reminiscences of a pitiable u in the history of American society. The hucation which girls in general get unfits tem for the sacrifices and efforts which arked Mrs. Beecher's interesting experience by years ago.

T is not surprising that a young man, know-ing the standard by which marriages are aw commonly measured, should besitate bere asking a girl to sacrifice the comforts of er father's home for the simple circumstances the cottage which alone his income will rmit. Not long ago I found myself suransled by a group of seven young men, anging in age from twenty-five to thirty-tree years. Not one of them was married o my question for the reason why they were ngle, each answered that he could not afford marry. Yet they had incomes ranging from marry. Yet they laid incomes ranging from sio to $2000 a year, and could have made a cry imppy start in the conjugal state but for se notion they all had of what girls expect y marriage.

It is all very well to say that these young sen had wrong views, and that true love ould form the basis of a union in which outual sacrifices would be cheerfully made, must be remembered that the opinions hich young men hold in this regard make iem shun that closer companionship which sals up to matrimony. They see nothing to ispel the notion that all girls expect to live a the same scale of comfort they have been customed to, and it is only too often the use that they fall into grooves of living which a at once fixed to the domestic instinct.

I can look back with a clear judgment over renty-five years, and nothing else has impressed me so much in the retrospect as he change from the unorelentious circumlances of home life twenty-five years ago to be expited scale of living which now prevails. need not amplify this idea. It seems to me ant while this change in the standard of omestic comforts is a desirable thing, it is inirectly responsible for many marriages late tile and many cases of refusal to marry at II. It has led young non to look with a faint our upon the difficulties of a satisfactory art in wedded life, and has led young wom-a to expect more of home advantages at the utset than the income of the average young naband will permit.

A FRIEND of stern philosophic cast of mind attributes this social ill, as we'l as many others, to the spread of higher education. He says that just as the people who make up the great middle class between the very rich and the great middle class between the very rich and the very poor become well educated they grow discontented with the standard of living to which they have been accustomed. The young men aim beyond their means and the young women beyond their station. While they are coming to their senses or acquiring the where-withal to gratify a misdirected ambition the years go quickly by. I shall not, however, discuss this phase of the matter now, as it calls for special treatment; but I am not prepared to controvert the view of my friend in its bearing on the subject in hand. No one who has his eyes wide open can fail to see that the attempt to give every boy and girl in the land a high school education carries with it not a few serious druwbacks. not a few serious drawbacks.

THE habits of modern young men are antagonistic to that prudence and preparation which make it possible for them to marry at twenty-fice. There are many exceptions, of course, but it may be safely said that a vast number of the young men who live in our time fill their spare hours with expensive luxuries. It costs them a great deal to dress, and still more to keep up their social engagements. In a score of ways they accustom themselves to ways of life that leave no margin between income and outgo. This having gone on until they are twenty-five it then calls for more resolution than many of them command to begin the sacrifices which accompany the saving of money. Without money they cannot marry. Not a few greatly exaggerate what it should take two sensible young people to begin life on, and hastily conclude that it would be impossible, on an income of $1000, to start in comfort. So they put off marriage until after thirty, or do not marry at all; and it is well that such men should remain single; we do not need any such weak fibre in the coming generation. coming generation.

THE results which have followed upon the state of affairs outlined are to be seen everywhere. I have estimated, taking the available data in Ontario as my guide, that there are to-day in the United States 3,000,000 men, between twenty and thirty years of age, unmarried. This implies, a priori, that there are also 3,000,000 young women out of wedlock, although not necessarily of the same ages: for statistics seem to indicate the cruel conclusion that, when a man past thirty years of age marries be takes a young woman under twenty-five years of age, and not one of his own years. He is apt to select a wife whose habits of life and general ways are not so fixed as are those of a young woman of thirty. Be that as it may, there are to-day in the United States and Canada about 600 young men in every 1000, having reached the age of thirty, who are single. The conjugal condition of the people in other countries is vastly different. In Russia 373 men and 573 women in every 1000 who marry are married under twenty years of age, while in England 766 men and 829 women in every 1090 are married between twenty and thirty. In all countries, but particularly in Russia and France, the marrying ages of women are much below those of the men. In the latter country a close knowledge of the world lends the mothers to bend every men. In the latter country a close knowledge of the world lends the mothers to bend every energy toward having their daughters married young; while in Russia, it is the predominant domestic instincts of the peasant class which swell the figures of youthful marriages.

THE failure of young men to marry has compelled bundreds of thousands of young women to earn an independent living. All honor to the girls who work; but the Divine plan was that men should be the bread earners and that women should be the center of homes. Whenever such a fundamental law of society as this is violated retribution is inevitable. There are to-day upward of 2,000,000 women in the United States who make a living by professional and personal services, such as the practice of law and medicine, the teaching of music and art work, clerical services of one sort or another in governcine, the tenning of masse and art work, clerical service of one sort or another in government and other offices, quite apart from the army of young women who serve in stores and toil at mechanical labor. No one who can look back over a generation of time has failed to observe the extent to which women have become independent bread earners within comparatively recent years, and particularly in those avenues which education and refined habits of life have opened up. It is, in fact, a grave social problem where this thing will end.

grave social problem where this thing will end.

It would seem that this, among other causes, is accomplishing the purpose which Malthus aimed to teach; for the inexorable conclusions of the statistician show that the American and Canadian family is stendily growing smaller. If the average number per family had been as great in 1890 as in 1800, there would have been 6,000,000 people in the United States and 430,000 in Canada above what the poemic construct reveals. This is a fact of forrecent censuses revealed. This is a fact of for-reaching importance, and applies its force in other directions than the subject of this article, Young women, wide awake to what ingoing on, do not look for the same education as did their mothers. Instead of giving a fair share of time to the acquirement of domestic accomplishments, fitting them for homebold duties, tery many young women bend their education into grooves which will enable them to be relatively independent should the sludow of this social cloud rest upon them, This is but natural, although it aggravates the

Is there a remedy? Certainly there is none which can be easily and readily applied. Two hundred years ago, guided largely by the Jesuits, the zealous King Louis, of France, made stern laws for the government of this young colony in respect of marriage. He decreed that every father having a son eighteen years of age, or a daughter of fifteen, should be held accountable to the state if they were not married. Complementary to that policy was the provision that, when a young couple were married they should receive a farm, a small house, a cow, two barrels of meat and other articles essential to domestic life in those primitive days, so that there was the fear of a penalty to actuate the parents, and the incentive of reward to stimulate the young people. The modern sense of liberty recoils from such enactments; so there is nothing which the Legislature can do in our day to soive this great social problem. But young men can be encouraged to habits of prudence, and young women can be shown the folly of being too proud to begin married life on a small scale.

THE general social engagements which bring young people together in these days depress rather than stimulate the commubial instinct. Such is the scale of comfort and elegance which modern society presents, only too often at ruinous cost, that young men are discouraged from a union involving what they regard as many sacrifices. If this influence is to be neutralized young men must have a more sensible and philosophic view of life than a majority of them seem now to have. Young women, too, must be taught the meaning of the situation so far as their interests are concerned. One of the most serious harriers in the way of a remedy is the very means which an ever-multiplying multitude of women have found of being independent.

Modern society has welcomed common-sense shoes and common-sense forms of dress. It shoes and common-sense forms of dress. It would seem that the time is opportune for a would seem that the time is opportune for a widespread outbreak of common-sense mar-riages. At all events, if a change from the present stagnation is to be effected, three things seem to me necessary: First, there must be a popular knowledge of the facts; second, the people at large must think; and third, there must be action.

WOMEN AND LIFE INSURANCE

BY WALTER H. BARRETT

it were not for women the business of the life insur-ance companies, not only of this country but of the world over, would be of so small dimensions that it certainly would not be at-tractive to capital. It can-not be denied that the prime not be denied that the prime motive of the man who insures his life either for a large or small amount is the laudable wish to place the women and children depending on his exertions beyond immediate want in case of his taking off. There are, of course, exceptions to this rule, where policies are held for purely business reasons, but it is safe to say that more than seventy-five per cent, of the life insurance held in America is for the sole henefit of women. One might, therefore, be pardoned for supposing that as the gentler sex is such an imporing that as the gentler sex is such an impor-tant factor in the insurance business, the companies, always anxious for new policies where men are concerned, would at least look with a kindly eye on an application from a woman. Such, however, is not the case; and ungallant as it may be to say so, truth compels the ad-mission that a menn suspicion enters the mind of man the moment a woman asks for a relies which only long years of subsequent mind of man the moment a woman asks for a policy, which only long years of subsequent life will suffice to remove.

The unpopularity of women as insurance risks is so well-defined that some companies will not accept them at all, and others will only take them at higher rates than are de-manded on the lives of men. Certain com-panies consider them equally eligible with men and accept them at the same rates, but such is not the practice.

men and accept them at the same races, but such is not the practice.

Why should there be this discrimination against women? They certainly are not ex-posed to the danger of contagion and accident posed to the danger of contagion and accident which men necessarily encounter in rubbing against the world, and neither are they ad-dicted to the use and abuse of stimulants and narcotics, which practices, it is fair to assume, do not add to the stay of men on this earth, Furthermore, there is excellent authority for saying that in the general population the aver-age duration of life is decidedly longer among women than men. It is true that between the ages of sixteen and twenty-six the mor-tality among women is somewhat greater, tality among women is somewhat greater, although the preponderance is not very A comparison of the figures prepared by the insurance companies is apt to be misleading because of the small number of women included in their returns; but the companies have these figures, and on them

Insurance men account for this alleged greater mortality of women variously. Some tell us that it is due to the difficulty of ascertality of women variously. tell us that if is due to the difficulty of ascer-taining the peculiar physical condition of women in their applications, and others as-sert that the statements made by women, although probably unintentionally so, are likely to be misleading. These explanations are of the kind that do not explain much. It would seem to be the duty of an insurance would seem to be the diffy of an insurance company to enforce proper needical and other examinations prior to issuing a policy to either man or woman, and it is not an un-rensemble supposition that if the death rate among the few women insured has been un-dily large, there must have been some dere-liction on the part of the companies in se-lecting the risks. It is the evidence of medi-cal examiners who have been consulted by the eriter that women, as a rule give straight writer that women, as a rule, give straightforward answers to all questions relating to themselves. In some instances, medical women have been employed as examiners, but with questionable results, because of a natural reluctance on the part of women to confide their physical ailments or personal history to other women. One medical man tells me that during a long experience be has never met with a case of refusal or besitation on the part of a woman applicant to give any needed information. Francis have been attempted by women, and have been successfully carried out, but the charge is equally true against men, and their perpetration in either sex can be guarded against readily if the medical examiners do their duty.

Life insumnce among the women of the leisure classes is not making great progress; there is very little of it written relatively, in fact. There are many reasons for this aside from the indisposition of the companies to issue policies to women. In the first place, the same reasons for insurance do not exist that prevail in the case of the industrial classes. Few men in the professional, mercantile, or higher walks of life relish the idea of their wives being insured for their benefit. There is something distasteful to a man who has always been able to provide for the wants and many of the loxuries of life in the thought that financial benefit should come to him through the death of one near and dear.

That this is not so, however, among the industrial classes, where the sterner realities that financial benefit should come to him through the death of one near and dear.

That this is not so, however, among the industrial classes, where the sterner realities and hardships of life have to be met face to face by the women, is a matter of record, and is clearly proved by a list of recent death claims paid in New York City by one of the leading companies of the world. By actual count there were four hundred and ninety-five claims paid, and of these two hundred and thirty-six were females and two hundred and fifty-nine males. And right here we find evidence of important character bearing on the question of the relative mortality of the two sexes, and it will be observed that it is in favor of the women. At the close of last year the company referred to had assets of more than thirteen and a half millions of dollars, and a surplus for policy holders of over three millions. The policies it had in force at the end of last year numbered 2.281,840, and considerably more than half of this great total was on the lives of women and children. Recently it paid three hundred and ninety-seven death claims in a single day.

It must be explained that while this company does a regular life insurance business, and that as such has probably not many more women risks than other companies, it has a department called "the industrial," and that it is there that it reaches women. When the industrial department was inaugurated, twenty three years ago, long before any other company adopted it in this country, it was practi-three years ago, long before any other com-pany adopted it in this country, it was practipany adopted it in this country, it was practically out of the question for persons on small wages to leave anything to their families, or to provide for any debts that they might owe at death, because insurance was then beyond the reach of people of moderate means. The companies in general accepted only male adult lives; declined to insure women and children; to write policies for less than a thousand dollars, or to necept dues oftener than once in three months. Under the modern plan, men, women and children are taken, from the grandparent of seventy to the babe a year old.

The insurance costs five cents per week upward, the dues are collected at the homes of the insured, and policies are paid promptly at the insured, and policies are paid promptly at death.

The desirability of insurance of this description need not be discussed at length. No life is so valuable to a family as that of the bread winner; but when death invades the circle, robbing it either of a parent or a child, it not infrequently comes hand in hand with poverty, and finds the family without the means of decent burial. Here it is that the insurance momes promptly hald does such means of decent burial. Here it is that the insurance money, promptly paid, does such great service. The policies are, of course, small when compared with those people of means afford; but what more consoling than a few bundred dollars at a time when the world seems at its blackest. Furthermore, it should be said that the industrial companies should be said that the industrial companies do not confine their business to any class, although, of course, their principal work is among the poor. Any one in good health may secure policies, and, as a matter of fact, many professional men and women do so. Ten or twenty cents a week is easily saved, and the payment of it to the collector when he calls reduces the trouble to a minimum. At first blush the insurance business would seem to offer a good opening to cuterwising

At first busin the usurance cosmess region seem to offer a good opening to enterprising women as agents or canvassers. The com-missions paid are undoubtedly much more re-munerative than the outcome of many other occupations to which women devote them-selves, and the work is not of an unsuitable character. It certainly is no worse than book character. It certainly is no worse than book canvassing, and the securing of a single ten thousand dollar policy would bring better re-turns than could be possibly expected from sev-eral weeks' persistency in that line. Yet it is a fact that a woman insurance solicitor is so great a rarity that I have never met one, although I am told there are some in the field, and that they have met with marked success. The experiment has been tried in the industrial de-partment, but there conditions are by no means the same as in general insurance work. In the large cities the work of the industrial comranies, by its character is naturally largely con-fined to the tenement house districts, and the climbing of stairs requires more physical back-bone than most women possess. Again, the field has to be gone over every week, for the can-vassers are also the collectors, so the labor is enetically unending. In the smaller cities and lowers where the working classes have their homes, in cottages or every-day houses, this from the collapse of every-day houses, this great obstacle to the entrance of women to the field is not presented, and many have been able to make very fair compensation. It is found that a sensible woman, when face to face with a struggling sister, can bring home the truths about life insurance much more forcibly than the average cold-blooded man.

A LIVE EMBER

By Julia Magruder

[Continued from August JOURNAL]

CHAPTER IV

Mrs. Owen morning when Mrs. Owen and all her guests had joined a pleasure party that Kate, under some pretext, gut herself excused a, that adroit young had got herself excused from, that adroit young lady, whose object had been to secure a long day's quiet for herself, began by mid-day to weary of her own society, and, leaving her room, went down and wandered rather aimlessly about the lower ametracuts. Euroing over went down and wandered rather aimlessly about the lower apartments, turning over books and magazines, looking at illustrated papers, strumming a little on the plano, and giving various indications of the fact that the time hung rather heavy on her hands. She was exceedingly glad to get rid of all the people, but she did not know exactly what to do with herself. She was not wearing one of the Paris costumes to-day, but was clad in a little, white cotton gown of her own designing that dowed in straight and simple lines from the waist, where it was confined by a loose white ribbon. It was cut low all around the fair and slender throat, from which a fall of full ribbon. It was cut low all around the har and slender throat, from which a fall of full white lace hung back. The sleeves, which were puffed on the shoulders, were made full and loose to below the elbows, where they ended in another frill of lace. White ribbon bows, with float-ing and fastened the govern about the ing ends, fastened the gown about the neck. It was as winsome a little par-ment as was ever seen, and Kate looked as lovely as a flower in it, as she tripas lovely as a flower in it, as she tripped about from room to room, on her little slippered feet, whose small heels clicked musically on the polished floors in the midst of the silence that pervaded everywhere. The shutters were closed, and all the rooms in semi-darkness, but small rays of golden sanshine pierced through the slats here and there, and a sweet breeze from the ocean came in with them, and gently fanned the thin lace curtains. In every room she entered there were bowls and jars and vases of flowers massed together in lavish abundance. She flitted about, from one to the other of these, burying her face enjoyingly in their burying her face enjoyingly in their fragrance, her head lingering above them like a butterfly or a humming-bird. In the great drawing-room there was the largest display, and a table in the center had been given up exclu-sively to flowers, eight or ten varieties of which were massed in separate jars. There was one jar of tall pink gladiolus. another of creamy peonles, another of blood-red roses, one of heliotrope one of garden lilles and several more beside.

Kate was bending over this table with her hands resting on its edge, and her bright brown head stooped low, when a sound caught her ear, and lifting her face from among the flowers she looked up and saw John Talbot standing in the doorway, directly in front of her.

Her heart gave a bound, and she seemed to feel the current in her veins change its routes and flow backward.

change its course and flow backward, but outwardly she was self-prosessed, and she felt at once an instinctive assurance of the sufficiency of her strength.

"Mr. Talbot!" she said, in a tone of simple surprise, drawing herself upright be-hind the mass of flowers, as a tall, white lify bind the mass of flowers, as a tall, white hily might rear its crest above a bank of mignonette. She did not move from her place, but as he came forward she turned and gave him her hand, with as little self-consciousness as if she had been indeed a flower.

"No one is expecting you," she said, "and they have all gone off on an excursion. Did you write or telegraphs"

"No! I did notther," he said, "I was doubtful if there would be room for a delinquent who had been guilty of so many postponements, so I came to see for myself whether I hadn't better go to a hotel"

hadn't better go to a hotel

"Certainly not," said Kate; "Auntie has kept your room, and I think it is all ready.

Let me ring and inquire."
"Pray don't-" began Talbot, but she was "Pray don't—" began Talbot, but she was half way across the room on her way to the bell, and he stopped, struck suddenly by the grace and beauty of her strunge costume. As Kate returned she saw this glance and under-stood it. She had forgotten the unconventional little gown, and now, as his look remind-ed her, she flushed slightly and smiled.

"You have taken us all unaware," she said, as she sat down in a low chair some distance from him, "but I'm sure you will be very welcome. Auntie and the girls have wished for you very often, and so have some of the people staying here. You won't be looked on as an intruder, I can assure you."

He did not speak at once, but it was evident from his face that her cordial assurance affect ed him very little.

"And why are you not one of the excursion arty?" he asked, coming a little nearer, before he selected a chair,

"It was disinclimation chiefly that kept me at home," said Kate, "though I made out a more reasonable case than that. I believe I am too indelent for excursions. I always shirk them whenever I can."

"Do the people here bore you?" said Talbot, going into the subject with a spirit of candor that was natural to him. "I should think they might. Who is here, by the way?"
Kate named over the guests to him one by one, ending with, "and the charming Mrs. Torrence."
"Do you consider her charming?" said

"Do you consider her charming?" said Talbot, "or are you merely echoing the ver-dict of the world?"

"I was merely echoing the verdict of the world," said Kate, "but I don't say I dissent from it."
"You don't say that you agree with it, however, I observe."

"No; I don't commit myself," said Kate. "I think she is handsome, certainly, but, beyond that, I don't feel that I have the light to judge her by."

"What wise remarks children stumble up on, sometimes," said Talbot. "That's much more profound than you have any idea of." Kate felt irritated at his calling her a child, and, watching her keenly as he did, the man perceived it, though she gave no outward sign beyond a movement of her head, as she turned to speak to the servant, who now americal as to speak to the servant, who now appeared, as to Mr. Talbot's room. It was all ready, she was told, and while Talbot scribbled on his end an order for his luggage he heard her ask nial never omitted by Mrs. Owen, but Talbot was so entirely unprepared that he proved un-responsive to that shy glance of invitation, and the meal proceeded. When he recalled it, afterward, he was indignant with himself. It was an opportunity of securing a sweet memory that he had let slip away from him. Kate sat in the tall chair behind the stately range of silver and china and made his tea for him, and he leaned back in the tall chair him, and he lenned back in the tall chair opposite, and watched her deliberately, as the light hands moved about, with deft touches on the graceful shapes of the pretty, old-fishioned silver. When the dishes had been handed, and Talbot's cup of fragrant tes set down beside him, the two servants, as their custom was, retired to the pantry, and the man and girl at the table were left severely site à-tôte. Kate was bending over her tescup, stirring busily, and looking down, when she heard a low and emphatic: "Good gracious!" from across the table. She looked up quickly, and saw her companion leaning back in his chair, with his plate and cup untouched before him. The exclamation had apparently been involuntary, for he sat up and seemed to collect himself, as she asked:

"What in the world do you mean?"

"O, nothing in particular, and everything in general," he answered with a smile. "I was, for one thing, contrasting my lunch here today with my lunch in a restaurant yesterday."

"Yes, I dare say there is a contrast in several ways," said Kate. "I shall not pretend to deny that the manner is better here, though I've no doubt that in the matter as to variety, at least, the advantage was on the other side. But you see you were not expected, and I told the servants a mere cup of tea was all I wanted; and some fruit."

"I was not thinking of the contrast in the food," said Talbot.

Kate struck the little silver call-bell.

"O, as to the surroundings?" she replied.

"Then, of course, the advantage is altogether him, and he leaned back in the tall chair opposite, and watched her deliberately, as the

"It is on the table, miss," returned the man, and when Kate had ordered a place to be set for Mr. Talbot, and the man had disappeared, she stood up and said

"The little procession started toward the house."

"You will want to go to your room, Mr.

"Not at all," was the reply. "I rested and refreshed at the hotel."

refreshed at the hotel."

"Then, if you will excuse the for a moment—" Kate began,

"Please don't," he interrupted her; "excuse me, but are you thinking of changing your dress? I do beg you not to."

"I really most," said Kate; "it is too unsuitable. Auntie's sense of fitness would be outraged."

"Nonanyas! It is profession. Page 15 hours."

"Nonsense! It is perfection. Please keep it on. I ask it us a special favor." "What right have you to ask of me special favors?" Kate said to be self indignantly, but it would have seemed absurd to make a point of so trifling a matter, especially as the se vant now re-appeared and announced lunch.

"I'll have to whether I want to or not," e said, "unless I choose to pay the penalty of a cold lunch, which doesn't seem worth while," and she led the way to the dining-

As they crossed the hall a fresh breeze blew in through the open doors and fluttered the free folds of her little gown, blowing it back. from her pretty feet, and making her tall, young beauty look more beautiful still in the broad light of day, which it had no reason to fear. As they passed from the ball into the dim coolness of the large dining-room, with its benyy furniture and high-backed leather chairs, both of them fell silent. Their places had been set at the head and foot of the large round table, and as the flowers in the center were low and massed together, they were un-compromisingly face to face. Kate's slight body looked taller and slimmer than usual, in its quaint, white gown, against the tall, dark chairs. As they sat down she clanced across at Talbot, half-timidly and half-expectantly, and it dashed across his mind that she thought he was going to say grace. It was a ceremoon the side of to-day. Give me a glass of water, please," she said to the servant who

When he had served her and retired, Talbot spoke again.

"Have you enjoyed yourself here?" he said. "You've been in the thick of it all I see by the papers."

by the papers."

"O, yes; I've been admirably entertained," said Kate. "Many people have been kind to me, many indifferent, and a few rather unkind, but on the whole it's been very nice."

"Who's been unkind to you?" be asked, in a voice that made her feel she dared not meet his look. Again she struck the bell.

"Change the plates," she said to the servant, "and hand Mr. Talbot the fruit."

When the fruit had been served and they vere again alone, Kate opened the conversa-

Your sister is expected to-morrow," said; "Mrs. Gwyn and her children; I sup-pose you knew it, though."

"I knew she was coming some time," he said rather absently, "and the children are a nutter of course. She is one of the mothers who shirks none of the responsibilities of the situation, and either takes her children with her or stays at home. Consequently her range is rather limited, but Mrs. Owen, who approves bertactics, rewards her by an invitation here every summer. It is very good of her, for Fanny is a social little creature, and alse's out off now from a good deal."

"Bon't you approve her tactics?" asked Kate. "I do, I'm sure."

"Yes: I suppose so, in theory. I approve of her. I know but I can't get very enthusias-tic on this particular point in her character, being prejudiced, I suppose, by the fact that I shaminate, children."

abominate children."
"You abominate children," said Kate: "how impossible to understand!" and she looked, be thought, almost hurt.

He was desperately sorry for his silly speech, and would have made some effort to patch it up, but she gave him no opportunity. Touching the bell again, she rose from the table, and led the way out of the room. When they reached the foot of the staircase, she paused.

"You want to smoke, I suppose," she said; "you know your bearings as well as I. Make yourself quite at home. You are to leave your usual room, and I hope you'll find it all right."

right."

"And are you going to leave me?" he said, with the candid disappointment of a child.

"Yes; I really must, not to sacrifice my self-respect entirely as to the excuse I gave for staying at home. I said I had a letter to write and business to attend to, and I must go and do it."

do it."

He watched her from below, as her figure, so fascinating and so unfashionable in its contour, mounted the wide staircase, and turned at the landing. He hoped she would look back, but she did not. Only her pretty profile was turned toward him as she passed from sight.

from sight.

To say he was disappointed was far too little.

He was restive, annoyed, half angry with both himself and her. Here was such an opportuhimself and her. Here was such an opportu-nity as would almost certainly not occur again, when they might be together, free and un-molested, and what could possibly be the harm to either if they talked awhile, and perhaps played over some music? He had had an almost passionate love for her violin playing, long before he had become aware of the same feeling for herself, and it would have been a pure deciph to have played her accomthe same seeing for hersell, and it would have been a pure delight to have played her accom-paniments for her a while this afternoon, they two alone. He knew his danger, and was armed against a repetition of that moment's weakness, which now, less than ever, could be bring himself to regret. It was perfectly evi-dent that it had meant nothing to her, and it meant so much to him that he could only feel glad and exultant that it had ever been. Irritated and lonely be lighted his so much to him that he could only feel and exultant that it had ever been.

Irritated and lonely be lighted his eight, and sat smoking in savage silence, while Kate, alone up stairs, with the key turned in the lock, was standing before her long mirror looking at herself scrutinizingly to see how she had appeared to Talbot's eyes. She would have been stupid if she had not been satisfied; if she had not seen at a glance how absolutely that little gown became her, and though she was not, in reality, displeased with her reflection, as she turned away her face, now quite unguarded, looked very, very fair from happy.

She threw herself into a chair and feil to musing. After all these days and weeks and months she had seen John Talbot again!—touched his hand—heard his voice—and looked into his and weeks and months she had seen John Talbot again !--touched his hand --heard his voice--and looked into his eyes! Swift and short her glances had been, but that had told her that it was the self-same, dear familiar face which no trying could shut out from its insistent hold upon her mental vision. It was not less winning and attractive than memory had painted it. Ah, it was more so! and the voice, the manner, the distinct sweet utterance were all the same. She had wondered over and over again, whether, in her girl's imagination, she had not idealized him, but she saw it was not so. Her quiet winter and its ample opportunities for deliberate thought and judgment, and her worldly experiences since she had been at her aunt's, had both given her an insight by which she saw his conduct in a truer light, and judged him with a sterner judgment. She knew perfectly now that his conduct had been absolutely unjustifiable: that it had not been as he night kiss a child that he had kissed her; that, in plain terms, he had taken an unworthy advantage of her youth and ignorance, and had done what no man of honor could fall to condemn. She knew all this, and her pride resented the affront he had offered her. This resentment was strong enough to be a sure safeguard in the future. She knew it would, and she had bravely striven, she could not feel less tenderly toward him, because she not fail for that use, but, strive as she would, and she had bravely striven, she could not feel less tenderly toward him, because she felt less trustingly. She knew he had done wrong, but that feeling in her heart resisted the knowledge. Even to-day, in their brief intercourse, he had more than once aroused her disapproval. His manner had been altogether too easy and familiar, considering the past. His reference to the agreenbleness of finding himself at the table abone with her was absolutely out of taste, she thought, and she quite hated what he had said about children. That feeling she had always thought as unmanly in a man as it was unwomanly in a unmanly in a man as it was unwomanly in woman, and she utterly condensed it. Yet what did it all amount to, in the presence of the tremendous fact that stared her in the face — the controlling, compelling, imperious, awful fact that John Talbot was the man she loved! It need never make any difference, she said to berself, except in the depths of her own heart, and the influence it would exercise upon her whole sad life. No one would ever know it, The very thought of that possibility so filled ber with shame that she felt a positive certainty that her pride would enable her to guard her secret faithfully.

That pride was useless now, however, to check the rising tears which filled her eyes totally against her will. She shock them off, but they rose again. Determined not to give up to them, she got out her writing materials and wrote her business letters. By this she gained outward self-control, but when the gained outward self-control, but when the letters were done she dared not permit ber-self to sit down and think. A sudden idea struck her, and she rose and rang the bell. It was answered by her old servant, Maria, who had shown such grief at the thought of part-ing from her, and to whom she was so really attached that she had brought her away from Virginia with her.

"Maria," she said, when the kindly black face appeared in the doorway, "I want a horse saddled for me at once, and a groom to go with me. Go and give the order, and then come and get my habit."

Half an hour later Talbot, who had westied of the solitude of the empty apartments down stairs, and sought his own chamber, happening to be at the window that looked out on the lawn, saw Miss Carew, in her smart habit. lawn, saw Miss Carew, in her smart habit, contering off down the drive, followed by a groom, but otherwise alone. He watched her until she was out of sight, his anger kindling every moment. And yet what right had he to expect to be asked to join her? What had he done to merit the favor and confidence of this girl? Nothing; and all to forfeit it! It was a painful reflection. How charming she had booked in her hat and habit! He had never seen her ride before, and her costume was so absolute a constrast to the one he had last seen her in. And yet it was not a whit less becom-ing. Ah, she was beautiful and charming in-deed; and yet it was as clear as ever that she was not fee him. was not for him!

He saw her again, when she returned in the twilight, a gentleman having joined her. Their gay voices reached him at his window.

CHAPTER V

TOHN TALBOT had been correct, even beyond his thought, in surmising that oppor-tunities of seeing Miss Carew along would be of rare occurrence in future. After that first day, although he saw her continually, it was always in the presence of others. They met, of course, daily around Mrs. Owen's table, and frequently at other people's, and the same invitations and engagements often threw them togethers, but in all of this he felt he was together; but in all of this he felt he was only one of many, and of no more consequence to the highly favored and much sought after young lady than a dozen other men; not so much, indeed, for they were free to offer their attentions and strive for her favors on an equal ground, while he, is some inexplicable way, felt himself disqualified and repelled. It was in reality inexplicable, for she was never other than polite to him, but so it

He saw her in one after the other of the French costumes, and keeply took the measure of her loveliness in each. He compared her with other young and lovely girls, and noted the result of his comparisons upon his inmost heart. He listened diligently to what was heart. He listened diligently to what was said of her by men and women, and kept the record of it in his soul. He saw other men come near her who were free to ask her hand, and rich enough in this world's goods to make it unpresumptuous. He felt himself disqualified in both ways—first, because he had sunk himself fatally in her estimation by one rash moment's act, and second, because he had made it, with himself, a point of honor not to try to marry a rich girl until be had made his own fortune. He had been so embarrassed lately with expenditures he had made for the furtherance of some of his schemes, that he felt himself more ruthlessly debarred than ever. So, for more reasons than one, he was a mere looker on at Miss Carew's triumphant career. That it was triumphant be saw very plainly at the first hall to which he went.

One morning Mrs. Owen's guests, as well as her friends' guests, were assembled in the large drawing-room, where for hours there had been an uninterrupted flow of such watering-place chatter as Kale grew often very weary of. To-day it seemed to her more than usually intolerable, and as there was no one present who had called especially to see her—the company was chiefly composed of married people -she slipped away unnoticed, and wandered out into the hall and thence to the piazza, and finally, taking up a gorden hat, she sauntered off under the trees and was soon out of sight of the house. As she walked on the sound of children's voices reached her, and turning toward it she came upon a nurse and two small children the latter such perfect duplicates that it made one smile to look at them. They were the twin boys of Mrs. Gwyn, John Tulbot's sister, such beautiful and charming children that they made their uncle's objection to their kind seem all the more reprehensible and unaccountable,

"O Martha! I'm so glad I came across you,"

Kate exclaimed. "I was wishing a little while ago that I could borrow the babies. If you're got anything to do I'll take care of them, and bring them in as soon as they or I get tired."

The old woman accepted this offer very willingly and harried off, while Kate threw down her hat and seated herself by the children, who were so absorbingly occupied in scooping holes in the sandy soil, under the edge of an evergreen where the grass refused to grow and ladling out dirt with their little shovels, that they seemed not to notice the change of custodians. They were scarcely more than habies and were dressed precisely alike, in little white dresses and muslin caps tied under their clous, and short white socks that left their chubby legs half bare. It was perfectly understood that they were to be re-dressed when they returned to the house, so nurse had left them unrestricted as to their ciothes, and they were enjoying themselves royally. The earth they played in was so light and sandy that it was what Martha called "clean dirt," and did not stick to them. Kate sat and looked at them a while in silence, fascinated by their sturdy beauty.

"Which is Ned and which is Ted?" said

Kate, presently wishing to attract their attention which they both looked up at the same time, and gave precisely similar little gurgling nughs.

"Dis is Ned and dat's Ted," said one,
"Dis is Ted and dat's Ned," said the other—each pointing first at himself and then at his brother, with exactly the same gesture, and then they went to work again.

They already knew Kate well, and being the most jolly and comfortable little children imaginable, they were not in the least disposed to object to being left in her charge. Nothing on earth was of great consequence to them as on earth was of great consequence to them as long as there remained more dirt to be scooped out of those holes. Kate watched them a while longer in silence, and then, beginning to pine for a larger share of their attention and companiouship, she walked over and seated herself in a hammock that hung near by, and called out invitingly:

"Who wants to take a nice ride to London town?"

Both little be-capped and be-cropped heads were lifted up. Two little grunts of rejection were given, and the heads dropped down again

"I wish I had somebody to love me," said
"I wish I had somebody to love me," said
Vata in an injured tone. "Nobody loves me," Kate in an injured tone. "Nobody loves me; if they did they'd come and ride to London town with me."

"I love 'oo," said one, getting a little the start of the other, who chimed in after him "I love 'oo," and throwing down their spades they toddled toward her, running so fast across the rough sward, and with their bodies inclined forward so perilously that she was afmid they would fall on their faces at every step. They kept up, however, until they were almost up to her, when they both tumbled forward with a laugh against her lap, measuring their distance so necurately as to make it appear to have been the result of exact extendation.

"You've got to pay your way to London town, you know, before you get on the train," she said, at which two pairs of clubby arms closed round her neck at the same time, and two rosy mouths fell to kissing her cheeks with loud, resounding smacks. She hugged with loud, resounding smacks. She hugged them both to her, by way of making sure of her fare, and as she loosed them, said seriously: "I don't know which sides you belong on.

You'll have to tell me again which is Ned and which is Ted.'

and which is Ted."

"Dis is Ned and dat's Ted," said one, and
"Dis is Ted and dat's Ned," said the other, with the same gesticulation as before. It was a performance they were called on to go through at least a dozen times a day, but their good nature never seemed to fail.

They were now lifted into the hammock,

They were now litted into the hammock, and Kate, with an arm around each, began to swing them regularly backward and forward, by pushing her foot against a tree which was just within proper distance. At the same time all three voices, the girl's and theirs, set up a vigorous chorus of:

One foot up and one foot down, That is the way to London town."

It was evidently a familiar form of recreation to all three. For some time they kept it up, swinging and singing, and then first one and then the other of the childish voices died away in drowsiness, the little bodies pressed harder and heavier against her sides, and both bubies were fast asleep. She looked down at them right and left, with fond, caressing glances, and pressed them gently closer to her, swinging each moment slower and slower until the swing stopped still. Just as it did so, she looked up and saw John Talbot sitting quietly on a bench under a tree some little distance off. Seeing that he was discovered, he got up and came forward. "How long have you been there?" said

"Since the beginning of this performance," he answered. He saw no use in telling her he had seen her from a window and followed her out of the house.

She looked at him scrutinizingly to see if he were going to express some cynical disap-probation, which she rather dreaded; but be did not. He merely bent down and looked at

"There's a pair of little chaps in clover, if ever I came across it. Which is Facsimile and which is Ditto?" he asked smiling, and then nided: "And you really love these small creatures?"

"I do induct" and "could be a small

"I do, indeed," said Kate, "don't you?"
"I told you the other day I was not fond of children.

"Then you've missed your share of heaven on earth," said Kate. "It's a pity to see how people won't live up to their privileges. Think of these two little hearts—the truth, the unworldliness of them! Not a concealed thought, an evil wish, an envious feeling! What do they care whose diamonds are handsomest, whose dresses most admired, whose dinners best attended? Contrast their innocence with the worldliness of those grown folks in yonder, and say who are the best companions!
All they are concerned to know," she added laughing, "is which is Ned and which is Ted, laughing, "is which is Ned and which is Ted, and that they only occupy themselves with for the convenience of others. It would not make the least difference to themselves."

"After this," said Tafbot, smiling, "I'll reconsider my opinion, and I don't despair recenting altogether. They are pretty, poor little chaps," he went on, looking at them gently. "And it makes them seem very sweet to think that you love them."

to think that you love them."
"I was just thinking," said Kate, breaking in, in a matter-of-fact tone, "how I should get these babies to the house. I could manage one, but two is too much for me, Would you mind finding a servant and sending word to Martha to come and get one of them?

"Why couldn't I carry one, if you can carry the other?" he said half-timidly. "Is it be-cause you think I am not worthy?"

"I am not sure that either of us is that," she answered gently. "At all events, I certainly shan't refuse your offer," Very tenderly, if somewhat awkwardly, be lifted one of the little sleepers into his strong arms, and laid him up against his shoulder. The movement roused the child a little, and the evidently thought he had been spoken to, for he began his usual response; "Dis is Ned for he began his usual response: "Dis is Ned and—" but the rest of it died in silence, as his head sank comfortably down on its unwonted resting place on the shoulder of Mr.

Kate lifted the other sleeping child in her arms and got, with some difficulty, to her feet, and the little procession started to the house. On the way they met Mrs. Gwyn coming to look for them, and when she saw who it was that Kate had pressed into her service she stopped short, and lifted her hands in astonishment.

hands in asionishment.

"That I should have lived to behold it!" she cried. "By what system of bribery or threatening have you brought this about, Miss Carew?"

"It is entirely volunteer service, I assure you," said Kate. "He offered to do it, but I think we won't tax him too far. Let's go around by the side entrance, so that nobody may see him."

may see him,"
"Not a bit of it," said Talbot. "I'm going to stand to my guns. I'm ready to face the whole Casino if necessary, and explain to the company that 'dis is Ned and dat is Ted,' or vice versa, I'm sure I don't know which."

Kate insisted, however, on the side entrance, and they got into the house without attracting any attention.

When the two burdens had been deposited in the nursery, and Kate had gone off to her room to rectify her disordered costume, Mrs. Gwyn, looking after her, said impulsively; "What a lovely creature that is! And for all the admiration she receives how utterly unspoiled! She will make some man very happy one of these days!"

happy one of these days!"

"Some other man, not this one," he answered, surprising her by a direct answer to her significant look. "Not this one," he repeated, stooping to kiss her. "You needn't suppose it, little sister," and he turned and walked away, knowing that he had given the secret of his heart into safe keeping.

The scene with the children in which John Tailout took wart served Kata as a strong

Talbot took part served Kate as a strong warning. It set to vibrating within her old tones for the moment stilled, and she made up her mind that nothing like it should happen again. As Talbot had made up his mind pen again. As Talbot had made up his mind to the contrary, her resolution was strongly taxed in the few days following, for it was evident that he sought, almost with persist-ence, opportunities of being with her. He found bimself completely folled, however, and yet it was done so quietly that no one but himself was in the least aware of it. One evening Mrs. Owen gave a large dinner party, and Kate coming down early to arrange party, and Kate, coming down early to arrange the menu cards and attend to some little mutters for her aunt, encountered John Talbot on the stairs. He had been absent all day and the stairs. He had been absent all day and was in his morning clothes, and rather tired and dusty. Hurrying to his room to dress for dinner, he was running up the steps rather rapidly when he saw Kate coming down. At the same moment he made a misstep, stumbled and fell to his knees. Instead of righting himself and standing up, however, he continued kneeling, and looked up as her with a half-grave smile. She was all in white, with a sumptaous mass of shining silk and cloudy tulle trailing after her down the steps, and she looked so tall and queen-like, with her lovely neck and arms unveiled to view, and her fair and gentle face above them calm and lovely neck and arms unveiled to view, and ber fair and gentle face above them coim and proud in its serenity, that it was no wonder John Talbot feeling, perhaps, that accident had put him in his proper posture before her, refused to change it, but still knelt waiting for her to pass him. There was ample room upon the wide staircase, but she did not pass. She held out her hand, instead, and said:

"Can I help you up?"

He took her hand and just touched it with his lips, letting it drop again instantly. Then as she passed swiftly on he rose to his feet and went slowly up the stairs. He turned at the landing and looked down at her crossing the brilliantly lighted and decorated half. Again he hoped that she would look at him, but her eyes were straight before her. Those poor eyes! They were full of foolish tears. The little scene was mere gallantry, she knew, excusable on that score, and nothing but what a maltitude wither wither with the with with excusable on that score, and nothing but what excusable on that score, and nothing but what a multitude might have witnessed, but with her, he had no right to indulge in such joking. But then, thank Heaven, he could not know what it was to her—what an acute mingling of joy and pain! She felt angry and indignant, and yet her consciousness was vibrant with that touch of his lips on her hand. How could he? He was heartless and vain—it must he w.!

It happened that the company that evening was composed largely of literary and musical people, and after the return to the drawing room, the talk turned upon poetry. One of the guests was a critic of high authority, and the guests was a critic of high authority, and in agreeing that Tennyson bad written more lines that found echo in the human heart than any other poet of modern times be quoted, in a sonorous, sympathetic voice sev-eral passages to prove his point. "He is pre-eminently the poet of sweet-hearts," he said, "and of 'true love given in vain, in vain.' And how much there is in those simule lines."

those simple lines:

"*O, that 'iwere possible, After long grief and pain. To find the arms of my true love Round me succe again!"

Instantly, and without volition, Kate looked at Talbot, to find his eyes turned engerly on her. It was but a glance, and lasted but one lightning flash, and she looked away. But she could have scourged herself for it. She could not tell how much that plance might have expressed of the feeling that had boundhave expressed of the recong that have seemed a mere casual, accidental look. Well! Heaven belp casual, accidental look. Well! Heaven help her, she thought, it only made her way clearer the future-clearer and more uncompromising.

In a little while music was proposed, and Kate was asked to play.

"O, I couldn't; I really couldn't!" she said, half frightened, and then turning saw that Talbot was standing near, and that he had heard her words and tones, and perhaps interpreted them. As she looked at him, he came forward and said deliberately:

"I hope you won't refuse, Miss Carew. I should be so glad to accompany you, if you would be read?"

"He means it for a challenge," thought Kate, indignantly, "I will take him at his word!"

She rose at once,

That is really an inducement," she said. "And besides, auntic will not forgive me, if I am unaccommodating to-night."

Talbot walked at her side as she went for her violin, and when she had taken it from ite case and picked up her bow, she glanced at the sheet of music that he had selected and placed on the rack, and saw it was Handel's

Her heart gave another bound. She felt for a moment weak and then strong-strong enough for anything that could possibly come.

Taibot began the accompaniment with a rather slow and languarous movement, conscious in every fibre of the last time he had played it, and of the sweet nearness of the woman who had been his inspiration then as now. She stood close by, in her tall, young beauty, clad in shimmering white and gold, and looking a very vision, with her violin resting against her throat and her exquisite, bare arm poised above, waiting to begin. When he struck the note, the first full tone of that violin, making sweet harmony to the ears of others, jangled discordantly with the feel-ings at work in his soul. But it compelled him, that strong imperious sound, and he needs must follow as it led. The aerompani-ment must conform, in a case like this, and as she pointed be must go. In spite of binaself he caught the spirit of it, and to him as well as to her it seemed to summon all his best. Great deeds of daring, crucial tests of strength seemed possible to him now. What could be not do and dare, with always the goal before him of the exceeding great reward that stood this moment within reach of his hand, crabodied in sweet flesh, and clothed in shining raiment. As he played on, the spirit and power of those violin notes met with a full power of those violin notes met with a full power of those violin notes met with a full power of those violin notes met with a full power of those violin notes met with a full power of those violin notes met with a full power of those violence who will be the property and a decorate property in the decorate with a full power of the powe response and adequate support in the deep piano chords, and Talbot felt, in some eestatic piano chords, and Talbot felt, in some cestatic way, that he was moving onward to the con-summation of his heart's great wish. Kate, for her part, felt a far different spirit astir in her breast. To her the grandeur and the glory of it was in this, that the great demand of her life was upon her, and she telt herself strong to meet it, albeit its meaning was pain and its name reaganciation. and its name renunciation.

and its name renunciation.

He looked at her once as she was resting, while he played an interlude, and saw her with her head thrown proudly back, and a look of exultation on her lovely face that he felt hoded him no good. When she presently ended, sounds of enthusiastic praise rose from all parts of the room, in the midst of which she was conscious that Talbot had again turned his searching eyes upon her. She met them calmly and without an atom of responsiveness. From that monsent the man's indefinite fears turned into a set conviction that so far as this girl had any feeling for him at all it was one of cold dislike. That single look had power to set him as far distant as pole from pole—to make him change his interfrom pole—to make him change his inter-pretation of the glance she had turned upon him half an hour ago, and make it mean scorn instead of sympathy.

(Continued in the next JOURNAL)

CANCELLED POSTAGE STAMPS

THE MUCH DISPUTED VALUE OF "A MILLION CANCELLED POSTAGE STAMPS"

LETTER addressed to the United States minister to Switzerland, and promptly replied to by him, dis-closes the fact that at Locle, a small Swiss town near Neuclastel, there exists a model orphanage for girls, whose funds have been for girls, whose funds have been for many years largely increased by the sale of cancelled postage stamps. The home was established in 1814 by a Swiss lady, and was designed as a place of shelter for orphan girls, irrespective of creed or nationality. A house was taken, and soon as many as a hundred girls were sheltered. The stamp trade in this connection was started by a lady, who, on hearing that old postage stamps might be sold advantageously, volunteered to help the orphans by begging stamps from her friends and selling them through the medium friends and selling them through the medium of certain stamp dealers, who were willing to waive their rights to any commission. Her effort soon became known, and now benevolent people the world over are belying the institution by sending to the orphunage packages of old postage stamps, which are sorted and disposed of to the best advantage. As a help to those who may feel anxious to send stamp offerings to contribute to the support and education of these destitute children we transcribe the rules, prefacing them with the in-formation that the managers of the orphanage only accept parcels of stanqs from benevolent friends, and that no notice whatever will be taken of offers of stamps for cash.

First: All stamps not whole and rounded with the perforated edging are useless; the only exception made concerns rare stamps, which philatelic collectors prefer to possess, however spoilt, rather than to have no sign of SECOND: The price of whole stamps varies, and can often only be decided by experts, hence charitable contributors are ad-vised to forward indifferently any kind of stamps not obliterated.

Tinun: Stamps must be cut out from en-velopes, but it is not indispensable to remove them from the bit of paper on which they have been gummed.

Fouris: It is scarely worth while to divide stamps in packets of 50 or 100.

Figure Embossed stamps, as well as the printed ones on postal cards and paper wrap-pers, have more value than the ordinary ones, but in cutting them out a half luch margin must always be left.

The address of this institution is "L'Aisle de Billodes, Locle, Switzerland." that this article should settle at once and forever the much disputed question of the value of a collection of "a million cancelled postage

SOME GRACEFUL EMBROIDERY DESIGNS

[AS WORKED AT THE CHICAGO SOCIETY OF DECORATIVE ART]

By Mande Haywood

HE Claimge Society of Decomplye Art was organ-ized in 1877, upon the same pinus as those already being successfully carried on in eastern cities. It is not revealed that there is any par-be told in connection with its origin, rise, or progress, but its principal difficulty may be considered not uncharacteristic. The situation of its rooms, looking out as they do upon the lake front, with its network of railroad tracks, necessitates a constant warfare against enemies in the shape of smoke, coal dust and grime, and renders it extremely difficult to preserve the work as spotlessly pure and clean as deli-cate embroideries should be kept, for in the summer, of course, windows must be thrown open. The work shown by the Society is of the most varied kind, including specimens of many different styles and branches of enbroidery. A few only of the pieces are here presented.

A PRETTILY DESIGNED BED-COVER

COME of the finest and nost noticeable pieces recently were some prettily rendered designs for bed coverings and a very daintily executed spread and pillow for a child's crib, which have been chosen as illustrations for this paper, and will be carefully described further on. According to the usual custom in these societies, orders are executed on the premises by regularly employed embroideresses, and the bulk of the work on exhibition is offered for sale on a ten per cent. exhibition is offered for sale on a ten per cent.

FOR THE CRIB OF A LITTLE KING

THE spread and pillow for a baby's crib in Hinatrations No. 2 and No. 3 are charm-ingly dainty pieces of work. The material used is white Chinese lines. It is just a yard wide, and the whole length of the spread is about a yard and three-eighths, a quarter of a yard being turned over as shown in the drawing. On this flap the chief part of the design is placed. Each end of the spread is finished with a bemstitch, the flap having also an edging of white lace. The garlands are worked in delicate coloring, the flowers being principally roses, violets and forget-me-nots. The ribbon bows are made of pule blue on both spread and pillow. The scattered sprays on the lower portion of the spread harmonize with the tones used in the garlands.

A PILLOW FOR BABY (Illus. No. 3)

THE BABY'S BELONGINGS

A N extremely pretty sachet, which would prove a most suitable and acceptable gift to a young nother, might be rendered either in pale blue or pink. The foundation is simply a square of the colored untered silk, lined with white Chius silk, and interlined with a thin layer of perfumed well. sue, and therefore with a thin layer of perfumed wad-ding. The four corners are tied together with a knot of ribbon to match the tone chosen for the sachet, and inside various articles used for an inferior trible. inside various articles used for an infant's toilet are fastened in place by more of the same ribbon, a brush, comb, powder-puffand package of safety-pins being provided in the particular example just described. Strips of fannel ornamented with feather or brier stitch in feather or brier stitch in colored embruidery slik and tied with a ribbon how make pretty and useful cases to be kept filled with safety-pins of assorted sizes. Crib blan-kets of fine soft material are button-holed around the edge either plainly or in scallops, and marked with the child's initials or mono-

MY.

AN EMPIRE SPREAD AND BOLSTER

THE spread and bolster in Hustration No. THE spread and bolster in Hiustration No. 4 were made for a room furnished in the Empire style. The design was embroidered in delicate shades on a hundsome, soft, cream-colored satin, and finished simply with a cord pround the edge. The bed itself was glided, mad had embroidered panels inserted at the head and foot. Among others was a very harmonious, handsome and effective spread, the coloring being made to match some Empire brocade used for the hangings. A conventional tulip design was rendered in light gold silks, and the background darned in dull reds, The leaves were outlined, and the flowers worked in long and short stitches, the long and short stitches, the being of a rich cream color.

Those spreads are intended not to hang down straight as in Hustration No. 1, but to be tucked in all around, in some cases the Empire beds having ornamented sides with carved decorations, and in others a festooned valance being provided in materials and coloring to harmonize cream color. and coloring to harmonize with the spreads and car-tains employed. In this style of decoration the plain bolster, as illustrated, is always provided, which is, of course, together with the embroidered covering, re-moved at night. The pil-lows are frequently kept in a long-shaped ottoman box, placed at the foot of the bed, and which is itself anothe and which is itself amply provided with cushions in order to form not only a handsome but a comfortable lounge.

lighter or a darker shade than the plush, in order to gain variety of effect. The flowers had radiating lines extending from them rendered in green side by side. The whole design was also outlined in the gold thrend. The curtain was inter-lined with Canton flamed to give it substance. Another por-tiers was of ecru-colored silk, with a lattice work serves it and with a lattice work across it and up the sides, applied in green plush, a design of ivy being twisted about it and embroidered in silks. A border of conventional tulips extended across the lower part. the lower part. Some curtains were made of a plain, heavy material and turned over at the top, the design being worked on the frieze formed in this way. One in gobelin cloth had large roses for the subject. A hanging which was a hormony of vol.

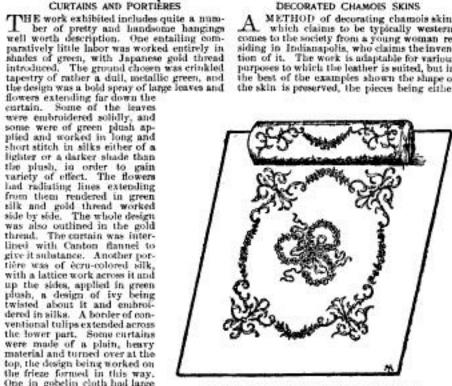

which was a harmony of yel-lows and browns had marsh-mallows powdered all over the ground, and yet another, effective in dull, quaint coloring, had a band of Venetian embroidery placed about one-third up the curtain.

CURTAINS AND PORTIÈRES

One curtain shown was, perhaps rather for admiration than for actual imitation by American hands. It was a Spanish design of native execution on Tussore silk. It was exhibited just as it was imported, the idea

DECORATED CHAMOIS SKINS

A METHOD of decorating chamois skins which claims to be typically western, comes to the society from a young woman residing in Indianapolis, who claims the invention of it. The work is adaptable for various purposes to which the leather is suited, but in the best of the examples shown the shape of the skin is preserved, the pieces being either for table mats or to be mounted on plush for screens or panels. The designs preferred are some mediaval and some Indian in character, and are adapted by the artist herself to the shape and size of the pieces. The forms are tinted flarly in subdued "art tones," and then the design is wrought gorgeously in colored silks, tiosel threads, beads and glass jewels.

AN EMPIRE SPREAD AND BOLSTER (Illus. No. 4)

A considerable variety of bureau covers and to liet sets were shown. Bolting cloth is a favorite material, the design, usually of some delicate-colored flower, being tinted in oils thinned with torpentine, the outlines, vehings and markings being readered.

ings being rendered in embroidery silks. The old-fashioned pin-cushion hoxes, with little brass feet, embroidered covers and lace frills are much liked. Large, square cushions with square custoons with tiny bows at each corner, and also those of a long, nar-row shape, are like-wise used. The num-ber of different styles of work shows what of work shows what interest is taken in the subject.

Nothing particularly novel is to be seen in table linen. The favorite effects seem to be in white, outlined with yellow or green, and in colors, of delicate pinks and greens in mother-of-pearl tones. Pretty tea napkins in fine linen, twenty inches square, had each a different floral spray worked in one cor-ner in wash silk, and were very graceful.

being that as there is such a diversity of tastes, it should be lined and mounted to suit the individual requirements of its eventual

AN EFFECTIVE TABLE COVER

THIS extremely effective table cover (Illustration No. 5) is worked on flux velours, of a warm, golden-brown tone, the coloring used in the design being chiefly in brownish tones, very near the color of the ground; the forms are work ed solidly in creamy shades, with the centers shades, with the centers made of French knots in brown. The leaves are in long and short stitch, of rather an olive hoe. The curved forms which characterize the design are couched in heavy silk, and the whole is outlined with mold thread. The line gold thread. The line defining the border is a double row of copper-colored cord. The finish is a beavy cord and the lining is of dull old gold.

In many cases double In many cases double faced flax velours is employed for table covers, curtains, and other purposes, because where the design is applied or couched they require no liming, the material being so thick that the stitches employed for this kind of work are invisible at the back. A very pretty and favorite finish is tassels, manufactured by the needlewoman herself from the silks used in the design. in the design.

SIMPLICITY AND TASTE IN DOILIES

A MONG the smaller pieces may be seen a some dainty work. A set of doilies, of which two are shown in Illustration No. 6, were simple and effective in treatment. They were on fine, white linen, the edges being hemstitched. The one has little sprays of yellow jasmine in the corners and pink roses at the sides, the square border line being worked in green with a wall the curved line about it in in green silks and the curved line about it in

TWO SIMPLE AND TASTEFUL DOILIES (Illus. No. 6)

A SPREAD FOR A BABY'S CRIB (IBus. No. 2)

commission, work being also taken from con-commission, work being also taken from con-tributors living in all parts of the United States. About two thousand we men have their mannes on the books as being benefited in this way. All work has to be examined and passed by a committee before it is accepted, and in order to be pronounced eligible must reach a re-quired standard of excellence.

quired standard of excellence.

As already indicated, the variety of bedspreads shown may be considered somewhat of a special feature. A certain demand for them has led to considerable attention being paid to their design find execution. Many materials are employed, but on the whole fine white linen seems to have the preference. The one pictured in Illustration No. 1 is worked entirely in yellow silks on a firm round thread French lines, with very happy effect. The scalloped edge is worked in button-hole stitch in the yellow silk.

AN EFFECTIVE TABLE COVER (lilus, No. 5)

gold thread. The other has the little round forms embroidered in white, the leaves and stem of delicate green, and the intersecting line of copper colored thread. Other sets, less unconances, bowever, had small sprays and ribbon-forms worked upon them. One dozen had seaweed designs embroidered on pale pink silk, but many would not consider these in such good laste as upon a white ground.

THE EVOLUTION OF THE HIRED GIRL

BY HARRIST PRESCOTT SPOFFORE

IFTY years ago, throughout the re-gious where slavery did not ob-tain, when we relied for our domestic service on the children of the old freed slaves, on the needy among our country people, the complaint about servants was un-beard. The women of the house, whatever their rank and wealth, aided largely in the conduct of affairs; and the young girls of small nears, or of no means at all, graduated in regular order from the kitchen into marriage. When immigration from Ireland began, life was still so simple that no one recognized the was still so simple that no one recognized the enormous changes which that immigration was about to bring. The sight of the pleasant old woman in her long cloak and her mob cap was like a journey to foreign lands, and we felt toward the sturdy pensant beside her as if he were a part of nuclent history. But, from the company that trod upon the heris of these people, the housekeepers who before could not afford a servant could now procure a pair of hands for the drudgery at fifty cours a week. When this drudge became better accomplished When this drudge became better accomplished she received seventy-five cents a week, and sometimes a dollar. Until some time after 1850 a dollar and a half a week mas considered handsome wages. On this capital these servants imported a whole generation, as one might say, of young Irish girls and boys. They made an instance where the supply created the demand, instend of the demand creating the supply; for many individuals who had always done their own work found the possibility of having some one else to do it, and incon-tinently opened their kitchens to the procession of young persons that have been filing through them ever since. Meanwhile the young perthem ever since. Meanwhile the young persons of our own nationality who had formerly done household work were released from the kitchens, and felt that they went one step higher in entering factories and shops. The daughters of the house, too, set free from domestic duries, had time for books and music and general cultivation, and a wave of culture has swept over the land in the path of these Irish girls that leaves us owing them an unpayable debt. It does not need that the culture should be of the deepest or highest; such as it is it is an advance in the direction of the as it is it is an advance in the direction of the deepest and highest, and in large measure it is a consequence of the leisure that the Irish im-migration has made for us.

WITH the Civil War the wages of our ser-W 17th the Civil Wat the wages of our servants rose with the price of all commodities. When gold was in the neighborhood of three hundred, and all values were trebled, and some, like that of cotton cloth, were many times multiplied, the house servants naturally felt that the dollar and a half was insufficient, and they presently demanded more. The value of the cotton cloth has fallen to its old standard; so has nearly everything that the maid has occasion to buy thing that the maid has occasion to buy, while house rent, beef and many other things that the mistress must purchase, remain nearly at the war value. The wages of the maid, however, have not remained at the war rate, but have steadily advanced, so that an average cook often commands five dollars a week. and one of a superior sort, yet far below the rank of a chof, receives eight. This rise of wages, and its permanency, is again more or less in defiance of the law of supply and de-

Perhaps we would not quarrel with the necessity of paying high wages if we remem-bered the service that the recipients of these wages have already rendered us, the character of the service which they now render to us daily, and the fact that after all it is but slight the perpetual washing of dishes, and the sweeping, dusting and scouring by means of which home is made habitable, and leisure possible for our wives and daughters.

Indeed, when we recount to ourselves what our homes would be without their labors, so far from quarreling with the price paid them we feel like giving them an increase; and when we picture such a scene of desolation as the kitchen toust present to a girl who descends to light the fire on a cold morning, we feel that the utmost consideration we can give her is not enough.

T is not outside the part of this considera- tion for aeryant girls, nevertheless, that they should be subjected to certain restrictions; in relation to their goings and comings, the hours they must keep in order to do their work and yet preserve their health; in relation to their visitors, and their behavior, both out of regard to their own self-respect and to the rights of their employers.

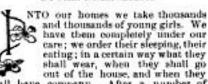

Auv zrho employs servants can have those who will require few restrictions, and will give good measure of faithfulness, by exercising judgment in the selection in the first place, and by treating them properly after-ward. Where no selection is possible, kind-ness and patience on the part of the mistress, respect shown to her and a life that exacts respect from her, will often make faithfulness and worth out of poor material. And it makes small difference in this connection whether one lifes the pictures are colored girl, the stundy Swede, the intelligent French, the silent German or one among the great throng of frish girls. Whatever and whoever they are, they are girls away from home, in strange houses, among strange people, waiting upon other more fortunate young girls, and are often those who have left mother and motherland, and in many cases have nothing to be sure of in this country but their church. Where the effort is made to render the home a happy one, then the grateful and faithful heart of the servant girl is apt to make berapproach that ideal standard of perfection which we have when we speak of the decaded seconds in old foreign families, and in the households of our grandmothers in the third and fourth

BETWEEN MISTRESS AND MAID

A Page of Suggestions by Experienced Housewives

WHO ARE OUR BEST SERVANTS?

By Mrs. LYMAN ABBOTT

care; we order their steeping, their enting; in a certain way what they shall wear, when they shall go out of the house, and when they shall have company. After a number of years of their own. What sort of homes do home of their own. What sort of homes do then make? By this time we about have homes of their own. What sort of homes do they make? By this time we should have trained a large number of home keepers, and from their children we should have valued assistants to come back into our homes. Do we have such? If not, why not? We complain bitterly of the inefficiency of our servants and their lack of conscientious treatment of our time and our property, and yet many of these very people have been trained by those whom we trained. It is an old and almost too fa-miliar saying that actions speak londer than words; but it is quite worth while for us to apply the proverb to this subject. If we avoid doing everything that we can get another to do, if we are careless about putting our own thiness now were though we justed upon antheir lack of conscientious treatment of our things away, even though we insist upon another's doing it for us, shall we expect that other one to put her things away in order or to use her time and her property any better than we have used ours. than we have used ours.

NEAR my home a very large apartment house has recently been built. For two years workmen were busy piling it, stone by stone, and adding all the modern improve-ments and decorations. A friend of mine who looked forward to occupying one of the apart-ments, explained the fact that she had decided not to take it, in this way. "I would not put my good Mary into such a miserable dark room to sleep, and into such a wretched kitch-en to cook!" The misarrangement in these "flats" represents the thought in many of our homes regarding the servant. Any corner will do for her; any discarded bit of farniture will answer for her room.

Is it may wonder that a class so treated should begin to demand for themselves something better, and in making the demand should go as much too far in the direction of liberty as the mistresses have gone in the direction of restriction. I am not surprised that girls pre-fer factory work, which gives them a measure of independence a part of the time, even though they must spend those independent bours in a meagre attic room, and must eat scanty food. Their crust eaten in independence is sweeter than the refuse of our richer tables, eaten in abject dependence. Of course, this is not the ordinary way we mistresses look at this matter. We consider our servants favored. We take into our homes, as a rule, those who are less intelligent, less educated than we are; we expect them to be exquisitely honest, to understand the distinctions of means and from better than our neighbors do. We expect them to see life wholly through our eyes; to be devoted to our children, and to eyes; to be devoted to our children, and to receive with gratifude the wages we pay, the food we choose to give them, and the corner of the house we set spart for them. Are we quite fair?

IT is difficult to say from which of our sev-I a untionalities the best servants come. In a house where the family is very regular, the orderly and ambitions Swede is, perhaps, the best. Where there is much drudgery the sturdy German may be best. Where the household is necessarily irregular, where the yearing bestel are coming home from school young people are coming home from school after the ordinary noon med, where the house-mother in her cares needs the sympathies of her maid-servant, the warm-hearted Irish girl cannot be surpassed,

For qualities of loyalty and conscientions attention to duty the Scotch cannot be exoccided. So far as my experience goes, they are specially good in places of trust. Many persons much prefer colored servants, and if they become attached to the family their feithfulness and devotion may atone for their lack of ability to assume responsibility. But in each case the treatment must be according to the disposition. If you expect from the mercurial Irish girl cordial acceptance of a great burden of work at one time you must be ready to give her a little outing occasionally, and must take an interest in her burdens when they come I find it much better to take my servants into a sort of partnership. I talk with them about the work to be done, as far as possible letting them understand the circumstances which call for the extra work. I let them know my guests, and try to secure their interest in making my guests happy. And I find that the plan works well. If homes are to be treated as machines, each member of the household only a cog in the great wheel, then the servant is to take her own place, and to have only that share in the running of the machine which her special bit should take. When such is the case, and order and system are the rule, when all is well lubricated, the end of such a mechanical home is served. The mistress who expects her maid to be ready with cheerfulness to do any extra piece of work, to show sympathy in sickness, to give up her own pleasures, must be ready to care for her maid in her sickness. to give up sometimes her own pleasures that the maid may have an outing, and must teach her children that consideration and kindness are always to be shown to those who serve them. Whatever be the nationality from which our domestics come, we must not for get that we are all of one family, and One is our Father.

UNTRUTHFULNESS OF SERVANTS

By HELEN S. CONANT.

ARY, if anybody calls I am These words were spoken ont. These words were spoken recently in my hearing; spoken, too, by sweet lips, lips that would have proudly scorned to tell a lie. And yet this was a lie direct. We were sitting in my friend's cosy upstairs snuggery, and she had just expressed one would come to interrupt tial chat we were enjoying so.

a hope that no the confidential chat we were enjoying so much. "We will not be interrupted," she ex-claimed. "Mary, if anybody calls I am out." "Yes, ma'am," said Mary, very demurely, as she left the room.

Was that right, my dear?" I said. "Do

"Was that right, my dear?" I said. "Do you expect Mary to be truthful to you when you teach her to lie for you?"

Of course there was no denying the fact that wrong had been done; wrong to Mary, the maid, wrong to the friend who might call to be turned away with a lie, and wrong to the sweet youthful lips which had spoken the thoughtless and untruthful words. Still my friend tried to justify herself.

"Everybody does it. I am told constantly that nearls are out when I know they are at that people are out when I know they are at home," she said.

Now, the fact that everybody does a thing never made wrong right. In this case, how-ever, everybody does not do it. A thoughtful, honorable woman has too much respect for herself, and too much care for her servants to stoop to such a falsehood. We do not always stop to think of the power of example, nor of how closely we are watched by those whose opportunities for pure moral development have been much less than our own.

RUTHFULNESS is a necessary quality in A servant. Misdeeds are forgiven and forgotten when they are frankly confessed. We are sorry for the broken dish when the maid comes to us with the pieces in her hand, but we rejuice in the feeling of confidence it gives us that we are receiving faithful if not always careful service; but it is different when we find the pieces hid away at the back of a high shelf, or discover them by accident in the ash-barvel. A mistress who will deliber-ately instruct her maid to tell a lie cannot expect to know the truth of what goes on in her kitchen, and if she does not, she is in a large measure to blame for it, for in telling false-hoods herself she loses the respect of her servant, and a mistress who is not respected will never be well served, neither can she exert a good influence upon those humble workers who, for the time being, are members of her household, as it is her duty to do.

household, as it is her duty to do.

I have been a housekeeper for thirty years, and it is not theory but experience that leads me to say that many fallings of the malds in the kitchen spring from the failings of the mistress. There are bad servants, as every housekeeper known, with failings of their own, often inherited from or developed by former mistresses, but so deeply rooted that the most judicious treatment fails to overcome them. On the other hand, there are many young girls fresh from the old country who young girls fresh from the old country who have good inclinations, and who can easily be made truthful, and honest, and upright, if the mistress will set the example by always bolding berself quiet, and kind, and firm, and truthful, as a true lady should. We are too careless before our servants. We allow them enreless before our servants. We allow them to see our weaknesses, our little ebullitions of temper, our petty subterfuges.

THERE is one household which I have THERE is one household which I have watched many years where trouble with servants is unknown. I cannot believe that good girts always come to that particular mistress. That she is judicious in choosing those who shall enter her household I do not doubt, but that alone is not enough to secure the domestic peace which always reigns within her doors. Her servants remain with her for years, and they serve her well and feithfully her doors. Her servants remain with her for years, and they serve her well and faithfully because she secures their respect and their af-fection. The discipline of that bouschold is perfect. A firm, sweet woman's hand touches every detail, and a kind and true woman's heart amouthes the rough places and settles all the little differences. There is no need to say that this mistress never teaches her maid to tell an untruth. If she is obliged to refuse herself to a friend, she sends a message which is true accompanied by some sweet word or regret, which is sure to be pleasantly received. Every lady has a right to refuse herself to friends when sickness weariness, or some domestic duty makes it difficult, impossible, perhaps, to be at the time a gracious and coorteous bostess. The message of refusal, however, can be so worded that no person of any common sense or judgment could feel offended. "Mrs. Brown is engaged," is ab-rupt and not to be recommended, although it may be the truth, but there are many ways of naking it more gracious. "Mrs. Brown can-not receive to-day," is simple, truthful, and should offend no one, as, if the maid delivers the message at the door to each and all alike, it is evident that no slight is intended.

Many ladies now have one day in the week when they are "at home." This arrangement becomes necessary in large cities where one's circle of acquaintances is extensive and call-ing is a matter of ceremony. But the fact that a lady sets apart one day to receive friends is no excuse for instructing the maid to tell an untruth to those who, for some reason, call on another day, but it is a reason why those wh call cut of season have no right to be offended when they are told that "Mrs, Brown is not receiving.

RECOMMENDATION OF SERVANTS

By CHRISTINE TERRIUNE HERRICK

HE chief domestic problem of the age is conceded, by common consent, to be the servant ques-tion. It is second to no politi-cal subject in the thought that has been lavished upon it, the chapters and volumes that have been written about it, the conversations, discussions and lectures that have been suggested by it.

Within the limits of a magazine article it. would be hopeless to attempt to touch upon more than a single phase of this burning topic of the time, but that one phase probably sur-passes in importance any other. To put it in one seatence: What sort of references shall mistresses give servants?

Here, perhaps, someone may interpose with the query, "should any references be given?"

Yes, by all means,

For in the first place, it is unjust to refuse to the faithful, hard-working and efficient servant that which is her due, and which to her possesses a distinct money value. In the second place, the hope of obtaining a good recom-mendation acts as an incentive to the lame and lazy, and does valuable service by pro-voking to good works in cases where higher considerations would fail of results through a lack of appreciation. It is only when a mis-tress can say no good of a servant that she should positively refuse to give a reference. This objection disposed of, let us return to the original rejust.

the original point.

WHAT sort of references shall mistresses give servants? First, let them be true, Women, otherwise honomble, have concernwomen, otherwise honormule, have conversing this matter a perverted sense of right and wrong, a perversion that is, I dare to say, in seven cases out of ten, begotten of moral cowardice. The whilom mistress feels the recoil natural to a refined woman from the torrent of abuse that would in all likelihood be her portion were she to write a reference tarring as clearly the defeats as the righter of stating as clearly the defects as the virtues of the departing Abigail.

In the other three cases of the ten a morbid and entirely ill-directed consideration for the servant inspires the woman, who will say only good of a faulty domestic, lest the latter lose the chance of a good situation. She fails to carry the result of her misplaced charity to its legitimate conclusion and to put beneaff in the place of the future mistress of the incom-retent ill temperal or dishapers halo, whose petent, ill-tempered, or disbonest help whose last employer lacked the courage to expose her in her true colors.

A bonsekeeper who was thus placed between the Scylla of injustice to a fellow housewife, and the Charybeis of justice to a dismissed servant, devised the expedient of telling, if not the whole truth, at least nothing but the truth. She had discharged her nurse for imperiinence, laziness, and cruelty to a sick child. The reference the maid bore away with her was as follows:

"Mary Jones has lived as nurse with me for three months. I have found her neat, honest

Not a word of the temper, the industry, or the general competency of the maid for the place she had filled. No woman of any discern-ment would have engaged the girl for a nurse's position upon such a recommendation.

Undoubtedly, housekeepers should cultivate a loyalty to one another that would forbid them to falsify or disguise facts in the references they give servants. That they lack this loyalty is indicated by the adoption in most first-class intelligence offices of the plan of confidential references wherein near he since. confidential references, wherein may be given by one employer, for the benefit of others, the unvarnished truth-a truth that often differs widely from the statements contained in the "recommend" furnished to the employés themselves.

In small places there may exist a danger that the refusal to give a landatory reference would result in the boycotting of the offender. In large towns there can be no such risk. The only disagreeable result the veracions mistress would have to encounter would be the re-proaches of the victim of her truth telling,

THE way of the reformer is no easier than that of the transgressor, and the pioneers a movement for trutbful references would probably have to endure the penalties of their courage and draw what consolation they could from the reflection that they were taking the first decisive steps toward forming a trades-union of housekeepers that might in time revolutionize domestic service in this country. The servant would not be slow to learn that

The servant would not be slow to learn that the price of a good reference is good behavior. this reform is fairly under way let the timid mistress, when in doubt, play her trump cand of refusing to give any but a verbal refer-

Few maids will fail to be satisfied-or to felgo satisfaction—with this mode of action. It gives the mistresses in case and in posse a triffe more trouble, but the gain is worth the poins. Be it said to the realit of housekeepers poins. Be it said to the credit of housekeepers that they are usually quite ready to be inter-viewed amout servants, and that in most cases they will practice a veracity that is too often conspicuous by its absence from the ordinary written reference.

In spite of the introduction into many intelligence offices of the confidential references telligence offices of the connectative references already alluded to, there are still offices where these are not demanded. There is little danger that as some one has suggested, a lost reference might be found and used by some one who had no right to it. Such an occur-rence, though possible, is highly improbable,

In every instance, the housekeeper who en-gages a servant should, write to the former employer to verify the reference. The unwritten laws of interdomestic etiquette de-mand this. When the reforms suggested in this little paper are an accomplished fact, the formality may be allowed to lapse.

A PRINCESS'S MIDNIGHT WOLF HUNT

By Marquise de Fontenoy

OR many years public interest has been drawn toward that portion of Austrian Poland which would constitute the battle ground in the event of a war with Russia. Beyond the track or ken of the ordinary tourist, and comparatively undisturbed by the shrick and rattle of the railway trains, it has remained a terra incognita to all except the officers and troops charged with the duty of guarding the frontier, and to the few great nobles who dwell in grandeur in the magnificent castles which here and there crown the rocky eminences and dominate the OR many years public in-the duty of guarding the frontier, and to the few great nobles who dwell in grandeur in the magnificent castles which here and there crown the rooky eminences and dominate the boundless steppes. The boundary line between Austria and Russia is closely guarded by regiments of Cosancks on one side and by Austrian lancers on the other, and the surrounding country, being extremely wild and but sparsely populated by a half-civilized peasantry, and being, moreover, infested with wild beasts, the life of the officers detailed for frontier duty is often fraught with much danger and adventure.

A few years ago, in the month of August, my regiment, the —th Lancers, was ordered to leave its pleasant quarters in Vienna, and proceed to W——, for the purpose of relieving the — Regiment of Lancers on the Russian frontier, and four weeks later we reached our station on the border of the steppes. The country appeared extremely desolate, with villages few and far between immense plains of grain and grass; large swamps of reedy wildenness and gloomy forests of pines, through which the wind maned piteously. The village where we were quartered was rather picturesque. The possants' huts, built on both sides of a broad, and were shaded by groves of birches and willow trees. The nearest town was a nineteen hours' ride over excerable roads, and when finally reached was but a miserable place, which did not repay the long journey. When wearrived at our destination we looked rather disconsolately at the bare, damp, wooden barracks which our predecessors had left in a very unprepossessing condition, and we should have given up the attempt of ever hoping to make our abode even moderately habitable had it not been for the cheerful and lighthearted manner in which young Princess M——, the wife of our Colonel, who had been advecturous enough to accompany her husband into this voluntary exile, accepted all the hardships of the situation. The young Princess, who was of French birth, had been married at sixteen to our Colonel, Prince M—, and at the be her duty to come with us, and to cheer us in our despondency. God bless her for her unbe her duty to come with us, and to cheer us in our despondency. God bless her for her unselfishness and courage in coming! For the months which we spent on the frontier would have been well-nigh unbearable without her constant and untiring efforts to make both soldiers and officers book at the bright side or things. When she appeared among us with her memories of Paris, her joyful animation, her sweet, gny, silvery votce and her great eyes sparkling alike with mirth and with health, every face brightened, and the dullest hours were changed into dreams of wonderland. How could we complain of the privations which this petted Court beauty accepted so uncomplainingly and with such happy grace? She arranged her suite of miserable rooms in a truly marvelous fashion with heavy carpets and draperies, concealing the dingy walls beneath mellow-tinted, Eastern embruideries, and littered the tables and consoles with books and bric-h-brac until the place resembled a palace. Although such a small creature, she had an indomitable spirit, and was a famous sportswoman. She shot, fished, drove and rode better than any woman I have ever known. She was passionately fond of the most dangerous of sports, have ever know ately fond of the most dangerous of sports, and even made a point of sharing our bear and wolf hunts. She was not one of those women who are not to hamper men by requir-ing protection and attention in moments of danger, for she could be depended upon to see to her own safety under any kind of circumstance, and possessed such pluck and courage that she never gave us any trouble whatsoever. Moreover, she was continually planning some amusement or other to enliven the long winter evenings, and even succeeded in organizing some private theatricals for the special benefit of our soldiers and their wives. So the months passed and winter came on—a bitter, cold winter. Sudden storms and heavy falls of snow had whitened the plains and bared the dark forests of the Carpathian range. The icy wind blew like a hurricane, and the wolves came down in hungry bands to the lonely steppes. The whole landscape was frozen and dazzling! The great stars seemed to burn in the northern sky, and the mys of the silvery moon made the night almost us clear as day. The intense cold, the sweeping wind, the sense of profound solltude that environed us, exercised a salutary effect upon officers and men, and we plunged with enthusiasm into the winter sports which were our only relaxation and amusement. We spent most of our days out of doors in violent exercise, riding, sleighing or skating in the teeth of the east wind; skim-ming like swallows down the frozen course of the river. No doubt the country was monost-onous and bare, and yet with its vast white solitudes, its flocks of wild fowl, its reedy wastes, its countless frozen streams, it was solitudes, its flocks of wild fowl, its reedy wastes, its countless frozen streams, it was grand in its own peculiar way. As soon as the hush of winter had settled down around us our little Princess got into the habit of having four black stallious harnessed to her sleigh, and wrapped in furs to her eyes she would drive her high-mettled steeds over the silent plains, stopping at the huts of the poorest peasants and bringing light and comfort with her wherever she went. Little by little she won her way into the homes and hearts of the half-savage and suspicious people. She was not ensity discouraged or rebuffed, and she did much good among the poor and also among our soldiers.

In January the inhabitants began to complain bitterly of the depredations committed by the wolves, and the Princess urged us to organize a wolf hunt on the next clear moonlight night. The wilds beasts were infuriated by hunger and ready for anything. On the fifteenth of January we started in two sleighs which were drawn by young and swift horses and driven by clever and skillful coachmen. The Princess's coachman was a Russian, who emitted a peculiar sound, something between a whirr and a whistle, that seemed to have a emitted a peculiar sound, something between a whirr and a whistle, that seemed to have a

Nearer and nearer drew our pursuers, and we commenced to shoot. Many fell, and for a few moments the pack seemed frightened and stackened its speed, possibly for the purpose of devouring their wounded comrades, as is their custom. But with the help of the little pig's squeaks we soon had them again at our heels. Things were going on splendidly, and we were all in high glee, when suddenly from a dark muss of Siberian pines, a few hundred yards ahead of us, a second pack of wolves rushed toward us so unexpectedly that we found ourselves almost surrounded. This was a disagreeable surprise. The terrified horses reared and plunged as they saw their enemies making straight for them at full gallop. Ivan, the coachman, without losing his head, whipped them up, whistled and screamed at them, and managed to start them off again in an oblique line. At that moment a huge, shaggy, grey wolf made a desperate spring and threw himself at the throat of one of our leaders. A shot from the Princese's rifle struck him in the head, and he rolled in the snow before he could inflict any linjury to the horse; but so madly frightened was the latter that he gave a the hend, and he rolled in the snow before he could inflict any injury to the horse; but so madly frightened was the latter that he gave a lurch forward, which almost upset the sleigh, erked the poor little pig out into the snow and threw Ivan from his box right upon us, where he laid motionless, while the horses tore away at a pace of which nothing can give even the faintest notion. The worst of it was that they were now racing at headlong speed toward a clump of atunted fir trees, which meant a final collapse and certain death to us all. The sleigh rocked and swayed like a paper toy as we flew over the snow. The inanimate body of the coachman, Ivan, lay across us in such a manner that we could not stir, or even use our rifles, and we were just about to prepare ourselves for the final crash, magical effect on the team, and every few minutes he employed this incentive with so good a result that we soon left for behind us the sleigh containing our companions. As my good fortune would have it I accompanied the Princess and her husband, together with another young officer, Count 8—. The night was piercingly cold. There was no ty cold. break on the wide steppe, save here and there a clump of sombre pine trees. The frozen plains stretched endlessly around us, dotted here and there by patches of reeds and rushes. Very soon we heard the sound of a wolf pack, howling igruesomely from afar. The sleigh dashed on, the balf frantic borsestenring their way over the hard, glittering snow. Suddenly the howling of the wolves was heard drawing nearer, and presently we were able to distin-guish the phosphorescent gleam emitted by guish the phosphorescent gleam emotes guish the phosphorescent gleam emotes their glaring eyes, even before we could define their forms. A bundle of straw had been tied their forms. A bundle of straw had been tied their forms. A bundle of straw had been tied behind the sleigh, and was being trailed along on the snow, and, according to the custom of experienced wolf hunters in these regions, we experienced wolf hunters in these regions, we had taken with us, tied in a strong can vas bag, a small sucking rig, which we pinched from time to time for the purpose of attracting the wolves by its squeals and shricks of protest. The little Princess sat motionless, her rife in her slender hands, her eyes fixed on the approaching troop of wild animals. She seemed impervious to any sense of fear, and appeared to the confective calm although the group have known. perfectly calm, although she must have known that hunts of this kind are the most dangerous and perilous ever attempted; for if by misfor-tune the sleigh were to be overturned, or an accident happen to the horses, it meant certain death to the occupants.

"The Princess stooped over the dashboard . . . and clutched the trailing reins."

when suddenly Princess M——, who had been sitting on the edge of the sleigh, strug-gled to her feet, poised berself marvelously in spite of the furious rocking to and fro, and crouching her little body for the spring, with all the science of an experienced gymnast cleared the back of the box and launched her-self into Ivan's empty seat. Then, holding on an's emp Inen. thereto with one hand, she stooped over the dashboard, bending her head almost to the level of the snow-covered ground between the level of the snow-covered ground between the horses, and with a powerful effort succeeded in clutching the trailing reins, which every moment threatened to become entangled in the horses' feet. Grasping them in her right hand she pulled herself up, and sitting firmly in Ivan's seat regained control of the runaway team with incredible skill. How she did it I, myself, who was an eye-witness, could not tell. A moment more and she could not tell. A moment more and she would have pitched head foremost between the could not tell. horses' feet; a moment more and the sleigh would have been overturned by the pine trees, now only a hundred yards distant. Her delicate arms were wrenched almost from their sockets in her efforts to master the terrified horses, but she succeeded in turning their heads from the dangerous thicket in front of heads from the dangerous thicket in front of us toward the open plain. For a minute the frenzied beasts rushed on, then slackened perceptibly, and obeyed the tiny hands which held the reins. Our lives were saved, but we could not find time at that moment to thank the little fairy who had so pluckfly rescued us, for after laying the still senseless Ivan on the bottom of the sleigh we were forced to short as fast as we could load at the forced to shoot as fast as we could load at the wolves, which had now united into one huge pock and were hot in our pursuit. The slaughter that we did that night was terrible, and we left a broad track of bleeding and man-gled carensess behind us to mark our path, Verst upon verst was covered, the Princess drivverst upon verst was covered, the Princes driv-ing the team with perfect skill and at almost me-ing speed. At length the glimmer of dim lights became visible in the distance, and ten min-utes later, with a sigh of relief, our fair driver pulled up her exhausted horses before a cluster of miserable dwellings. A peasant wrapped from head to foot in sheepskins came out of one of the isbas into the cold, which was inone of the isbas into the cold, which was intense enough to freeze any living thing, and he invited us into the house. We lifted Ivan from the sleigh and carried him in, laying him down on a pile of skins and rugs in front of the blazing stove. It was a poor, miserable place, this Polish isba, but the people were kind and auxious to help, for they knew our little Princess. They brewed us some hot ten which restored to consciousness poor Ivan.

Without the wind howled, and so did the wolves most dismally, as they retreated toward the forests, and within, our rescuer, the little Amazon who had saved us at the risk of her life and limb, was bending over the injured man, and limb, was bending over the injured man, while with all the tender sympathy of a true woman she relieved the pain and tended the hurts of her servent.

GETTING HOME FROM THE COUNTRY

BY HELEN JAY

ENERALLY at the close of the vacation the housewife is auxious to return to her home. She has had enough of the bread of idleness, and longs to be once more in the activities of life. During the long sum-mer mornings, spent for the most part on the hotel the most part on the hotel plazza, she has beard of many new and delightful economic laws. Her note-book bulges with fresh receipts. She has commenced several new designs in embroidery and learned many new stitches. She is really impatient to see how the funcy work she has made will look in the places in which she has already mentally arranged it. She is eager to try the receipts and put in practice all the lately-acquired theories.

Without realizing it, our housewife is ready—to undo all the good gleaned from the summer's outing. It is a characteristic of the average American woman to be rather pitiless in her treatment of herself. After the weeks during which she attempted nothing in the way of exercise save a walk now and then, she too often rushes into a perfect hurricane of work. She cleans the house from garret to cellar, renovates the wardrobes of the children and gets them in readiness for school, and then preserves and pickles every accessible atom of vegetable growth. As a result, if she escapes a severe illness, she quickly loses the vitality and enthusiasm which should have been her stock in trade for the entire winter. By following the wise old adage and " making haste slowly," she can set her bouse in order, take care of herself, and with it all see well to the ways of her bousehold.

There is one requisite to the preservation of the bealth of the home-coming family too haste slowiy," she can set her bouse in order, take care of herself, and with it all see well to the ways of her bousehold.

There is one requisite to the preservation of the health of the home-coming family too often neglected, and that is the thorough airing of the house. It is really dangerous to bring children from the pure air of the country and put them to bed in a room which has been tightly closed for months. The mere opening of the doors and windows will not serve the purpose. It will pay to have some one go to the house two days at least before the return of the family and make a fire in the range and in one of the grates up stairs. It is better still to let the furnace be set at work for half a day. Then after the house is dry and the atmosphere purified by heat, open every door and window.

In the cleanest kitchens and their closets the close air of a shut-up house brings about a certain activity of insect life. The most effectual remedy for this trying state of affairs calls for a degree of caution in its use. The doors and windows of the kitchen should be tightly closed, excepting, of course, those leading into the closets. Then a small iron candlestick holding a sulphur candle, should be placed in a large iron kettle. These candles may be found at any drug store. After one has been highed the person in charge should run for their life. The stifting funes enter every crevice, and drive the little lurkers out to die. The mice scamper away, and if coal tar is placed about the cellar they will leave the premises in disgust. To make assurance doubly sure fill the places which they have grawed with broken bits of glass or china. The sulphur is also an excellent disinfectant, and will destroy disease germs if there are any. Before the mattresses and pillows are slept and will destroy disease germs if there are any.

Before the mattreses and pillows are slept on they should be hung in the open air with the blankets. The sheets and pillow-cases meanwhile should be airing by the fire. The pillows themselves should never be exposed to the smilight. The natural oil of the feathers is apt to be extracted and cause a disagreeable oder of an actival but saidon attributed to the oder often noticed but seldom attributed to the right source.

The bedsteads should be carefully cleaned, first with a dry cloth and brush, then with benzine, which may be applied with an ordinary sewing-machine oiler, which throws the fluid in every crack otherwise inaccessible.

If there has been a house cleaning in the spring it is rather an excess of seal to innugarate another. Let everything in the way of redecoration, sewing and shopping wait until the preserving and pickling are attended to—if they must be done at all. It is questionable if it really pays for the honsewife to plunge from the cool, bracing air of the mountains or senshore into a hot kitchen and spend days bending over boiling masses of fruit. It would probably be better for the family and herself if she would take time for a breath of open air daily, gradually becoming accustomed to the conditions of city life.

PATHWAYS THROUGH LIFE

BY EMMA C. DOWD

YOU say that your life is a failure, I Your future holds naught that is sweet, That the troublous years bring little but tears, And always, always defeat.

Mistakes-aye, sins you call them-May cover your past like a pall, But the soul that is strong to outlive its wrong Is the bravest soul of all.

You long to go forth to the battle, But your feet are fettered quite; Remember, who serve in the corps of reserve May be able as those who fight.

You chafe to enter the races For pleasure and gold and fame; Yet many who win 'mid the plaudits' din Find the prize but an empty name.

The toil that is yours seems fruitless, Your days are dreary and long; But the lowliest duty may glow with beauty When wrought with a cheerful song.

The world's best sweets are denied you, You have tasted earth's cup of woe: But who suffers to give that others may live Has the noblest life, I trow.

Oh, let us, my friend, do bravely The work that to us is given, And smile in belief that what causes us grief May keep us the closer to Heaven.

The pathways we traverse are many And some are by barrenest strand; But with vision grown wide we shall wonder we sighed, For they led to the Beautiful Land.

INCONVENIENCES OF GROWING OLD

BY A LADY OF "UNCERTAIN AGE"

SHY there should be any HY there should be any uncertainty about my age I am sure I cannot tell. There it is in the big family Bible, in my mother's own handwriting, as plain as black and white can make it: "Lucy Elizabeth, born Sept. 25th, 1851," and as this is our year of grace 1892, it seems about as certain as anything can be that I am just exactly forty-one years seems about as certain as anything can be that I am just exactly forty-one years of age. But on this subject society has formulated for itself a creed as inflexible as the axioms of Euclid or the declarations of the Westminster Confession, and the first article of this creed is that no unmarried woman over thirty years can ever, by any possibility, tell the truth about her age; consequently, we must either lie, or get the credit, if we tell the truth, of being anywhere from live to fifteen years older than we are, with the comforting assurance that in neither case are we believed. So in spite of the family libbe, I suppose my age will continue to be regarded as an uncertain quantity, for what does evidence count when it comes in conflict with established creeds?

Now, this uncertainty is the source of great-does evidence count when it comes in conflict with established creeds?

Now, this uncertainty is the source of greater inconvenience than may at first sight appear, for it subjects me to the emborrassment of being frequently called upon to remember things that happened before I was born, and of being suspected of a desire to "findge," as the schoolboys say, if my reminiscences fail to materialize as they should. At a dinner party the other day an old gentleman sitting opposite gravely appealed to me about something that occurred during the Harrison campaign of 1836. Now, as I did not make my appearance upon the scene until some fifteen years after the events alluded to, my recollections were not as clear as might have been expected, but knowing that a profession of ignorance would render me "guilty of being suspected," a crime whose penalties did not cease, as most people suppose, with the French Revolution, I stammered out a reply which I intended should be non-committal. Immediately the old gentleman's wife began to from at him vigorously from across the table, his neighbors on either side gave him an admonitory undge, the hostess looked him out of countenance, and the unhappy subject of these demonstrations, suddenly awakened to a sense of the enormity be had committed, turned demonstrations, suddenly awakened to a sense of the enormity be had committed, turned of the enormity be had committed, turned red in the face, and began to protest eagerly that he had quite forgotten what he was talk-ing about; yes, to be sure—Miss Oldmead must have been quite a child then—too young to remember, of course—quite a child—in-deed, ahen— quite young still—don't look over thirty now! Here a subdued titter from a youthful couple at the lower end of the table completed my discomfiture, and caused use to look as guilty as if I had been caught in the act of transferring the spoons to my pocket, or even of eating with my knife. But it was no use for me to say anything; a whole circulating library of family Bibles would never have convinced that company that I was not trying to flich fifteen years from my own life.

Another grave question which arises at this uncomfortable transition stage of a spinster's life, when we are neither fish, flesh nor fowl in the social menu, is about our dress. Now, I in the social menu, is about our dress. Now, I do not mind confessing to you, my dear reader, that I have a natural hankering after good clothes. I like to have my gowns fit well and made of pretty material, and I know many a well-preserved grandmother of fifty who does the same, and nothing said; but let me venture abroad in a pretty gown, or a becoming bonnet, such as any married woman of my age could wear with impunity, and I am immediately suspected of a tendency to friskiness. Nobody will credit me with a love of pretty things for their own sake, but every loop and frill and bow is supposed to represent a matrimonial aspiration. Not until we retire definitely into caps and spectacles are we much-maligned spinsters credited with having given up the struggle—not for existence, but for what is supposed to be much more to us than existence—a busband.

Of all the inconveniences that attend the process of growing old, to an unmarried woman the chronic matrimonial aspirations with which we are credited is one of the most trying. We are presumed to have but one object mediately suspected of a tendency to friski-an the chronic matrimonial aspirations with which we are credited is one of the most trying. We are presumed to have but one object in life, namely, to get a husband of any sort, at any price, and by any means, and the abject terror with which this belief seems to inspire the middle-aged widowers and bachelors of our acquaintance is really appalling. Only last evening, for instance, at Mrs. Swellington Hightlyer's soirée musicale, I happened to be placed next a bald-headed old bachelor of fifty, with a red nose and a paunch like a bay window, whose personal advantages, one would think, ought to have made him feel as secure as if safely entrenched behind the walls of matrimony. But no; he glanced furtively toward the door as I approached, and then began to edge off on his chair, fully persuaded that I was meditating an assault and all my guns were leveled at him. As there was no one else near with whom I could enter into conversation, and I did not like to make my-self conspicuous by keeping silent while the name was going on, I ventured the harmless observation that it was "a very pleasant evening." But even in this mild platitude his watchful lears detected a signal of danger, for what could it mean but that the evening was pleasant because spent in his delightful society. So be set himself at once to squelch any tender hopes I might cherish, by squinting savagely at me over his fat shoulder and replying in a most unpropitious tone: "It's most too close in here to be pleasant." savagely at me over his fat shoulder and re-plying in a most unpropitious tone: "It's most too close in here to be pleasant." Thereupon I made what appeared to me the happy suggestion that perhaps he would find it pleasanter outside, but his lively imagina-tion construed these innocent words as a deep-laid scheme to entrap him into a moonlight promenade, with all its tender possibilities. The cold sweat fairly oozed from his brow at the thought, and I am sure every hair of his head would have stood on end if he had had any. In fine his state was so ritiable that I any. In fine, his state was so pitiable that I took compassion on him and changed my seat at the first opportunity, but for all that, my brother-in-law overheard him on the way home telling his companions how narrowly he had escaped being gobbled up whole by that drendful old campaigner Miss Lucy Okiment.

I am sure I do not know why it is; I am not Oldmend.

I am sure I do not know why it is; I am not more ill-looking than many a married woman whom one sees playing a conspicuous part in society, and I am a very harmless, unaggressive sort of person that would not hurt a mouse, much less a man, yet every spavined old stager of my acquaintance will shy at the sight of me as if I had nothing in the world to do but run down desenceless old roadsters for the matrimonial sweepstakes. It is really melancholy to see how suddenly the manners of my old friends change toward me if they happen to be left widowers. There is old Dr. Witherspoon, for example, who used to make tedious little jokes, before Mrs. W. died, about taking me for his second wife, and now he shuns me as if I were pay day. Even old Mr. Rail, the redheaded lawyer whom I refused twenty years ago, and whom my poor friend, Clara H., married only as a last resort to keep from going out as a governess, is so fully persuaded of my desire to reconsider, that he flies at the sight of me as if struck by a cyclone.

But more trying even than the criticism of foes is the apologetic attitude assumed by well-meaning friends. One can stand being ridiculed, vilified, misunderstood even, with some show of good grace, but when it comes to being apologized for, that is the last struw that breaks the camel's back of my endurance. There is my sister Laura, now, married to one of those poor little two-for-a-nickel sort of fellows, whose family I have been supporting for the last six years, and yet Laura is so aggressively sympathetic when we meet that one would think I was the wife of a-scrubby little clerk at $50 a mouth, instead of a successful designer of decorative patterns, commanding a salary of $2500 a year. One day last week, just after I had given her three dollars to buy her little boy a pair of shoes, I overheard her whisper to my hopeful nephew, who had denaurred at being sent to open the gate for me: "Poor Aunt Lucy! you ought to be very kind to ber, Charley, because she hasn't any husband to take care of

And Charley's papa is even more apologetic than his manima. This is especially the case after borrowing $25 of me, as he generally does about once or twice a month, on which occasions he will say to Laura, in a very compassionate tone:

Really, sister Lucy is a very deserving person. What a pity she can't find some man to take care of her!" And laura will sigh a good-natured assent, while the unconscious object of this superfluous compassion is all the while as happy as a queen over the success of some newly sketched design, or the invention of a fresh combination of colors that promises to become the prevailing decorative fashion of

The last, but not least of our long list of grievances, is the want of a respectable name by which to call ourselves. I have used the word "spinster" in this poper for want of a better, but it was with a montal protest against its disparaging suggestions. "Old maid," with its bare-faced literalness, like a slap in the face, is no better: "maiden lady," with its with its bare-faced interniness, like a slap in the face, is no better: "maiden lady," with its flavor of gentest pundery, does not help the matter, while the cumbrons euphuisms of "single lady," and "unmarried woman," are as inconvenient and unwieldy as it is to speak of "the lady who presides in the kitchen," when you mean the cook.

A MODEL HUSBAND BY ELEANOR M. DENNY

MOST wives will end their story with: IVI " Ah well, men are but human."
I long to tell the secret of A truly happy woman.

Through all the sunshine-lighted years, Lived now in retrospection, My husband's word brought never tears, Nor caused a sad reflection.

Whate'er the burdens of the day, Unflinching, calm and steady, To bear his part—the larger half— I always find him ready.

House-cleaning season brings no frown, No sarcasm, pointed keenly; Through carpets up, and tacks head down He makes his way serenely.

Our evenings pass in converse sweet, Or quiet contemplation, We never disagree except To "keep up conversation."

And dewy morn of radiant June, Fair moonlight of September, April with bird and brook atune, Stern, pitiless December-

Each seems to my adoring eyes Some new grace to discover, . For he unchanging through the years, Is still my tender lover.

So life no shadows holds, though we Have reached the side that's shady; My husband? Oh! a dream is he, And I'm a maiden lady.

THE CARE OF THE HANDS

BY ISABELLA M. AITEEN

VERY good story is told of a distin-guished. Ameri-can prencher who on a certain occasion seeing a woman whose jeweled hands betrayed that absence of care which is made evident by grimy skin and nigged finger-nails, ex-claimed to a friend close by:

I looked at her hands, and I looked at her rings. And I thought of the eternal fitness of things.

This "fitness of all things," is that for which women with any love of cleanliness and daintiness should strive in their personal and danniness should strive in their personal habits, and where is its absence more unpleas-antly betrayed than in such a case as that de-scribed by the preacher-poet?

This article on the care of the hands is in-tended to give a little practical assistance and advice to the woman who aims for the dainti-ness and beauty with which hands and fingers recay the source expended many them.

advice to the woman who aims for the daintiness and beauty with which hands and fingers repay the energy expended upon them.

Professional manicures abound who, for slight charges, will, either at their offices or in your own home, undertake this care of the hands, but there is no occasion for their employment. A little systematic treatment on your own part is quite as efficacious. The hands show, as rapidly as any other part of the body, not only the care expended on them, but the physical health of the individual, Sallowness, reduess and swelling will probably have their root in indigestion, or in bad circulation, and any blood or skin trouble will manifest itself at once. It is quite needless to say that the treatment for these evidences must be given by a physician, and that it is quite impossible and unwise for a cure to be attempted in any other way. The sallowness of disease is a very different thing, however, from the discolorations of tan or stain, which yield quickly to external applications; and a very usual cause of red hands and swelling may be looked for not only in organic troubles, but in the wearing of tight gloves, or, in days past, in that hideous decree of fashion, the skin-tight sleeve.

The first necessity in the care of the hands by either their manicure or their owner (and,

The first necessity in the care of the hands by either their manicure or their owner (and, as I have said, there is really no reason why the latter should not learn in time to be very proficient in her care) is the keeping of the hands soft and clean. If you have any man-ual work to perform, learn to do as much of your wor': as is practicable in gloves. With the determination to do so, it will be surpristhe determination to do so, it will be surpris-ing how few of your occupations cannot be literally "handled with gloves," and the dif-ference in the texture of your skin and the ability to cleanse it will amply repay you for the sacrifice of your old gloves and opinion.

As a rule, for washing the hands neither very bot nor very cold water should be used, though there may, of course, be occasional necessity for the use of either. Tepol water should be the usual immersion. To soften should be the distant influences. To some the water a few drops of animonia, or a small quantity of borax, may be added. A convenient way in which to use the latter is to make tent way in which to use the inter is to make a solution of borax and water which can be kept in a bottle and added, a few drops at a time, to the bathing water. Many people find this method more neat than keeping the borax in powder form about the washstand.

For whitening and softening the skin there are numerous applications which bear the festimony of wide-spread use. Probably the most generally tried of these is almost paste, which can be obtained at any large pharmacy, or may easily be manufactured at home. A good receipt is the following: Take two onnees each of bitter and sweet almonds, pound to a paste, and add half an ounce of oil of almonds, half an ounce of finely cut Castile soap, and a few drope of oil of bergamot. Cold cream, glycerine and vaseline are the other most successful applications, having the inestimable advantages of purity and simplicity in their ingredients. There are a few people to whose skin glycerine proves irritating instead of soothing, but I have rarely known a case where, if the glycerine was sufficiently diluted with rose water, this irritation continued. For renoving stains nothing is safer or more efficacious than lemon juice. Oil of vitriol oxalic acid and cyanide of potassium, which are so often recommended for this purpose, are, it is true, successful in their agency, but they are such dangerous poisons that any indiscriminate use of them cannot be too hardly condemned. good receipt is the following: Take two onnces condemned.

Rub the hands with a piece of lemon before washing. This will remove almost any stain and will nid in the whitening process. A nail brush, not too harsh, should always be used, and a piece of pumice stone, which is indispensable, will rub down the hardened places that so often form on the fingers, but both of these instruments should be used carefully and scattle.

that so often form on the fingers, but both of these instruments should be used carefully and gently.

For manicuring, the necessary articles are, beside a moderately soft nall brush, a piece of pumice stone, a pair of small, curved scissors, a good tile, a small piece of emery board—made specially for manicure purposes—and a good knife, of not too great sharpness. Use good tools or none at all, as great harm can be done by duli or poor instruments. The nails should be filed and not cut with scissors, as by so doing they assume a much better shape and are not apt to break. When filing, give the nail a round, oval shape without bringing to a point, after which smooth the edge with a piece of emery board. The cuticle around the nail should be softened by holding in water in which a piece of soap has been dissolved, after which the cuticle should be carefully loosened from around the nail with your knife, which, let it be remembered, must not be too sharp. By doing this regularly, the crescent or balf moon at the base of the nail will be preserved. Cut away any rough pieces of skin that may arise from the loosening.

Too much cannot be said against the habit ocsening.

Too much cannot be said against the habit Too much cannot be said against the habit of biting the nails, which so many people allow themselves to acquire. While this habit is encouraged and practised nothing can be done to improve the nails; it not only retards growth, but if encouraged for any length of time will cause the finger tip to have a broad, cluansy and equally unadmirable appearance. Hang-nails in the corners must not be torn out, as is so often done, but carefully cut away with the scissors, otherwise they will become very sore and inflamed and take a long time to heal. Always when drying the hands rub the cuticle (the crescent) gently back with the towel. In this way it will have little chance to adhere to the nail again. A good way to remove the soil from under the nails is by a bit of cotton on the end of an orange-wood stick.

stick.

The unils should, if possible, be polished daily, as it not only beautifies them, but will keep them smooth and clear and sometimes prevent the ridges which are so disfiguring. Rosaline should be used to give a little color, and must be well rubbed in with the polisher and some tinted powder, after which, to take away the red appearance, a second application of rosaline should be used without powder or polisher, simply with the palm of the hand; this finished, the nails will have a pretty, shell-like tint.

A CHICAGO BUSINESS CHANCE

A CHICAGO BUSINESS CHANCE

The business chances in New York and Chicago are "few and far between," but a remarkshbe opportunity is presented by a syndicate of well-known Chicagoans. These gentlemen own an inside residence property which they call "Sheldon Heights"—partly on account of its high, dry location. This beautiful property is just out of the smoke and dust of the business part of Chicago, but is admirably arranged for the homemaker or out-of-town Investor. For the householder, because Sheldon Heights has excellent schools; churches: drainage; pure water; stone sidewalks and macadam in every street—and for the investor because it is Chicago real estate, well situated and improved and bound to increase in value. Any person sufficiently interested in a Chicago investment of $400 (on easy terms of payment) should send to J. E. and Robt, L. McEfroy, 134 Washington Street, Chicago, for "The Way to Win," fully describing "Sheldon Heights" and this latest and best Chicago business chance.

"Be sure you're right and then go ahead." In truer of nothing more than of dyeing, but don't go ahead till you're sure you are right. The first thing to do is to get a package of PEERLESS DYES. *.*

Every housekeeper should keep on hand a can of Campbell's Varnish Stains. The advertisement in another column shows what can be done with it. ...

Progressive Enchro players use "THE CORRECT" score marker. All dealers. Sets by mail, 15c, per table Booklet Free. W. F. BULKELEY, Cleveland, O. ....

Nothing is so refreshing to brain and nerves as Ricksecker's Reviving Smelling Salts. Genuine at druggists', fifty cents.

000000000000000000000000000000

GIRLS who love Music and Art and would like to know how to secure a full course of instruction at the leading American school with all expense of board and tuition paid, should send their address to

> The Curtis Publishing Co. Philadelphia, Pa.

THE BROWNIES THROUGH THE YEAR

A NEW SERIES OF 12 ADVENTURES OF THE FUNNIEST LITTLE MEN IN THE WORLD

By Palmer Cox

NUMBER TWELVE THE BROWNIES

IN SEPTEMBER

SILVER crescent in the sky, September's moon was sailing high,

When Brownles met to carry through An enterprise they had in view. Said one: "Next month, as you're aware, Will bring the great Columbian Fair; When banners will to winds be spread, And speeches made, a poem be read, And voices mingle, rich and strong, In rendering anthems loud and long," Another said:

"Then I'm afraid, Unless we give some mystic aid In pushing work that's moving slow, They'll not be ready for the show."
"No better way

A third remarked: Can we our loyalty display

Than here to lend a helping hand in finishing these buildings grand That ornament this spacious ground; 'Twill to the country's good redound, And spare the blush that else might speak Of shame on fair Columbia's cheek."

Now columns tall they climbed to get A closer look at what was set Upon the top, with wings outspread, A staff in hand, or wreath on head.

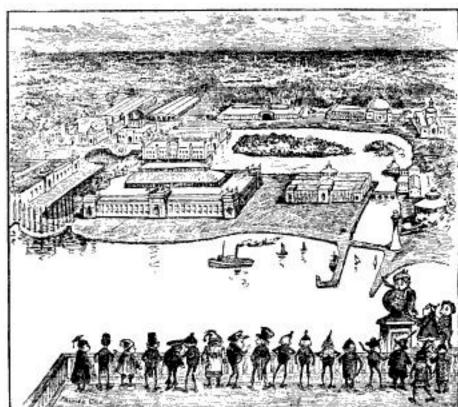

On counting them the Brownies found Just thirteen columns standing round. Said one: "No doubt the sculptor meant The early States to represent, And give a lesson gratis here, As well as ornament the pier." The woman's building drew their eyes, But they beheld the same with sighs, Because the topmost tile was laid, And left no chance for Brownte aid; But other buildings of the Fair building nigh: Some others

Aside when evening whistles blew, Said one: "The brush is suited well For Brownie hands, the truth to tell; As for myself no more I ask Than elbow room at such a task; And I'll not be the last to mount A ladder, and to some account. For I'll not take the seat behind It spreading paint, keep that in mind. It may be red, or green, or blue, Or yellow, if you please, of bue. It matters not, I'll make a show, As fast as any one I know." Another said: "Our skill we'll try Upon this dome-capped here a stir cun make With brushes, or I much mistake. And honors will not all descend On one alone, you may depend." Now work began without delay, Though plenty there had more to say

And could have talked and argued still About their gifts or special skill, But Brownies, when there's work to do, That must ere dawn be hurried through, Are not the kind to lose a tick Of time, that slips away so quick Each took the tool that suited best His turn of mind, for all were blessed. With skill that made them handle well Whatever to their portion fell, Then climbing here and mounting there Soon every Brownie did his share, All clearly proving from the start They had the nation's good at heart Some spreading brown paint moved ahead, More followed with a cost of red. Then quickly, ere the first had dried, Still other colors were applied. Said one: "Though not apprenticed out To musters hard, and knocked about, To learn a trade 'twixt kick and blow,

Could take some touches here and there. So off the Brownies ran for tools, For paint pots, hammers, saws and rules, That weary workmen quickly threw

That often with instruction go. We're not so far behind mankind At putting things in shape, they'll find, For we can saw and paint and bore, the slate And tin on towers tall and straight, And nailed the ornaments in place the buildings added grace; The highest point, or peak about The structure grand, they hunted out.

Twas there they wished their skill to show, 'Twas there they plied the willing blow, And swung their flimsy scaffolds there, Regardless of the beight in air. No brains of weak, unbealthy tone That dizzy grow the Brownies own, While hands have strength, and toes are sure, The head has faith and feels secure. So up they go without a reel, Although the clouds around them wheel; No wonder, then, the work that night Was shoved along with magic slight: No wonder, then, the workmen stared

When to their stations they regained, and dome.

and tacked

They set the glass

That to grounds to proudly fly. Said one: "We'll leave it flapping there, Through blizzand storm, or milder air, To let the folks who reach these shores, From every nation out of doors. Learn how it feels to draw at last One breath of freedom from the blast. Here listen to the eagle scream,

Where liberty is not a dream, And stand beside this inland sea, Beneath the banner of the free."

THE LADIES' HOME JOURNAL

An Illustrated Family Journal with the Largest Circulation of any Magazine in the World.

Published Monthly by

THE CURTIS PUBLISHING COMPANY At 433-435 Arch Street, Philadelphia, Pa. With Press-Rooms at 401-415 Appletree Street

> Edited by EDWARD W. BOK

In association with

MRS. LYMAN ABBOTT MISS RUTH ASHMORE MARGARET BOTTOME ROBERT J. BURDETTE FOSTER COATES MAUDE HAYWOOD EMMA M. HOOPER ISABEL A. MALLON MARIA PARLOA EBEN E. REXFORD ELISABETH ROBINSON SCOVIL REV. T. DE WITT TALMAGE, D.D. KATE TANNATT WOODS

Advisory and Contributing Editors With representatives at London and Paris.

Rates

Subscription One dollar per year, payable in advance. Single copies ten cents.

Advertising Rates

Five dollars per Agate line each insertion before (this) editorial page; three dollars per Agate line on succeeding pages and all covers. Reading Notices, six dollars per Nonpareil line. These rates are net.

BRANCH OFFICES:

New York: Potter Building, 38 Park Row Boston: 7 Temple Place, Cor. Tremont St. Chicago: 508 Home Insurance Building San Francisco: Chronicle Building

LONDON OFFICE: 53 Imperial Buildings, Ludgate Circus, E. C. English Subscription Prices: Per issue, 6 pence; per year, 6 shillings, post-free

Philadelphia, September, 1892

AT HOME WITH THE EDITOR

just now we show how fond we are of it. Every four years we are thus blessed (?). We reek in politics. We—women as well as men—attend po-litical meetings and shout ourselves hoarse over the mention of over the mention of the name of our favor-ite candidate. We work ourselves into a work ourselves into a perfect frenzy over the result of the pending election. We stand on street corners or sit before open windows at the most dangerous season of the year, watching torchlight processions. A great glow of enthusiasm takes possession of us, and we feel that we are patriots. We illumine our houses when the Republicans pass by in file, but forbid our servants even to strike a match while the Democratic procession goes by. Just as many are certain that we shall have hard times if President Harrison is re-elected as there are those who are convinced that this country will go to everlasting ruin if Mr. Cleveland is returned to Washington. And we argue and we discuss, and we shout and we hiss, and we make bad friends—and for what? Purely because we bad friends—and for what? Purely because we like excitement. For, so far as the real effect of the result is concerned, it would be far cheaper and not a particle less effective to toss up a penny.

THERE is no disputing the fact that the American man is restless. He has been called "the restless American," and the appellation fits him. He is so in business, and he is so in the house. And the restless man is the creator of the restless woman—the woman who never knows where and when she is happy, and whose whole nature is one mass of discontent. This is where the seed of the trouble lies so far as woman and home are concerned. For if woman has a potent influence over man, man's influence over woman is only a whit less striking. It takes a strong woman to resist the influence of a restless man, Let a man bring a restless spirit into his home and be brings into that home the first seed of discontent. This truth has been demonstrated again and again. And it is for this reason that I have chosen this month to write of the in-jurious restlessness of the average American man-injurious particularly as it has a disas-trons effect upon his borne life and those who make up his domestic circle. I do not say that he does this knowingly—but many of the greatest injuries we inflict upon others are done un-consciously. I think the trouble with many of our men is that they are all too apt to leave their pleasures behind them when they return home, and bring only their troubles with them.

If the truth that as a nation we are young and have still much to learn applies with direct force to any element in our American life more than to another it is to this spirit of unrest in American men. From the moment he awakens in the morning until his eyesclose in exhaustion at night, the American man is at high tension. He argues that competition is keen, and he must be alert. He cannot afford to lose a single point. With the eyes of a cat he watches his competitor across the street, while his competitor returns the compliment with equal fervor. He works all day long, and then goes home to plan and scheme in the evening for the next day's campaign. His fireside talk is "shop," and the friends he welcomes heartiest to his home are "shoppy." He is "full of business," so full in fact, that for the major part of the night he lies wide awake hearing the clock strike each successive hour. And then he wonders why he cannot sleep! He tries everything to induce sleep from taking a glass of beer or a goblet of milk before retiring, to getting up in the middle of the night and taking a bath or a "rub-down," disturbing himself and the rest of the family at the same time. For I think if there is anything that will arouse the soundest alceper in a house it is the splash of a midnight bather.

BELIEVE in my century, and I belong to it in every respect. I believe in push, energy, enterprise, hustle or whatever one may choose to call it. I recognize as well as any man that success is born only of hard and continuous work. None realize more keenly the demands which competition makes upon the business man of to-day as do those who are interested in periodical literature, and are of and in the modern race for literary ascendancy. At the same time, I am firmly convinced that the greatest kindness we can show to our growing sons is to impress upon them the great lesson of moderation in business. The pace at which thousands of our American men are golesson of moderation in business. The pace at which thousands of our American men are going to-day is not the pace for our sons. It is the pace that kills, and is making men old before their time. We hear and read a great deal about educating our girls to be true wives and good mothers, but I think the time has come when we ought to pay a little attention to the subject of bringing up our boys to be wise men and attentive fathers. The girls have almost been lectured to death, while the boys have been allowed to laugh and look on while the "dont's" were being administered to their the "dont's" were being administered to their sisters. It is true that women are far more of the home than men are or possibly can be. We leave the education of our children largely we leave the education of our children targety in the hands of our wives, and I must confess that it is a mighty good thing that we do. If we were to leave them to the mercies of the men, the good Lord only knows what kind of a generation the next might be. The average man hardly seems able to find time enough to eat, to any nothing of educating his children.

WHAT our American home-life of to-day needs more than anything else is a larger share of the presence and attention of the men of the home. The American woman has made the American home what it is to-day, and for the most part she has done it unaided. Here and there we find exceptions where men have entered more largely into the home spirit, and relieved wives of the domestic burdens, but the instances are few—about on a par with angels' visits. The average American husband when he returns home in the evening is completely played out with the business cares of the day. Too tired to talk, he eats his dinner in silence, except to answer questions which politeness and deference to his wife makes it essential be must notice. Then a cigar, a dip into the evening paper, and he is ready for bed! Cheerful company! If he goes out with his wife, he does so because he cannot very well refuse or gracefully "get out of it."

"You know I am very tired, my dear," he says to his wife.

Of course he is tired, and he will always be so, And so will all of us men be until we learn the lesson of moderation in business, and bring ourselves up to that point where we will be willing to sacrifice a little business progress for individual comfort.

T seems as it in this country we learn things by sections—by States or cities as t were. We are foud of apeing English customs in dress, in walk and in speech. But the English custom we would be the better for speing is the very sensible one of modera-tion in business which the Englishman has learned and acts out every day of his life. True, England is older, and its people have had more time to learn, and can the more easily afford certain methods of life. But we are fast approaching that time in our national history and prosperity when we can afford to take life a little more easy. We are all fond of poking jest at Philadelphia for its slowness, and unquestionably she merits some of the criticism hurled at it—although a great deal of it is born of senseless repetition just as a parrot repents what it hears and doesn't understand.
But all the same. Philadelphians are by far the best masters of the art of living sensibly than are the people of any other section of this country. They come closer to the correct English idea of living longer and living easier. Boston, too has been set the lesson almost as well too, has learned the lesson almost as well.

New York is just beginning to see the wisdom of making haste slowly. Chicago has still to learn that a man can transact more business in five hours and rest well, than he can in working ten hours and scheming eight of the remaining fourteen. We are learning by sections as it were, as I say, and there is no healthier sign of the future greatness of this country than this very indication. For years country than this very indication. For years the American has been going at a lightning pace: he is just beginning to slack down, and to find that thirty miles an hour is safer for the human machine than is a speed of sixty miles.

THE summer now waning has shown to those who have given any attention to the subject at all that men are beginning to show this wisdom in their methods of life. Where, three or four years ago, the business man joined his family on Saturday, this summer in thousands of cases I have met him week after week using the Friday afternoon train, and whenever possible he has stayed until Tuesday instead of rushing back to the city on the early Monday morning train. With others whose comings and goings are more restricted, the Saturday half-holiday has proved a blessing, and given an opportunity of bringing the father into the midst of his family at least part of one working day in the week during hours of far more general observance, and pity it is that we have not more of them. Summer vacations are being lengthened in many business places, the fortnight boliday idea having become almost a general one. And as this feeling spreads, so gradually will it work into the lives of those to whom Sunday now means only a day of sleep, and a secular holiday the loss of twenty hours' pay.

Women can do much toward this end. What always makes me impatient with this senseless clamor for woman's greater power is the knowledge which every sensible man and woman has that woman is to-day the greatest power in the world. No outer influence carries that influence with a man as the wish of his mother, his wife, his sister or the woman of his home and heart. A man may sometimes not show that the request or remark of his wife creates an impression upon him. That is the "man" of it. But it does. Nothing has such a power as the wish of a good wife upon the object of her love. And so let me say to every woman who reads these words: By love and kindness impress upon the man nearest you the pleasure and joy it gives you to have him with you. Do not take him from business when you know he is needed at the office. But lovingly win an hour here and there, and soon you will teach him the lesson which of hinself he might never have learned. If your husband is so situated that his time is his own, tell him of the pleasure it would be to you to feel that his Saturdays might be spent with yon, especially during the heated period of the year, and let the "hented period" begin in early spring and end with late autumn. Make him feel that you desire more of his time rather than more means. Show him that you are more content with a moderate income and his good health, means. Show him that you are more content with a moderate income and his good health, than with large means and his good health, than with large means and his worried mind and sleepless nights. Influence him not only to respect the need of rest himself, but to ex-tend it to those who are in his employ. Some of the best men become so immersed in their affairs that they forget the capacities of those under their directions, where one world from a under their directions, where one word from a wife will rouse them to their sense of regard for others.

I DO not in any way encourage by these words what is generally called "the interference of wives into the affairs of their husbands." There is no such thing as "interference" between the right sort of a wife and a good husband. Marriage is a home partnership, in which both enjoy equal rights and privileges. A man far more often enjoys than repels the entering of his wife into his business affairs. The greatest help in this world to a man is a sympathetic wife with whom he can talk over the things which enter into his life. The counsel of the fireside is a far greater and more potent factor in business life to-day than some people imagine. For absogreater and more potent factor in business life to-day than some people imagine. For absolute power, give me a wife who controls the heart of her busband. I see that truth so often and so wonderfully demonstrated in my position that I often wish I could transfer a few of my opportunities in that direction to those who are continually trying to belittle woman's power. It is not the men, my wise friend, who are ruling this world to-day. "It am de women," as the darkey preacher said, and he was right. And it frequently amuses me when I see some wise business man unexpectedly run up against this truth. The power exerted by women through men is well-nigh incalculable, and that is why they can do so much toward slackening the pace of the American man of the present day. Woman has already done much in this direction by her wiser counsel and shrewder intuition, and she will do more.

"Your American women rule the men" said a foreigner to me in Europe last summer contemptuously, and I told him that the American nast was conscious of the fact, and what was more be was proud of it. Let and what was more, he was proud of it. Lest American women continue to rule the men as they have done in the past, and this country need have no fear of its future. Womanly wisdom is strong, and womanly instincts always point to the best interests of a man.
Where he will unconsciously ruin himself, woman will save him. She led him out of the garien of Eden and she will lead him back again. She is better in her nature to-day; she is stronger in her character; she is porer in what was more, he was proud of it, is stronger in her character; she is purer in her love and warmer in her affection than she her love and warmer in her affection than she ever was, and if ever there was a time in the history of the world when woman could act as man's best helpmate, as his safest adviser, as his loyal friend, it is to day, and I pity that man who lacks faith in her or is unwilling to put his trust in her wisdom and goodness. She will be to him what his strongest or most intimate man-friend can never be. She is the surest and sufest refuse for a man in times of surest and sufest refuge for a man in times of trouble. Her heart is the most sympathetic spot against which to press, her arms form the downiest pillow for a tired head, while from her breast wells forth that love and affection for him of which woman's nature is alone capa-ble, and to which man is an atter stranger. A man will be a hero for the woman he esteems, but a woman will be a martyr for the man she

A NOTABLE MUSICAL SERIES

N order to stimulate and encourage musical composition in America, THE LADIES' HOME JOURNAL has decided to offer a series of prizes for the best original compositions by musicians resident in the United States and Canada. This series of prizes will be open until November 1st, 1892, when the manuscripts received will be carefully considered by expert musical judges. The prize compositions, words and music, will be published in the issues of the Journal during 1893.

The prize compositions will form part of one of the most notable series of original musical compositions ever attempted by a periodical-a series for which Strauss, the waltz king, is now specially writing an original set of waltzes, while Charles Gounod, the composer of "Faust," and Sir Arthur Sullivan, of comic opera fame, will each write an original song.

The prizes offered are as follows:

1. A Prize of ONE HUNDRED DOLLARS For the Best set of Waltzes

2. A Prize of ONE HUNDRED DOLLARS For the Best Piano Composition

3. A Prize of ONE HUNDRED DOLLARS For the Best Ballad

4. A Prize of ONE HUNDRED DOLLARS For the Best Song [Of a popular character]

5. A Prize of ONE HUNDRED DOLLARS For the Best Anthem [Designed for Christmas or Easter singing]

6. A Prize of ONE HUNDRED DOLLARS For the Four Best Hymn Tunes

A circular, giving the full detailed particulars of the series of prizes, will be cheerfully mailed to anyone interested, by addressing par The only restriction to participation in this series is that the composer shall be a resident of the United States or of the Dominion of Canada.

> THE LADIES' HOME JOURNAL Philadelphia, Pa.

AS SEEN ON ENGLISH SHORES

By Rev. T. De Witt Talmage, D. D.

N art, as in everything else, things must pass for what they are worth. A feeble picture by Orcagna is none the less feeble because five hundred years old. I cannot admire his "Coronation of the Virgin;" wherein he sets the angels to playing bappipes. Even the Scotch highlander expects to put down his squealing instrument this side of Heaven. There is no power in the centuries to consecrate a failure. Time has a soythe, but no trowel.

Time has a scythe, but no trowel.

AGE IN THE ABSTRACT

A 3E, in the abstract, excites not my veneration. I must first know whether it is an old saint or an old sinner. The worst chararacteristic about some things is their longevity. A newly-laid egg, boiled just two minutes and a half by the watch, and placed on the table beside a clean napkin, is a luxury to bless the palate withal; but some of us remember that once in our boardine-base at bless the palate withal; but some of us remember that once in our boarding-bouse at school we chanced at the morning ment to crack the shell of a pre-Raphaelite egg, and, without "returning thanks," precipitately forsook the table. Antiquity may be had or good. As with physical vision, so in mental optics there are far-sighted men who cannot see things close by, while a quarter of a mile away they can tell the time of day from the dial on a church steeple. The sulphurous smell in Church's "Cotopaxi" makes them cough and sneeze, though, at the peril of unhinging their necks from the spinal columns they will stand for hours looking straight up at a homely "Madonna" by some ancient Italian. We should expend time and thought on, the old masters, but not, I think, at the expense of the more recent school of art. of the more recent school of art

BEFORE THE PAINTINGS OF TURNER

MERICANS, more than any other people,

A MERICANS, more than any other people, want to see the paintings of Joseph William Turner. John Ruskin has devoted more than a half of his working life making that painter more famous. But nine out of ten of our friends returning from the National Gallery of England express sore disappointment with Turner's paintings. They think it strange that his canvas should have excited the great intellect of John Ruskin into a seeming froncy of exmiration, so that he could write or speak of nothing else—enduring, in behalf of his favorite artist, all accribity and flagellation, the masters of British and foreign schools bedaubing the brilliant writer with such surplus of paint as they could spare from their own palettes.

My first glance at these pictures many years ago struck me back with violent disappointment. At my last look, I have felt an overcoming sadness that probably I never again should find such supernatural power in an artist. I say supernatural, for if I believe that Jeremiah and David and John had more than human power to write, I know not why it would be wrong to suppose that Paul Veronese and Giotto and Rembrandt and West and William Turner were divinely inspired to paint. In the one case it was parchment; in the other canvas. Here it was ink; there it was colors, Now a pen; then a pencil. Was it not the same power which handed Raphael's "Transfiguration" across four centuries that has conveyed to this present time the New Testament? I never felt so deeply the vuffering of the Saviour when reading the description in Luke and John, as when standing in restament: I herer set so deeply the tracer-ping of the Saviour when reading the descrip-tion in Luke and John, as when standing in the cathedral at Antwerp. Looking at the "Crucifixion," by Rubens, I was beaten down and crushed in soul, and, able to look no more, I staggered out, faint and sick and exhausted, the sweat dropping from every pore.

THE INFLUENCE OF AN ARTIST

W HO can ever forget Turner's "Caligula's Palace:" the magnificence of destruction; the ages of the past looking through the ruined portices and shivering on the top of the broken marble; the bridge, in its leap across the bay, struck with a death of desolution that leaves it a skeleton in the way; children play-ing in the foreground, their diminutiveness ing in the foreground, their diminutiveness and simplicity, by the contrast, piling up the height of the towers, and the gorgeous pretension of the imperial domain; the sun rising just high enough to show that carved pilers of stone belonging to a kingly fool are but dust when the "Rock of Ages" crashes against them. The power to reproduce these scenes in every detail, so that all who gaze are ampalled at his wonderful sensing, was indeed appailed at his wonderful genius, was indeed scenes in every detail, so that all who gaze are appalled at his wonderful genius, was indeed marvelous.

Who can forget the light that Torner pours on Venice, the Campanile of San Marco, the Dogaran—light falling with the positiveness of a pebble, but the diffusiveness of a liquid, light that does not strike on the water and stop there, but becomes transfused and intermixed—nay, which, by matchless chemistry of color, becomes a part of the wave, so that you cannot see which is light and which is water; gondolas variegated, dropping all their hues into the wave—gondola above, gondola beneath and noving keel to keel. Light, though so subtle that it flies from other touch, Turner picked up, for did he let it slip through his fingers until it touched the canvas. John Martin, the Northumberland painter, tried to catch the light, but instead thereof caught the first that burns up many of his fine pictures. Turner's light is neither a hot element to consume nor a lifeless thing that might be called a mere pallor on the check of the darkness, but so natural you bardly know whether it drops from the sky-window into the gallery, or was kindled by the hand which for years has been mouddering in the crypt of Saint-Paul's Cathedral. Paul's Cathedral.

HOW TO VIEW TURNER

How to view turner

I will, not advocate the supernal inspiration of any of these men, ancient or modern; but I must say that the paintings of William Turner exerted over me an influence different from anything I have experienced. The change between my first and last look of this British artist is to be explained by the change of standpoint. No paintings in the world are so dependent upon the position occupied by the spectator. Gazed at from ordinary distances, they are insipid, meaningless, exaggerated. You feel as if they had not been done with a pencil, but with a broom. It seems that each one of them must have taken two quarts of stuff to make it as thick as that. You almost expect the colors to drip off—you feel like taking your handkerchief and sopping up the excess. But, standing close up to the opposite wall, you see a marked improvement. Yet even then the space between you and the picture is too small; you need to pass through into the next room, and then, looking through the doorway, fasten your eye on the painting. Six paces off, and Turner's "Decline of Carthage" is a vexation; but twenty-two paces off, with an eye-glass, and Turner's "Decline of Carthage" is a rapture. From the last standpoint, looking at "The Spithend," I felt like dividing my life into two portions: that which had occurred before I saw Turner and that which might occur afterward. This master shifted his style four times. No one mood lasted him long. So many a man looks back and finds that his life bas ward. This master shifted his style four times. No one mood lasted him long. So many a man looks back and finds that his life has been a series of fits. Perhaps very young in literature Turner had a fit of Tupperian. Passing on a few years, and he was taken with a fit of Byronian. Getting into calmer waters of life, he was attacked with a fit of metaphysical. As might be expected, from being out so much in the fog, he took a violent fit of Carlylean. Then, at the close of life, he reviewed his intellectual gyrations; and, disgusted with his rambilings, he had a fit of common sense, which was such a sudden change from anything preceding that it killed him.

PAINTINGS THAT ENDARTING

PAINTINGS THAT ENRAPTURE

WHAT water Turner painted! The waves of the seaknew him. No man could pour such moonlight upon the Thames as be; or could so well run the hands of the sen up and down the sides of a stranded ship; or could so saiden the Hellespont with the fare-well of "Leander," or toss up the water in a squall so natural that you know the man in the fishing smack must be surprised at the suddenness; or so infuriate the Channel at Calais that you wish you did not, on your way home, have to cross it; or could have dropped a castle-shadow so softly and yet so deep into a stream. The wave of William Turner was not, as in many pictures, merely wet white-wash, but a mingling of brightness and gloom, not, as in many pictures, merely wet whitewash, but a mingling of brightness and gloom, crystal and azure, smoothed down as a calm morning tramples it, or flung up just as the winds do it. Then, all this thrown into a perspective so marked, that, seeling it for the first time, you feel that you never before knew what perspective was. You can hardly believe that the scene be sketches is on the dead level of the wall. You get on the bank of his river in "Prince's Holiday," and follow it back through its windings miles away, and after you think you will be compelled to stop, you see it still beyond, and when you can no more keep the bank, you see in still greater distance what you say may be cloud and may be water, but you cannot decide. Turner put more miles within a square foot than any artist I know of. There are always back doors opening beyond. But his foreshortening is quite as mre. Often his flahermen and warriors and kings are not between the frame of the picture, but between you and the canvas.

After exploring miles of pictures the two on secular themes that hang in my memory, higher than all, deeper than all, brighter than all, are Torner's "Parting of Hero and Leander" and his "Palace and Bridge of Caligula."
And there they will hang forever. Yet his rivals and enemies hounded him to death, Unable longer to endure the face of a public which had so grievously maltreated him, with a broken heart be went out from his elegant parlors on Queen Anne Street to die in a mean which had so grevously matreated him, with a broken heart be went out from his elegant parlors on Queen Anne Street to die in a mean house in Chelsen. After he was lifeless the world gathered up his body, played a grand march over it and gave it honored sepatture. Why did they not do justice to him while liv-ing. What we manuscasts worth to a dead ing? What are monuments worth to a dead ing? What are monuments worth to a dead man? Why give stones when he asked for bread? Why crack and crush the jewel, and then be so very careful about the casket? Away with this off-repeated graveyard farce? Do not twist into wreaths for the tomb the flowers with which you ought to have crowned the heated brow of a living painter.

THE PAINTER OF THE BRUTE

FEW days since and I stood before some A of Landseer's paintings. Edwin Landseer came to a better understanding of the brute creation, to my mind, than has any other man after him. He must have had a pet spaniel, or cat, or horse that in hours of extreme conor cat, or horse that in hours of extreme con-fidence gave him the secret grips, signs and passwords of the great fraternity of minuals. He knew the language of feathers, the feeling of a sheep being sheared, of an ox gooded, and the humiliation of a dog when kicked off the piazza. In presence of Landseer's hunted stag, you join sides with the stag, and wish him escape from the hounds; and when pur-suers and bursued so tambling over the rocks nim escape from the hounds; and when pur-suers and pursued go tumbling over the rocks into the mad torrent beneath, the reindeer with folling and bloody tongue, and eye that reels into its last darkness, you cry "Alas!" for the stag, but "Good!" for the hounds; and wonder that the painter did not take the dogs off the scent before the catastrophe-

THE VILLAGE BLACKSMITH SHOP

W AS ever a bay mare more beautifully shod than, in Kensington Museum, Landseer shoes her. The blacksmith shop is just such a one as I rode to in boyhood, with rope-halter on the horse's head, and when, barefoot, I dismounted, the smith of the leather apron and rusted spectacles and hands leather apron and rusted spectacles and hands seemingly for five years an exile from wash-basins, bade me look out how I trod on the hot iron. Does anything sound more clearly through the years than the wheeze of the old bellows and the clang of the siedge-ham-mer and the whistle of the horse-tail brush with which we kept off the flies; while, with the uplifted and uneasy foot of the horse be-tween the workman's legs, he denched the nail, clipped off the surface, the horse flinch-ing again and again as the nail came too near and filed smooth the surface, the horse flinching again and again as the nail came too near the quick? And then the lighting of the sparks as the hammer fall on the red-bot tron and the chuck and siss and smoke of the bar as it plunged into the water-bucket! Oh! there was a rugged poetry in a blacksmith-shop, and even now the sound of the old wagon-tire at the door rouses me up like a war whoop, and in the breath of the furnace I glow with memories.

HE UNDERSTOOD HIS SUBJECTS

A S Landseer lifts the back foot of the bay mare, the wrinkles of her haunches are warm with life, and her head turns round most naturally to oversee the job, as much as to say: "Be careful how you drive that nail," or, "Your holding my hoof is very uncertain."

No one so well as Landseer could call up a bloodhound and make him lie down in the right place, a decided case of armed peace. You treat him well, not so much because of your respect for dogs, as out of consideration for your own interest. Walk softly about him and see the great rects of hide—more skin than a dog needs, as though he had been planned on a larger scale, but after he had been altered. See the surplusage of snari in that terrier, and of hair on that poodle, and how damp he is on the end of his nose.

And here you find one of Landseer's cows, foll-uddered, glad to be milked. You will see the pail foam over very soon if that careless milk-maid does not upset it. Bless me! I have seen that cow a hundred times before, It is the very one I used, in boyhood, to drive up as the evening breeze was rustling the cornsills and making the tall tassels wave like the 8 Landseer lifts the back foot of the bay

It is the very one I used, in boyhood, to drive up as the evening breeze was rustling the corn-silk and making the tall tassels wave like the pluness of an Indian warrior equatting in the woods. A cow of kindly look, the breath of clover sweeping from her nostrils, meeting me at the bars with head through the rails and a low moan of petition for the barnyard.

THE MEMORY OF AN ALPINE DONKEY

THE MEMORY OF AN ALPINE DONKEY

LYEN the donkey is introduced with a loving touch in Landseer's pictures. Now, a man who can favorably regard mule or ass is a marvel of sympathy. I am in fresh memory of a mule in the Alps. He might as well have lived on Newark flats for all the good fine scenery did him. With what an awkward tread he carried me up to the "Mer de Glace," jerking backward and forward, so that I was going both ways at once, but, nevertheless, slowly advancing, because the jerk forward was somewhat in excess of the jerk backward. The flies were ravenous, and to catch one of them he would stop mid-cliff, throw one foot up till he struck my foot in the stirup as though he proposed to get on himself, and then he would put his head back until nothing save a strong grip of the addid kept me from seeing the Alps inverted. But have the fly he would, reckless of shout and whip and thump of heel in the side. Mules are stubborn, crafty—unlike men in the fact that they look chiefly after their own interests (?); but these brutes are not very intelligent, considering, from their ears, how large an opportunity they have of hearing. They have most imperfect intonation, and but little control over their voice. When a donkey begins to bray, it seems he does not know when he will be able to stop, or whether the voice will rise or fall in its endences. But donkeys cannot help this and for their sine they are to be pitted. Therefore, Edwin Landseer calls them into his pictures.

An Alpine Dinner and a DOG

AN ALPINE DINNER AND A DOG

EUROPEANS caress the dog. He may lie on the mat or sit near the table. The mention of European dogs always recalls to my mind a wretched dinner which some years since I had in the Alps. The dinner was not lacking in consulting a receipt that in lacking in quantity or variety, but in quality. There was enough of it, such as it was. The eggs had seen their best days, and the mutton must have been good for two or three weeks after they killed it. A Saint Bernard dog sat near by petitioning for a morsel. The land-lord was out, and I saw by the bill of fare I should have high rates to pay. I could do nothing myself toward clearing the plates, and so I concluded to feast our friend of Saint Bernard. So I three bim half an omelet, as-suring him first that the amount I wave him eggs had seen their best days, and the mutton and so I concluded to feast our friend of Saint Bernard. So I threw bim half an omelet, assuring him first that the amount I gave him would depend on the sgillty with which he caught it. Bither not understanding French or being surprised at the generosity of the provision, he let half the omelet fall to the floor, but he lost no time in correcting the failure. Then I threw him a mutton-chop, With the snap of the eye and a saiff and a long aweep of the tongue over the jaw he said by his looks as plainly as if he had spoken with his lips: "I like that better, I never get mutton-chops, I think they will agree with me." When the landlord came in he suspected that some unusual proceeding had taken place between his guest and dog, and so he kicked him out of the room—the dog, that is. The remaining sin within me suggest: i my treating the landlord as he had treated the mastiff, but my profession, and more especially the size of the man, restrained me. I left the inn more sorry to leave Bernard than his keeper.

ENGLISHMEN AND THE LION

THE trayeler, I think, sees more unimals in bronze and stone in Europe than in the United States. If young Americans, wanting quilts to write with, have plucked the American eagle until, featheriess and with an empty craw, it sits on the top of the Rocky Mountains wishing it were dead, the English have paid quite as much attention to the lion. You see it done up in every shape, sitting or standing, everywhere. The fountains are guarded with lions; the entrances of houses flanked with lions; the signs of stores adorned with lions, che signs of stores adorned with lions, laughing lions, conchant lions, English artists excel with this animal. When French and German sculptors attempt one it is merely a lion in the abstract, too weak to rend a kid and never having seen a jungle. But lying on the base of Nelson's monument in Trafalgar Square are four lions that look as though they had a moment before laid down there and Square are four lions that look as though they had a moment before laid down there and curled their long tails peacefully around, and had just stopped there a few minutes to see what was going on at Charing Cross. On the top of Northumberland House is a lion with mouth open and tail extended in rigid rage, making you feel uncertain which way to run, as you know not with which end he will assault you. There are more lions in London than in Numidia. Beef and mutton are liked well by the Englishman, but for regular diet give him lion. give him lion.

RIGHTS OF THE BEASTS

EUROPEAN cities are not ashamed to take some bird or beast under their patronage. Yenice looks especially after her pigeons. Strasburg pets the storks whose nests are on almost all the chimneys. Berne carefully goards her bears. Egypt apotheosizes cats. Oh, that the cruelty of man to bird and besst might come to an end! They have more right to the world than man, for they preceded him in the creation, the birds having been made on Friday and the cattle on Saturday morning, man coming in at the fag-end of the made on Friday and the cattle on Saturday morning, man coming in at the fag-end of the week. No wonder that these aborigines of the world sometime resist, and that the bees sting, and the bears growl, and the cats get their backs up, and the dogs bark, and engles defend their cyrics with iron beak, the crags echoing with the clangor of this flying squadron of the sky!

GIVES a GENUINE OXFORD TEACHERS BIBLE, Containing, 1450 Pages, and measuring open, faje induded.7xf1 inches, Free to all New Subscribers at $2.00.

It is Leather Bound, Gilt Edge, Overslapping Edges, and Contains ALL THE HELPS, Including CONCORDANCE, 40,000 References, Subject Index 16,000 References, TWELVE COLORED MAPS, and Other Valuable Helps.

The Nitt Talmage DI, 02, 00, 04, 10 BILLE BOURD, WEN TORE OFT.

Mandel Brothers Chicago

We were the first house to introduce the

Prince of Wales Crook UMBRELLA

They come in charming varieties of woods -the silk is of an unwearoutable sortthe price is for either $2.90 26 or 28 inch. It's a world beater.

Send for one or two.

The purpose of this Department is to bring the members of the Order of The King's Daughters and its President into closer relations by personal and familiar "Talks" and "Chats." All letters from the "Daughters" bearing upon this one and special purpose ewip, should be addressed to MRS. BOTTOME, care of THE LADIES' HOSE JOHNAL, and she will be glad to receive them. Please do not, however, send letters to MRS. BOTTOME concerning membership in the Order, or business communications of any nature. All such should be addressed direct to the headquarters of the Order, 158 West Twenty-third Street, New York city, and prompt attention will be given.

HEART TO HEART TALKS

CHAPLAIN in our army during the war was passing over the field when he saw during the war was passing over the field when he saw a poor fellow that had been wounded lying upon the ground. He happened to have his Bible under his arm, and he stooped down and said to the man; "Would you like me to read you something that is in the Bible?" The wounded man said: "I am so thirsty, I would rather have a drink of water." The chaplain hurried off, and, as quickly as possible, brought the water. After the man had drank the water, he said: "Could you lift my head and put something under it?" The chaplain removed his light overcoat, rolled it up, and tenderly lifting the head, put it as a pillow for the tired head to rest on. "Now," said the man, "if I only had something over me. I am so cold." There was only one thing the chaplain could do, and that was to take off his coat and cover the cold man. As he did so, the wounded man looked up in his face and said: "For God's sake, if there is anything in that Book that makes a man do for another what you have done for me, let me hear it." There is a world of meaning, to my mind, in this incident. The need of to-day is the acting of object lessons the Book tenches.

A friend said to me the other day, while smarting under the treatment of her child's ject lessons the Book teaches.

A friend said to me the other day, while smarting under the treatment of her child's nurse: "What am I to think? She never reads any book but the Bible, and she was often on her knees, and yet think of what she did? What do you make of it all?" I replied: "There is nothing the matter with the Bible; nothing to be said against prayer, only that girl did not act either what the Bible taught, or what she prayed about: so they both simor what she prayed about: so they both sim-ply went for nothing." I believe of all the agencies for making infidels, nothing is equal to good talking and bad acting. I have nothto good taking and but acting. I have both-ing to say against organizations, or machinery of any kind; I only want to emphasize the living as Christ lived. Nothing moves me like the sight of real self-abnegation (not talk-ing about it) and so it does everybody. The whole world was touched by the life of Father Damier. Damien.

REAL SELF-DENIAL

I HEARD the other day of a servant girl who had saved in ten years seven hundred dollars; and had listened to an appeal for help for India. What was the surprise of the speaker the next morning at receiving five hundred dollars from this same servant girl. The lady did not feel that she could receive it. hundred dollars from this same servant girl.
The lady did not feel that she could receive it.
She told the girl to wait and think it over. All the answer was: "I love the Lord Jesus, and I want to help those He loves." Nothing could move her. She said: "I have kept two hundred dollars, that will be enough to bury me. I love Him!" Ah me! the old question, "Lovest thou me?" goes deeper than some of us think for, maybe. Think of singing frenently quently

Were the whole realm of nature mine, That were a present far too small. Love so amazing, so divine, Demands my soul, my life, my all!"

and then, when the offering is asked for, to put in twenty-five cents to help bring the world to Christ, and the next day make out a check for one hundred and fifty dollars for one dress! There is danger in singing such bymns, and repeating wonderful words in our New Testament, and being so far removed from the pirit of those who wrote the words. never had much trouble about the men of the New Testament being inspired. I have had trouble because I was not inspired. I dread hearing any one say, "I am crumbed with Christ," and then not seeing the least similarity of spirit to the great Apostle Paul. A bishop of the Episcopal Church said that at times it seemed indicrous to look at a fushionable corresponders a single programment. able congregation singing:

"Onward, Christian soldiers, marching as to war, With the cross of Jeens going on before!"

When shall we come to the meaning of the Last Christman one I love sent me a card with these words quoted: "If I can ease one life from aching, Or cost one pain.

Or root one pain. Or help one fainting robin unto his next again, I shall not live in vain.

The spirit of the cross is embedied in that little verse. The Linder fast is past; the Easter tiles have died on the altat, and if we have one unforgiving thought toward my human being. If we only think of ourselves affil our laws branches and do not seek to forget them in caring for others, the fast and the feast have been for us all in vain. We have shut the door of the kingdom of heaven in our own faces.

FORGIVE YOUR ENEMIES

A CIRCUMSTANCE of the long ago just comes to my mind. A friend of mine, a minister, was called to see a man who was dying of consumption. He found the poor man was also blind. An operation had resulted fatally, and he had lost the sight of both the way. seyes. He was in great despondency of mind; felt he was going to die, and all was so dark in regard to the future. My friend did all he could to bring him to the faith and hope in Christ that would bring peace, but all was of no avail. Day after day he visited him, but the cloud did not lift. At last he said to the man: "Have you any hard feelings against any one?" "No," said the man. "I have no spirit of unforgiveness toward a human being except the dector, who by bunding made and spirit of unforgiveness toward a human being except the doctor who, by bungling, made me lose the sight of both my eyes, and I will never forgive him." "Ah!" said the minister, "I see it all! The cause for the darkness I now know," and then added: "My dear friend, if you, from your heart, forgive not men their trespasses, neither will your Father in heaven forgive you your trespasses." The next morning when he called again he found the man's face radiant, and he exclaimed, "I have forgiven him, and I am forgiven!" and he died a short time after in great peace. a short time after in great peace, Heaven commenced when be forgave.

"I MEANT THE LORD"

"I MEANT THE LORD"

A LITTLE child of a well-known minister, had to play by herself. She had a game that took two to play, so she played both sides, and always spoke of the other one as losing; she generally won. One night, before going to bed, she confessed, as was her custom, to her mother what she had done through the day. "Mother," she said, "You know I lost the game to-day, and I was so angry I said, 'You're a nasty mean thing!" "Did you?" said the mother, knowing it was the imaginary self. The child seeing that her mother did not see the depth of her naughtiness, drew nearer to her mother and whispered: "I meant the Lord."

I wondered when my friend told me, whether in our vexation at circumstances in our rebellion, we may not mean the One that that child was honest enough to say she meant.

During my life in New York very many incidents have come to my knowledge that I have never spoken of and I should not now.

cidents have come to my knowledge that I have never spoken of, and I should not now, only to illustrate a point. One morning a lady who had never attended the gatherings came with a friend, and she afterward wrote me that with a friend, and she afterward wrote me that she came only hoping to be diverted. She had lost her mother, who was her idol, and she said she was perfectly rebellions. My word for the morning was "She hath rebelled against me, saith the Lord!" Among other things I said: "To rebel against a mother seems almost the worst kind of rebellion—the mother that loves the child, the mother that bore the child. And does not God say He is like a mother? Is not all mother love an emanation from the beart of God? You think you are rebelling against circumstances. The emanation from the heart of God? You think you are rebelling against circumstences. The fact is you are rebelling against God, who is like a mother, and who loves you more than a mother can love." And the lady wrote me:
"In that hour I saw that I was rebelling against God, and I left that house without a particle of the spirit of rebellion that I was filled with when I entered it."

HOW TO BEAR BURDENS

TEARS ago I heard a little incident that I 1 never forgot. In the east there is a hospital for the lepers, and Moravian mission-aries have gone there to live and die among them. A high fence encloses the grounds, and one day a man was curious enough to climb up the fence that he might see the lepera in the garden, and he saw this strange sight a man who had feet carrying a man who had hands, but no feet. The man who had feet scratched up the ground with his foot, and the man on his back dropped the seed he carried into the ground. I have often thought of the circumstance. We have to supplement the defects of others, and they ours. "Bear ye one another's burdens," I wish we could get down to real simplicity in the burden-bearing when I lived it a down to real simplicity in the burden-bearing business. In the long ago, when I lived in a dear little personage and had little children, there came to see me a plain-looking little woman, a member of our church, who said: "You spoke last night of bearing one anothers burdens, and I thought maybe you would let burdens, and I thought maybe you would let me help you bear yours, so I have come around to darn your stockings for you. You must have a basket full." And so I had. That basketful of stockings! I can see them now, And the dear little woman! she sat quietly mending the stockings. She did bear my burdens, for there were no seeing machines, and I had so much sewing to do. I WILL DO WHAT I OUGHT

I WILL DO WHAT I OUGHT

HOW much these words have helped me;
"I cannot be everywhere but I can be somewhere. I cannot do everything but I can do something. What I can do, I ought to do, and, by the grace of God, I will do what I ought." If every one of us acted on this for a month the world would be the better for our having lived in it. A favorite writer of mine says: "The meaning of life is education, not through book knowledge alone, sometimes entirely without it. Education is growth; the development of our best possibilities from within outward. We are all at school. Humility, helpfulness and faith are teachers in this University, the education of all for each and each for all." None of us are too poor to enter this university. Let us all too poor to enter this university. Let us all enter it and see how much happier our lives

A CIRCLE IN AN ASYLUM

A CIRCLE IN AN ASTLUM

I RECEIVE letters on almost every conceivable subject, and I thought I had heard of almost all kinds of work as being done by our Daughters, but in a letter just received I am told of a most interesting Circle in an insane asylum. The lady, who is the wife of the physician who formed the Circle, has had most wonderful success. She says: "Many suffer from imaginary diseases, or from depression or delusion, and all seem to forget their own ills in ministering to the needs of others." She has chosen for their work that which brings the sympathy of a woman quicker than anything else. As I read of the results of this Circle, they are simply marvelous, but almost my first thought was, how many women there are who are almost insane from one cause or another who might be helped in the same way. Delusions! Depression! Imaginary diseases! Surely, if these constitute insanity, then there are many people insane who are not in insane asylums, and it might be just as well to take preventive steps to save from going there. Many a one who is there might never have been there, perhaps, if they had taken vigorous measures to save themselves when they first began to be low-spirited. Somebody says we are all more or less deranged, so it might be well to find out just in what direction our incipient insanity less and guard that weak place, and I really do not know of a better remedy than the one my friend has tried on those in the asylum—ministering to others in their great needs. A "Loving Service Circle" "In His Name." This letter has brought to my mind a circumstance that taught mea deep lesson at the time. A member of our church became insane. She was one of the sweetest, most devoted of Christians. She becare dangerous, and had to be taken to an asylum, and in her strait-jacket she did all she could to help the other patients by cheering work, and pointing out to them how much better off they were in the asylum than many others, and would say, "You do not have to wear a strait-jacket."

At times this wor RECEIVE letters on almost every conceiv-able subject, and I thought I had heard of tal, where there are hardly enough well ones to take care of the sick, and if you have strength and life it is just given you to use for somebody else.

SOME LOADS LIFTED

SOME LOADS LIFTED

ATTENDED a meeting of our King's Daughters and Sons a little while ago, and when I heard of all the burdens the Daughters are trying to lift. I was, indeed, thankful for our Order. I did not know of all they were doing until after I had told them of the two colored men who were engaged in loading a cart, and one was having a hard time, for the other was only pretending to 'ift. At last the one who was doing the most of the work stopped and looked at the other and said: "Sambo, do you specks to go to Heaven?" "Of course I does," was the answer. "Then," said the other solemnly, "you will have to lift." This world must be lifted. As I listened, I found out that a few young girls—none of them having money—had resolved to build a honse for certain pour colored people of their city, Brooklyn; poor had resolved to build a house for certain poor colored people of their city, Brooklyn; poor old saints with dark faces, but, perhaps, whiter hearts than ours, who were living in such a wretched building that they were in danger of being esten up by the rats, and the rain fell on the old faces while they were in their beds. And another Circle was support-ing a nurse to visit among the poor sick in our tenement houses. One young girl has started out to endow a bed in memory of a young friend who lost her life in the shocking railroad disaster when on her way home to railroad disaster when on her way home to give her mother a happy Christmas last year. Alas, the dear face was never seen so that it could be recognized, and the twisted little could be recognized, and the twisted little silver cross burnt by the fire, helped to identify the body that had held her beautiful spirit. And all the dear friend asked was one penny a week from anyone who would help her to endow the bed in the hospital in memory of the beautiful daughter who went the fiery way to the palace. And I believe she will set it.

she will get it It is wonderful what faith, and hope, and love will accomplish in the way of lifting out of darkness into light—out of sadness into joy. Only think, if each of "My Own Circle" in the JOURNAL should put aside one cent a week in some little mite-box to help lift some such loads, how much would be lifted. I have found that the exact way to get strength to lift to carry our burden, is to help some-body lift hers. If you have never tried it, try it now. Decide on what burden you will help it now. Decide on what burden you will help lift, and you will surely write to me in the future and tell me it helped you to bear your own laurden better.

Margard 1

WHAT DO YOU FEED THE BABY?

Lacte-Preparata and Carnrick's Food are the only perfect Infant Foods that have ever been produced.

Lacto-Preparata is composed wholly of milk, and when added to water, yields a food that is almost identical with human milk in composition, digestibility and taste. It is designed more particularly for infants from birth to seven months of age, during which time infants should have only milk,

Carnrick's Food, composed of half Lacto-Preparata and half dextrinated wheat, is designed for infants from seven to twenty months of age.

The above two Foods are the only Infant Foods worthy of the name, and the only ones that will always perfectly nourish a child. Send for free samples and a 64-page pamphlet, entitled Our Baby's First and Second Years, by Marion Harland, with advice by an eminent physician, on the Care and Feeding of Infants.

REED & CARNRICK, NEW YORK

NEARLY A CENTURY OLD. MANUFACTURE DE PORCELAINES FARRYQUE FONDEE EN 1797 THE

CH. FIELD HAVILAND LIMOGES CHINA

CFH CFH GDM

PRANCE

MUSIC AND THE PIANO

BEETHOVEN wrote his grandest music after becoming entirely deaf, for he could THINK music.

But as children must creep before they walk, so they must hear musical sounds before they can comprehend musical thought.

Then cultivate musical taste with a really musical instrument. If it be a plano, let it be musical instrument. If it be a puano, set it be a good one.

What one? The Ivers & Pond. You can have one sent on approval.

The price is not high enough to deter you, if a first-class piano is what you want, and what you are going to have; high enough, however, to pay for all a first-class piano comprises; high enough to justify your demanding one that really is first-class. Write for catalogue and further information—(free).

IVERS & POND PIANO CO. Boston.

to every WHAT TO WEAR. MAHLER BROS., 503-504 6th Ave., N. Y.

THE HUMAN HAIR,

It Falls Off, Turns Grey and the Remedy, Prof. HARLEY PARKER, F. R. A. S. Losso & Co., 10th Arch St., Philishs., Pa.

WHEN YOU GET MARRIED have your Wesheling
Invitations
Invitations
CO., 16 State Nt., Chicago, Managem males in Digitized by Google

"Perhaps it may turn out a song, Perhaps hirn out a sermon."

HEN the time of the golden-rod is come, of the harvest days and the ranger's hum, of the dragon-dy with the ganzy wings, and the tail suggesting twoinch stings; when the wind with a new im-patience blows the scattered petals of the scattered petals of the rose, when the robins that nested in the spring to a summer chose are taking witeg; when a solema hush the woodland fills, and the evenings taste of "ager chills;" when the tasseled corn in the bending rows gives "spooky" rustlings when it blows; when the whip-po-will brings out his flute, and the cricket, dressed in his blackest suit, comes out his piccolo, sharp and strill, and pipes on his piccolo, sharp and strill; when the katydid, in the maples hid, says she did, and she didn't and didn't and did; when the scolding squirred the boys can see, taking the spoil of the chestnut tree; when echo sweet, from the haunts of birds persistently calls your parting words; when the thistle-down, like the spirit fair of the summer, floats on the sunlit air; when, against your will, your thoughts will nair of the summer, floats on the sunlit air; when, against your will, your thoughts will stray to the noisy city so far away; when, dripping down from the scaking caves, the raindrops fall on the drifting leaves; when you say "The weather is growing cool," and the children wait, "Oh, that horrid school!" when, whistling softly, without a sound, the smilling landford hangs around; when the purier waits for a parting mash to give you can porter waits for a parting rush to give you one more farewell brush; when the waiter lingers near your chair with a mild "Then you'll re-member" air; when the good nam bends with an anxious look to peer in the hollow pocket-book; when he turns his pockets inside out, and rubs his chin with an air of doubt; when he store at the hill with a with a and rurs has call with an air of doubt; when he stares at the bill with a wistful eye, and draws a check and a long, deep sigh, on the mountain high, by the blue sea's foam, are the signs that the family's coming home.

THE FOLK YOU LEAVE BEHIND YOU

FAREWELL, then, to all the people with whom you have lottered in the summer-land! The man who came to the same land! The man who came to the senshore for his dyspepsia, although he had it with him his dyspepsia, although he had it with him when he came. The strong sen air has done it good; it is much stronger and more aggressive than when he brought it down. All summer long he sighed on the pizzza, and labored in silence at the table. No time he wasted in frivolous conversation when the meal was served. Wide opened he his ready month as it had been a hopper; into its waiting emptiness he poured and shoveled his good food, and tamped it down, then rose and went away to grean. Bitter the memories of his miseries and distresses. Forever, when he talked at all, these did he make the subjects of his lamentations. Farewell to him, nevertalked at all, these did he make the subjects of his lamentations. Farewell to him, nevertheless! May his shadow never grow less nor his liver larger! Farewell to the woman with the rabbit eyes, that were never shut, and the tireless tongue that was never still. She prattled on all day, her tongue a vocal brook; a song with many words, but "nary" tune; a restless, harmless tongue that said no word of harm of any soul and nothing worth rememrestless, harmless tongue that said no word of harm of any soul, and nothing worth remembering of anything; a talking aspen leaf, that with every passing breath of conversation shook out a shower of many-syllabled nothings that floated away over the piazza and down the lawn and out to sen in bubbling, bubbling, chattering verbusity, without beginning, ending or panetuation. Farewell; may silence kiss her lips. And the girl whose eyes were deeper than the sea, and softer than the bearts that melted—did I say heads? I meant hearts—that melted in their glauces; you will hear ber laughter when the whiter you will hear her laughter when the winter winds creep about the house; farewell to the summer girl: it must be always summer where she is. And the professor, as merry where she is. And the professor, as merry out of his books as he is in them. Would that his students might have seen him on the raw and gusty day when he fell overboard in waist-deep water. May Pallas-Athene love him the more dearly because that he knows so much that is not in her stupid books. And the cross man who roared because the children played in the halls on rainy days, have charge and care of him, oh sweet Erinays, with your anaky locks and plaited whipe!

A SONG IN THE NIGHT

A ND the invalid, whose sweetness of pa-tience made the summer days tender and helpful to you with your "light afflic-tions;" whose smiles were the rainbows of tions;" whose smiles were the rainbows of her tears; who sat, a queen upon her throne of suffering screne and even cheerful in the wreathing flames of ceaseless pain, not the cool breath of ocean, nor all the sobbing waves that broke upon the pebbles could assuage; whose aweet submission and unfaltering trust brought hencen so close to earth, twas but a step for her from here to there. Good-bye to her; the clinging pressure of her small, weak hand will linger longer in your thoughts than any other summer memory. Good-bye to her for an autumn month or two, a winter day or two, for another year, may be; or, for a lifetime. "FRIEND AHOY! FAREWELL, FAREWELL!"

FAREWELL to the lazy man, who was ever exasperatingly late at all his meals, who always grew a-weary on the strolls, and turned back naidway; who ever stept the afternoon away at the picnic; may Hercules club him to his tasks this busy winter time. Farewell the man who loved the deep-blue restricts the man who loved the deep-blue restricts. termoon away at the pomic; may Hercules club him to his tasks this busy winter time. Farewell the man who loved the deep-blue restless sea; who always would make one of every sailing party, and who would get seasick in a hammoock or a rocking-chair. May Neptune and all the sea nymphs hold this loyal soul in grateful' remembrance, for more than all other men, through all the summar days of calm or storm, he lay upon his back before the awaying nitars of Poseidon, rending the briny air with groenings past all spelling. Farewell the middle-aged backelor, "fat, and seant of breath," who wore knickerbockers and a Norfolk jacket out of date, and fell in love, or thought he did, with every new girl who came to the house. Blunt not thy flamelipped arrows on his spongy heart, good Cupid: try him with a dynamite bomb. Farewell the woman with five trunks, who never could join a party to go anywhere, or do anything, because she was always either taking one dress off, or putting another on, and who wore her diamonds down to breakfast. Farewell the girl who looked too sweet for anything in the cheapest gown in the house, and apparently the only one alle had, and who wore all day and every day a face that all the diamonds that ever slumbered in a mine, or glittered in a coronet, couldn't buy. Farewell to them all, then, for you'll never get round! to the light hearts and the heavy ones, the said eyes and the laughing ones; to the voice that quivers with sorrow of parting, and the light that thrill with the hope of necting. Farewell the old friends newly met; farewell the new friends old by a summer day's trial! Landlord, adien! The sails are spread that waft us from thy rising bell. Thy danneless pic, thy fearless bread; peace to thy hashes; then—farewell! Woe is us that summer should be so short, and winter so long! That the greeting is the crisp and monosyllable. Hail!" and the parting phrases its regret in the lingering "Farewell!" But so must to be and we have your cards. You must to one another of that. You have our addr

"TO-MORROW AND TO-MORROW!"

FOND, foolish mortals! all coming together FOND, foolish mortals! all coming together again next aummer? Now may the gods give joyous speed to all your hopes and plans. You will never meet again in this life, you. Never! Here and there little fragments of your broken circle will drift together in unexpected places, and at times of startling suddenness, but by no thought or planning of your own; spars and flotsam of a summer wreck. And, maybe, eyes in the spirit world will look down upon your meeting. It is such a little world, this, when we walk by the side of the friends whom we love and trust. There is no world outside our little circle, then. On all its paths there are no fainting pilgrims whom we cannot cheer with words then. On all its paths there are no tainting pilgrims whom we cannot cheer with words of inspiration and with helping arms. No heart-aches that we cannot soothe with friend-ship's whispers of true sympathy and consolation. In all the world there are no tears we cannot kiss away. But when once we separate, and each one takes the way which duty's finger points, why, what a great wide wilderness is this in which we lose each other? A week coes by, and still you know the address week goes by, and still you know the address of your friend. A month drops off the calendar; you have mislaid it, and cannot recall it. The snow falls, and you say, "What was the name of those people we met last summer at Squahmosket?" Hail and farswell! Say, good-bye, and God bless you, then, for the stage is waiting for you. Hold for a minute longer the band that claspe your own. The thingers will not close upon the rose that you will lay upon them when next summer comes.
Look long into the eyes that with the sincerity of friendship are looking their farewell into your own. Note well how deep and true and sympathetic is their silent speech, and paint their hue upon your memory as you look. How white and still the snowy lids will rest upon them when the first snowdrops of your friend. A month drop is off the cal will rest upon them when the first snowdrops shall lift their heads for the rough kisses of the March winds in the spring. Hall and farewell! For all the rivers run into the sea, but it isn't as deep as it used to be; the day is so short and the night so long, and silence ends the sweetest song; the world will turn around too fast 'ere the half-way mile post you have past; though the clock run fast or lotter slow, the hour will strike when you have to go, and you'll reach the end of the longest year when the man with the bow-string says "Come here!" So it's "How do you do? So glad am I to have met you, friend; so-long-good-bye!"

MOST WELCOME HOME!

HOW new and fresh and bright everything looks! Saw you ever a place in all your wanderings quite so beautiful, one-half an comfortable, one-tenth so welcome and one-hundredth part so dear as this plain-looking house, with the dusty door steps, the close-barred shutters, an area lawn not six feet wide and a lovely garden in the back yard paved with bricks? The very dog, delighted to get home, makes a rush for his kennel, a thousand laughs to the minute in his vibrant tail. With nervous seagerness he flutters here and With nervous engerness he flutters here and there, investigating dismantled caches of half-remembered bones, while now and then a yelp of indignant remonstrance announces the disof meignant remonstrance announces the dis-covery that much despised and intensely hated cats have had the outrageous effrontery to in-vade his domain during his absence. In the greater house, with much the same dismay, the good wife, foolishly seeking for things she does not wish to find, proclaims the invasion of the moths. What a nervous tension in every heart, as the good man, trying with most stupid transparence, to veil his own expensess under a clumsy assumption of deliberation stoped transparence, to vert his own experience under a clumsy assumption of deliberation unlocks the front door. Everybody says, "Oh, pa! we could have had it open fifty times!" So could be if he wasn't so eager to get in. When it is opened just wide enough for one person to squeeze through at a time, the certific familia make a make to make in for one person to squeeze through at a time, the entire family nake a rush to march in abresst. The bousehold flows through the long deserted rooms like a living torrent, a torrent and a half, or two torrents. Vainly does the command and clutch of hand, to restrain the household troops. They will be a well-disciplined garrison in a day or two: just now they are ruthless invaders. It is her natural desire to have the first look in every room, to make the first orderly investigation in every quarter. But the rest of the family have brought back with them the untrained wildness of the forest, and the wild turbuhave brought back with them the intrained wildness of the forest, and the wild turbus-lence of the sea. Never before did she long for a small family. Now she wishes that her bushand and the children had but one neck for the crowd of them, that she might keep firm bold of it.

HIS CASTLE AND HIS JUNK SHOP

HIS CASTLE AND HIS JUNK SHOP

TOR it is the delight of the monster man, and the darling children, to bring to light the things that have been hidden from sight all summer: to escape into their own rooms, and pull down, and throw down, and scatter around things which they do not need, and do not want; things for which they have no earthly present use. Vainty doth she wring her hands and shriek. Out come the school books, which she fondly thought she had hidden away beyond all human ken before they went away. Console thy distracted brain, oh angel of order and good rule! The morning when the children start for school no living soul in all this world but you can find those books, and you will find them after long living soul in all this world but you can find those books, and you will find them after long and patient search. The floor of every room is a wreck-atrewn strand of toys and books, and "things" torn out by people "crazy glad" at the home-coming. People go about falling and stumbling over all manner of things that were never on the floor before. Out of a shadowy corner comes the man, holding a by-gone pair of them in his hands. "Fore shadowy corner comes the man, holding n bygone pair of them in his hands. "Fore George," he says, in gird, exultant tones,
"those trousers are as good as new." She remembers well the awful, the perfectly awful, language that he used four months ago, right in the hearing of the children, too, when she suggested that they were good enough to wear to a primary meeting in the Fourth Ward, as it would be quite dark, nobody there but men, and there would be a great deal of kerosene oil and fireworks. He said, smong other things, that he wouldn't be found dead with them on. Now he looks at her in malicious triumph, and says, "'Y jolly, if I hadn't found'em, Maria, I believe in tay heart you were going to throw 'em nway!"

"THE LIGHT OF OTHER DAYS!" "THE LIGHT OF OTHER DAYS!"

He wears then down town the following norming. When he comes home at evening time a change has come over the spirit of his dream. He says, with dark and despairing significance, that he is going to give up. He never did set up for a dude, but if she wants him to dress like a cross between a Clay County farm hand and a wharf loafer in his Sunday clothes, he'll do it right. He'll wear a Prince Albert coat, a flaunel shirt with no collar, and a pair of short trousers with spring bottoms, but these things—. And she, properly crushed, gets the treasures again. spring bottoms, but these things—. And soc, properly crushed, gets the tressures again. The next time he thinks of them, two mouths later, he is gruinpy for two days because she can't remember what they looked like, nor where they are. Nor does she know where they are at that time. Who can keep track of the aimless wanderings of a tramp? Rai-ment you haven't seen for three months does look presentable when you have been accos-tomed to the unconventional, pot-pourri gar-menture of the wilderness. Your bushand menture of the wilderness. Your husband can see nothing the matter with that dress; fits you to perfection, immensely becoming, and stunningly stylish. You have some mis-givings, but you wenr it some place where you meet some people who haven't been out of town at all, or who came back three weeks town at all, or who came back three weeks ago. You have a very pleasant time—in a horn. Then, when you return your husband's bill goes over under the rule, and you can introduce your own measure, in a next, but not too caustic little address which you composed on your way home. Don't make it too long, but nake it foreible. As William Tell once remarked, on a breezy evening when an Arizona zephyr had strayed into Switzer-land, and was blowing the mountains out of the ground by the roots, "Blow on! This is a land of liberty!"

Robert J. Burdette

YOU OUGHT TO KNOW ABOUT HARVEY

There are some things on which every Assertions man and ucessen, buy and girl, should be thoroughly informed.

The building of the first steamboat, the story of the telegraph, the bistory of the Union Pacific Railroad, the rise of Chicago from her sabets, the development of the Columbian Exposition—alt those thrill the breast with a feeling of exultation at the ability of man to carry such graind enterprises to complete success.

In the same line, and of corresponding interest, is the story of the fown of Harroy, Illinois, less than two years ago only a thought in the brain of one practical, progressive, indomitable American citizen—to day a reality of 819 buildings, including nine great manufacturing establishments, with churches, achools, buils, bank, business blocks, depois, offices and all the convenitants of a thirting, busiling community of 4.000 inhabitants, to which additions are being made as fast as house, can be erected to accommodate them.

How this marvelous growth was created, the peculiar conditions which brought it about, the graind principles of temperance and industry on which it is founded, the universally acknowledged soccess which has rowned those well-directed effects of train and capital—all make a story of singular interest, too long to be related here, but which you can have for the asking.

No matter whether or not you want to share personally in the prosperity of this washerfall town, either

No matter whether or not you want to share per-sonally in the prosperity of this woosberful town, either so a resident or an investor, it is a duty you over your-self to become better acquainted with its situationing history.

The founders of Harvey will take pleasure in sending you, at their own expense, as this true document of the enterprise, which will certainly be worth having, and may give you ideas by which you will be greatly the first properties.

e gainer.

If you secution this Magazine, a bandsonic stream of the World's Fair, with pictures of the skidings, will be included. Address.

HARVEY LAND ASSOCIATION 819 Rookery Building, Chicago, Ill.

HARDWOOD FLOORS and BORDERS

Made of

Quarter-cut White Oak and Imported Woods

THE CELEBRATED DETROIT HOT WATER HEATER

WARMING HOMES AND GREENHOUSES SESD FOR ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUE DETROIT HEATING AND LIGHTING CO. 250 Wight Street, Detroit, Mich.

VAN DORN IRON WORKS CO.

CLEVELAND, OHIO

rtistic Wrought fron Workers and Manufacturers of fron Foncing. Lawn Scate, Vasce, Stable Fittings: all kinds of fron Work for Bolldings, Vaults, etc., etc.

JOHNSTON'S MODERN HOMES BEFORE BUILDING

Price $2200

Artistic in Besign, com-plete in all Modern Im-provements. 40 designs of homes costing from $500, to $700, with full descrip-tion, estimates and floor plans. Escal $122, bound in half cloth.

Price $1.00, by Mail

W. K. JOHNSTON, Architect 640 "The Temple" Building, Chicago, Ill.

Furnishing House

has many branches. We concentrate our entire re-sources on wall papering. Pretty effects—new designs, 100 samples maded for 8 cts. Prices, 5 to 50 cts. a roll. A. L. DIAMENT & CO., 1205 Market St., Phila.

BETTER THAN A SAVING BANK

Lots in Chicago's manufacturing suborb, at prices that will make you money, if you will buy now. For full paytheulars see quarter-size advertisement on second cover, August Ladles' Home Journal, or address 0.50. H. Hallesso, in Dearborn M., Room 6.

This Department is conducted and edited by RUTH ASHMORE, who cheerfully invites questions touching any topic upon which her young women readers may desire help or information.

Address all letters to RUIH ASHMORE, care of THE LADIES' HOME JOURNAL, Philadelphia, Pa.

T seems to you that you do not need to be told how to not need to be told how to hook at anything. And yet, my dear girl, that is exactly what you do need. You go out into a world full of wonderful sights, and of many people, and not knowing how to look, you come back with just as little knowledge as when you first started out. You complain of being awkward, and yet you have never looked out for the graceful people, that you may imitate them. You talk of seeing disagreeable faces, rude people and unhappiness, but is it not because you have not looked out for the pleasant people, the goodness and the kindness of this world? You see somebody who is frowning, and you believe that all the world is cross. It is that. You are not looking at everything as you should. Everybody gets that way once and a while. Sometimes because some great trouble has come to them, and everything seems dark and miserable; sometimes it is because one is not well them, and everything seems dark and miser-able; sometimes it is because one is not well them, and everything seems dark and miserable; sometimes it is because one is not well physically, and sometimes it is because one is not well morally.

Now, if you will, you can get the better of these feelings. If you look not only with the eyes in your head, but with the eyes of your heart at the world, you will find that there is a blue sky over your head, that the world the go den-rod, emulating the sunshine, is standing up from the grassy walks, so that even when you look down there is something to cheer you. Then with the eyes of your heart look at the worries and troubles of other people, and, by comparison with them, you will find your own burden so light, and your own back so well suited to carry it, that satisfaction will come. After you have done this once, do not look for the troubles again unless you can make them better: instead, look out for that which is cheerful and good, and seeing so much that is close kin to hope and joy and love and happiness. It will be reflected in your eyes, and to many they will seem like the eyes of the woman loved by a great poet—eyes that were immortalized in song by a great woman poet, and called "the sweetest eyes that ever were seen."

THE GIRL WHO IS GENTLE

THE GIRL WHO IS GENTLE

I DO not mean by this the girl who is gentle in heart and thought, though, of course, I want every one of my girls to be that, but I mean the girl who is gentle in her movements and her speech. She is what you want to be.
It is true you did not intend to knock over the chair as you entered the room, and it is equally true that you had no idea you were planting your foot down as if you wished to stamp the pattern out of the carpet—you did not intend to do these things, but you did them. You made a nervous woman start, the heavy step wakened a skerting laby, and your enternoon awakened a sleeping baby, and your entrance was very ungentle. Then when you began to talk you raised your voice more than was necessary; as you grew interested in the conversa-tion had it reach a shrill tone that was ear tion had it reach a sarrit tone that was ear piercing. You managed to knock over a book, let your fan fall, and you tipped over a glass of water. None of these things are wrong, but they show a lack of consideration, and suggest that in yourself there must be a strain that does not belong to the gentle girl. Learn to walk outsity, learn to keep your ever that does not belong to the gentle girl. Learn to walk quietly; learn to keep your eyes open, so that you may not trip over rugs nor cushions, chairs or tables. You see, I want you to be a gentle woman. It means very much. A sweet, low voice and a quiet manner are more convincing of the power of woman than all the loud talking and blustering imaginable. When I was a little girl I used to have sung to me a song that seemed to describe the finest little lady in the land, and there are two verses of it that I have never forgotten. In telling of the charms of this little lady these words come in, and I wish you would just remember them, and think over what a gentle member them, and think over what a gentle manner and a low voice mean in a woman. This is the old disty;

"Nelly Bly hath a voice,
Sweet as a turtle dove,
Sweet as a turtle dove,
You bear it in the mendow
And you bear it in the grove,
When she walks she lith her for
And then she puis it down
And when it lights there's amasic down
In that part of the town."

DO YOU THINK SO?

Do you think you could love the young man who sneers at his mother and

Do you think you could love the young man who does not take the trouble to look his nextest when he comes to see you?

Do you think you could love the young man who forgets to remove his hat when he is talking to you in the hallway or on the veranda?

Do you think you could love the young man who is never thoughtful of your comfort, but only of his own?

only of his own? Do you think you could love the young man who, while professing love to you, speaks about you in a careless way?

I do not think you could. And between you und me I most sincerely hope not only that you cannot love him, but that you will not.

JUST ONE SMALL WORD

It is only a short one. But I want to say it for the girl who is downhearted. I want to say it to the one who is unhappy; to the one who is tired; to the one who is an invalid, and to the one to whom none of the good things of life seem to come; it is this: "Hope." If you keep on hoping from day to day and from day to day, you will never be entirely unhappy and, if with the hoping you do some helping you will be quite happy.

I know it is hard—this life we lead; but if we keep on hoping and helping, and hoping and helping, we will conse in time to that other life of which we know nothing except that there will be no more weeping, "for God will wipe away all tears." So murk the word that there will be no more weeping, "for God will wipe away all tears." So mark the word on your heart and keep it always before you— that one little word, Hope.

LITTLE POINTS OF DEPORTMENT

SHE is one of the nicest girls who writes me. But she is a little mistaken about one thing. There is no necessity for apologiz-ing for asking a question that concerns her and her manners. The people who never ask anything seldom know anything. Frequently our eyes educate us; but I can understand how our eyes educate us; but I can understand how a bright girl prefers to know how to do the right thing and not make any mistakes. Her questions are not trivial. One's behavior at the table is of great importance, for a person who does not know how to eat properly, frequently takes away the appetite of her neighbor, a something which one has no right to do. So I am going to answer all her questions, believing that there are other girls who, while equally anxious to know what is right, are yet not willing to make themselves interrogation points and ask.

About bread and butter. It is not proper to take a slice of bread, butter it and then bite off whatever you desire. Instead, break off a small piece of bread as you need it, butter it and eat it from your fingers. Radishea, olives, celery, asparagus, long-stemmed berries, and most all fruits are also caten from the fingera. When you eat asparagus, have the dressing

When you cat asparagus, have the dressing put on one side of your plate, take the stalk between your first finger and your thumb, dip the end of it into the dressing, and lay the part that is not esten in a nest way at one side of your plate. The daintiest way to eat an orange is from a fork; that is, the skin and its coarse white lining are pared off with a sharp fruit knife, the orange is stuck on a fork and its coarse white lining are pared off with a sharp fruit knife, the orange is stuck on a fork and its coarse white lining are pared off with a sharp fruit knife, the orange is stuck on a fork and its coarse wastly as one would an apple. Cheese fruit knife, the orange is stuck on a fork and is eaten exactly as one would an apple. Cheese may be taken between the fingers, or it may be put on a bit of bread with a knife, and eaten on that, but a fork is not used with it. Artichokes are, of course, eaten with the fingers, each leaf being dipped in the dressing.

All pastry is enten from a fork, and it is an insult to the cook to touch it with a knife. In fact, your knife has no use except for cutting.

insait to the cook to touch it with a knife. In fact, your knife has no use except for cutting, or buttering something, and when it is resting it should be laid sideways on your plate. Every vegetable can be eaten with a fork, the uses of a spoon being limited to a few desserts and for your coffee or teacup, and there its place is to repose in the saucer. Bouillon is drank from the cups in which it is served; when it is jellied it is eaten with a dessert spoon. Nothing excuses the chasing of a small partiis jellied it is eaten with a dessert spoon, Nothing excuses the chasing of a small particle of something to eat around your plate to pollsh it up. The old idea that one must eat everything that is given to one no longer exists, and the result is that children are not made gluttons. In drinking, remember to hold your goblet or wine glass by the stem, and not by the bowl. While waternelon is eaten with a fork, canteloupe has served with it a dessert spoon. As it is customary, nowadays, to have the salt served in open salt cellars, it may be mentioned that in helping one's self the salt should be put near the outer edge of one's plate. In leaving the table it is not necessary to fold your napkin; instead, just as you rise lay it on the table. I think I have answered all the questions of my interrogation point, and I applaud her for the asking what point, and I applaud her for the asking what she should do when at the table.

WAS IT YOU?

THERE was somebody who said an unkind word which burt somebody else, it you?

There was somebody who was thoughtless and selfish in her manner and mode of living. Was it you?

There was sometonly who has all you? the actions of somebody else. Was it you? There was somebody who found nothing but the was somebody who found nothing but There was somebody who harshly criticized fault in the belongings of her friend.

There was somebody who borrowed a book, and kept it for months. Was it you?

There was somebody who never stopped to think who was hurt by the sarcastic word. Was it you?

There was somebody who, day in and day out, never did anything to make anybody else happy. Was it you?

I hope you can answer "No," to every one of these questions; but if you cannot, and are forced to droop your head because you know you are guilty, then resolve that the next time the accession is made, and the question asked, you can say with truth, "It was not I."

WITH GIRLS WHAT YOU WANT * * TO KNOW * *

> Under this heading I will cheerfully answer each month any question I can, sent me by my girl readers—RUTH ASHMORE.

II. H.—I would advise your advertising for such a osition as you desire.

DEWDROP.—The question of kinning your betrothed is one that you must decide for yourself.

MARTHA-It does not seem advisable for any one who is in a bad state of health to marry.

C. E. F.-A little powder put on the forebead, under the bang, will tend to keep it in better curt.

AN OLD SCHECKIBER—I think it is legal for first cousins to-marry, though I do not think it desirable.

E. W. M.—It would be in perfectly good taste to wear the coin you describe as a poudant on your watch chain.

Alock S.—It is customary to allow one year to elapse after the death of a first wife before a second marriago is contracted.

i.ttle Rettencer and Others-1 think vaseline robbed well into the scalp will do more to thicken the hair than almost any other preparation.

C. G.—I would suggest your writing to Miss Brennar Believoe Hospital, New York City, for information i regard to adopting nursing as a profession.

SUBSCRIBER-Any of the well-known daily papers in New York City would be the proper medium for your advertisement for a position as lady's maid.

SCOTCH-It is not necessary to provide carriages for the guests to the wedding; if they wish to come they are supposed to make arrangements for themselves.

L. P.—I would not wear the black and white chine sitk until I had discarded the black veil. Black un-dressed kid gloves are in best taste when mourning is worth.

K. B.—In writing to the gentleman who has the title Professor address his letters, "Professor George rown," and begin your letter with "Dear Professor rown."

LILLIE R.—The bride's parents formish the wedding cards. (1) The three-quarter length capels not becom-ing to many figures, and tends specially to make a short weman look dampy. Geometa 8.—Wash your hair in warm water and am-monia, and after that have it thoroughly brushed and give it a good brushing twice a day. This ought to keep it perfectly free from dandruff.

LULA MAY—In sending the present to the wife of your doctor let it be addressed to her and sent to bee new home. Address the package to "Mrs. Charles Brown" and not to "Mrs. Dr. Brown."

PERPLEXED ELLEN-The custom of sending out bride's cake is no longer observed. At a very quiet wedding it would be quite proper to dispense with unbers or bridesmarks. The family of the bride engage the organist and pay him.

LOREYTA B.—I think it in very had taste to accept money from a young man who is not closely related to you. Even if he did send it to you to belp you to have a good time during your vacation it should have been re-terned with a polite sote of thanks.

Victors Y.—The only way to become a good talker is to be observant and to notice what pleases people. Do not permit yourself to be personal, and as far as possible forget yourself, for you will find that what you say and what you think is seidom of interest to outsiders. C. R. S.—It is not necessary to notice an invitation to an afternoon tea; that is, if you go your presence is sufficient answer, and if you do not go, a visiting card enclosed in an envelope addressed to your hosters and sent either by post or messenger on the day of the af-fair is proper.

AN INTERESTED READER AND OTHERS—I cannot recommend any depitatory nor anything to be used upon the eyelasthes to increase their length or thickness.

(2) For suggestions as to the care of the skin, refer to the article on the complexion in the August number of the JOURNAL.

M. E. V.—If your hair does not cort naturally, and as you have been obliged to cut it short because of si-lees. I would suggest as a harmless way of curling it that it be put up is papers. (2) Try dabbling your eyes with a solt lines cloth made very wet with water as hot as you can endure it.

JENNIE-Your card certainly should have the peeds:
"Mbs" on it. It would be in perfectly good taste in send a visiting card to a man friend to let him know you are in the city in which he is living, so that he may have an opportunity to call on you. Thank you very much for your kind wishes for my welfare.

Leurna L.—I do not think that a young man who speaks lightly of his sisters is a desirable acquaintance. Respect for womankind is part of a gentleman's character, and he who is without it may be set down as a cad; and if he is in the labit of expressing it to other women, as a rude cad he deserves to be estracted by

E. M.—It is said that the wearing of high stiff collars frequently causes bollows in the neck. To make it planuper try giving it a gentle massage with corea but-ier every utable. If your neck is well shaped do not con-sider its thinness, but have your counter dresses cut-cut record, so that the neck has the studight and the sir-

6. R.—While there may be a great attraction between two people who have just met. I doubt if what is called fore commences at first sight. Acquaintance and a knowledge of each other usually brings about real love. (2) The quantity of household lines required for a trous-seau is governed entirely by just how you are to live, and the amount of money you can expend upon it.

Reseason—If you are careful in regard to your dies, that is, not eating much greasy food or that which tends to heat the blood, are regular in taking exercise and bathing, and avoid tight lacing, you should not have the very red face of which you complain. From the symptoms you describe, I should imagine that you needed the attention of a physician, and would suggest your applying to one.

C. B. D. AND OTHERS—I want to thank a great many of my dear girls for the words of encouragement that come to me. It is possible that even they do not realize how much the expression of approbation means when one is trying to do one's best, and it gratifies me to know that not only, through God's help, have I been able to say the belping word, but that I have gotten that best of all things, a little love.

Bosy B.—The friends who are pleasant one day and disagreeable the next are scarcely worth considering, but your own self-respect demands that your manners shall always be the same. (2) To keep the dispect to its order, I would suggest the outling of seven fruit and green vegetables, and an absolute neglect of greany Bosats, gravies and lot breads. (2) For a swellen scometh, I would advise gentle massage treatment.

SECTEMBER WEIDENG—A traveling does may be ween at any time of the day when a bride is to leave soon after the ceremony. The bridegroom should wear dark trouters and walstoom, a frock cost and a four-baind vis. With her traveling dress the bride should wear her last or boines. If there is sufficient time before the train starts it would be permissible for the bride to go into the distingeroom and pariake of the collation.

Consistent.

Tous—My dear girl, even if you do find your mother may impathetic, will keep on trying to do your best, and make her as far as possible your closest friend. Tell her how you liet. Economies mothers are as any as daughters, and feel as if they were not doing right in being instreased in the illule juys and sorrours of a young girl—the person to show throu how morrise this is, is the character bereadt. It may seem difficult to be always trying to do what is right and not to gain any reward for it, but after all, by and requester that one should be right because it is right, and not for the price that may or may not counter.

EVERY LADY WHO

article that will enable her, at a very small expense, to keep the interior of her house and all her Purniture looking just like new Such an article is

CAMPBELL'S VARNISH STAIN

a scientific combination of Varnish with Colors, made expressly for the purpose, by which any person can satisfactority state and varnish, with one application, all kinds of bousebold Furniture (wood or rattan) and interior wood-work, transforming it into beautiful imi-tations of Cherry, Maliogany, Walnut, Rosewood, Oak, Ebony or Vermilion, producing a perfect imitation of the natural wood finished with Varnish, and it is the only article that has ever been made that will satisfactorily accomplish this result, and it is a delight to every housekeeper who has used it.

They are put up for household use, in all the Colors above mentioned, in half-plat caus at 30 cents, plats 50 cents. Ask your local dealer for them, and if he does not have them ask him to order from the nearest of the following wholesale agents, and they will be supplied at manufacturer's prices;

supplied at manufacturer's prices:

Hall & Rockel, New York, N.Y.: Shoemaker, & Busch, Philiadelphia, Pa.; James Bailer & Son, Baltimore, Md.; Strong, Cobb & Co., Cleveland, Ohio: Peter Van Schaark & Son, Chicago, Hl.; Moditt West Brug Co. and Meyer Bros. Chicago, Hl.; Moditt West Brug Co. and Meyer Bros. Chicago, Hl.; Moditt West Brug Co. and Meyer Bros. & Brug Co., St. Louis, Mo.; Lyman Eliel Drug Co., Minnenpolis, Minn.; Noyes Bros. & Curler, St. Paul, Minn.; Gresse & Button Co., Milwan-kee, Wia; A. Klefer & Co., Indianapolis, Ind.; Hanelsins Forkins Brug Co., Grand Raapda, Mch.; McChare, Walker & Gilson, Albany, N.Y.; John L. Thompson, Sons and Co., Troy, N. Y.; Richardson Brug Co., Gmada Co., Troy, N. Y.; Richardson Brug Co., Gmada Co., Troy, N. Y.; Richardson Drug Co., Des Moines, Iowan Bridges, McDowell Co., Laoisville, Kr.; Woodward, Paxon & Co., Kansac City, Mo.; C. D. Smith Brug Co., St. Joseph, Mo.; Pfilmpion, Cowam & Co., Baffalo, N. Y.; Moore & Hubbard, Syracuse, N. Y.; Balcock & Slowell, Binghamion, N. Y.; J. C. Barnard, Rochester, N. Y.; Mailbews Bros., Scranton, Pa.; Meyer Bros. Brug Co., Ballas, Texas; Dowle & Moise, Charleston, S. C.; Finlay & Brumswig, New Moise, Charleston, S. C.; Finlay & Brumswig, New Celemn, La.; Spirlock Need & Co., Neshville, New, Thompson & Ganesterk, Galveston, Texas; Fuercell Laid & Co., Relimes have so successfully illled a long-felt want that some worthless imitations have already been placed on the market, so be particular to see that you get

"CAMPBELL'S" Take no other!

Carpenter, Woodward & Morton BOSTON, MASS.

AREN'T YOU SORRY

That you don't live in NEW YORK PERSSYLVANIA WEST VIRGINIA OHIO ISDIASA RICHIGAN WISCOSSIS or Bo that you could get for $1.00

FREE THE LADIES' DELIGHT IRONING BOARD

4f. 6 in. long, 12 in. wide, 3 in. thick, folded. Has self-adjusting Clamp and Brace. Can be festioned in shelf, window sill, or table in one second. A child can do it. Is firm and solid. Nothing like it made. In the simplest, most convenient and the only perfectly satisfactory, IROMING BOARD ever constructed.

WALTER HILL CO., 218 Wabash Ave. Chicago

FASHIONABLE HAIR We will mail goods to reliable parties through-out the United States for approval. The newest styles and best of goods at lowest prices. No money required until they are received. No obligation to keep goods if unsatisfactory. Send for circular.

JOHN MEDINA 451 Washington St Boston, Mass.

A lady's fine watch—fourteen-karat gold filled; jewelled works; stem-winder; stem-set; a warranted time-keeper; a gem to look at: THIS IS the NEW

QUICK-WINDING "Waterbury."

No cheap Swiss watch can compare with this perfected product of American machinery and brains; they keep quality up and prices down. Not a cheap-looking watch, but a low-priced one Your Journier setts 16.

$2.00 for a large JR Moth proof.

LAWRENCE, BUTLER,

A BENHAM.

To High St., Columbus, O.,

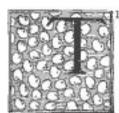

Our illustrated book on

Carpets and Cur tains, free.

5% ft. long. 33 in. wide. Perfect in every respect. Long soft fur, Salver White or Grey. Suitable for any Parior or Reception Hait.

MR. COATES cheerfully invites questions touching any topic upon which his young readers may desire help or information. Address all letters to FOSTER COATES, care of THE LADIES' HOME JOURNAL, Philadelphia, Pa.

HE letters that come to me as a result of these off-hand talks with my boy friends, would seem to in-dicate that I have touched points in which boys of to-day are interested, and to me they bring much information as to the make-up of the American boy that is ever new and of interest. Before me as I write there is a heap of these letters, all of them dealing with a single subject, and as I look at them it seems to me that the spirit of war is still abroad in the land. Here is a sample that I will recording. that I will reproduce;

"I have just finished reading a book called 'Military Revess.' How can I get into West Point, and how long before I can become a commanding officer?"

This letter is written in all earnestness and This letter is written in all carnestness and sincerity. It is not to be laughed at, for the boy who wrote it was merely seeking knowledge, and no one who so seeks should be idly ansered at. I have a score or more of letters of the same sort on my desk now.

There are loys who prefer the may to the army, and they write too, asking all sorts of questions about the Naval Academy at Annanolis.

All of which shows that the American boy of to-day has in him that same spirit that has of to-day has in him that same spirit that has lived ever since the Greeks showed what hu-man valor could accomplish. There can be no doubt, if I interpret aright the letters that are constantly coming to me, that the American routh of to-day is full of fight, and only look-ing for an opportunity to exhibit his ability in that particular line.

ASPIRATIONS THAT BOYS HAVE

IN talking with my boy friends upon this subject, I feel that I cannot be as importial as I could wish to be. I cannot relack my of them for wishing to become famous as soldiers and sallors, for the stars on our flag are very largely due to the men who fought in the ranks in both branches of the service. It would be groung for any one writing for American boys to overlook the splendid careers of Farragut or of Grant, or of Sherman, or Sheridan, or Phil Kenrney who had but one arm, but who, old soldlers say, was a veritable genius on the bottle field as he rode over it with the reius of his borse between ever it with the relist of his house between his teeth. Certainly the American boy has much to look back upon from the time that the farmers of Massachusetts held their own against trained mero who had fought to the French wars and in Spain, down to the time of the bottle of Gettysburg—the greatest bat-tle, perhaps, that was ever fought, for the rea-son that the life of a nation depended upon it,

THE SERVICE OF THE COUNTRY

A S I have said, I have no word of rebuke for loys who wish to enter into the service of their country. It is a fact that the best men this country has produced have come from small cabins in the West, where they did in all good faith earn their bread in the sweat of their brows. No, my boy friends, that sort of thing has become something of the past. There are few cabins in the West now. Great cities stand where the enbias stood, and the sons of the men of yestenlay are the men of to-day. No one can quarrel with the youth who wishes to emulate the deeds of the great men who have gone before him. I am in a way as open to rebuke as any of my hoy readers are when this matter of military heroism comes up. I have before me S I have said, I have no word of rebuke or my noy renders are when this matter of military heroism comes up. I have before me as I write. Thackeray's "Chronicle of the Drum," and I advise every hoy to read it. I can never read the story of Sherman's murch to the sea, with its rolume of song and story, without wishing I might be a Sherman. I never read the poem that describes Sheridan mains down the sead hand and form Williams. going down the good broad road from Win-chester town, twenty miles away, without feeling that there are depths in the current of our American valor that are not easily sounded.

They have all history behind them from the time when the three hundred Greeks kept the pass at Thermopyle. But there are no passes of that kind now. It is well for my boy friends to take that fact into consideration. And science has destroyed war as it was, and

And science has destroyed war as it was, and has made it murder. That fact must also be taken into consideration. The men who kill to-day are the men who do not fight. They make the wenpons, and the money, too.

Still, I see no reason why some of the questions of my readers should not be fairly answered. The most of these run in this way:

"How can I get into West Point?" or "How can I get an appointment in the Navy?" I treat these questions in all seriousness, for it is a part of my experience with boys that they are bonest. They dream and build castles in are honest. They dream and build castles in the air, but they steal no material to do it with. I would not give one cent for an American boy who has not in his heart of hearts pictured himself the President of the United States. A boy who cannot climb is not much of a boy. A boy who will not aspire to climb high is not as good a boy as he might be.

CHANCES IN MILITARY LIFE

OVER on Governor's Island, just below the city of New York, there is one veternn, who has done his country some service. He is a major-general in the array of the United States. He would have one arm more if he had let some one else do the fighting for him when fighting was to be done. He commanded a wing of Sherman's army in the great march from Atlanta to the Sea and he has were discovered in a wing is seeman sariny in the great march from Atlanta to the Sea, and he has served in many places, and always well. This man is General Oliver Otis Howard. He is very brief in expressing his opinion of military general to me one day; "you can't make them."

What are the chances in a military life?" he continued repeating my question. "Well, here is one of them" and at this point he lifted the stump of the arm that had been shot away.

"Still," said, be "I see no reason why young Americans should keep out of the army young and no one or navy. This is a great country, and no one knows what the future may bring forth. At present our navy is very largely manned by foreign sailors. I wish it were otherwise, for I believe that we have the best men in the world right here in this country."

The grizzled one arm old General was right The grizzled one-arm old General was right so far as I can make out. The difficulty with our American soldiers and sailors now is that after they know their profession well they leave this country, where there is no fighting to speak of, and go where there is fighting and promotion and money as well. The best officers they have in those outbreaks that are constantly occurring on the borders of Eastern Europe are men who were trained either in England or America. But there is a reason for their describin of the land that gave them their education. It lies in the fact that there for their desertion of the land that gave them their education. It lies in the fact that there is no fighting to be done here.

Now, if all the boys who read Trie Labries' Home Journal, were to be divided, half and half, and if one half were to be detailed to serve in the navy and the other in the army, we would have a much larger army and navy than we now have. But Congress in its wisdom has seen fit to prevent anything of this kind, for it has restricted the navy, and has ordained that on a neace footing our army ordained that on a peace footing our army shall consist of 10,000 men and no more.

WEST POINT AND ANNAPOLIS

WEST POINT AND ANNAPOLIS

Of it is that West Point does not hold out the same inducements it once did. What is the use in learning to fight if there is no one to fight? That is the question that some of the students ask, but they are not wise students. It is not an easy thing to get into either West Point or Annapolia. It depends a good deal upon your Congressman. He has, at periods, the right of an appointment at either or both of these great schools. Under the law now there must be a competitive examination of the applicants, and this is thoroughly fair. The son of a wusherwoman may win before the son of a millionaire, and in any event is treated the same. I sometimes think oughly fair. The son of a musherwoman may win before the son of a millionalre, and in any event is treated the same. I sometimes think that this fair and democratic way of dealing with our young men produces better results than if we pursued a different policy. So there it stands. Do you wish to become a Farragat or a Porter or a Grant or a Sherman or a Sheridan? Then apply to the Congressman in your district, or if this fails try the last resort—the Secretary of War or of the Navy. They will probably not interfere. You see this its big country, and if all the athletic, lot-blooded boys who think fighting is fun were put in training we should have a nice time of it some day or another. Yet I will say to my hoy friends that I know of no better schools than those of West Point and Annapolis.

I find in some of my letters this question: "What do they teach at West Point?"

I can answer this very briefly. They teach you all of value that is taught in any college, and they teach you that in this life your honor is your shield. They could not teach much more.

THE MATERIAL ADVANTAGES

THE MATERIAL ADVANTAGES

A ND now we come to the material advan-A inges of a position of brone in the army or navy. I find in these articles that I am sometimes misunderstood when I speak of the mere money benefits that follow some special callings. But the conditions are such in these days that money and sentiment are so enterined that there can not well be sengrated. entwined that they can not well be separated. I should be very loth to advise any of my boy I should be very loth to advise any of my boy readers to enter into any profession that would not promise him a sufficient income to sustain any responsibilities that he might take upon lamself. I am no great lover of gold, but I am constrained at times to revert to the old, and it may be somewhat vulgar, saying: "Talk is cleap, but it takes money to buy land." That is why I take up the material end of this subject. And I say to the young man who wishes to enter the army or the may for purely material reasons and no other: Don't. It will be the mistake of your life. If you wish to go into the revice for the reason that you think you can be of use to your country then; Do—if you can.

PAY OF THE ARMY AND NAVY

So far as the actual pay is concerned, our Government does as well or even better by its graduates from its military and naval by its graduates from its initiary and suvain schools than any foreign country. A major-general of the army gets $7,500 per year, and yet all our major-generals at this time are men who served the country in its need. A brigadier general is supposed to get $5,500; a colonel $3,500; a lieutenant-colonel $3,000; a major $2,500, and so on down to an unmounted first lieutenant at $1,400 per year.

this is $2,500, and so on down to an unmounted first lieuenant at $1,400 per year.

In the hary the pay is somewhat the same. There is no admiral in the American navy now since Admiral Porter died. The rear-admirals, however, get $6,000 a year when in command of a squadron at sea, $5,000 when doing shore duty at some of our navy yards, and $4,000 when waiting orders. A lieuten-ant-commander in the service of the United States navy after the date of his commission for four years, gets $2,400 per year when on duty. After four years more of service he may get $2,000.

Some of my young readers may say that $7,500 a year, or $6,000 or $5,000 or even $2,500 is very good pay for a man who has little to do. Those who say this make a great mistake. There are men who have served homorably and earnostly in the service in both the army and navy, who graduated with high rank from and navy, who graduated with high rank from their respective schools, but who in their middle and old age are poor so far as the goods of this world are concerned. There are goods of this world are concerned. There are men who are in the service of the navy who have been looking for promotion these twenty years, and have received little of it. There are men who are string in the army on the frontier who are still looking for some call to step up higher. You will remember how Wolfe quoted Grey as he came before the Heights of Abraham, when he accepted the poet's idea that "the paths of glory lead but to the grave."

SOME CONSPICUOUS EXAMPLES

SOME CONSPICUOUS EXAMPLES

It is a merciful and a good thing that all of the great men that West Point or Annapolis have produced have died poor. And what is more, they were poor all their lives. In the eyes of a merely commercial man the career of some of the greatest of them was full of failure. Grant tried almost everything before he found that which was to bring him his fame. Sherman was a failure in every business except that of war. Hancock was a grent soldier who knew fighting and knew that well, but when he attempted politics it was beyond him. Perhaps General Philip H.
Sheridan was the wisest of all those great gencrals of our war. He was a soldier from first to last. He devoted his whole life to the service and died the last General of the American and died the last General of the American armies, that title being conferred upon him when he lay dying.

THE CHANCE OF PROMOTION

A S to promotion: Once you have gone A. through West Point or Annapolis I will be frank enough to tell you the chances of promotion are small. You see, we are not at war with any nation, and are not likely to be for some time to come, if ever. Therefore, the fighting man is subordinated to the man of business and affairs. There is a "drummer" for a New York grocery house who makes every year of his life twice as much money as does the senior major-general of the armies. does the senior major-general of the armies of the United States. If there was a great war on hand, then indeed there might be some chance for promotion in both army and navy. There is a gray veteran in my mind as I write. He went into the buttle of Fredericksburg a He went into the buttle of Fredericksburg a private and came out a lieutenant. He could not well help it, for almost all the men who were in his company were killed. Promotion was quick in those days, and for that nattler so was death. Nowadays, West Point is turning out more men than the country needs. But it is a wonderful training school. I do not believe it has its equal in the world. Not even the famous French school in which Napoleon, the greatest soldier of our times, graduated, can equal it.

MAKERS RATHER THAN DESTROYERS

MAKERS RATHER THAN DESTROYERS

Of in the end, if there he among my renders those who love the blue and long for epaulets, them let them have them if they can get them. If they can secure an appointment at either West Point or Amapolis, this I can promise—they will find no coat of dishonor there unless they make it. And for aught I know there may be some of my younger realers now marching boldly on to conquer words of three syllables who may yet command armies. Yet I would say to those Cusars, and Alexanders, and Napoleons in embryo, "Don't go too fast. The world is growing. Men of peace and good-will are also embryo, "Don't go too fast. The world is growing. Men of peace and good-will are also growing in favor, and after awhile warriors who fight for money will be out of work." I who fight for money will be out of work." It have said, I in no may rebuke the desire on the part of my boy friends to fight for their country. I merely bid them to wait until their country demands the fighting. As a matter of fact, the young men who enter our army and many will have little to do for many years but wait wearily for promotion.

It may be said that I am speaking in a pessinglatic way of the advantages offered in the simistic way of the advantages offered in the army and havy of the United States. I am not. The records of both are above all criti-cism. And if any of my young readers thinks he can serve his country and himself better by being a member of one of the arms of its service, let him go to his Congressman and see if he can settle it at once. Frankly, however, I do not advise him to do this. War and warriors destroy more than they make.

SOUND, PRACTICAL ADVICE TO YOUNG PEOPLE

A BUSINESS education is necessary to business success. Every person should study book-keeping, business forms, permanship, letter writing, business faw, or shorthand; at home, by mail. Successfully taught by Havan't Stratfor's Onl. Soc. 400 W. Main St., Buffulo, N. Y. Write for Prospectus.

Full Dress Suits

EQUAL in every particular to the $13 and $100 mits made by any other leading bouse. We are the only house in the United States making a specialty of Evening Dress Suits at the lowest possible cost. We import only the best fabrics, the style, fit and finish of our graments are strictly guaranteed, and our Dress Suits acknowledged to be the most elegant made.

NO RISE. Costomers may return garments if mastinactory, and all express charges will be paid by us. Every gentleman in society finds an dwening Bress Suit a necessity, as good form demands such for parties, weddings and all evening receptions. We send full instructions for self-measurement, so simple that any one can use it. We are general toilors, and furnish samples of all styles of goods. Address (inclusing the for postage).

KAHN TAILORING CO. 14 Washington Street

KAHN TAILORING CO., 14 Washington Street Box T, Indianapolis, Ind.

OUR COMBINATION."

Extra Pair Pants, and Hat to Match, for Buys, ages 4 to 11 years.

BEST VALUE EVER OFFERED.

Strictly all treat. Best of Strictly all treat. Best of Strictly Perfect-string, dreat variety. Single or double breasted, Sample powers of the goods the Combinations' are made from and these to make the strictly of the strictly of the strictly strictly strictly strictly strictly of the strictly str

Our S13 Suits for Men, best value in the world, wer

o same brints in above. Pinely Illustrated Full Catalogue of Men's and low Citalons and Furnishings sent free to any address.

PUTNAM CLOTHING HOUSE, Chicago, III.

We are making $6,000 Combinations for fidt and winter

RAMBLER BICYCLES

G. & J. Pneumatic TIRES

BEST and MOST Luxurious

GORMULLY & JEFFERY MFG. CO. N. Franklin and Pearson Sts., Chicago WASHINGTON NEW YORK

A MODERN BATH

The Latest and Best Quick, self-heating, so takes makined, place of heater, where contracted with water pine. So both room require, necessial, licespensive, complete, pre-sist. Beatraits be related that, or nown. Bend for Cartelingue, Mosely Folding Bath Tub Co. 178 S. Canal St., Chicago, 181.

NO MORE

Wiged of with map and water Weisespread, 30T Pelicibid Warranced net to have pellow Buttopholes Protected By Matt { Kuths, 25 cents Kuths, 50 cents All styles and sizes. Katalog free BAWL KOLLAR CO. Detroit, Mich.

WOMEN IN JOURNALISM

BY FOSTER COATES

HAVE been at pains recently to ask a number of leadto ask a number of lead-ing editors for their opinions of women workers in jour-nalism, and, in the main, I have found these opinions very favorable to the women, Some editors were enthusias-

Some editors were enthusiastic about women's work; others did not believe in them very much, and still others knew nothing about the matter, because they had not considered it, or had not even employed women. But the general tenor of the replies
I received was that women were now doing good work for the leading newspapers, and were being well paid for their services.

WHY should not women succeed in news-

V paper work? Frankly, I cannot think o. any valid reason. Frankly, I cannot think o. any valid reason. To be sure, various excuses are given: vacillation of purpose; inability to concentrate effort; weak physique; lack of experience; insufficient knowledge of the world and its affairs; and so on, through a long and tiresome list of excuses, all frivolous, none of them worthy to be called an objection, or even seriously considered. Such excuses are usually made by men who are judging women by a past standard, men who forget that in 'his golden hour of triumph for woman she has been educated to do any and all kinds of work where brains and ability are required—an hour when woman considers her physical condition to be as important as that she shall be well gowned; when lack of purpose has been pushed aside forever, and plodding perseverance has brought its own reward. Excuses such as these may be made by men who have ance has brought its own reward. Excuses such as these may be made by men who have studiously avoided giving woman an opportunity in a profession that is eminently fitted for her, and with some people they may be allowed to settle the question; but it is only the few, and even they must soon give way to the new order of things.

I think it is pretty well established by this time that the avenue woman pressures as time that the average woman possesses as much brains as the average man. Woman can no longer be considered weak of physique, shy and retiring, anxious to hide berself from the gaze of the world. Physical culture has made her dashing, str ight and strong, and she has learned that if she wants to get on in the world she must be sendious persecular. she has learned that if she wants to get on in the world she must be studious, persevering, patient, and toil with unremitting zeal. The young woman bressed by God with a good constitution, and kept sound and healthy by following prescribed rules of hygiene and physical culture, he has received a good education, and is willing to add to it by con-stant study, who is anxious to succeed in the world, and knows how to write good English, and can tell in an easy, attractive, truthful world, and knows now to write good English, and can tell in an easy, attractive, truthful way what she sees and hears, one who can make good copy for the printer, and is willing to obey instructions from her superiors—such an one has as good an opportunity as any young man similarly equipped to succeed in incompalism.

TAKE a big literary center, New York city for example, and there is not a daily paper that does not employ from one to five women on its regular staff—women who are earning from ten to eighty ollars per week. And what is true of New ork is true, to a lesser extent, in all the other big and little cities of this continent. Wherever woman has gone into newspaper work, with a clear head and willing hands, and displayed intelligence and ability she has been welcomed, and has won—won respect for her coming, and, good salaries for her work. And, speaking of salaries, the questin is often asked: What pay may a woman expect for her work

What pay may a woman expect for her work in journalism?

There is no standard. One woman may be worth, and receive, three times as much as her sister. And the reason for this is obvious. The one may possess more ability, be a better writer, or have the divine gift of scenting news, and thus make herself more valuable to her employer. The New York newspapers pay from five dollars to ten dollars per column of two thousand words, and success in getting one's matter printed, of course, de-pends upon its newness, and the skill and freshness with which the subject is presented. Women who write and are paid by the col-umn sometimes earn thirty dollars per week, and frequently twice as much. It all depends upon the theme, and its treatment. Many women receive salaries of twenty-five to forty dollars per week for regular work; that is, doing anything and everything that comes

WHAT work in journalism is woman best fitted to do well?" is snother question repeatedly asked.

It has long been the custom to think that women were able to write fashion articles only, perhaps now and then society notes, or to de-scribe the opening of a dry goods store. All that is changed now, because the day has gone by when any one person, man or woman, is supposed to be able to do all kinds of newspaper work equally well. And, as in medicine, the law, and other learned professions, men and women have become specialists in jour-nalism. It depends altogether on the taste and inclination of the writer. Some prefer editorial writing; others devote their time to art; others to literature, or the drama, music, politics, sports, etc. A woman must follow her own taste. Gail Hamilton is one of the best political writers in this country. So was Anna Dickinson—alas! that she should be incapacitated for work—in her day. The late Middy Morgan made fame and laurels from cattle reporting. Miss Hutchinson, of the New York "Tribune," is recognized as one of the most skillful reviewers of books; and so it goes as talents vary. It is not necessary for a beginner to have a specialty; indeed, it is better not. To begin by keeping eyes and ears open, doing what is required, until she has mastered a general knowledge of the entire newspaper business, is far better. Then she can choose such work as is best adapted to her pen, and strive to occupy that field better than any one else in that same line!

A RE the chances of promotion good for A a woman in a newspaper office?" is another question frequently asked. Not very good, unless she is especially talented. The tendency, nay, the rule, even in newspaper offices where woman's work is recognized and well paid for, is to place men in charge of im-portant departments, on the old hypothesis that men are more reliable than women, and can work harder and longer if it be necessary, and are more to be depended upon. But this or-der of things should not last; it will not endure if women themselves want to change it. Let if women themselves want to change it. Let them first deserve promotion by good work, and then enforce their claim.

What kind of treatment do women receive from men in newspaper offices?

The very best. As there are all kinds of women, so there are all kinds of men. Women women, so there are all kinds of men. Women have it in their own power to command re-spect by deserving it. It has been my experi-ence that male newspaper workers trent with distinguished consideration and kindness women who many be employed with them in the same office. Bad manners is no longer a badge of genius, and the profession of news-paper workers is, in the main, composed of gentlemen.

HOW shall a woman first obtain work on a

A difficult question, truly. It is better for the beginner not to obtain it by influence. A new idea, presented to an editor in attractive language, is the best introduction. Do not go into a newspaper office and sit with folded hands, waiting for some one to help you. No newspaper needs such a person, and no editor will long tolerate such a one in his presence. A good plan is to look over all the newspapers; study their contents, their deficiencies, and then apply for a position, offering to do this, that, or the other work that is not being done, or is not well done. Every editor is anxious to increase the sales of his paper. This can only be done by publishing paper. This can only be done by publishing good articles. If you can write good articles, and have abundance of good ideas, your work will soon be in demand, and will be well paid for. Old and uninteresting topics, treated in a dull or stupid fashion, are not wanted. It is ideas, good English, originality, truthful-ness and reliability, that go to make a good newspaper writer.

HERE are a few things that the beginner in newspaper work should remember. Don't forget that there is no sex in brains. Don't write upon a hackneyed subject, un-less you can treat it in a new and strikingly original manner.

Don't run your sentences together in such a way that an editor cannot understand what you mean.

Don't write illegibly. Put a full stop at the end of each sentence. Punctuate prop-

Don't abbreviate; spell out all words plainly, and be sure you use capital letters when necessary.

Don't bother an editor for work.

have no ideas of your own, take a little time to read, study, observe, and freshen your mind. Then seek him.

Don't forget that typewritten copy is more easily read and more acceptable than either pen or pencil work, and that most editors pre-

Don't use words of any foreign language when good Anglo-Saxon can be employed.

Don't forget that accuracy is one of the necessary elements of success in newspaper writing.

Don't take everything that you bear for gospel, and print it as such. Investigate every fact, and establish its genuineness before us-

Don't complain if your copy is cut or bluepenciled. Editors do not use blue pencils for fun. They do it to improve copy.

Don't expect to become famous at one bound, for you will probably be disappointed. Don't forget that it requires as much brains and ability, if not more, to write a good paragraph as it does to write a column article.

Don't use a som de plusse. Sign your own name to such matter as can be signed. It will

Don't believe men and women who say newspaper work is only drudgery. Some of it is, to be sure; but there are many prizes in the profession, and you may win one if you Don't fail to begin right, and then you will

LITERARY QUERIES

Under this heading the EDITOR will en-deavor to answer any possible question con-cerning authorship and literary matters.

A SCHOOL GIBL, AND MANY OTHERS-I have repeatedly said, and will now do so for the last time: This column is not intended to search out and give the authorn of quotations, sent to the Editor, from poems or books. All letters requesting such information are destroyed without answer.

J. J .- I do not know the now de plume " Hy Noyes." LENGRET-" Anna Kardnina" is considered by com-petent judges the best of Tolsto's works.

P. S.-There is no practical way of determining "who is the greatest living American writer."

C. H. L.—There is a book entitled "Hovey's Guide Book to the Mammoth Cave of Kentucky;" Paper, 25

Mns. G. Q. E.-I cannot refer you to the German paredy of Whittier's "Barbara Fritchie;" I have never seen or heard of it.

I. W.—Cornell University at one time had a school of journalism, but I believe the same degree of attention is not given to it now as was core the case.

AN INTERESTRE READER—I cannot give you the ad-dress of the author you name. The JOURNAL will for-ward any letters you may desire to send in its care.

ROSANCOCD—Splor and Suremon's "Complete French and English and English and French Dictionary "Some of the best. The price is $1.00; an abringed edition, $1.50.

O. E. C.—I think the following books would aid you in teaching your children: "Art of Securing Attention," and "The Art of Questioning," both excellent little books.

G. H. P.—The references of a poet in his verse are frequently known only to himself. If you will write to Dr. Holmes, doubtiess he will oblige you with the infor-mation you seek.

L.—"St. Elmo" is generally considered the best work f Augusta Evans Wilson. A portrait and sketch of fra. Wilson appeared in the June JOURNAL. (2) See Interested Reader. E. M.—All the large publishing bouses publish children's books and stories. Send your manuscript to any one of them, and await the decision which will come to you in due course.

J. A. G.—The periodical on elecution, formerly published by Anna Randall Bield, has been discontinued. Some of the back numbers can undoubtedly be procured through periodical agencies.

Basses—Mand Howe's story of "Phillida," published serially in the Journat, is issued in book form in paper cover at 50 cents; cloth, $1.00. The Journal will send you the book upon receipt of price.

S. A. B.—Hinstrations prepared for a book depend entirely upon the particular process it is intended to use. As a rule they are engraved, and hence what are known as "wash drawings" are preferable.

A. W.—Mary Occil Hay was the author's real name. Bhe was born in England in 180, and was the eather of many books, the principal one being, "Old Myddleton's Money," "Squire's Legacy," and others.

A. R.—An article by Clara. Morrie was published in a recent number of "The North American Review." (2) A letter intended to be frewarded to an author residing abroad, sent in core of his American publishers, should have affixed to it a five-cent stamp.

Z. P.—Georg Ebers is the author of "Mardu;" Gui-tave Amiard of "The Prairie Flower." (2) All the writings of the author of "Josiah Allen's Wife" are copyrighted. (3) You can find a storth of Shakespears in any encyclopedia, or in the best editions of his works.

J. G.—No; do not copy by any means, or follow any one clee's style of writing, save in the use of good language and good grammas. Be original; work out your own plois; get enthesiastic over your work, and absorbed in your characters. If you have the right spirit you will have no difficulty in writing out your story.

Thereos.—The "best periodical" to which to send short stories depends endirely upon the character of the stories. All the prominent illustrated magazines accept short fiction, but a story suitable for one might be massiliable for souther. Bead the magazines carefully, and then send your story to the one for which you think it is best suited.

M. S.—Tennyson wrote "The Lady of Shalott." It has been published separately and in illustrated form. (2) "The Duchess," Charlotte Brane, and Mrs. A. McV. Miller have contributed largely to modern fetton. They have sumerous publishers, both in this country and abroach. The Jordanata Book Department can supply you with their works.

SCHROMINER.—The "Encyclopedia Britanules." is the best work. It is published at $6.00 a volume, in leather, and complete in twenty-five volumes. (2) All publishess seed their catalogues free. (3) I do not thick such geneological tables as you have compiled are of any use for publication. (4) Burke's "Feerage" is the best work on the English nobility. Its price is $19.00.

M. J. O., AND OTHERS—The best way to learn all about the methods of copyright, etc., whether of an article, song or best, is to write to "The LIBRARIAN OF CONGRESS WASHINGTON, D. C." and ask him to send you copyright blanks and circulars. From these you will find out all there is to know of the subject.

8. C.—The correction of proof is an all-important matter, and many awkward blunders occur from care-lessness in proof-reading. Almost all publishing houses have expert persons to do this, who go carefully over the copy when it comes from the printers. They make the first revision: It is then sent to the author for cor-rections, and when returned and corrections made the proof-readers generally give it a final reading before it is printed.

is printed.

F. E. W.—I do not know how to advise you regarding the delays he answering, and giving you proper information concerning manuscripts sent to "Liberary Bereaus" for examination. A great deal of this delay undoutsedly occurs from the accumulation of much material. Authors are proverbially impactent, and if not answered almost by return mail they are apt to express their indignation. But you certainly should receive an answer to your letters.

G.—The initial step toward becoming a reporter is to "report" seasething, and then submit your manuscript to the editor of the best newspaper, either in your city of residence or in the city closest to it. If your effect meets with/success, inquire of the editor his mine of pay, cit, and whether there is anything you can "work out" for him which he thinks you are equable of doing. If he suggests nothing, try sawin on your own book, and proceed in this way until you demonstrate your ability to be a reporter.

K. J.—Where a story is formished to a syndrome of papers, some of the papers will use the line "Written for the —;" but, strictly speaking, it is, of course, not besset journalism. (2) A manuscript published in a periodical can afterward be repristed in took form by the action, provided in reverse the copyright, has an understanding with the editor of the periodical at the time of selling the manuscript, or obtains the permission of the periodical afterward. It is best, however, to have the rights to the second publication clearly settled beforehand.

X vox.x.—Always send a manuscript to a publisher or editor rather than an outline of its contents. (3) Books of poetry, as a rule, do not pay; hence, publishers are very cauthous about undertaking them. (3) The publisher will illustrate your book if he accepts it and thinks the work leads listed to the pentil of the action. (4) Any one has the right of foreign translation, but when the author of the work is licing it is courtecast to seek the permission. (3) Where a composition of published material is made, permission should be obtained from the authors whose work is made use of, or, in one of the authors whose work is made use of, or, in one of the authors whose work is made use of, or, in one

NOW READY-THE SEPTEMBER PART OF THE YOUNG LADIES' JOURNAL

The Best Journal for Ladies and Families, containing the Latest AND REST PASHIONS: PROFESSIVE LATEST AND REST PASHIONS: PROFESSIVE LATESTRATED: A MANAGET COLORED SUPPLEMENT OF PASHIONS: NUMBEROUS COMPLETE STUBBLES of absorbing interest; and the opening chapters of a NEW AND ORIGINAL SEKIAL STORY caudied "WITH HEARTH AT ZEHO," bodden New Music, EMBROIDERY DESIGNS, Re. The more complete magnities for lating polished. Price, BO Cents. Yearly, $4, including the Christman number, All newsdealers, and THE INTERNATIONAL NEWS COMPANY, NEW YORK.

4 NEW NOVELS 15 Cents All complete in the SEPTEMBER number of the FAMILY LIBRARY MONTHLY.

THE INTERNATIONAL NEWS COMPANY, NEW YORK. 85 and 85 Dunne Street, one door East of Broadway. Subscriptions Secrived for any Periodical, Pereign or Description

A SURPRISE

to music lovers

THE MUSICAL MESSENGER

Invariably surprises those who see it for the first time, on account of the value and amount of its contents.

Those who have been taking it would not be without it for five times its cost.

The Musical Messenger is a monthly magazine devoted to the interests of music among the masses. Piano and organ players, teachers, amateurs and all musical people should take it.

$1.00 per year; single copies, 15 cts. Trial subscriptions, three months, for 25 cts.

FILLMORE BROS.

40 Bible House, New York, or 141 W. Sixth St., Cincinneti, O.

"THE GUARDIAN ANGEL"

by Lillian, is the first time COL. BOB INGERSOLL has been effectively answered. A greater story than "Ben Hur" or "Little Lord Fauntieroy." "The Guardian Angel" will make magnificent men and women of your children. Send locin silver to-day and receive "EVERYBODY'S IDEAL" for one full year, and get this greatest of all serial stories. We must have ONE MILLION SUBSCRIBERS FOR "EVERYBODY'S IDEAL"; hence this inducement.
Try us, and you will be delighted.
Address to-day, inclosing 16 cents (silver) to

"EVERYBODY'S IDEAL"
No. 29 Clinton Accoust, Albany, New York

COSTS BUT LITTLE TO READ!!

A perusal of our catalogue containing over 2000 titles of books at ten, twenty and twenty-five cents per copy, will convince you of this fact. Catalogue may be had of any bookseller or newsdealer, or will be mailed free upon application to

SEASIDE LIBRARY

No. 142 Worth Street, New York City

CHICAGO

A guide to the World's Fair City, 432 pages, 72 fail page half-tone engravings, 4 maps, including large filuminated map showing streets and avenues, parks and housevards, industrial centre, its calion of World's Fair, its line of the control of the world's Fair, Bound in cloth, gold faish, postage prepaid to any address in the world, $1.00; bound in paper, $0 cents. Address

FLINN & SHEPPARD

355 Dearborn St., Chicago, Ill., U. S. A.

GERMANIA A magazine for the study of the German Language and by recommended by college professors and the press as "the best effort yet made to assist the student of German and to interest him to his pursuit." Its Break-NEES CORNER furnishes every year a complete and interesting course in German Grasemar. E a year, Sample ceptes free P. O. Box 161, Manchester, N. H.

WORLD'S FAIR COLUMBUS COIN.

400 SECITATIONS and READINGS Mailed to any address on receipt of B5 Cents. The theapest and best book ever issued.

Address J. B. OGILVIE, 51 Bose St., New York.

NICKEL PLATED TIDY HOLDER. Send 15c. for a cohuit. GUSTAYR STANGER, Shelburne Falls, Mass

PHILADELPHIA Crown Caramels

FRESH, PURE, DELICIOUS. If your dealer doesn't keep them, don't secept in-ferior kinds. Send $1.00 to the makers and get, posipaid, 2 Handsome Pound Boxes.

W. F. PARKER & CO., OXFORD, PA Digitized by Googli

MISS MAUDE HAYWOOD will be glad through this Department to answer any questions of an Art nature which her readers may send to her. She cannot, however, undertake to reply by mail; please, therefore, do not ask her to do so. Address all letters to MISS MAUDE HAYWOOD, care of THE LADIES' HOME JOURNAL, Philadelphia, Pa.

FRENCH TAPESTRY PAINTING

THIRD PAPER

the second paper on this subject the method of painting faces with the tapestry dyes was treated of, with the understanding that the rules laid down were to be considered, to a considerable extent, fixed and arbitrary.

fixed and arbitrary.

The following advice, however, as to the mode of procedure in painting a pictorial subject, is to be regarded, on the contrary, merely as being suggestions which are the outcome of practical experience, and likely, therefore, to be of value to a beginner, who, growing in expertness and facility, may afterward modify the counsel here given to suit individual taste, or the requirements of particular cases. quirements of particular cases.

A TYPICAL subject might possibly consist of a shepherd and shepherdess, with landscape background, including a piece of water, with, perhaps, some old, broken, mossgrown stone wall, or possibly a fountain, having for ornamentation a group of cupids in stonework. Boucher and Watteau composed many such pictures, which are admirably suited for reproduction in tanestre. When the solicest such pictures, which are admirably suited for reproduction in tapestry. When the subject has been carefully outlined the painting may be started by laying in the sky. Where the heads are relieved against it, this should be made an invariable rule, otherwise so much care has to be taken lest the coloring of the hair or the shadowed outline of the face become washed up, since it is necessary to make the sky tint very wet, and to bring it, of course, right up to the edges. In laying on the tone rapidly, the pale blue may even be allowed to go slightly over the outline of the hair, and very sharply around the drawing of the face, using a smaller brush for this purpose, and guarding against making the color accidentally any lighter, for this will give an unpleasant halo effect. Next, the faces, hands and feet, if they are bare, should be blocked in, as directed in the article last month, and while this is drying the time may be filled in by painting the shadows and half-tones of any white dra-pery in the custumes, using the grey dye sufficome washed up, since it is necessary to make pery in the costumes, using the grey dye suffi-ciently diluted. A grey may be mixed with Indian yellow, indigo, cochinent and a touch of sanguine, but some experience is required of sanguine, but some experience is required to learn just the right proportions to use in order that it may steam properly. It is wise always to put the white and lightest portions of a piece in first, where it is desired to keep the coloring very delicate, because the expanse of white canvas still left makes the tones seem darker than they will eventually appear when the rest of the painting is finished, and lessens the probability of getting the tints too heavy. No local wash should ever be put over the high lights for white objects, the creamy tone of the canvas left untouched giving just the soft effect required. Directly the shadows of the faces are dry, the painting of the heads may be continued, and the hair also should be put in.

THE second day's painting would probably L begin by laying in the shadows for the principal portions of the costumes of the figprincipal portions of the costumes of the figures. The touching up of the faces should be left until the picture is nearly finished, otherwise a second strengthening of them might be necessary, through lack of the necessary judgment as to how the rest of the painting would affect their coloring. So, likewise, whatever working up may be necessary for the drapery after the first painting has been allowed to dry, should be left until all the landscape, background and foreground be laid in and the canshould be left until all the landscape, back-ground and foreground be laid in and the can-was completely covered. With increasing practice and experience it will be found that less and less will be required in touching up and repainting, and that very much, especially in the landscape, can be put in entirely in one painting. Directions for the treatment of the landscape in a tapestry were published in this department for last May, and may be studied with advantage in connection with the advice now given.

THE characteristic coloring for the pastoral costumes in the class of subjects referred. to are pale pinks, blues and yellows, with sub-dued browns, reds and purplish tones intro-duced principally in the costatees of the male figures. The general color effect is greatly im-proved where the pale tints of the principal drapery are repeated in deeper touches of re-lated tones either in the lesser details of the costume, in a ribbon or flower, or possibly in the shades employed in the man's dress. Greyish or fawn-colored tones may be advan-tageously used for his garments in conjunction with deep wine-colored or greenish-blue shades, repeating and emphasizing in this way, as suggested, the dainty pinks and blues in the draperies of his indy-love. Wherever possible, introduce white ruffling or kerchief directly next to the flesh tones of the face and hands.

A FEW WORDS TO TEACHERS

DVICE or counsel for teachers ought to be almost super-fluous, inasmuch as out of individual experience, the best counselor of all, ought best connector of all, ought each one to seek to impart knowledge to others. And yet the wording of many to this department, as well as actual personal observation, have proved that many, very many unfortunately, fail to realize the fundamental requirements of anyone desirous of taking up the position of one desirous of taking up the position of a teacher in art of whatever branch. Living in a large city in the east one sees in the course of a year a number of women coming from distant states or country dis-tricts in order to take a few lessons, usually in tricts in order to take a few lessons, usually in the latest decorative craze, with the object of teaching it again. They point a few speci-men pieces with some artist, which probably can hardly, with the utmost stretch of the im-agination, be termed in any sense their own work, although they may possibly have watched the painting of them, and taken copious notes as to the colors used and method of treatment for future reference in "teachof treatment for future reference in "teach-

N OW, the fact of coming to any art center for such a purpose as that indicated is legitimate enough in itself, provided the woman in question has a good knowledge of art principles, and particularly of drawing, with some experience in color; it is not only legitimate but a wise investment of time and with some experience in color; it is not only legitimate, but a wise investment of time and money from a business standpoint, but the cases where the proceeding is all wrong, and the instances of it are not infrequent, is where the would-be teacher is herself without the least elementary training in the rudiments of art, and often very incapable into the bargain. Possessed of a few specimens as a bait for prossective pumils, size returns to her native Possessed of a few specimens as a buit for prospective pupils, she returns to her native place and the outcome of her endeavors as a teacher, when she has probably proved the most unsatisfactory of pupils in the studio where she gained her very superficial knowl-edge and her specimens, may be more readily imagined than described. Furthermore, to press the question closer, let each one tempted to try to make an uncertain living in this way out it secretly to herself—is it outle honest to put it secretly to herself—is it quite honest to seek to sell to other persons a knowledge which you actually do not possess yourself? To try to teach where you need instruction as To try to teach where you need instruction as much as any of your pupils, to pass off as specimens of your work pieces, which although you may have painted them partially, are to all intents and purposes the work of the artist in whose studio you took lessons? Is it doing as you would be done by? Various answers may be given to avoid taking home any such unpleasant questions, doubtless, but without having any particular instance in mind, the fact remains that such cases are, and that such cases ought not to be.

To turn to another point concerning teachers who having the needful capability are in possession of a studio and are receiving are in possession of a studio and are receiving pupils privately or in classes. It is most im-portant, more than a beginner can imagine, that a woman in such a position should be tactful, capable and business-like apart from her artistic qualifications, or rather, in addition to them. She must be frank and upright in all her dealings, because not only is that one's to them. She must be frank and upright in all her dealings, because not only is that one's duty from a moral standpoint, but that honesty is the best policy is a business prin-ciple requisite to the best kind of success. It is a wise plan to always tell a pupil when ar-ranging about lessons as nearly as possible just about how much the expense for lessons and materials is likely to be. This prevents and materials is likely to be. This prevents any future dissatisfaction as to the amount of bills and rids one's studio, if the prices are high, of pupils who cannot afford to pay, and whom, therefore, a teacher cannot afford to take. It is fair both ways. Furthermore, a wise woman will require a deposit from every new and unknown pupil before cutting canvas or preparing work, and also the payment for lessons in advance or at the time of taking for lessons in advance or at the time of taking them. This is due to one's self, minimizes the probability of bad debts, and if it is the rule, everyone will accept it as such. The pupils lost by such a regulation are not desirable in any studio. Fair dealing should tell both ways. A tender gives her knowledge and attention for so much money and for a certain length of time. At the close of that time the lesson is over, and although the principle cannot always be rigidly adhered to, yet the tender who allows ber pupils to occupy her studio and take up ber time for an bone or so before and after every class is very foolish and unbusiness-like, and class is very foolish and unbusiness-like, and as a word of warning to the inexperienced there are a certain class of popils who do not besitate to impose on the good nature of a teacher if she does not from the beginning maintain her just position in the matter, which can be done quietly and imperceptibly without giving offence. without giving offence.

HELP IN SYOUR OWN WORK

Under this heading I will be glad to answer, every month, questions relating to Art and Art work. Maud Haywood.

T. L.—I am told that the medium is composed of spirits of turpentine and copal varnish.

A. M. H.—The hand-book on pastel painting issued by Goupti will be found useful by a beginner.

M. V. M.—The address of the Chicago Society of Decorative Art is 200 Michigan Avenue, Chicago, Ili.

C. M. P.—The address of the Baltimore Society of Decorative Art is 315 N. Charles Street, Baltimore, Md. M. P.—The address of the Women's Free School of Art, Cooper Institute, is Eighth Street and Fourth Ave., New York City, N. Y.

YOUNG READER—There is a treatise on the aust of the horse in the Wissor and Newton series, comble through any dealer in artists' materials.

A Lock—Inquire for yourself in Boston at some peli-able agency for school teachers and governosses. It is against our rules to recommend any individual office of the kind.

A. M. C.—I cannot tell what may have been spilled on the picture. It is never wise for inexperienced per-sonate try to clean a picture; it is always best to commit an expert.

A. T. R.—A suitable background color for the pansy group would be agreyish green composed of coball, yel-lew ochre and while, with possibily raw umber substitu-ted for the yellow ochre in the darker parts.

E. B. C. W.—For a round mat, mark the size of the circle carefully, button-bole it around, then fringe out the lines left beyond for the required depth. The fringe will be very full and thick, and will need trimming evenly with a sharp pair of sciences.

ANorm-in pointing on silk scarfs, either oils or water colors may be used, but the former are more durable. The oil paints should be thinned with spirits of turpentine in order to prevent them spreading, but the colors must not be applied too wet.

R. L.—In decorating panels of Linerusta Walton paper, the color of the paper itself is usually made to form the background, the raised figures only being paluted in whatever manner preferred. (2) Oil colors may be used upon this paper, and the metallic paints are particularly suitable for the purpose.

A SUBSCRIBER—You had bester not attempt to make a kiln for yourself. The best way is to buy a small gas kiln; they are easy to manage even for an anasters. (i) Instructions as to the setting up and starting the kiln are supplied by the manufacturers. (i) I believe that you can obtain a kiln such as I refer to through the premium department of the Journal.

N. J. G.—I have never known gold of a good quality and properly applied to grow delf with using. (f) The gold requires a separate firing. (f) The little dark specks which appear in the tinting are probably minute particles of dust, which have been allowed to settle on the most color. Great care is necessary in order to ob-viste trouble arising from this cause.

Various Inquinens.—Names of firms cannot be given in this column, neither can private teachers be recommended. Furthermore, it is necessary to say it reply to several requests of the kind, that the effice of this department cannot undertake the responsibility of pulling correspondents who are personally unknown to her in communication with each other for business pur-

Miniasi—The sable brush most useful for landscape work is the size which costs about seventy-five costs. It is large enough for the washes, and if it comes to a good point can also be used for the finest detail. (2) A camel's hair brush will not be necessary. (3) The coloring used in the shadows depends entirely on the local tone of the object. (4) No medium is required except clean water.

T. W.—In varnishing a picture it is of great importance that the brush should be clean and soft. To this end it should be carefully washed out such time it is used, either in spirits of impectine or in alcohol, according to the varnish used. In applying the varnish lay it on rapidly and smoothly, passing the brush quickly backward and forward, and not going over it again when once the surface begins to become tacky.

I. N.—If you procure a platinum print instead of one by the solar process, there will be no danger of fad-ing. The platinum prints are quite permanent: they are done by a comparatively new process, and at present only by a few firms, who make them a specialty. Names of firms cannot be published in this column, but by in-quiry you can easily obtain the information as to where they may be procured in the city from which your letter is dated.

My —Procure an ordinary variable brush, which can be obtained from any color man, and choose the size ac-cording to the dimensions of the picture to be variabled. Be sure to wash it out carefully after using it, as it is impecative that the brush should be clean and soft when applying the variable. (2) A picture should never be variabled until several months after it is completed, in order to allow the colors time to become thoseoughly dry and hardened. If this advice is disregarded the painting is liable to crack and scale off.

anisoning is liable to crace and scate off.

M. M.—I am told that a tolerably weak solution of aminionia will resmove the stain from the piece of goods of which you encioes a sample, without injury to the colors afterward applied. In using up-solited or stained pieces of canvas I have always myself contrived to select subjects in which the color which may have been accidentally split upon them, especially when so pale as in your case, can easily be worked into the bathground, only taking care to keep a clear piece of the material for the fresh painting and the sky.

E. 8.—Some of the illustrations are made directly from photographs. (2) The price paid for photographs to be used as illustrations depends entirely on the subject, as to whether they are difficult to obtain in the ordinary way, and so on. It is impossible to give an estimate as to "prices usually paid," because there is so much to be taken into consideration, which affect the market value of the subject matter for illustrations, whether drawings or photographs. (3) The Winsor and Newton series of familitated cover the subjects on which you desire instruction. Procure a list from the firm you deal with for your art materials.

Newsor, "Demographs, Handibooks, would, needbly deal with for your art materials.

NECCORD - Demorara) - Handbooks would possibly prove belieful to a beginner, but experience in mixing the colors, and a fittle experimenting on one's ormaccount is the best method of self-teaching. 12: 00 no account nots any oil with water color paints. Is it not account nots any oil with water color paints. Is it not possible to cover the work up or put it out of the reach of the cockroaches until the paint is day? 13: In the sentence "blocking in the shadows," the shadows of the flowers themselves are referred to. (4) Leave the white paper for the high lights of white flowers. Do not use Payne's grey for the shadows, but mix lemon-yellow and black in this lustance. Cobait and yellow other to getter make also a good greenship-grey for the shading of a white object. A bouch of ruse madder will probably give the color regulered at the base of the flower. The earlier articles of the series on water color painting recently published in the Journal, will be of the most service to you. A flat of the most useful colors for an outil were given in the opening paper.

for an outfit were given in the opening paper.

Reaconne of the Authorizes on Tarisetty Patertron—The method of enlarging and transferring designs which has been given formerly in the Journal and properly be briefly repeated for the benefit of new subscribers. When a small priot or photograph is chosed for the subject of a napolary, the best manner issuilty of calarging It is by means of a pantograph, a mechanism contrivance which can be porchased from draines in arrivance which can be porchased from draines in arrivance which can be proclassed from draines in arrivance which can be proclassed from draines in arrivance which can be proclassed from draines in a first use. The crude office this obtained myst be gone over and corrected as accurately as possible. The drawing, which should have been under on manific paper, may then be performed, the long, straight lines by means of a dress-maker's wheel, and the rest with a needle, which may be stack in a cost, to form a convenient handle. In order to transfer the design, plu it in position on to the casewa, which is placed upright to the casel, as when passing the pounce-long fromly backward and forward, avoiding any dashing morieu. The powder is composed of charcoad and burnet or raw seema in equal proportions. They can be bought ready to mix.

攀 and SHORTHAND

A high class commercial school affording complete equipment for business life. Also Prench and German. Uffice open off semaner for expeniention and environment of students. Pail term begins Monday, Sept. 8h, 1882. Application blanks now ready. Early encolinent necessary. For College Annual, Shorthand Announcement, Graduating Exercises, backding Mr. Andrew Carnegie's remarkable address on practical education, call or address.

THOS. MAY PRINCE, Ph. D., Principal and Founder, Record Building, $17-919 Chestnut St., Philadelphia, Pa.

STUDY LAW

AT HOME TAKE A COURSE IN THE SPRAGUE CORRESPONDENCE SCHOOL OF LAW, (Incorporated) Bend ton conta (comps) for particulars to

J. COTNER, Jr., Sec'y DETROIT, MICH. 634 WHITNEY BLOCK

All expenses paid to energetic students

The Utica (N. Y.) Conservatory of Music, having facilities for more pupils, offers free for the school year beginning Sept. 8th, room, beard, plane, and $627.50 of taition to each student who may induce six others to enter the institution for "One Year Course." Other advantages to those who hadone fewer than six. Plan of action and calalogue seed free. In 1891, 400 stodents.

LOUIS LOMBARD, Director.

Hellmuth London, College, Canada.

Por Foung Lottler and Girls.

Beautiful Home. Healthy Climate. Full Academic George.
Music. Art. Housting, etc. Passenger Elevator. 15s acres. Structura from 25 Provinces and States. For illustrated catalogue, address.

Bes. E. S. ENGLISH, E. A., Pris.

S who are seeking a superior school should send for the catalogue of

HARCOURT PLACE SEMINARY

Gambier, Ohio

The catalogue will be accompanied by a hand-some book of Gambier Views to those who men-tion where this advertisement was seen.

The Catalogue of

Kenyon Military Academy GAMBIER, OHIO

Tells just what every boy preparing for College or Business ought to know.

A copy of the illustrated edition will be sent to all applicants who will mention where this advertisement was seen.

CHICAGO ATHENÆUM-PEOPLE'S COLLEGE

The year. Open all the year to both sever. A school of high reputation for thereugh instruction. All studies elective. It observes backness, Shorthand and firmation Populations, Powering, Mathematics, Medera Languages and Claveler. Execution. Litera-ture, Wood Carving, Mark. Library and Gymanidata. Address E. I. GALVIN. Supt.. for Canalogue

THE BROAD STREET CONSERVATORY OF MUSIC

CONSERVATORY OF MUSIC
1331 South Brond Street, Philadelphia Enjoys a national reputation for the thoroughness and absolute safety of its methods. The Faculty of 20 Professors is the best that money can procure. The appointments are unsurpassed. Eighth year opens Sept.
5, 1893. Illustrated catalogue free.
GILBERT R. COMBS, Director

PARMINGTON COLLEGE, West Parmington, Ohlo. 60 years, Buth serse, Expanses very low. Four College Current. Been Departments. The Formats a specialty, Indocurrent to agence to secure students. Address Ser. E. S. Wassers, A. M., President.

ARTHUM NEW MOME MAGAZINE of Philadelphia offers to pay board, indices, and all accessing expenses in the above college one year in the Bay or Gill who receives the largest clab this year. One year's tailon, just beauth to say Boy or Girl who sends 100 are subscribers.

FT. EDWARD COLLEGIATE INSTITUTE

Sith year Sept. 19, $79; Superb modern buildings and appointments; steam best; rooms for 10 young women and for 12 professors and teachers; 8 gradienting courses and preparatory; intelligent care of health, morals and manners; conspicuously thorough departments of Art, Music, Elecution and Languages. See filtes, caladogus. Jos. E. Kinn, D. D., Pt. Edward, N. Y.

CINCINNATI CONSERVATORY OF MUSIC.

Mim Chara Baun, Directures, Established 1867, Ladles from a distance may beard in the Conservatory, where they are under the personal supervision of the Directress. Students may enter at any time. For cata logue, address Miss CLARA BAUR, Cortmunt, Ohio.

RICKETT COLLEGE BUSINESS AND SHORTHAND

WESTERN MICHIGAN COLLEGE

Grand Rapids, Mich. | Chartere Home Accommodations. Leading Literary, Musi-cal, Art and Commercial Institute, Send for year book.

WALNUT LANE SCHOOL

Bearding, Day and Unilege Preparatory for girls. 20th year opens September 28th. For circular, address Miss. Trinobolia B. Richards, Principal, Miss. Sana Leither Teary, A. M., Associate Principal, Germantown, Philadelphia.

ASHLEY HALL, HOME SCHOOL for Voung Ladies and Little Girls. Music, Art. La guages and thorough preparation for college. MISS WHITTEMORE, Montvale, Mass.

Home studies Book-keeping 19 SHORT-14180 Seed Sample of Sample bedraction Leven and behardering.

ON HOME DRESS MAKING Miss HOOPER invites, and will cheerfully answer any questions concerning home dressmaking which may be sent to her by the JOURNAL sisters. While she will answer by mail, if stamp is inclosed, she greatly prefers to be allowed to reply through the JOURNAL, in order that her answers may be generally beigful. Address all letters to Miss. EMMA M. HOOPER, care of THE LADIES' HOME JOURNAL, Philadelphia, Pa.

THE NEW AUTUMN COLORS

announces the new shades of the season, we less favored mortals are supposed to bow to the decree, but if the truth is known our own manufacturers pull the French color-card to pieces, and after pull the French color-card to pleces, and after gleoning ideas from it and many other directions produce a color-card unsurpassable in variety and beauty. One prominent silk manufacturer of New York has a card of three hundred shades of surah. The full season will see brown and navy-blue shades very prominent, with willow and leaf-green closely following. The browns shade from a deep, almost seal-tlat, boutre, to a golden tan, champagne, though gennine an will lose its favor. Later in the season electric-blue and brighted, pourpre, will be very popular, while a shade of red known as grenache, of a brick, terra costa and old rose melange will undoubtedly take well. Two new-reds, almost of a magenta cast, Francis I and Floxine, will not prove becoming to any complexion. Grays are quite passé, and few in number.

FOR EVENING WEAR

OPAL-WHITE, Nile-green and yellow will all be fashionable for evening shades, and while pink will be worn it will not prove as popular as during the season just passed. Heliotrope is very in-hiomable in Paris, and the color-eneds show two exquisite shades, Arda and mauve. To be fashionable, lavender or heliotrope must show a pinkish cast. Pale blue is always a stand-by for evening toilettes, but for those able to wear Nile, aloes, or light willow-green, nothing can be more dainty. Two yellows are especially pretty, Paradis and Blé-d'or; nothing on an orange cast most be Two yellows are especially pretty, Pandus and Blé-d'or; nothing on an orange cast most be tolerated. While the mode and beige shades have rather been put aside, tan that runs into golden-brown is on the topmost wave of success. The new electric blues, under the name of Oriental and Tolande, are lovely colors. By midwinter it is expected that the appearance of women will warrant the saying, "any color, so that it is red."

IDEAS OF ALL KINDS

VELVET ribbon will be one of the chenp trimmings of the fall, and piece velvet will also return to favor, as such Parisian modistes as Félix. Doucet and Worth have used it all through the summer in contrasting and corresponding shades with the silk or woolen dress goods, as sleeves, collars, corse-lets, or Directoire sashes. The ribbon velvet forms a stylish tricuming for the bottom of a skirt, Nos. 9 or 12, put on alternately with silk gimp a trifle parrower. Short jnckets called gimp a triffe narrower. Short jackets called respectively Figuro, zonave, monkey, Eton, Mikado, etc., will be of velvet, and worm over mound bediese matching the skirt or loose houses of silk, crépon, etc. Another plan of trimming the bottom of a skirt is to use alternate bins folds, an inch wide, of the dress material and velvet ribbon, the upper edge of the folds being often piped with silk of a third shade, or to match either the dress goods or velvet; the plastron or vest must then be of the silk and other boddee accessories of the velvet ribbon. A large cording as thick as the little finger has been used to set up on the outside edge of a skirt, with bins folds above. Variations of the jacket hasque promise to be one of the chief features of the fall and winter one of the chief features of the fall and winter BESTRAIL.

A FEW FURTHER DETAILS

EVERY waist seen in Paris is said to have a plastron of some kind of a contrusting color and fabric. Crèpe, chiffon China silk, surah, benguline, taffeta and brocude are all pressed into service for this accessory, which may be long or short, narrow or wide, according to the figure, and it generally has revers on either side as given a proposally their revers on ing to the figure, and it generally has revers on either side, as revers, especially short ones, are very stylish again. A pretty plastron brightens up the costume and gives a Frenchy air to the attire that we all wish, for, but do not always obtain. Black and red double-breasted vests are fashionable with navy-blue seage walking suits. Ladies' cloth and the ribbed veloces Rasse of a velvety pile will be in all probability the fashionable materials for walking and calling gowns, with serge and cheriot for general wear. For street colors navy-blue and browns will outnumber all other shades. Bright red trimmed in black velvet and jet will be much worn for house gowns. Silken will be much worn for house gowns. Silken materials will prevail in tuffeta, changeable and striped, and bengaline in all plain colors. Silk warp fabrics will be worn for evening and house gowns in light colors.

NEW DESIGNS IN VARIOUS THINGS

SATIN and percaline skirt and waist linings are next to silk in point of nicety. The lightest weight lining known is an old, worn, or faded figured China silk, which adds nothing to the weight of a woolen walking dress. When it can be afforded, a pinked silk ruffle should be sewed inside of the skirt as a balayense. Surah or taffeta silk can be used, or the ruffling bought in all colors, ready made, costing forty-eight cents a yard. Plaid silk blomes and plastrons will be worn with jacket waists. Fitted bib collarettes of lare are ten raists. Fitted bib collarettes of lace are ten inches deep, gathered around the edge of the high collar, running the edges together at the center, back and front to make it longer, fulled center, back and front to make it longer, fulled over the sides to form sleeve tops, and worm with a ribbon or band of passementeric over the dress collar. Skirts worn by exclusively fashionable women for shopping and walking do not drag on the ground, while those intended for calling do. When round waists are worn the skirt belt is of the material, stitched, or may be covered with velvet, passementeric or ribbon, no other belt being necessary when the skirt is put over the bodice. The Empire belt worn with round waists is of a full width of silk in soft folds, booked over on the left side with the books and eyes that never show, as they fasten over the top of the on the left side with the hooks and eyes that never show, as they fasten over the top of the eye instend of the bottom. A short jacket front should never be worn by a stout figure, as it adds to the apparent breadth. Blue serge Eton jackets or a basque having a jacket front and long coat back, and skirts will be worn with a round, full vest of Scotch plaid surah for fall traveling and shopping suits, with a soft felt English walking bat.

DRESS AIDS FOR MOTHERS

OR a slender miss of fourteen years a skirt of striped blue and tan is worn with a round waist and sleeve tops full from the elbows to the shoulders of the same. Deep, close-fitting outlis, collar, slightly-pointed yoke, bertha ruffle around the yoke, and a girdle pointed in front and like a two-inch belt at the back of blue Henrietta machine stitched on all edges. For a gird of twelve years a party frock of cream-colored crepon is made like a perfectly loose. Josephine gown shirred in several rows around the neck to fit it. Very high, full sleeves, such of China stik drawn widely around the waist is fastened with a rosette in the back and then hangs in two ends to the bottom of the skirt. Ruffle of chiffon around the neck and sleeves, black hose and ties. A pretty blouse for misses of ten to sixtem years is shaped with side and shoulder seams so as to lay a trifle over the top of the skirt band, which is carefully stitched and worn outside of the blouse; the blouse opens over a collar and long V of a contrusting material. Long cuffs of the vest fabric with sleeve-uppers of the dress goods. Round walsts are often worn with a belt of No. 12 velvet ribbon tied in long loops at the back. Round jacket fronts will be fashionable for woolen dresses of plain colors. Brown, red and navy or electric-blue shades are the coming colors for young girls. Plaid, striped and plain skirts, and round girdles will continue to be worn with full sleeves and blouse waists of plain or figured surah or casbinere, opening in the back and completed by suspenders of silk or figured surah or cashinere, opening in the back and completed by suspenders of silk or

HOW LITTLE GIRLS DRESS

SIMPLICITY seems to be the keynote for dressing girls of all ages, but that does not prevent their having some very pretty garments, as a party dress of chiffon over China silk, shirred at the neck and again at the waist line, with large balloon sleeves. Even they girls have their dresses made now with a corselet, and the bertha and brelelle ruffles are as fashionable as they were last season. Sherres fashionable as they were last season. Sleeves are made with the Russian cap slashed on the inside just like those worn by the "grown-ups." Lovely gains of white mull have double ruffles, hemstitched, at the neck and wrists. Princess Mother Hubbard frocks have a full front hanging loose from the neck to the slice tops, with a round waist in the back having a gathered skirt and sash ends from having a gathered sairt and sast ends from the side seams tied at the back; full sleeves and a little rolled collar. Pretty dresses of crepon or Henrietta are made with a Wattean back and yoke front, with lace as a bertha ruffle in front only. Golden-brown, electric-blue, terra-cotta and bright reds will be worn by little girls who also near willow-creates. by little girls, who also wear willow-greens.
Waist lines are placed where nature intended them to be; sleeves are smply full; skirts are still fully gathered and bemmed, and children of two to eight years wear them to the shoe tops: above that age they are shortened until a girl is twelve, when they are again lengthened until at sixteen they are nearly to the floor.

*DRESSMAKERS * CORNER

Under this heading I will cheerfully answer each month any reasonable question on Home Dressmaking sent me by my readers.

MINS MAY AND MISS. S. W. H.-Read answer to "Mes. Geo. S. H."

MER. GEO. S. M.,—A better sent to your address May 30th has been returned.

MINNIE D. F.—If you have a ciear or rosy complex-on, resets will prove becoming, but not if you are sal-

SUBSCRIBER-Write me regarding designing again, enclose a stamp and your address, as the subject is too long to discuss here.

ASEXTORS MOTHER—Letter too late; the question has been answered several times of late. (2) Misses of twelve years wear their skirts to their shoe lops.

Miss S. C. B.—The sample you send has too pink a belistrope strips in it to prove a very subdued second morroing gown. (2) Biscir parasoland a black lacebal.

Supercharks—A postal card written on May 18th cer-tainly could not be answered in the June number. Your inquiry has been answered in the Fashion Repartment ere this.

Sorrex Jane-I cannot give you any receipt for searching your hair. Let nature alone; also is wiser han you as she avoids violent contrasts unless they sarmoutes.

A Busy Womas—I regret that your inquiry arrived too late for the early seatmer issues. You have prob-ably found the desired information in Mrs. Mallon's de-partment before this.

Drives Marken—I cannot recommend any system through the columns of the Journal. If you apply to me by better I shall be very glad to tell you of one that I can recommend highly.

MOTHER AND —Bead answer to "Mrs. D. H." (2) A girl of tiveline years wears a cornet waist, but not a regu-lar cornet, (3) Fasten ber divesses at the back; and being tall for her age means that the skirts should come to her store tous.

Mas. J. O.—A slik warp material will be lovely for the tex-gown in gray, cardinal or tan, using pink, cream or cardinal crépon, or china slik for the conter front. (2) All kinds of estricts feathers, except long plumes, will be fashionable that fall.

JULIA VAN S.—Near colors are described in this issue.

[2] Have an electric blue, rather light, for the cloth calling costome, and a medium brown for abopting. (3) A short vetter jacket will entirely change the appearance of your silk akirt and crépon blouse.

Dittata G.—I am sorry that you have waited in vain for your arewer, but as I have said many times when in a hirry it is better to enclose a stamp. Your samples were very preity; the darker one would wear better than the plainish gray, which will fade.

JENNIE M. C.-Select fine striped goods, or dark shades, to make you appear tailer and your hips small-er. (2) Navy blue, dark bluish gray or deep golden huwn. (3) Sell skirt, having a nat border, pointed buspine, with a narrow coat-tail back, moderately high and full sleeves.

Churchtv-You are evidently what they call a "brune blonde." You would be a thorough branetts sith your completion and hair rece it not for the blackyes. (2) Avoid medium blue shades, steel grays and yellow browns, also light green and lavender. Any other colors you could wear.

36. S. L.—Your sample is a very dark electrication. (2) The Russian bine is of a greenish cast, but will not prove as fashionable this full as the electric and navy shades. (3) Your dress will be very dark trimmed in black. (3) Your dress will be very dark trimmed in black. (3) by not have a planters of lighter broads, and a passementeric of changeside beads in shades of blue?

M. L.—libeck china silk is a suitable dress for a young lady, but yather than a piain black getons with a colored figure. Trim it with lace and jet and have a conselet vest or full phasizes of china crops the color of the flower. (2) You cannot restore the color of any material that has been taken out by stampouls. The only thing you can do now is to have the dress dyed, unless you can replace that part with a new piece.

you can replace that part with a new piece.

Mean Many—Unfurtunately your letter was entirely too lake to be answered in the June Jodianat. If you will look over the April and May numbers in Mrs. Mailton's fishion articles, you will find commencement dresses written of, also frachs of a piain and stationable description for little girls. In a late number you will died description of dresses for boys under five years of age. You exclused a stamp for a personal reply and yet answer.

Miss Al.M. R. S. — You wrote me in March asking for a personal reply and enclosing a stamp for the same, but susfertunately you falled to give me any address except your name. I presence R is now too lake to assist you with your deess, but in the February, March and April numbers of the Journal, there were articles regarding the making up of gingham dresses, therefore by this time you have perhabily read the papers and gotten the desired information. (2) You should use velvet on your cashmers of a shade darker for the little Jacket fronts and coiler.

fronts and coiler.

Hyacis FH-I wish that you had sent me your address, as a formal reply in this column will not cover the ground fully. (3) Dress at your age as though unmarked, as you are a very young bride. (3) A marked woman malitrally acts with a Billie more dignity, even at nitratees, which will suffice to impress people with her altered state of life without dressing like a woman of stry, at which age, by the way, they wear Legisera carriage hats, trimmed with feathers and flowers. (3) The two points you mention are sufficient in the eyes of any one gifted with common sense. (4) What is supposed to be appropriate for all ages. (5) Be young while you may; you can hardly dress too young unless you don the appared of a miss of fifteen, and your letter indicates too much good sense to do that.

Mr.—I should not advise a white occande made too mich good sense to do that.

Mr.—I should not advise a white organdle made without a licing, in the worn on the street, as it is considered extremely outsiellanable to show the flesh of the sect and acrus through a thin dress. You can time the weighted elseves with a thin, white lawn that will really not add to the best of the dress, who he more appropriate. It should be made with a fait, gathered skirt, having a deep bress and raffee of the goods if you wish it. A roond wash with very full sleeves to the elbow, having a petated yoke, collar, sleep cush and a pointed girlle of this lith point have made over the goods, while slik, or colored slik if you wish to increduce a color. (2) With a very light, citer completion, you should be able to wear almost any color, although if you have very roay checks pink will not prove becoming.

Basic Durance—You can combine with your brack.

wear almost any color, although if you have very cosy checks pink will not prove becoming.

Danie Dirabus – You can combine with your black grenadine a sain stripe grenadine of exactly the same receive. The checapest Hoing would be a gloria of mixed word and slike which comes 40 inches wide at 64 cents a said. If you whis a slike hinter have surab or eatin at 50 cents a yard. If you whis a slike hinter have surab or eatin at 50 cents a yard and 20 inches wide. (2). As you have but three widths for a skilet, and it requires five for a but three widths for a skilet, and it requires five for a but three widths for a skilet, and it requires five for a better eaching to the elbows with the electes then very full reaching to the shoosiders. His thempolic shirring of your basques, press the grenadine on the wrong slide and make up into a plate, pointed basque, fave a pointed girdis sewed in the right side seam and housed over on the left. Thin the edges of the collar, ordis, and girdis with narrow jet gim, then from the side seams of the basque tay morier ribson No. 12, fedded quoe, drawing it to a point in the back where it should form a full bow. The sain surjed greenable is 31 inches wide, and from 84 cests a yard. (3) If your outing fannels in meant for a membing dress for street wear, make it with what is called the modified tell skirt. This is made of straight widths fitted with dark acound the want inc, and the nearl base belt back, but the dress slightly failed into the best so as to prevent the very light appearance. Fishin this with a deep hem beaded with slitching in with, or several rows of white braid. The basque should be shaped like a Russum blouse opening on the left side, with collar, deep outh and belt trammed with the braid or situations.

A bother way is to have a broader coller, bett, coffs and yoke of plain blue and flight bein on the class with narrow white braid or flatching.

HOW TO OBTAIN

FASHIONABLE

DRY AND FANCY GOODS

Clothing, Shoes, &c.

AT THE LOWEST PRICES AND HAVE THEM DELIVERED FREE OF CHARGE

(under certain conditions) SEND FOR

KOCH & CO.'S

ILLUSTRATED

Fashion Catalogue

mailed free upon application

FALL AND WINTER EDITION READY Sept. 10

Koch & Ch's catalogue is "a household necessity." It illustrates and describes all articles caseful and ornamental for the case of either young or old, and for the formishing and beneatlying of a home; and their goods are the cheapest, and they after extraordinary inducements to receive goods free of charge at any Express Office in the United States, without ever secribring quality to price. Hersiat.

H. C. F. KOCH & CO.

Importers and Retailers

West 125th St. bet. Lenox Formerly 6th Ave. New York

Please mention this Magazine

JAROS HYGIENIC UNDERWEAR

MEN, WOMEN & CHILDREN A PROTECTOR against COLD .. WELL .. HEAT.

Mrs. Peary, the first AMBRICAN NORTH POLE, and the entire Arotic Expedition, ander Lieut, Feury, U. S. N., is provided with the JAROS HYGIENIC UNDERWEAR.

Dr. Hary R. Josep, of Secrets, to India; Her, Sure! Jetrop, of Sove Fork, to Syrin, reast three goods in the Property State of the State of the Secrets of the Property State.

Jaros Hygienic Underwear Co., 831 Broadway, N. Y.

Stick a Pin Here!

And in order that the pix the both abarp and smooth, are said that the pix the both abarp and smooth, are not of insertion and firm mean of hold, be sare that you have the "Puritian." which has deservedly wen and easily maintains the reportation of being the best Pin in the market, either of home or foreign production. The slight increase of price abave ackety grades in of no consequence windered, when its superfer qualities and greater destion are considered.

A bent Pin is about the meet usefound, but with the hard material and the special method of manufacture each on the "Puritian" we have no bent plous in oras. Serifs are cheep, a seal is what we draine, and we will send aample card free to any address for trial.

American Pin Company, - Waterbury, Conn.

Dragon Fast Black WITHOUT THIS NONE GENUINE COTTON DRESS FABRICS.

OR SHEER INDIA LINGUE PRINTED EFFECTS

WARRANTED ABSOLUTELY FAST

HAVE YOU A TORN DRESS?

UNIVERSAL MENDING TISSUE Which mends Slig, Sanle, Piush, Velves, all Cotton and Woolen Goods, Kid Gleves, Gekanners, Carriage Tops, Rubbers, Of Cloth, Carpets, etc., without sewing and much nester. Also beins all Bress Goods better than can be done by hand or machine. Price, per package, pottpaid, 2 cents. Try R. State, Cramy and Local Agents wasted, 125 per cent. profit. Address J. F. UPSON & CO., Manufacturers and Wholessle Agents, Unionville, Cons.

Ladies, Send Stamp for Primer. I do shopping of all kinds. Nine years' experience; ast reference. Margorie Marcel, 94 Spruce St., Phila.

DRESS 'HINTS FOR ELDERLY WOMEN

By Isabel A. Mallon

HE old saying of the Frenchman that, "A woman is as old as she woman is as old as she looks, a man as old as he feels, "is really great wisdom. It has been quoted and quoted, and yet the moral that it points does not seem to have been appreciated by womankind. Nothing is so ridiculous or so painful as an elderly woman dressed like a young girl, but there is a happy medium by which years can be prettily, consistently and fashionably clothed, and which American women do not seem to thoroughly understand. and associately crothed, and which Americand.

It would seem to thoroughly understand.
It would seem as if we had nothing but old and young women, and that the sweet autumn time of life was not considered. Yet it is the most beautiful, for by that time a woman has learned the ways of the world, has learned to subdue her thoughts and cultivate her victures and has beened in addition the learned to subdue her thoughts and cultivate her virtues, and has learned, in addition, the great art of making the best of everything. Too often the elderly lady gives herself over to absolutely plain black gowns, to a severe neck dressing, a bonnet that is decidedly old-fashioned in shape and dowdy in decoration, and a wrap free from all fit, simply loose in shape. All this is wrong, and if your nother or somebody's else mother does not realize that beauty in dressing at forty-five or fifty is as much her right as it is yours at twenty, then you must teach her.

SOME SUITABLE MATERIALS

SOME SUITABLE MATERIALS

WHILE I think a black silk gown a pretty and dignified dress, I certainly do not recommend the one made with a plain skirt, a short basque, and ornamented just in front with a flat passementeric trimming, as desirable. Instead, if you fancy black silk, and are inclined to be stout, have the skirt made without the sheath-like effect, and let the bodice be rather long, partaking possibly of the coat outline, and have either a full tucker of one of the laces in vogue, or a fitted waistcost sufficiently long not to stand out in a point just at the center. All the Henrietta cioths, cashmeres and soft wools in the dark or neutral shades are in good taste, and for house wear a faint pink, blue, or all-white is suited. The pretty figured delaines, having light or dark backgrounds with contrasting figures upon them, make most effective morning gowns, and when there is worn with them a three-cornered talle breakfast cap decorated with a knot of soils. When on whetever colored sibles may be seen to the state of the state of the state of the state of the sure of the state of the s tulle breakfast cap decorated with a knot of pink, blue, or whatever colored ribbon may be fancied, a very dainty breakfast toilette is achieved. The breakfast cap, by the by, has no relation to one's age, for it may be worn by any matron, or by any lady who is unmarried and past her first youth, if she chooses to

A POPULAR FALLACY

A POPULAR FALLACY

A N idea seems to exist that the plainer a a frock is made the better is it suited to a woman who is stout. This is absolutely untrue. If you wish to conceal over-rounded curves do it with draperies, and nothing will make the very large stomach so conspicuous as a basque short on the bips and pointed at the back and front. All the boning in the world will never make it fit properly, and it will be "riding up" all the time. Instead, choose a design that comes well down over your hips, and without a seam across them. A very large bust is best hidden under a fall of lace, a slightly full or tucked front, or a vest of silk, chiffon, or whatever is best suited to the material of the dress. If your throat is very thick and short choose that style of collar that standing up a little rolls over, and which, while it conceals the throat and has a close-fitting, natty air, does not give a choked look. fitting, natty air, does not give a choked look.

A bodice that has its buttons concended always looks better on a stout woman, for the straight line of buttons down the front is very apt to apparently increase the size. A slight train to and a skirt that barely escapes the ground is most advisable for the street. Be sure and have your skirt sufficiently long in front, for nothing is so awkward on any wonan, but especially on a stout one, as a gown that seems to rear up in the front breadth. By the by, avoid pocket laps or any hip trimming on your long bodice.

THE SLENDER WOMAN'S MISTAKE

THE slender woman's greatest mistake is in having her clothes too loose, believing that in this 'vay she hides the angles. In reality her bodice should be fitted perfectly, padding used if necessary, and a reliance placed upon the trimming to give apparent size. The lace epanlettes, either on bodice or wrap, will add to her breadth, and make her look more rounded, while the lace cape has an equally good result. She can wear a short cost, double breasted and with flaring revers of far or relvet; indeed, it may be said of her that everything impossible to her stout sister is permissible for her. A saugly-fitting bonnet will be found most becoming, and about her throat she can have either a high, stiff collar of white linen, or the full, fluffy far or feather boa. The tailor-made suit in its severity is proper, for a good tailor knows how to fit even the plainest dress, so that the wearer, while slender, has a rounded appearance and does not suggest that unpleasant adjective, "Representer that hard ralain fab." THE slender woman's greatest mistake is does not suggest that unpleasant adjective, "angular," Remember that hard, plain fabries are not suited to you, but that you want rather the soft, clinging stuffs that are at once greceful and in good style. In colors choose the warm browns, the brighter bluesalthough I still mean the dark ones. Soft delicate grey will be found particularly becom-ing, and is in benutiful harmony with grey hair.

THE BONNET AND WRAP

The Bonnet and Wrap

WHILE choosing a bonnet that is one of the fashionable shapes, let it be sufficiently large not to look ridiculous on your head, though it need not be absolutely of one color. A deft milliner can introduce a bit of color, a feather, or a flower, or a knot of ribbon with pretty effect, and yet this bit of color must not be so pronounced that the eye will be attracted toward it to the exclusion of every other part of the dress. Instead, it should so harmonize that it seems part of the toilette. Frequently a mistake is made, like choosing a severe-looking jet bonnet, the outside of which does not tend to soften the face, but makes hard the lines that a fold of velvet close to the hair, a tiny frilling of lace, or a twist of any soft material would improve and constitute a proper framing.

Do not use steel close to the face either, although if your hair is very dark the same rule does not apply to gold, and many a pretty bonnet for an elderly lady may be developed in a combination of gold and black. About the wrap: For winter wear a wrap reaching well below the hips, or better still, one to the edge of the skirt is advisable, for the between wraps only tend to make you look as if you had been cut in two large pieces. Brocades, unless in solid colors, will apparently increase your size, and so will all the glack goods. A wrap fitted in the back, half fitting in front, trimmed lengthwise with fur, lace, or whatever is most suitable, is the best design for your shape, for it gives you perfect freedom of motion, has a fitted air, and yet is not tight enough to make prominent every curve. Double-brensted coats are never desirable.

CARE IN SMALL THINGS

CARE IN SMALL THINGS

CARE IN SMALL THINGS

THE elderly woman is too apt to think that her appearance is not of any importance, and she neglects the small belongings of dress, wearing a badly-made shoe, too often ill-fitting gloves, handkerchiefs that are neither fine nor pretty, and a neck-dressing that has nothing to recommend it, unless some one should approve of slovenliness. Young women can afford to dress plainly, but it is the women who are elderly who have a right to the elaborate and rich clothes. We are very apt to conclude that what the mother is the daughter will be, and when a young girl elaborately gowned is seen with a nother dressed in the most dowdy fashion the conclusion is quickly reached that at her age the daughter will resemble the mother. This may be true or not, but it is injustice to the girl, and more than wrong in the mother not to be as young in heart and appearance as she possibly can.

FOR A WOMAN OF FIFTY

FOR A WOMAN OF FIFTY

FOR A WOMAN OF FIFTY

A DRESS to be worn by a woman of fifty, who is decidedly stout, is of sent brown cashmere, made with a plain skirt that has, nevertheless, its fullness so arranged that the folds are loosely draped across the stomach, and are long and straight in the back. The bodice is a coat one of cashmere with jacket fronts, slightly fitted, and showing a tucked waistcoat of brown silk. These tucks are flat and long, extending from the neck to the very edge. All the edges of the coat are finished with a narrow brown silk cord, and the turnover collar has the same finish; above it shows a narrow fold of the silk. As the closing is done with hooks and eyes no buttons are visible. The bounet is a low oval shape of brown straw with a twist of velvet around its edge, a cluster of blue flowers in front, and brown velvet ties coming from the back knotted a little below the cbin. The gloves are tan undressed kid, and the parasol is of brown silk.

THE CHOICE OF A CORSET

THE CHOICE OF A CORSET

O not get stays that are long only in front, they will be uncomfortable and will not make your gown fit any better or give you a better appearance. Instead, choose those that are nearly the same length all around, curving but slightly at the hips, and which, while sufficiently high in the bust do not come over it. I advise a well-fitting stay, but I do not for one moment suggest lacing, which will only push your fiest to other parts of your body, cause your face to grow red, and end, very probably, by making you ill. For the slender woman, stays that are of medium length in front, arching on the hips and rather low in the bust, are advised. Do not rely on your stays to take away from the flat look of your bust. Have them fit you, and if it is necessary let the dressmaker attend to the insertion in your bodice of cotton, or better still, of curled hair.

If you are slender the corset that will look best on you; ane which is rather short in settion in your bonne of cotton, or better still, of curied hair.

If you are slender the corset that will look best on you is one which is rather short in front and at the bust. Choose your stays so that the lacings always meet in the back, and then if, through illness, or any other reason, you should wish to make them larger it is a very easy matter to loosen them as much as you desire. By-the-by, even in contille corsets I advise a silk lacing, for if you are inclined to perspire, cotton or linen ones get stilf and unconsfortable, and although the silk ones may seem a little more expensive they are so much more comfortable, so much easier to pull or tie, that you will feel the money is well spent. The question of fastening the stays from the top down, or vice versa, is one that is best decided by one's self, though the French corset maker chains that a stout woman should always clasp her corset from woman should always class her corset from the top down, and a slender one reverse this mode. The broad bone with an underlining of plush is most desirable in all stays, but is really the one next seldom seen. Perole really the one most seldom seen. People continually write and talk against stays without ever having tried those that are really proper to wear.

THE NECESSARY PADDING

VERY many dressmakers think that they can successfully arrange the padding required between the material of the bodice and the lining. Now, this is a most difficult thing to do, and I would advise in preference to it that where pads are required they are fitted to the figure, covered with white silk, and sewed on the lining. Cotton or curled hair may be placed as carefully as possible between the two fabrics and yet, unless the dressmaker is more than an artist, that is, a genius, the effect is apt to be lumpy, and the padding shows in a most undesirable way. As I have seen dresses padded, not only by the king of dressmakers, but clear down to the one who went out by the day, I know whereof I speak, and I positively advise the use of the ordinary arrangement of pads in preference to any other. TERY many dressmakers think that they to any other.

Do not have any foolish feeling about mak

Do not have any foolish feeling about making your figure look better. It seems as if I wanted to keep on telling you it is your right to look well, and that every innocent means should be used to attain the end. Frequently instead of padding the shoulders a good effect is produced by having a long shoulder seam; my own experience has taught me that most dressmakers object to giving this, but you will not have learned the art of dressing well unless you thoroughly understand how to make the dressmaker do as you wish. Just remember you are buying and she is selling.

MISTAKES THAT MANY MAKE

I ASKED a very stout woman whose bodice looked bulky and wrinkled why it was so, and she told me that it was because her underwear wrinkled and made her bodice fit badly. I said, "Why don't you dress to suit the weather, and as other people do?" And she answered, "Oh, well, I have been dressing this way ever since I was a girl." The truth was that under her bodice she had a vest, a thickiy gathered chemise, her stays truth was that under her bodice she had a vest, a thickly gathered chemise, her stays and their cover. Of these she could easily have laid aside the chemire and the cover without feeling their loss as far as warmth was concerned, and a short petition could be substituted for the lower part of the chemise. By this arrangement her bodice could be smoothly fitted and the appearance of lumps here and there would be entirely avoided. Everybody knows how perfectly a bodice without any lining can be made to fit, so it goes without saying that the one which, in addition to its lining, has three under-bodices is not likely to be very smooth in effect.

dition to its lining, has three under-bodices is not likely to be very smooth in effect.

Do not, if your hands are wrinkled, make the mistake of putting a severe linen cuff next to them; instead, let a soft fall of lace cover the ravages of time and add to the dainthiese of your costume. And then do not be induced, even if the coquettish-looking veil does attract you to assume it, for while it may look charming in its whiteness, or its bright lare on your daughter, it is out of place on you.

THE ARRANGEMENT OF THE HAIR

I HAVE been asked a number of times what I advised when the hair was beginning to come out. As long as possible, that is, as long as it looks well, wear your own front bair even if you have to put a switch in the back; in choosing this do not let it be too large, for the extreme thickness will suggest that it is not your own, except by right of purchase, if a front piece is an absolute necessity, do not choose a heavy one that has a wiggy look, but instead one that is a little thin and on which the curls will be fluifly, rather than frizzy.

FIFTY YEARS YOUNG

FIFTY YEARS YOUNG

IF you want to keep from growing old, if you want to look young and charming, see that there come no wrinkles on your heart. Be as merry and as happy as you possibly can, finding good in everything and loveliness everywhere. Be very certain that your face will show what is in your beart, and that being only sixteen there, with no knowledge of the wickedness of the world, you will show a face free from unbelief, eyes as clear as if they were wells of truth and everybody will forget that you are fifty years old, but will delightfully tell you that you are fifty years young.

If for no other reason, the mothers of daughters and the wives of husbands should keep themselves young in heart and pretty in daughters and the wives of husbands should keep themselves young in heart and pretty in dress, for they have some one to give the word of approbation to them. The daughter who takes a pride in her mother's appearance will, you may be sure, make a good mother herself. I remember the pride that a woman once took—a woman who had many woes and worries—in the fact that a diplomatic reception her mother looked rounger than she did, and that some gallant Frenchman positively refused to believe that the pair were not sisters, and the daughter the along of the two. For and the daughter the older of the two. write tims woman was absolutely happy, and while I do not want our daughters to grow tired and old in appearance, still I do wish that our mothers would look younger. Dress so that your boys will be proud to take you out with them. once this woman was absolutely happy, and

SOME FEW LAST WORDS

I WISH I could make every woman in America who is over forty years of age understand how destrable it is for her to dress well and prettily. It is a duty she owes to her husband, her children, and the world at large. The woman who is fortunate enough to be mother to any human being wants to leave a picture on that one heart of how charming picture on that one heart of how charming and how pretty mother always looked. Women are committing absolute sins every day in not thinking of this. I am tempted to say that I wish a society for the encouragement of vanity among elderly women could be started, for I do not believe that it would do anything but good. Won't you take my little preaching to heart? Won't you remember that it is as I say, your duty to always look your very best, not alone from a motive of self-respect, but because of the people who love you like to think of you as pretty and dainty?

SEPTEMBER SPECIALS

70°. a pair 3 pair $2 not, pliable, undressed Kid Gloves, in all shades of ten. siate or black. Price good during September only. INFANT'S $11.50 Complete Set of 25 pieces.

Dainty little embroidered cam bric robes, cambric slips, skirts, finuncia, embroidered shawl, etc. These special bargains sent free to nearest express station. Fall catalogue of newest styles, free. Latest New York fashions and lowest New York prices. MAHLER BROS., 503 Main Venue Importers and Retailers

OUR FALL AND WINTER Catalogue

Will be ready about the middle of September. 'Twill contain Illustrations, Descriptions and Prices of all staple goods to be found in a first-class Dry and Fancy Goods Store, together with the latest novelties for

HOLIDAY, WEDDING and BIRTHDAY GIFTS

Send us your name and address and we will mail you a copy free of charge.

WOODWARD & LOTHROP Washington, D. C..

YEDDO CRÉPE

IN ALL COLORS THE ORIGINAL

and all kinds of Fancy Work. Improves by washing

Sold, among others, by SHEPARD, NORWELL & CO. BOSTON

PRINTED

EMINENTLY SUITABLE FOR LADIES'& CHILDREN'S DRESSES AND LADIES' SHIRT WAISTS

GREAT VARIETY OF PATTERNS IN BLACK, PINK OR WHITE

Warranted Fast Colors

Becommended for Comfort, Support and Fine Form. Combines best features of Corset and Waist. Much worn by women and misses unable to bear a rigor. Jackson one surment. Song fitting, beautifully made Favorite ting, beautifully made Favorite ting, beautifully made Favorite (E. Warrented. Equal to any Waist. Gold, Black. Genuine marked CCC, 1,000 dealers sell it. Sent post paid for $1. CORONET CORSET CO. JACKSON, Michigan.

Sample pair of either style mailed on receipt of 25c.

I. B. KLEINERT RUBBER COMPANY,
26 to 32 E. Houston Street, New York.

"SECURITY." ... See the hoint?

Samples for 10 cents. Agents Wanted. HOME MFG. CO., HOLYOKE, MASS

"Florence Home Needlework"

for 182, is now ready. It tells you all about frish Lace, Sewing, Crocheted Scarls (four new styles), Belts, Garters, Passemente-ries, and other fascinating Fancywork inds; i6 pages, 160 illustrations. This book will be mailed on receipt of six cents, NONOTUCK SILK CO., Florence, Mass.

THE NATIONAL DRESS IMPROVEMENT ASS'N Readquarters for Hygienic garments for lades and children. Jengess Miller patterns, walsts and divi-ded aktris. Ypsilanti Combination Suits and Tights. The celebrated Gertrande Suits and form-filing dispers for infants; no pixs, no bands. Ladies' Sanitary Napkins. Hostisted catalogue free.

MARGARET O'CONNOR, Mgr. Venetian Building, Chicago Digitized by Google

THE SMALL BELONGINGS OF DRESS

By Isabel A. Mallon

MRS. MALLON will be glad to answer any question about woman's wear which may be sent to her by JOHNAL readers. She asks, however, that she be permitted to answer through this Department in the JOHNAL; though, if stamps are inclosed, she will reply by mail. Address all letters to MRS. MALLON, care of THE LADIES' HOME JOHNAL, Philadelphia, Pa.

LITTLE care is necessary in making up the hair-lined fabrics that bid fair to be very popular during the early autumn and winter. Blacks, with pale blue lines, browns with blue, blacks with whites, red or greens, blues with red, brown or blues with red, brown or black, and many other com-binations, are noted in silk and staiting. The stout woman, who selects such material, must not be induced to have it made in any way except with the stripes running down; for even a trimming of stripes going about the figure tends to make it look short, and to ap-parently increase the flesh.

Instruct your dressmaker to make the nar-parently increase the flesh.

Instruct your dressmaker to make the marrow stripes fit into each other, and to take such care about the bodice that the pretty pointed effects, which will tend to make you appear more slender, will be achieved. For very slender figures modistes who understand the art of dress, are making gowns of plain black silk or suiting, and trimming the skirt and basque with ruffles of the striped material cut lengthwise, so that the bayedere or round result is obtained. These seem like little details, but they tend to make the entire costume more perfect.

THE attempt to introduce the short glove has proved, as I predicted, an entire failure. The reason for it is easily seen; a short glove makes the hand look dumpy, and gives an awkward shape to the wrist. By-the-by, if you have large hands, just remember that gloves stitched in contrasting colors at the seams and on the back will tend to make them look larger. A very note shade of primrose look larger. A very pale shade of primrose kid that is now in vogue is quite as often worn with all-white costumes as is the dead-white

I N choosing a white fillet to go about your hair, select a cream-white one if you are a blonde, and a dead-white if you are a brunette. Only the clear olive skin of the brunette can stand the trying tone of pure white.

A FAVORITE combination for evening or house gowns is very light rose color and black. One of the prettiest ten-gowns has a Wattean back of black mouseeline de soie, and a full empire front of pale pink crèpe confined by a broad black velvet sash, the ends of which reach aimost to the edge of the skirt. There are two sets of sleeves, the inner one being of the pink, and fitting the arm quite closely, while the outer one is of the black, and is cut in the regulation angel shape. The neck is cut out in the round English fashion, and a fall of Mechlin lace is its finish. Of course, such a gown could be developed in plain cashmere, and would look quite as well as in the more expensive material, provided that the combination of pink and black, or that other fashionable one of pale green and white, was used. FAVORITE combination for evening or white, was used.

W OMEN who wish to give a long-waisted appearance to their bodices, are wearing pointed cut jet girdles, with very long jet fringe on the lower edge. These girdles are very expensive, but if one has the time, a girdle can be made at home at a comparatively small cost. The plain jet girdle may be gotten, and strands of beads boughtand hung in the proper fringe fashion from it. In doing this, be careful that each string of beads is separate, and the thread securely fastened, so that if one should break the others will not, of necessity, follow its example.

MOST charming bonnet, which will be A MOST charming bonnet, which was on much in vogue for evening wear, is made of coarse white or black lace, and fits the head exactly like the cap of a French peasant. Velvet ribbon ties cross it at the back, and from under them, coming toward the frent is a large rose, orchid, talip or some the front, is a large rose, orchid, talip or some other flower that may be made of velvet, and is tinted in very bright colors.

RIBBON how, made with three loops A and one end, and which suggests a four-leaf clover, is liked for fastening a ribbon belt, as a decoration on the shoulder or to eatch up the drapery of a light evening dress.

RATHER heavy net, with large cut jet stars upon it, is fancied for the blouse to be worn with a Toresdor jacket. This blouse, by the by falls in a soft pour about three inches below the belt, which, of course, is always of jet.

THE fashioemble slipper is made of black moirs, the high heel being covered with the same material; a very small rhinestone buckle is the only decoration. These slippers will not increase the size of the foot, as does velvel, and are not so warm, though it must be said that they have not the dressy appearance of satin.

I HAVE said a number of times, but I must repeat it, as the question is continually asked, that I do not advise attempting to clean gloves at home. The result is soldom satisfactory. At the professional scourer's, a pair of gloves can be made to look as good as new for ten cents, unless, indeed, they are extremely long, and then a few worm pennies are charged; but if the gloves are good they are well worth the small sum spent upon them.

A LEATIAN hows of black thread lace form a smart trimming for the scarlet straw bonnets, to be worn during the early autumn.

A SKIRT of blue and green plaid silk has for wear with it an accordeon plaited blouse of blue silk, which falls slightly over the belt, but not its entire distance. The belt itself is of the blue silk folded, and is caught on one side with a clover bow of green ribbon.

The high collar is decorated with a similar bow. The sleeves are full, and drawn into plain deep cuffs that match the bodice. This combination is a little odd, but it is extremely pretty, and usually very becoming to a young girl.

A N odd piece of jewelry intended for a brooch shows a rocket starting off; the stick is of gold, and there are long, wire-like gold threads, each tipped with a diamond, ruby, emerald or a topaz, to simulate the different colored balls. This is wonderfully effective when pinned against a black tulle or lace bodice.

In very deep mourning there is a fancy for having Wattens backs of black creps on ten-gowns or house jackets of black Henrietta cloth. A very sombre effect is produced by this arrangement, but it seems to be one that is very much liked.

THE accordeon-plaited blouses of light- weight silk, are very often made without sleeves, and a jacket matching the skirt is then worn over them.

A Nartistic engagement ring is formed of two narrow bands of gold that become one just in the center; the part where they are divided is filled in with small but pure diamonds. These small, clear stones are al-ways preferred by women of good taste to very large ones less perfect in color and in

A N odd brooch is shaped exactly like a pair of gold pincers, a perfectly round pearl being held by them.

A MONG the blues, what is known as a real smoke blue is again in vogue; it is somewhat darker than gendarme, and not as cold looking as steel blue. Speaking of blue, the old stand-by, navy, is now combined with heliotrope, and a very fashionable English woman wears a heliotrope silk shirt, with a skirt and cost of navy blue broadcloth.

POR evening wear during the winter, a favorite contrast will be pale green and white; that is, a green crepe de chine dress will be elaborately trimmed with white satin ribbon, while an all-white dress of cloth or silk will have a skirt trimming of pale green chiffon, and the entire bodice formed of it.

A N idealized finned petticoat is one of light-weight material, having small pink dots over it and decorated with pink lace knitted by hand and with silk. It is almost unnecessary to say that this fashion comes from England, where the knitting needles seem almost a part of the busy woman's hands.

GOOD glove for outdoor wear when one A is not in full promenade toilette is of beavy kid of a shade known as dull tan; they are closed with four horn buttons of almost the same shade, and have the delightful qual-ity of wearing and wearing until one abso-lutely thinks they can never wear out.

ECONOMICAL women are now buying the very thin summer stockings, either for wear in the bouse or to keep until next summer, for they have been so much reduced in price that their purchase is really a saving of

THE French percale shirt, tucked from the neck to the bust and then allowed to flare, is liked by women who do not care to assume a stiff shirt; they can, of course, be worn far into cold weather with a cloth skirt and jacket.

I N putting away your pretty summer shoes do not just push them together and wrap them up, but stuff them well with soft paper, them up, but still them well with soft paper, stand them in a box, pack paper about them, the the box up tight, and mark on it just what it contains. By doing this you will keep them in good order, and you will be surprised yourself to see how new they will look when the time comes to bring them out again.

JET nail heads continue to be used on the yokes of capes, where they really seem very effective. By-the-by, if you are wearing a cape of light-weight cloth or suiting that comes very nearly to your kneer, insist upon your dressmaker putting a few weights in the lower edge, else the lightest breeze will make the cape blow and cause you to look very ridiculous, a something that a woman can never afford.

R18BONS on the hair, on the gowns and wrops with andoubtedly obtain during the coming season. While the flowing streamer may not be popular, still it is certain that the ribbon artistically disposed will have a special place.

A baby's skin is the most delicate of all delicate things, and is much more subject to external influence than a grown person's. It is frequently affected by the harmful ingredients of common soaps; these do not rinse readily, and will cause painful chapping, rash and disease by remaining in the clothing and coming into contact with the skin of the little one.

Do not permit the child's garments to be washed with anything but Ivory Soap. It is pure and is made of vegetable oils.

Dr. R. Ogden Doremus, of the Bellevue Hospital Medical College, says: Medical men are much interested in discovering the various sources of disease, as whether from foul air, impure water, infested food, and possibly soap made of fat from diseased cattle.

COPYRIGHT 1899, BY THE PROCTER & GAMBLE CO.

Do you need a Wrap?

If you need a new wrap, you desire it to be stylled, of good quality, perfect fitting, and reasonable is price.

A ready-made agreement would not answer. You might try on a hordred ready-made cloaks and not are a good fit-said then taken for the brigh prices the stores change for a ready stylled, well-made cloak.

We can aid you to get a dylled, perfect fitting cloak made to order for less than you can buy one ready made.

We are magnificaturers of cleaks and wraps and by selling direct to you we save you the poliser's and readyred; profes. We cat and make errey parameter where, you live use pay the experient fitting, and sleely finished cloak, and so make where, you live use pay the expense change of make you live use pay the expense change.

Our new Yall and Winter estalogue contains more than fittilinerations, with descriptions and prices of jackies from $2.0 or its five quarter length Walking Close from $4.0 or, its firmed therein and the lines that the same firm that of the lines are considered. Surveyable of $2.0 or firmed the first and the lines from the lines of the lines of the cloths and plushes from which we thake the garments, to select from, on receipt of four chies postage. Yet may select any style garment that you desire from our catalogue and we will make it to order for you from any of our cloths or plushes.

FORTY SAMPLES

We send samples of a full line of Demostic and Imported clockings, including all the newest falcies in black and all lending shades.

Write for our catalogue and samples to-day, you will get them by return mail. Flesse mention the Journal, when you write us.

THE NATIONAL CLOAK CO., 21 Wooster Street, New York City

Shawknit

on the toe

THE SHAWKNIT HALF-HOSE

ARE UNEQUALED IN NICENESS OF FIT, PERMANENCE OF DYE AND QUALITY OF YARNS

THE EXTRA-FINE COTTON

ARE NOW SEASONABLE

THE MOST POPULAR OF THESE ARE THE FAST BLACK (Snowblack) 3' 4 MOTTLED SLATE

DRAB VARIETIES 6º 3. Sold by the trade generally.

DESCRIPTIVE PRICE-LIST TO ANY APPLICANT. CO., LOWELL,

CLOAK CATALOGUE

Write to-day for our new FALL AND WINTER CATALOGUE, the finest ever issued, Over 100 beautiful illustrations. A correct Fashion Guide, Quotes prices astonishingly low. We are the LARGEST EXCLUSIVE CLOAK and FUR HOUSE. in America. Make our own garments. Carry the biggest line, and save you fully 25 per cent. over all competitors. Write for catalogue to-day. GRAND CLOAK CO.

S. W. Cor. State and Adams Sts., Chicago

When in Doubt What to Wear

Write for our Fashion Catalogue, containing the latest styles in everything worn by man, woman or child at New York's lowest prices. It is Seat Free. Address

MAHLER BROS., 503-504 6th Ave., N. Y.

CROCHETING AS A GRACEFUL ART

Artistic Specimens of the Crochet Needles

A GRACEFUL QUEEN LACE

BY ALICE S. LUKA

BEGIN with resettes first by winding the thrend 8 times around a pencil. Slip the coits off, 8 c 34 times around them, slip at in 1st s c.

2d round—*, 5 ch, s c in 2d s c; repeat around, 3d round—5 ch, s c in 3d of 5 ch, *, 5 ch, s c in 3d of next 5 ch; repeat. Work another rosette in same manner. In connecting the 2 together work 2 ch, slip st in 3d st of 5 ch of last rosette, 2 ch; repeat twice more. Begin the small lenf, which is worked 4n ribbed crocliet, with 12 ch, sc in every st of ch, except in the last st, work 3 s c, then s c in every st as before; turn. Slip st in 3 sts, take up half a st in s c in every st, but increase 3 sts in 15 t 3, and decrease at the end of every row, 3 sts, turn; s c in every st, 3 s c in 1st, miss 5 sts at and decrease at the end of every row, 3 sta, turn; s c in every st, 3 s c in 1st, miss 3 sts at end; repeat 3 more rows in the same namer, turn, 6 s c in 6 sts, 3 ch, slip st in next ch of 2d rosette, 2 ch, s c in 2d of 3 s c, 2 ch, s c in between rosettes, slip st back to s c in 2d st, 2 ch, slip st in next ch of 1st rosette, 3 ch, s c in 6 sts, 4 ch, s c in 5th st of ch, 1 ch, s c in 2d row; repeat *7 times. At the last s c 4 ch, sc in 3d st of 5 ch of 2d rosette, 6 ch, s c in 3d st of next ch, 3 ch, s c in 3d st of next ch; fasten thread and cut off. Begin the large leaf with 19 ch, s c in every st, but increase and decrease number of sts as before. There are ten rows then. Work 11 s c in 11 sts, 3 ch, slip st in 3d of 5 ch of 3d rosette, 3 ch, s c in 16 st, 3 ch, s c between rosettes, slip st back, s c in next st, 3 ch, slip st in 3d of 5 ch of 2d rosette, 3 ch, s c in 11 sts; work a row of picots in the same manner as those worked around the small leaf. After the 6th picot is worked on the other side manner as those worked around the small leaf.

QUEEN LACE EDGING

After the 6th picot is worked on the other side of leaf, mlas 3 s.c., s.c. in 4th st, 5.ch, s.c. in 3 ch, 2.ch, s.c. in 5.ch of 3d rosette, 3.ch, s.c. in last picot, 2.ch, slip st in s.c. of small leaf, 2 ch, slip st in last picot; cut off thread and fasten. Make a small leaf in the same manner in which 1st one is worked, and connect as before. Work 2 rows of top edge, begin in 5 ch, make 7 ch, *, d.c. in next ch, 5 ch, d.c. in next ch, 5.ch, d.c. in next ch, 5 ch, t.c. in mext ch, t. ch, 5 ch, d c in next ch, 5 ch, t c in next ch

THE ARTISTIC MINEOLA LACE

MAKE the nine wheels thus: Wind the M thread 8 times around a pencil, slip off the colls, work 29 d c into the colls connect-ing them to each other in working with a slip st. Work the picot edge around the five wheels, begin in 10th st, 7 ch, s c in 5th st, d c in 8th st, *, 5 ch, s c in d c, d c in 8th st, 5 ch, s c in d c, d c in 4th st, d c in 3d st of 2d wheel; repent, *, around the 3d wheel work 11 picots around the next 5 picots, the next 1 picot. Work the upper edge thus:

15th row—Begin in 11th st of a wheel, 5 c h, d c in 9th st, 2 ch, d c ln 7th st, 2 ch, d c in 5th st, 2 ch, d c in 3d st of 2d wheel. 2 ch, d c in 3d st, d c in 3d st of 2d wheel. 2 ch, d c in 5th, 7th and 9th sts, separated by 2 ch, d c in 5th, 7th, 9th, 11th and 13th sts, separated by 2 ch, d c in 5th, 7th, 9th, 11th and 13th sts, separated by 2 ch, d c in 3d ch, 2 ch, d c in 4th ch, 2 ch, *, miss 2 d c between wheels, d c in 4th ch, 2 ch, *, miss 2 d c between wheels, d c in 5th ch; repeat * 6 times. After 6th d c work 3 ch, *, 3 s c in 2 ch; repeat twice more until there are 9s c, 3 ch, *, d c in 2 ch, 2 ch, *; repeat 7 times, d c in 2 ch, separated by 2 ch. 2 ch, d c in 2 ch, work off 2 sts only of d c, retain remaining 2 on needle, d c in 2 ch, work 2 sts off, 2 sts with 15 t, 2 stitches; repeat from *.

3d row—Work in the same manner, but s c are increased in every row. 17 s c in 3d row; 23 s c in 4th row; 32 s c in 5th row; 37 s c in 6th row. 7th row—s c in every 2t. steparated by 2 ch. 9th row—d c in every 2t st, separated by 2 ch. 9th row—2 s c in every ch.

8th row-d c in every 2d st, separated by 2 ch. 9th row-2 s c in every ch.

A CROCHETED CUSHION COVER

By FLORENCE E. LYNNE

THIS protty cushion cover, which can be made to serve as a tidy, is made with No. 20 or 30 Glasgow cream-colored thread and quite a fine steel needle.

It consists of nine wheels and four half wheels; all are to be joined as shown in illustration.

1st row—ch 8 and join.

2d row—24 tr in ch, join.

3d row—ch 2, 1 tr in same stitch as 1st of ch,

*, ch 1, 2 tr in second stitch. Repeat from *

10 times making 12 pair of tr; join.

4th row—ch 2, 1 tr in center of nearest pair;

*, ch 4, join by slip stitch in first of ch. Repeat from * twice; ch 2, join under ch between first and second pair; repeat from beginning of row, 11 times.

of row, 11 times, 5th row—ch 4, join in the top of middle lobe of clover leaf; *, ch 6, join in top of middle lobe of next clover leaf; repeat from * same around wheel and join.

7th row—ch 2, 2 tr in each of 6 ch; continue same around wheel and join.

7th row—ch 2, 1 tr in same stitch as first of ch, *; ch 3, 2 tr in fifth stitch; repeat from * 22 times, alternating fifth stitch with sixth stitch; join. stitch; join.

to third wheel. This completes one corner. In like manner make other 3 corners. Place 9th wheel in center and join in same way. In like way fasten the re-maining 4 half wheels in the interior spaces. This cover is exceedingly artistic if carefully worked out, and placed over a cushion of pink or blue satin it makes a dainty addi-tion to a toilet table that the feminine heart will appreciate and delight in to the fullest possible extent.

PORTION OF CROCHETED CUSHION COVER

CROCHETED NECK TRIMMINGS

BY MARGARET SIME

THE dainty narrow edgings of various kinds intended for finishing off the necks and sleeves of dresses are quite an expensive item, especially as they so quickly lose their freshness and, as a rule, are not washable. When crocheted, however, with cream or dead-white silk in a suitable pattern, the effect surpasses in richness many of the most costly machine-made trimmings, and can be washed until completely were not.

Care must be taken in the selection of patterns, the ordinary narrow crocheted borders not being in any way adapted for such use. I offer to the readers of the Journal the four following designs. They are very easy of execution and representative of the styles required to suit the purpose named.

tive of the styles required to suit the pur-pose named.

I should recommend in every case that only the best quality of crochet slik be used. Except for mourning dresses, when dead-white only is permissible, cream-white is preferable. It looks softer against the skin and is more becoming.

No. 1 selving:

No. 1 edging: Make a chain rather more than the re-quired length for the foundation, since it takes up a little in the working, turn; miss 1 ch, 1 d c into the next *, 4 ch, pass the needle through the front loop of the last d c, make i d c, miss 1 ch of the foundation, the free of the last de miss two of the foundation, 1 d c; repeat from *.

No. 2 edging:

This pattern is wider than No. 1. Make a foundation ch, turn; miss 1 ch, 1 d c into the next *, 5 ch, turn, 1 s into the 4 ch, 2 ch, pass the silk once over the needle, work 1 tre into the freet leep of the last d c, miss two of the the front loop of the last d c, miss two of the foundation, ch I d c into the next; repeat from *.

No. 3 edging:

For a light lace like picot edge make 2 ch, withdraw the needle from the loop and pass the loop over a small mesh or coarse knitting needle, insert the needle into the 1st ch and draw the silk through to the front. *, make 2 ch, pass the hop over the mesh, withdraw the needle and insert it first through the previous loop on the mesh, also through the loop just cast on, then into the first of the ch last made; draw the silk through the ch stitch only, with-draw the needle from the loops, take up the silk just drawn through the ch stitch; repeat

When a sufficient length is thus made turn and work 1 ch, 1 d c, miss 1, repeat all along the under side to form a foundation whereby to sew the lare on to a narrow braid to be hasted inside the neck band.

The addition of a plain braid will be neces-sary in like manner for No. 1 and No. 2 de-signs, unless it be preferred to work them into a lace braid with an open edge, in which case the foundation ch can be dispensed with. No. 4 edging:

No. 4 edging:

A wider triumning, partaking more of the nature of a frill, might be acceptable to some. Its extreme simplicity should render it popular, also the fact that it is made in such a manner as to ensure its keeping in perfect order, especially for children's wear.

Begin with a foundation ch, upon this work 1 tre, 2 ch, miss 2 ch, 1 tre into the next ch, repeating along the entire length. Into the first space thus made work *, 7 tre with 1 ch between each, then work a tre into the top of the back of the first of the 7 tre, 2 ch, repeat from * until all the spaces are filled.

The horizontal trebles worked at the back of each cluster of 7 tre keep the clusters perfectly even, at the same ime throwing them slightly forward, giving a frill-like effect.

WIDE CLOVER-LEAF LACE

BY LENA TRATCHER

CHAIN 45 stitches, turn.

1st row—1 t c in 5th st of ch, ch 1, skip 1, 1 t c in next st, ch 1, skip 3 t c, 1 ch, 3 t c in next st (this makes a shell). One knot st, skip 2, fasten in 3d st, 1 knot st, skip 2, 1 shell in next st, ch 3, 1 s c in 3d st, ch 2, skip 2, 1 t c in next st, ch 2, 1 t c in same st, ch 2, skip 2, 1 s c in next st, ch 3, skip 2, 1 shell in next st,
1 knot st, skip 3, fasten in next st, 1 knot st, skip 2, 1 shell in next st, ch 3, turn.
2d row—shell in shell, 1 s c in last st of 1st shell, 2 knot st, fasten in 1st st of next shell, shell in shell, ch 2, 1 s c, 8 t c, 1 s c under next ch of 2, 1 s c, 8 t c, 1 s c under next ch of 2, th sell in shell, fasten in last t c of 1st shell, 2 knot st, fasten in 1st st of next shell, shell in st of previous row, 1 knot st, shell in shell, 3 ch, skip 8 t c, 1 s c in 1 s c, ch 2, skip 4 t c, 1 t c in next st, ch 2, 1 t c in same st, ch 2, l s c in s c, ch 3, shell in shell, l knot st, fasten in knot st, 1 knot st, shell in shell, ch 3, turn.

4th row-like 2d row.

5th row-1 to in t.c, ch 1, shell in shell, 1 knot st, fasten in knot st, 1 knot st, shell in shell, ch 3, skip 8 t c, 1 s c in s c, ch 2, skip 4 t c, 1 t in next st, ch 2, 1 t c in same at 1 t c in same st,

1 t c in same st, fasten in knot st, 1 k not st, fasten in knot st, 1 k not st, shell in shell, 1 k not st, fasten in knot st, 1 k not st, shell in shell, ch 10, 1 s c in 5th st of ch, ch 4, fasten in same place, ch 4, fasten in same place, turn.

6th row—1 s c, 5 t c under 4 ch, fasten with 1 s c in 4th row, 6 t c in same place, 1 s c, 11 t c, 1 s c under next ch 4, 7 s c around the 5 ch, shell in shell, finish like 2d row.

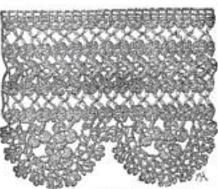

7th row—like 3d row.

8th row—like 3d row to scallop; ch 10, 1 s c in 5th st of ch, ch 4, 1 s c in same place, ch 4, 1 s c in same place, ch 4, 1 s c in same place, ch 4.

in 5th st of ch, ch 4, 1 s c in same place, ch 4, 1 s c in same place, turn.

10th row—one s c, 5 t c under ch 4, fasten in 5th row with 1 s c, 6 t c, 1 s c in same ch 4, 1 s c, 5 t c, 1 s c in next ch 4, fasten in center of last petal of 1st leaf, 6 t c, 1 s c in same place, 1 s c, 11 t c, 1 s c in next ch 4, 7 s c around ch 5, shell in shell, finish like 2d row.

11th row—like 3d row to scallop, ch 5, 1 s c in 6th st of 1st petal, ch 5, 1 s c in 6th st of next petal, ch 3, 1 t c between 1st and 2d petals of 3d leaf, ch 3, skip 2, 1 t c in next st,

WIDE CLOVER-LEAF LACE-EDGING

ch 3, skip 2, 1 t c in next st, ch 3, 1 t c between 2d and last petal, ch 5, 1 s c in 6th st of middle petal of 1st leaf, ch 5, 1 s c in 5th st of next petal, ch 5, 1 s c in end of 3d row, ch 2, turn.

12th row—2 t c, 2 ch, 2 t c in 1st ch of 5, *, 2 t c, 2 ch, 2 t c in next hole; repeat from *7 times; finish like 2d row.

13th row—like 3d row to scallop, ch 2, *, 2 t c, 2 ch, 2 t c in ch of 2; repeat from *8 times; ch 2, turn.

ch 2 thrn.

14th row—*, 1 t c, 1 picot (made by 5 ch and 1 s c in 1st st of ch) repeat from * 3 times in ch of 2, ch 1, 1 s c between 2 t c of last row, ch 1; repeat from 1st * 8 times; finish like 2d row.

Decorative Fabrics Autumn, 1892

We invite attention to our New Importation of European Novelties for Wall, Window and Door Hangings and Furniture Coverings

Extensive lines of Tapestries in Wool, Silk, Silk and Wool, and Silk and Metal, Satin Damasks, Satin Plushes, Plain Satin and Armures to conform to all styles of interior decorations.

Lace Curtains in every grade. Select lines of Cretonnes, Soft Drapery Silks and inexpensive stuffs. Samples and suggestions on request.

W. & J. Sloane

Broadway, 18th and 19th Streets New York

in a box, bearing the brand Flarence on one end. The pattern shown here is lined in back and wrist throughout with silk. They are perfect fitting, and in cold climates are far more durable; quite as elegant and fash-ionable as the best of gloves. Sold by enterprising di

NONOTUCK SILK CO., New York, Boston, Chicago, St. Louis, Cincinnati, St. Paul.

To Artists, Amateurs, &c. $200 H. C. F. KOCH & CO., Wast 125th St., bet. Lenco and 7th Aves., New York Will offer for competition 200 Dollars, to be awarded by a jury of experts, for the inal designs in Art Studies, Art Embroideries, &c.

For further particulars send for circular, and address "Art Department" H. C. F. Koch & Co., West 125th St., N.Y.

BARBOUR'S LINEN THREAD

ADAPTED TO ALL KINDS OF

HAND AND MACHINE WORK LACE AND EMBROIDERY, now of so much interest to the Ladies, especially considered. SOLD BY ALL RESPECTABLE DEALERS IN THE COUNTRY.

ASK FOR BARBOUR'S.

THE BEST BLACK

HOSIERY AND DARNING COTTON.

EMBROIDERY SILK OF What to make Send of 1892 Sent Made ounce box good with colors, seel post paid for 38 EUREKA Colors to stamps Agents can salt SILK EUREKA SILK CO Mention PRICE CENTS. POSTOR this paper.

RESS CUTTING

BY THE TAILOR METHOD.

WARST, SLEEVE AND SKIRT CUTTER.
Simplest and most practical ever made. Any ledy can become a practical loves Cutter in half an hour.

BY Helf price to introduce it. Send for circular.
B. M. KUHN, Inventor, BLOOMINGTON, H.L.

Stamping Patterns

Any one who wants Stamping Patterns can have them sent to select from on agreement to pay for what they keep and return the rest. Address HENRY MITCHELL, North Reading, Mass.

TABLE MATS. We will send you 3 currour Liber Table Mats, silk to work them, also Isoatan' 30-pp. Illustrated Catalog, all Isoatan' 30-pp. Illustrated Catalog, all J. P. Ingadis, Lynn, Mass. Fox J. P. Ingadis, Lynn, Mass. Fox J.

SEW LESS The Invisible Mender. Mends any article of wearing apparel without a package. Agents wanted, Sorel stamps for Catalogue, MRR. A. GAIL, Station W. Brooklyn, N.Y. Box 198

SILK Remnants for Crazy Patch large picg.

SILK prestly pieces, 10 cents, 25 skeins all colore

Emb. Silk, 20 cents. Cat. and Crazy Satisface with order. LADIES ART CO., Box 86, St. Louis, Mo.

A Department devoted to a sociable interchange of ideas among Journal readers. Address all letters to Mrs. Lynan ABBOTT care of THE LADIES' HOME JOURNAL, 433-435 Arch Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

Arch Street, Possessions, Fa.

Hills is not a fashion page, but at the risk of poaching a little upon my neighbors' preserves I want to say a worder two about woman's dress. From my window two or three times a day I see a party of girls and young women going to and from their work in a factory; they come from the poorest of homes, so poor and so vile that I hope few of the readers of the Journal can have any conception of them. They work for such small wages that one wonders how they get even bread and water for food and a corner in which to sleep, and yet these girls are sweeping our diety streets with what by courteey we call their clothes. Fifth too disgusting to name is gathered into their garments day after day. The one room in which father, mother, brother and sister live—no; they do not live, they car and sleep—is made still more foul by what is shaken out of these garments in the process of putiting them on and off. My friends, who is to blame for this? Not these silly girls, nor their ignorant mothers, but we who, knowing better, allow our gowns to drag upon the sidewalk. I am glad to know that the deepot who sits on fashion's throne is supposed to be about to order a shortening of the street gown, and I want here to urge every readers of the Journal, far and near, to spread abroad that sensible decree, and to take care that not upon their skirts is the indecency, the unwhole-someness, which their foolish and blind followers are gathering. A woman's dress ought to express her good sense, her purity and her sense of beauty, not her vanity.

AM very anxions to have a knotty question, which has long remained unsettled with inc. answered. It is tills: For what purpose should a mether train her decipher: for the home, for the world, for a hashand, or to be a bread winner?

L. T.

